Therefore, to make atonement for what was forfeited by Adam, a sin offering of a precise value, of a perfect human being, became necessary. For Jehovah had instituted an arrangement for atonement among the Israelites; and it is Jehovah the Lord and not man who is responsible for determining and revealing the precise value and means of atonement; to purge away inherited sin, and to obtain relief from condemnation unto death. On the annual atonement day, Israel's (Aaronic) high priest offered animal sacrifices and made atonement for himself, other priests and Levites, and for nonpriestly tribes of Israel. Sacrificial animals were to be unblemished, and their blood was shed to make atonement. And the sin offerings made by the Israelites and yearly day of atonement did impress upon their minds the reminder of their sinful state, and their great need of complete atonement. For man is forever in need of sin covering, or atonement, due to inherited sin. But they could not find release from suffering through animal sacrifices alone; for beasts being inferior to man, they could not completely atone for human sin. It was for this reason that Jesus' complete atonement was required for human sins. In this way a part of the Law of Moses was fulfilled, he being the One to be offered as a sacrifice. As a man approved of God, Jesus was the sin offering for all Adam's descendants who now can be delivered from inherited sin, mortality, and death; through obedience to the principles and ordinances of the gospel. Moreover, Jesus was the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world; and those Christians who walk in the light of Christ are assured that the blood of Jesus, the Son of God, the Great High Priest of the Order of Melchizedek, shall cleanse them from all sin. Thus Jesus' human life offered in sacrifice, as ransom for all mankind, accomplished a most valuable thing; the purchase of mankind, and redeeming them from inherited sin, immortality, and death. That which was forfeited by rebellious Adam was now gained by the righteousness and atoning sacrifice of Jesus. And Jehovah God made reconciliation between himself and sinful mankind possible, through the man perfect in the sight of God, even the Lord Jesus Christ.

Yet justice must needs be fulfilled. Because of the fall of Adam and his offspring, all mankind came under condemnation. Justice of the eternal kingdom of God required that God execute the sentence of his law against the rebellious and disobedient Adam. But it is written that love moved God to purpose an arrangement of substitution; whereby justice would be satisfied and yet repentant offspring of sinner Adam could be forgiven, and could achieve reconciliation with God. It was for this reason that the Lord God sent forth his Son as a propitiatory sacrifice for man's sins. And Jesus' propitiatory sacrifice removes the cause for God to condemn his creatures; and makes possible the extension of his grace, mercy, and love, and manifold blessings; and this propitiation removes the charge of sin, and resulting condemnation, unto death.

Although Christ died for the sins of man, to fulfill the scriptures; and by purchase released mankind from the curse of the Law, by becoming a curse himself, instead of all mankind (especially Jews), because it is written. And he was numbered with the transgressors, that all be fulfilled. Is it not written, Accursed is every man hanged upon a stake? And Jesus sat to meat with the transgressors? Christ himself bore the sins of mankind in his own body upon the cross, in order that man might rise above its sinful state, and live in righteousness. And Christ died for the sake of the world, a righteous man for the unrighteous, that he might lead mankind to God.

Now, it was the love and grace and mercy of God, combined with the atoning sacrifice of Christ, which brought mankind the supreme gift of the provision of complete atonement for inherited human sins. But, to benefit therefrom, one must truly exercise faith, the first principle of the gospel; and must be truly repentant. For a sacrifice offered without a proper attitude pleases not God. Remember, God sent Christ into the world, as an offering for propitiation through faith in his sacrifice and atonement. Only those who in faith accept God's provision for atonement through Jesus Christ can gain salvation; those who reject it cannot. Also those who practice sin willfully after having received the accurate knowledge of truth, there is no longer any sacrifice for sins left, but there is a constant fearful expectation of judgement.

Repentance, therefore, marks a halt in the person's wrong course, complete rejection of it, with no turning back; and maintaining the right course unto the end. If repentance be genuine, it will be followed by conversion. And conversion implies more than a mere attitude and verbal expression; it requires works to support and nurture it, works that befit repentance; by inquiring of the Lord with all one's heart and soul; by seeking God's favor by listening to his voice, as expressed in his Word; by showing insight into his Truths, by learning to know his mind; by obedience to his commandments; by putting full trust in him and his powers; by serving him alone, and not the idols of the world; and by relying on the guidance of the Holy Ghost. All prayers, sacrifices, fastings, and observance of ordinances, are only deceptive and illusive; unless accompanied by good works, in meekness, humility, long-suffering, patience, and in truth.

Repentance demands a new heart, and a new spirit; a changed motive and aim in life; producing a new frame of mind; a new disposition, and a new moral force. For, behold, the one whose life course changes, it results in a new personality (also name and form), which is created according to God's will, purposes, and designs; of which no man may know; and for such, all the mysteries and blessings of the eternal Kingdom are at their disposal. Thus was the early Christian interpretation of the word Repentance, the second principle of the Christian faith. And both Faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, and Repentance are required for salvation.

Besides Faith, and Repentance, the ordinance of Baptism is necessary; both the baptism by immersion in water, and by the Holy Spirit of God. Baptism in water is the first ordinance of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it must be followed by the baptism of the Spirit, and fire also. Baptism has been practiced, as long as the gospel of Jesus Christ has been on earth, and has been taught by the priests of the holy priesthood of God, since time immemorial; and certainly from the time of Adam. Baptism symbolizes death, burial, and resurrection; and can only be done by immersion, in the manner of John the Baptist, and Philip the apostle of Jesus. Although other Jewish sects of the Essenes, or the Pharisees practiced a type of baptism, they were mostly ablutions and washings; only the baptism by full immersion was of the Kingdom.

Testimony of the Ordinance of Baptism with Water

While the Aaronic Priesthood has the authority to baptize with water, the Melchizedek Priesthood has power to baptize not only with water, but also to confer the gift of the Holy Ghost. And John knew this difference, for he was an Aaronic priest, whereas Jesus was a priest of the Order of Melchizedek; each having a different mission. Jesus said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God; that which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. And when he sent the Twelve forth to teach the gospel, he told them that whosoever believed and was baptized would be saved, and whosoever did not believe would be damned. Jesus himself had to be baptized, to fulfill the gospel in all righteousness.

Besides symbolizing death, burial, and resurrection, baptism in water is the gateway to personal sanctification and salvation, when followed by the reception of the Holy Ghost, by the laying on of hands. Baptism in water is used for remission of sins, for the membership in the Church, and for entrance into the celestial kingdom. Baptism is also a most sacred ordinance, which a person, having received, can remember throughout lifetime as a reminder of personal commitment to Jesus Christ. By being baptized in water, Jesus fulfilled the law himself, and set the example for all mankind.

John the Baptist, son of Zechariah and Elizabeth, was sent forth of God to preach baptism in symbol of repentance for forgiveness of sins, baptism conditioned on repentance. In John's baptism, men repented of their sins, changed their ways, and were baptized by full immersion in water; and God granted a forgiveness of their sins, according to the laws of the eternal Kingdom of God. The baptism did not wash away their sins as if they never existed, but repentance and changing of their ways did; and baptism served as a symbol of this. Therefore the baptism performed by John was not a washing away of sins, through his servant John, but it was an official demonstration and symbol of the individual repentance of his sins against God's Law; which was to lead one to Christ. John's work served to prepare a people for the Lord (Jehovah), which had been prophesied by Isaiah and Malachi; and paved the way for the ministry of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Meshiahh (Messiah). And it was also prophesied that John's ministry was to decrease, and the Messiah's to increase.

Now, since John, and later Jesus' disciples also, baptized men in symbol of repentance for forgiveness of sins; why did Jesus have to be baptized, for he committed no sins in the world? Behold, none is found guiltless in the sight of God, even prophets and the Son of God; all must be cleansed and purified from the pollution of the world, by means of the established standards of the eternal Kingdom of God. Moreover, baptism served other important purposes, which have been discussed previously. It was for these reasons Jesus consented to the baptism of John, as it is written in the scriptures: Jesus came from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him; but John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answered, Suffer it to be so now; for it is befitting for us to fulfill all that is righteous.

As faith in the Lord Jesus Christ precedes repentance, repentance precedes baptism by immersion. But baptism also requires the individual to make a solemn decision, after hearing the Word, and embracing it heartily; which generally infants cannot do, nor are they in need of repentance. It was for this reason infant baptisms were forbidden in the early Church history; only exceptions being where the entire families were baptized, and some had their infants, below the age of accountability of eight years, baptized with their parents. Although Jesus said unto his disciples, Allow the little children, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is made up the kingdom of heaven; but Jesus did not baptize them; he blessed them by laying his hands upon them. And the kingdom of God belongs to such not because they are baptized, but because they are teachable and trusting; and the Christians were commanded to be babes to badness, and yet full-grown in powers of understanding!

A few infant baptisms were performed in the second and third centuries of the Christian Era; and as exceptions continued throughout the history of the world, but not in the kingdom of God.

Jesus' ministry began with his baptism in the fall of 29 A.D. (or C.E.); and his baptism was not to be a mere pouring or sprinkling, but full immersion or submersion in water. It was for this reason that John selected a location near Salim, in the Jordan Valley, to baptize Jesus; because there was a great quantity of water there; and complete submersion was necessary to symbolize burial. Jesus knew all this; and that his prepared body must be put to death, that he must die in purity and holiness, as a perfect sacrifice with ransoming value to mankind; that he must be plunged into death, but he would be raised out of it on the third day. And Jesus likened his ministry to a baptism into death; and he explained to his disciples that he was already undergoing this baptism during his ministry. Jesus' baptism into death is distinct and separate from his water baptism; for he had completely undergone water baptism, at the beginning of his ministry, at which time also began his baptism into death. Jesus was fully baptized into death when he was impaled on the torture stake on Nisan 14, 33 A.D. (or C.E.). His resurrection by the Father on the third day completed this baptism. So baptism into Jesus Christ and into his death is quite apart from water baptism; therefore all of us who are baptized into Christ Jesus, are baptized into his death.

It is Jehovah God, the Father, who is responsible for this greater baptism. He anointed Jesus, making him the Christ or Anointed One; and he baptized Jesus with the Holy Spirit, in order that, through Jesus, his followers might thereafter be baptized with the Holy Spirit. As if Jesus was the candle lighted; and from this one candle many others can be lighted. Therefore, those who become joint heirs of his, with celestial hopes, must be baptized into Christ Jesus, not into human Jesus; that is, into the Anointed Jesus, who at the time of his anointing, was also begotten to be a spiritual Son of God; thereby they become united to him, their Head, and they become members of the congregation, the body of Christ.

And the life course of the faithful who are baptized into Christ Jesus is a course of integrity, beginning at the time of their baptism into Christ, until the final death in integrity. Thus being buried with him through baptism into his death; so that just as Christ was raised up from the dead through the glory of the Father, we may likewise walk in the newness of life. For if we become united with him in the similitude of his death, we shall certainly also be united with him in the similitude of his resurrection. But, behold, only the Almighty God the Father in Heaven, who is the Baptizer of those who are baptized into Christ Jesus and into his death, can complete the baptism. This the Father does through Christ by raising them up out of death unto the similitude of the resurrection of Christ, which is unto heavenly, immortal life.

Once Jesus said unto the Sadducees, a sect that did not believe in resurrection, that the writings of Moses in the Hebrew scriptures, which they possessed and claimed to believe, prove there is a resurrection; that in saying that he was the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were actually dead, the Lord Jehovah counted them alive, because of the resurrection that He purposed to give them; for He is not God of the dead, but of the living. And God because of his power and glory makes the dead alive, and calls the things that are not as though they were. For the Almighty God with power and capacity to create man in His own image, with perfect body, and potential for full expression of the marvelous characteristics implanted in his personality, it would pose no difficult problem to resurrect an individual. If the principles of science established by God and His eternal Kingdom, can be used by the worldly scientists to preserve an image, and reconstruct a visible and audible manifestation of that image by means of a videotape, how easy it is for the Universal Sovereign and Creator to resurrect a person by repatterning the same personality in a newly formed body. Is anything too extraordinary for Jehovah? Nay, but all things are possible with God. The resurrection is also a means by which the Lord sees that his will, purposes, and designs are carried out.

Although resurrections were performed in the tenth century before Christ by and through the prophets Elijah and Elisha, these resurrected persons died again; as did those resurrected by Jesus, and by his apostles. But those resurrected by Jesus, for example, Lazarus, might have an opportunity of receiving a resurrection like Christ's which he otherwise would not have had. Jesus Christ was called the first-born from the dead, who was resurrected to everlasting life, in the Spirit, to life in heaven. He was raised to a higher form of life and a higher position than that which he had held in the heavens, prior to his baptism and ministry in Galilee, Samaria, and Judaea.

For forty days after his resurrection Jesus appeared to his disciples on different occasions in various fleshly bodies, just as angels had appeared to men of ancient times. Like those angels, he had the power to change form by means of those fleshly bodies at will; it was also a proof to others that he had been resurrected. And to those who are called and chosen among the faithful, the Spiritually begotten as God's children, are promised a resurrection like that of Jesus, unto an incorruptible, undefiled and unfading inheritance. But they must undergo a change of nature, giving up the natural man, and transmuting the base tendencies to higher truths and ideals; and they must die a death in integrity. It is the soul of the person that is resurrected, with a body to suit the environment into which God resurrects him; like the planting and sprouting of a seed, in which to the essence God gives a body, just as it pleases him.

And concerning the time of heavenly resurrection, it is written that the resurrection of Christ's joint heirs begins after Jesus Christ returns in heavenly glory, his Second Coming; and he will first resurrect his Spiritual brothers, the saints and the righteous, those who have fallen asleep in death. Each one will be resurrected in his own rank; Christ the firstfruit, afterward those who belong to Christ during his presence; these as the House of God, have been under judgement throughout their lifetime. Now, these having been under judgement, at Christ's return shall receive their rewards; and he will reward his anointed ones, his apostles and faithful disciples. And Christ, after having prepared a place for them in heaven, shall return and receive them home to himself; that where he is they may also be. And these as a body are called his bride; for they are promised to him in marriage, his taking of them to himself, in the heavens, therefore, constitutes the marriage of the Lamb. Some of the apostles of Jesus looked forward with eagerness to receiving resurrection at that time. When Christ's second presence takes place, there shall be some of his Spiritual brothers and sisters, and kinsfolk yet alive on earth; they shall be invited to the evening meal of the Lamb's marriage; but those who have died are given first attention by a resurrection. For this is the word of Jehovah God, that the living who survive unto the presence of the Lord in no way precede those who have fallen asleep in mortality and death; because the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a commanding call, with an Archangel's voice and God's trumpet; and those who are dead in union with Christ will rise first.

Then the remaining ones, who have the invitation to the evening meal of the Lamb's marriage, at the time that they finish their earthly course faithfully in death, shall be immediately resurrected to fill all the places alloted at the feast in heaven. These, while yet on earth, undergo laborious experiences with opposition from God's enemies, and do their work under imperfect conditions in imperfect fleshly bodies; but at death these rest from their labors, for the things they did go right with them. They continue to serve in works of the Kingdom, but now in the heavens with the Lamb of God. They did not fall asleep in death (meaning, waiting in a long sleep, as did the apostles); but, on dying, these are changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Moreover, Jesus also preached the resurrection to life and resurrection to judgement, saying, The hour is coming, and it is now, when the dead will hear the voice of the Son of God; and those who have given heed will live; marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all those in the memorial tombs will hear his voice and come out; those who did good things to a resurrection of life; and those who did vile things to a resurrection of judgement, there some will be saved and others damned.

And to those who ask the question, Is the old body reassembled in the resurrection? Or is it a precise replica of the former body, made exactly as it was when the person died? How are the dead to be raised up, with what sort of body? The scriptures say, What one sows is not made alive unless first it dies; and as for what one sows, one sows not the body that will develop, but a bare grain; but God gives it a body just as it pleases him, to each of the seeds its own body. The heavenly ones, however, receive a Spiritual body, for it pleases God for them to have bodies suitable for their heavenly environment. But to whom the Lord pleases to raise to an earthly resurrection, the selfsame body with which it died could not be given, of exactly the same atoms. For if a man dies and is buried, by process of decay his body is reconverted into organic chemicals that are absorbed by vegetation. Persons may eat that vegetation, the elements, the atoms of that original person; and now they will

Moreover, if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Father in heaven will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. And when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, they have their glory and their own reward; but thou when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up your treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart also be.

And Jesus continued to speak unto the Twelve whom he had chosen, saying: Behold, the light of the body is the eye; therefore, if your eye be single to the glory of God, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness; therefore if the light within thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! Remember ye also that no man can serve two masters — for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold onto one, and despise the other; ye cannot worship both God and man. Give not much thought for your life, or what ye shall eat, or drink, or put upon your body; is not life more than food, raiment, shelter, and lusts and pleasures of life? Consider the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet your Father in heaven feedeth them; are ye not better than they? And behold the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither they spin, yet even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature? Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more attend to your needs, O ye of little faith?

Verily, I say unto you, take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or How shall we be provided raiment and shelter? For after all such things do the Gentiles seek. Know ye not that your Father in heaven knoweth that ye have need of all these things? Therefore, seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself; sufficient unto this day is the evil thereof. Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with the same measure with which ye judge others, ye shall also be judged. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you. Ask, and it shall be given; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. What man is there among you, whom if his son asketh for bread, will give him a stone? Or if he asketh for a fish, will give him a serpent? Therefore, if man being evil knoweth how to give good gifts unto his children, how much more be in many new persons. In the resurrection also the same atoms cannot be in the original person and in all the others at the same time. Neither is the resurrected body necessarily constructed to be the exact replica of the body at the moment of death. God's will and pleasure are that the resurrected person must obey the things written in the scrolls (meaning in the holy scriptures). It would have to be a healthy body, possessing all its faculties. For example, Jesus resurrected Lazarus in a sound body, afer he was partially decomposed; yet such an individual would not be perfect on being brought back, for he must exercise faith in Christ's ransom, and must have the priestly ministration of Christ and his royal priesthood.

At the time of Jesus' ministry all mankind were under condemnation unto death before God, the Judge of all; and Jesus spake of those who have everlasting life, because they hear his word with faith and obedience; and believe on the Father who sent him. Each one of such cometh not into judgement, but passeth over from death to life; verily, I say unto you, The hour is nigh, and it is now, when the (Spiritually) dead will hear the voice of the Son of God; and those who give heed will live. It is to such dead in the Spirit he referred, when he said to one of his disciples, who wanted to go home first to bury his father; Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead. And it was these Spiritually dead people of the world, who became Christians with true belief.

And Paul the apostle once reminded the congregation, saying: It is you God made alive though you were dead in your trespasses and sins; in which ye at one time walked according to the system of things of this world. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love with which he loved us, made us alive together with the Christ, even when we were dead in trespasses; by undeserved kindness ye have been saved. And he raised us up together and seated us together in heavenly places in union with Christ Jesus.

And for such kind, because they no longer walked in trespasses and sins against God, he lifted up his condemnation from them; because of their faith in Christ. He raised them up from the Spiritually dead, and gave them hope of everlasting life.

And concerning the earthly resurrection and judgement during the Millennium, the following has been written in the latter-day scriptures and some secular works.

> A very liberal estimate of the number of persons that have ever lived on earth is twenty billion (20,000,000,000). Many students of the subject calculate that not nearly so many have lived., Not all of these will receive a resurrection, but even assuming that they did, there would be no problem as to living space and food for them. The land surface of the earth at present is about 57,000,000,000 square miles or 147,630,000 kilometers; or more than 36,000,000,000 acres (or 14,568,732,000 hectares). Even allowing half of that to be set aside for other uses, there would be more than half an acre for each person. As to the earth's potential food production, one-half acre will actually provide more than enough food for one person, especially when, as God has demonstrated in the case of the nation of Israel, there is abundance of food due to God's blessings.

On the question of the earth's food-producing capacity, the United Nations Food and Agrigultural Organization maintains that the world's agricultural potential is great enough to feed 157 billion (157,000,000,000) persons. Now let us assume that those who compose the great crowd of righteous persons, who come out of the great tribulation alive, number one million (or about one thirty five hundredth, 1/3,500) of earth's present population (circa 1970 A.D.). Then, say, allowing a hundred years for their education and training, and subduing a portion of the earth, God purposes to bring back three percent (3%) of this number, this would mean that each newly arrived person would be looked after by thirty-three trained ones. Since a yearly increase of three percent, compounded, doubles the number in about twenty-four years, the entire twenty billion (20,000,000,000) could be resurrected before five hundred years of Christ's thousand-year reign had elapsed; giving ample time for training and judging the resurrected ones without disrupting harmony and order on earth. Thus God, with his almighty power and wisdom, is able to bring his purpose to a glorious conclusion; fully within the framework of the laws and arrangements he has made for mankind from the beginning, with the added undeserved kindness of the resurrection.

Now, returning to the baptism of water, it should be noted that the one being baptized in water enters into a special relationship with God, as his slave and servant, to do His will. The individual does not determine the will of God concerning him; but it is God that determines what is best for the individual. In times past the entire nation of Israel was under a special covenant and relationship with God; they were His people, chosen from among all other people on the face of the earth, even a royal nation of priests and holy men; but only the tribe of Levi (or Al-Levi) was chosen for Spiritual ministration, and service at the sanctuary or tabernacle. And the two branches of the sons of Levi; namely, Moses' descendants, and those of Aaron, remained separate; one remained more Spiritual, and the other more temporal. And they were all Jehovah's, or the Lord's, property, as unto this day. Likewise, those who undergo Christian baptism become God's property, his servants and slaves, to be employed as he sees fit. The scriptures say, that there is a definite number of persons sealed unto Christ, namely, 144,000. And this seal is God's Holy Spirit, his active force; and it gives those sealed a token in advance of their celestial inheritance. Moreover, for these have such a hope, God hath set each member in the body of Christ, just as it pleased him.

Finally, baptism by the Holy Spirit and fire was also performed by the founding fathers of the Christian church, but not always understood by this name. John the Baptist, when many Pharisees and Sadducees came to his baptism, he called them offspring of vipers. And he spoke of the coming One (Jesus), and said: One will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire. The baptism by the Holy Spirit is not only performed on the individual basis, but also on a collective basis. As the children of Israel were collectively baptized by means of a cloud while crossing the isthmus of the Red Sea in 1513 B.C.; the congregation at Jerusalem was collectively baptized by the Holy Spirit of Jehovah on the day of Pentecost 33 A.D. But Jesus gave the gift of the Holy Ghost to the converts by means of laying on of the hands, and blessed them. This is also a baptism of the Holy Spirit on an individual basis. But baptism by fire was the occasional utterance of the Melchizedek priests, to bring to remembrance, in a sublime manner, the past wrongs of the converts, that should eventually release him of guilt, and strengthen him. For such truth causeth a great discomfort, and pricks the heart, it was referred to as the baptism of fire. God's Word is the Spirit's sword; revealing what a person really is, exposing hidden qualities or heart attitudes, and causing him either to soften his heart and conform to God's Word, or to harden his heart in rebellion. Therefore, God's Word plays a forceful part in predicting adverse judgement, since God's Word must be carried out; and the fulfillment of that Word produces an action like that of fire on straw, and like that of a forge hammer in smashing the crag. Jesus Christ, as God's chief Spokesman, as the Word of God, declares divine judgements, and is authorized to order execution upon those judged; the Holy Spirit being the activating force of his mouth.

The Lord God accomplished the creation of the material world by means of his Spirit or active force. By the Word of God the heavens were made, and by the Spirit of his mouth all their army. Like a powerful breath, God's Spirit can be sent forth to exert power, even though there is no bodily contact with that which is acted upon. While a human craftsman would use force of his hands and fingers to produce things, God uses his Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs in Arabic and Hebrew). Therefore, Spirit is also referred to as God's hands or fingers.

It is written, that a principle use of God's Spirit involves its ability to inform, to illuminate, to reveal things. This illuminating power of the Spirit is notable in prophecy; and the prophets are borne along by the Holy Spirit, conveyed, moved, and guided by the active force of God. So are all the inspired Scriptures; they are inspired of God, meaning the Spirit operated in sublime manner to communicate and guide such men, causing them to see visions or dreams; but in all cases operating on their hearts and minds to motivate and guide them according to God's purposes. The means for the inspiration of all scriptures were God's Holy Spirit or active force. That Holy Spirit operated toward or upon men to move them, and guide them in setting down God's message. For no prophecy of scripture arises out of personal interpretation or man's will; rather it springs forth when men of God were borne along by the Holy Spirit; and this is true of all the Bible writings; that God's Spirit operated on the hearts and minds of the writers, to carry them along to fulfill the purposes of God. And even as the Lord's Spirit moved men to perform divine assignments, as making of priestly garments, building the tabernacle or the temple, leading military forces; so it enabled men to record the holy scriptures. By means of that Holy Spirit, wisdom, understanding, knowledge, counsel, power and glory, could be gained and given, which is beyond any human conception.

Jesus assured his apostles that God's Holy Spirit will heal them, teaching, guiding, and recalling to their minds the things they had heard from him; the Spirit revealeth also the future things. It assures the truthfulness and accuracy of their gospel accounts, including many lengthy quotations of Jesus' teachings; even though the accounts were written scores of years after Jesus' death and resurrection.

Therefore, came all the Bible writers under Jehovah the Lord's guiding and controlling power. And, even as the Lord's hand causes His servants to speak or to keep silence at appointed times, so the Holy Spirit prompts the writer to write the words as they arise out of this Spirit; the end product always being as Jehovah the Lord desireth.

The ways employed in writing the holy scriptures, included divinely supplied written information, or spoken word of the ministering archangels of the eternal kingdom of God. Besides these methods, dreams and visions were given to men of God, for the purposes of writing the scriptures. Visions given while the person was conscious were even more frequently used as the vehicle of communication of God's thoughts to the mind of the writer, the revelations being impressed pictorially upon the conscious mind. Some visions were received when the person had fallen into a trance; although conscious, the person became so absorbed by the vision received during the trance, that to all else around him he remained oblivious. A vision, then, is a sight or sense presented to a person's mind, while one is in a trance or dreaming. When a person receives a vision from God during waking hours, it appears that the impression was made upon the conscious mind; this vision could later be recalled, and recorded by the recipient, in his own words. Sometimes God's Holy Spirit superimposed on the mind a picture of God's purpose or a vision while a person was in a state of deep concentration, a sleeplike condition, or in a trance. One of the qualities of trance is that it makes the individual oblivious to his surroundings, and receptive to the vision.

Certain visions from God revealed to the Lord's servants how He was dealing with them, and gave them assurance of divine favor. The word of the Lord came to Abram (Abraham) in a vision, and he was assured: Do not fear, Abram. I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. Then his grandson Jacob was given a vision of God in the night, telling him not to be afraid to go down to Egypt, for God would constitute him a great nation there, and would eventually bring him up from that land. Yet some visions from God gave the recipients guidance in the performance of the Lord's will; and others were prophetic, or were given to enable the recipient to interpret prophecies communicated in visions and dreams. The prophet Daniel had understanding in manifold visions and dreams. It was in a night vision that God revealed to Daniel the content and meaning of king Nebuchadnezzar's dream, about the great image representing world powers; and in a prophetic dream and visions during the night Daniel beheld four huge beasts coming out of the sea, indicating that four kings would stand up from the earth; also he beheld One like the Son of Man, obtaining rulership, dignity, and the Kingdom from the Ancient of Days, the Eternal Father. Visions from God were received by all Bible writers, including Isaiah, Amos, Ezekiel, Jonah, and all others.

There are also false visions, spoken by false prophets; which are the visions of their own heart; or they were hired men of the adversary to destroy or oppose the purposes of God, by means of falsehood and lies presented as visions. For their messages originated not from God, having no vision from Jehovah, all their visions were vain and worthless; for they spoke untruth, and visioned a lie, and the Lord was against them.

Moreover, angelic messengers were used frequently to transmit the divine messages. Such messengers were used in the transmission of information to Moses. Thus, while the Law given to Moses is presented as spoken by God, his angels were used to transmit that legal code. But, for the angels spake in Jehovah's name, the message they presented is considered the word of Jehovah, the Lord. Regardless of the means employed for the transmission of the heavenly messages, all scriptures are inspired of God or God-breathed; therefore, they are good for all mankind.

It was by inspiration (or Holy Spirit) that John the Divine, the apostle of Jesus Christ, came to be in the Lord's day (sabbath), and was told: What thou seest, write in a book, and send unto the seven churches. God does allow the writers of the Scripture to use their own judgement in the selection and use of words and expressions to describe the visions they have seen; at the same time the Lord exercises sufficient control and guidance over them, so that the finished product is not only assured of its accuracy and truthfulness, but also, is suited for his purposes. Personal effort on the part of the writers, pondering, searching, arranging, and properly presenting thoughts and ideas in the Spiritual language of the words of truth, was required to accomplish the task.

Therefore, the writers of scriptures always cooperated with the operations of the eternal kingdom of Jehovah, and his Holy Spirit. They were willing and submissive to God's guidance, eager to know his will, purposes and designs. In many cases they had certain divine goals in their mind, or were responding to an evident need; and God directed them so that what they wrote coincided with, and fulfilled his purpose. As Spiritual men, their hearts and minds were in tune with God's will, and they were truly the instruments in the hand of Christ.

Testimony of the Doctrine of the Holy Ghost or Spirit, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost

The Holy Spirit, the active force of God, had varieties of operations upon writers of the holy scriptures. A considerable portion of information was publicly accessible to them, which already existed in written form, as in genealogies, and certain historical accounts. Here God's Spirit would operate to prevent inaccuracy or error from entering into the Holy Writ, and also guide in the selection and rewriting of the material. But the information concerning heavenly events and activities, or pre-historic events, prophecies, God's purposes and doctrines were not publicly available; and had to be transmitted through the ministry of the angels, or some other means. And the operation of God's Spirit is required to ensure that information qualifies as part of the Word of God; the God that is alive and exerts power, and is able to discern thoughts and intentions of heart.

In addition to the canonical and other sacred books of the Hebrew scriptures, there were records of the kings of Judah and Israel; all written by the devoted servants of the Lord. Even as God by his Holy Spirit or active force granted to his chosen servants the power of discernment of inspired utterances, so could he guide the governing body of Christian congregation in discerning which inspired writings were to be included in the canon of the sacred scriptures. The Bible canon, therefore, denoted the catalog of inspired books or writings, worthy of being used as a straightedge in measuring faith, doctrine and conduct.

For example, the Bible began with Moses, circa 1513 B.C. In these records were preserved God's commandments and precepts to Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; as well as the regulations of the Law covenant. The Pentateuch included the five books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy. The book of Job was also written by Moses. That these writings of Moses were of divine origin, and inspired of God, there is not a doubt. Moses had no ambition or desire to be a leader and a writer, but in obedience to God's command, and by the power of the Holy Spirit, he was moved first to speak and then to write down part of the Bible canon. Jehovah God himself set the precedent for having laws and commandments written down. For after speaking to Moses in Mount Sinai, the Lord proceeded to give him two tablets of the Testimony, tablets of stone, written with the finger of God. And also the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words; for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. It was Jehovah who spake to Moses, and instructed him to write down and preserve the first five books of the Bible canon. No council of men made them canonical; from their inception they had divine approval.

And as soon as Moses had finished writing the words of the law in a book (scroll), he commanded the Levites, saying: Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord your God, that it may remain there for a witness against thee. Like Moses, the priests and Levites were also used by God to preserve these commandments, and to teach them to the people. Following the death of Moses, the writings of Joshua, Samuel, Gad and Nathan, and others were added; each writer being endowed with miraculous prophetic ability from God; in turn, each living up to the requirements of true prophets as decreed by Jehovah, the Lord. They spake in the name of the Lord, their prophecies were fulfilled, and they turned the people toward God.

Moreover, all the sacred scriptures were progressively added to the Bible canon, and were recognized by God's servants; including by Jesus and his apostles, as inspired. Inspiration, therefore, does not mean a mere heightening of the intellect (or buddhi) and emotions to a higher degree of sensitivity, or accomplishment, as it is often understood by the secular artists or poets; but the inspired writings that carry the same authority as if written by God himself, are the manifestations of inspiration; meaning, they are God-breathed. Even gods are subject to the Holy Word. When Jesus reproved the Sadducees, for they were in error concerning resurrection; he said, Ye know neither the Scriptures nor the power of God. It is for this reason that absolute accuracy is attributed to the written Word of God.

The Holy Spirit, then, not only brings revelations and understanding of God's will, but also uplifts his servants to accomplish all things, which are otherwise impossible to achieve. It is the driving force that moves and impells them; as it impelled Jesus to move into the wilderness after his baptism. This Spirit is likened to a fire within, causing them to be aglow with that force, providing them with the power to do certain work; which power comes of the Spirit or through the Spirit. And as a force like electricity can be used to accomplish a numerous variety of things, so God's Holy Spirit is used to commission and enable persons to do a variety of things. Although this wondrous gift of the Holy Spirit is manifested in varieties of things, with varieties of operations and ministries, yet there is the same Lord, and the same Spirit. The Spirit also has a qualifying force or capacity, which qualifies persons for a work or an office. Though one may have had knowledge of crafts before their appointment, God's Spirit fills them with wisdom, understanding and knowledge, so that the work can be accomplished in the way purposed. It heightens whatever natural abilities and acquired knowledge they already possess, and enables them to teach others.

For example, God's Holy Spirit acted on and through Moses in prophesying and performing miraculous acts, in leading the nation of Israel, and serving as its judge and lawgiver. But the Lord came down in a cloud, and took away some of the Spirit which was upon Moses, and gave to the seventy elders, that they might help carry the load of responsibility. The Holy Spirit also became operative on David, from the time of his anointing by Samuel, guiding and preparing him for his future kingship. Although Joshua became full of the Spirit of Wisdom, as Moses' successor, the Spirit did not produce within him the ability to prophecy or to do the mighty works which were wrought through Moses. But Joshua's Spirit led him to military campaign and conquest. Similarly, the Spirit of God impelled such men as Othniel, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and others to fight on behalf of God's people.

The Spirit of God also energizes and uplifts men to communicate his message of truth with authority, boldly and courageously, before opposers at the risk of their lives. The pouring out of the Holy Spirit upon his people, is an evidence of God's love toward them, of his favor; which enables men to obtain his manifold and marvellous blessings; and it makes them prosper and rejoice. By his Holy Spirit God renders judgement on men and nations; and his judgements and decrees are carried out to the letter. Therefore God's Holy Spirit (Rūh or Rūh-el-Qudūs) reaches everywhere, acting for or against those who receive his attention.

Jesus, upon ascending to heaven, asked the Father for the Holy Spirit of truth, the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, as he had promised to send unto his disciples; and this Holy Spirit or active force of God was poured upon the congregation of the faithful, on the day of Pentecost, 33 A.D. (or C.E.). It is said, that as they had been baptized in water, on that day they were baptized into one body of Christ; by that one Spirit, immersed in it, as it were, somewhat like a piece of metal, immersed in a magnetic field and imbued with magnetic force. And this God's Spirit had operated in them in a heightened and powerful manner, in a way not previously experienced.

God's Spirit or active force also acts as helper for the Christian congregation, in directing its activities on earth, Jesus being, by God's appointment, its Head, Owner and Lord. As a helper, that Spirit gives them heightened understanding of God's will, purposes and designs, and opens up his prophetic Word unto them, enabling them to uplift in the Spirit, and serve as witnesses in all the earth; granting them miraculous gifts of languages, prophecy, healing, and all the other gifts from God.

God imparts his Holy Spirit as a gift to his people, enabling them to avoid the deathly works of the flesh; and to cultivate instead the fruitage of the Spirit, namely, love and goodwill, compassion and mercy, joy and gladness, peace and serenity. Jesus assured his disciples that God's Holy Spirit would teach them all things, and bring back to their minds the things he had taught them, as well as make a defense before all authorities and rulers. The gifts of God given to men are the expression of his grace and mercy, his undeserved kindness. It is therefore proper that the gifts received from Jehovah be used for the benefit of fellowmen, and to the glory of God,the Giver; and for he has received it freely, he must also give it freely.

Every good gift and every perfect gift is from God. The Lord giveth to all persons life and breath, and all things; and allows both the righteous and the wicked to benefit from the sunshine and the rain. True wisdom and knowledge are gifts from God; but one must study and ponder the Word of God through the Holy Spirit, and have faith in Jesus Christ. And while God's wisdom serves as a protection and guide in the world, the worldly wisdom is harmful, and outside the realm of God; and is foolishness in the eyes of Jehovah. The Holy Spirit is God's free gift, which he gladly grants to those who sincerely seek and pray for it. A right heart is the key, but knowledge and obedience to God's commandments are also essential. Once received, the Christian should not grieve God's Spirit by taking it for granted or disregarding it, by taking a course contrary to its guidance; or through false beliefs, false speech, and self-justification. By hypocrisy one can play false to that Holy Spirit by which Christ directs the congregation; and those who make a test of its power in this manner, are led to destruction. Deliberate opposition to and rebellion against the evident manifestation of God's Spirit can cause blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, a sin which becomes unforgiveable.

God's Spirit is a unifying force of enormous strength, as long as it is allowed a free course among the faithful; it enables them to be joined together peacefully in bonds of love and devotion to the Father, his Son, and one another. And there is a tremendous vitality of the life force that God had initially breathed into all living things by means of his Holy Spirit. Although it is necessary for the human body to be nourished and refreshed by breathing, drinking, and eating, the thing far more essential for continuance of life is the Holy Spirit of God. For it is written, Man does not live by bread alone, but by every expression that comes out of the Lord's mouth. Jesus said, My food is for me to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work; and also, Just as the living Father sent me forth and I live because of the Father, he also that feeds on me, even that one will live because of me.

Obedience to the Word of God leads all men to everlasting life, immortality, incorruption, and regeneration; through the active force of God, the Holy Spirit. When Adam transgressed, however, the Lord decreed, saying, Now in order that he may not put his hand out and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever. Then the Lord followed his words with action. And it was decreed that he would not allow one unworthy of life to live in the garden made for the righteous, and to eat of the tree of life. And in order that physical wholeness might be restored to men, with the hope and prospect of living forever, the Lord has provided his truths through his Holy Word, which can only be understood by the power of his Holy Spirit, and in no other way. Following these truths leads men to a knowledge of God's provision of Jesus Christ, who gave himself a corresponding ransom for all mankind. Through this means only can man be restored to full Spirituality and physical wholeness.

Now, originally, in Hebrew and Greek scriptures the words ransom and redemption were used synonymously; meaning "buying back." While redemption refers to regaining possession of something, ransom carries the thought of liberation from bondage, slavery, obligation, or undesirable circumstance; but both carry the inherent similarity in the idea of giving of a price or thing of value to effect the ransom or redemption. Therefore, the thought of exchange, correspondency, equivalence or substitution are found in both; meaning one thing is given for another, satisfying the demands of one thing for another, satisfying the demands of justice and mercy. Thus justice could be satisfied through the atonement or covering of sins; and the thing given to accomplish this is the ransom price.

It was for this reason, that the Lord designated for his people Israel various sacrifices and offerings to cover or atone for their sins; including those of the priests and Levites, other nations and people; to sanctify the altar and the tabernacle. The life of the sacrificial animal was offered in place of the life of the sinner(s), to atone for the sins of the people; and the blood of the animal was offered on God's altar to atone for the sins, as a ransom price. These sacrifices were required if the nation and its worship were to receive and maintain the righteous God's approval and acceptance. According to the Law of Moses, if a bull known to gore was allowed to go loose so that it killed a human, the owner was to be put to death, paying for the life of the slain person with his own life. But since he did not kill the other person deliberately, if the judges deemed it proper to impose upon him a ransom (kopher in Hebrew) instead, then he must pay the redemption price. The sum assessed and paid was acceptable to all as the just and proper compensation for the lost life. (The same is true in our day, in case of lost life; prison term, monetary payment, or some other compensation can be used in lieu of lost life.) And without this action the person's soul will remain in torment and misery of guilt and wrong forever. The same is true and more in Spiritual crimes, in crimes against the Holy Spirit, against God's laws. But because no worldly man can see or know God, or anything about his justice and mercy, they remain forever in that guilty state, until divine interference is decreed in the heavens.

Now, let us look upon the ransom paid by Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was sent into the world in the meridian of time.

It is written that mankind's need for a ransom came about through the fall of Adam and Eve, when they sold their souls for the sake of rebellion and selfish pleasure. And when they were cast out from the garden of the righteous, in Eden, their descendants were sold into slavery to sin and death; this was God's justice for their crime. But when both repented with sincere hearts, God forgave them. Now the Law of Moses provided for animal sacrifices as a covering or atonement for sin; and these animals were to be without blemish, perfect specimens. Although it was a symbolic or token covering for sin, it did relieve them of the torment and misery of the consequence of sin, and of their guilt. And it was for this reason Christ Jesus was brought forth into the world to be offered up unto the Lord God as the Ransomer of all mankind, a human lamb without blemish, a perfect specimen, and untainted by the inherited sin of Adam; for he was of Divine conception, being the seed of God. And, in this manner, Jesus did satisfy God's perfect justice that required like for like, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, a soul for a soul. It was this strict demand of God's justice which made it impossible for mankind itself to provide its own redeemer; therefore was raised up a Son of God to be offered up as a ransom for all mankind. Jesus gave his soul a ransom in exchange for many; and became a corresponding ransom for all the descendants of Adam, being under the curse of the inherited sin. Thus Christ repurchased them, that they might become his family, by presenting the full value of his ransom sacrifice to the God of absolute justice, the bestower of undeserved kindness, and forgiver of sins.

Although the ransom sacrifice of Christ is available to all, it is not understood or accepted by all; the wrath of God remains on those that reject it, and on those who first accept it, then turn away from it; and they gain no deliverance from the enslavements to kings, sin and death. The sacrifice of Jesus, therefore, is not acceptable to God as a ransom for the sinner Adam, wilful transgressor. But Adam's offspring who avail themselves of such release are approved by God for redemption. It is also written that as through the disobedience of one man many were constituted sinners, likewise also through the obedience of one person many will be constituted righteous. But the vital necessity to control and properly channel one's Spirit is emphasized. As a city broken through without a wall, is the man that has no restraint for his Spirit! And he that is slow to anger is better than a mighty man; he that controlleth his Spirit, than the one capturing a city. Knowledge and discernment keep a man calm in Spirit, in control of his tongue. The Lord appraises and judges those who fail to guard themselves respecting their Spirit. There are the spirits of the world in contrast with God's Holy Spirit. And these worldly spirits, under the control of God's adversary, are catered to the desires of the fallen flesh, of selfishness, bringing enmity toward God; promoting fornication, either physical or spiritual, with idolatry.

Jesus, during his earthly sojourn and ministry, proved to the people that he was the Messiah, God's Anointed One; by expelling the demons from possessed persons, he simply commanded the demons by the power of the Holy Spirit to come out, and they obeyed his voice, for they recognized his authority; in the same manner as Satan recognized the Lord's authority when he permitted him to afflict Job for a test, but commanded Satan not to kill him. Such is the nature and power of the Holy Spirit, or the Holy Ghost, the active force of God; which was known to the ancient people of the Lord as Rūh, or Rūahh, or Rūh-el-Qudūs. Thus the Holy Spirit completes the conversion process into Christianity. For it begins with Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; Repentance, Baptism by full immersion, and the gift of the Holy Spirit or Holy Ghost, by laying on of the hands.

Now, although the expression "Son of God" generally refers to Christ Jesus, there were sons of God before the Flood of Noah's time; and they came in unto the daughters of men, and took themselves wives from among them; and they bare children to them, which became mighty men, like the men of renown of old. And this increased the wickedness of man, and grieved the Lord's heart. And while these sons of God were men of the line of Seth; there were Spirit sons of the true God, that dwelt in God's presence; these were the angelic sons of God, not humans descended from Adam; heavenly creatures, not earthlings they were. But when the heavenly was mixed with the earthly, it accelerated the gross wickedness and wrong human conduct. And when the angels became disobedient to God's laws, and kept not their original position, but forsook their dwelling place, the Spirit realm, they became the spirits in prison.

Moreover, marriages between the heavenly angels did not exist. Even in Jesus' time it was true, as it is unto this day; for in resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage. They could, however, materialize human bodies, according to their mission. And this enabled them to materialize human forms and enter into marriage relations with human women. As a result, their corruption became so widespread, that Sodom and Gomorrah and many other cities had followed their example, and became laden with sins and the fruits of sins; they indulged in fornication, unnatural use of flesh, lies, deceit, and murders. And to such Jesus said that they were of their father the Devil, for they listened to and did the will and works of God's adversary. Therefore, the sonship with God on the part of any of Adam's descendants required God's provision of a spiritual relationship with Him; and such relationship, in turn, requires that the spirit sons and daughters of God keep faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, love him with their heart and Soul, obey his commandments, and serve his purposes and interests.

Only those nations and people that showed belief in Christ Jesus were granted the privilege to become God's children. This remnant of Jewish converts was brought out of the Law covenant, through the ransom sacrifice of Christ; and they were freed, that they might receive the adoption as sons and daughters and become heirs through God. People and nations previously without a true and living God, also became reconciled with God through faith in Christ. And these Christians were the new covenant people, as Israel was of the old; because they heard the good news and exercised faith, and became joint heirs with God's Son. Therefore, they are declared righteous by God on the basis of their faith in the ransom; and thus are brought forth by the word of truth, being born again as baptized Christians, begotten or produced by God's Holy Spirit, as his sons and daughters, with a promise to enjoy Spirit life in the heavens. Such had received not the spirit of slavery such as resulted from Adam's trespass, but a Spirit of adoption as sons and daughters of the living God, by which Spirit they called out Abba, Father! As did Jesus, when he prayed in Gethsemane unto Jehovah God, saying, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt. Similarly, many Christians made use of the term Abba in their prayers to God. This Aramaic word Abba was also used as a title of honor to Jewish rabbis, and to the vice-president of the Jewish Sanhedrin. Later, this title was given to bishops of the Coptic, Ethiopic and Syrian churches; and to the bishop of Alexandria, making him Abba, pope or papa, of that part of the Eastern church. The English words abbot and abbey are both derived from Aramaic Abba, Father. Moreover, Jesus said unto the multitude and his disciples, And call no man your father upon the earth, for One is your Father, the One in heaven.

The Sonship of God does not of itself guarantee a continued relationship with God. They must be led by the Holy Spirit of God, not by their sinful flesh; and must be willing to suffer as did Christ. They must also be obedient to God's commandments and accept his discipline. Thus, by conquering the world by faithfulness to Christ unto the end, they receive the fulness of the heavenly blessings by being resurrected as Spirit sons and daughters of God; sons, daughters, brothers and sisters of God's chief Son, Christ Jesus. And those who are called to this heavenly calling, as God's Spiritual children, know they are such; for God's Spirit itself beareth witness that they are God's children; therefore, their mental and emotional inclinations respond favorably to the expression of God's Spirit through his Holy Word; and their testimony and confidence grows concerning their being God's Spiritual children and heirs.

Now, the scriptures also declare the prehuman existence of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, as being the Word; and that the Word became flesh, and resided among men, and his glory being such as belongs to the Only-Begotten of the Father. Jesus' Sonship did not begin with his birth, but began millennia past, as the scriptures of the Egyptians, Medes, Persians, and Elamites confirm.

Why then is Jesus referred to as the Son of Man, nearly eighty times, in the Gospel accounts? Because in Hebrew this expression is mainly Ben Adham (Adam), meaning Son of mankind, a human or earthly son. For Jesus was numbered with the transgressors and also being born of the mortal Mary, the choicest of all women in Israel in virtue and truth of the Lord. When Jesus was thirty years old, he was baptized by John the Baptist, and God's Holy Spirit descended upon him, and a voice from heaven spake unto him, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Jesus the man then became born again to be a Spiritual Son; and was ordained King, and a Priest of the Order of Melchizedek; and after his resurrection he was made a high priest according to the manner of Melchizedek.

Although Jesus was a Son, he learned obedience from the things he had suffered; and because he himself had suffered when being put to the test, he could come to the aid of those who are also put to test; and those who call on him for help are assured of merciful and generous consideration; for he was made a high priest who understood human weaknesses, and was tested in all respects like other men, but sinless he remained in the sight of God. And after he was made perfect, God made him responsible to bestow everlasting salvation upon all those that obey him.

Like the Aaronic high priest of Israel, Jesus Christ had a body of underpriests provided for him by the Father. These are promised joint heirship with him in the heavens, where they will share as associate kings in his kingdom; they are known as a royal priesthood. It is written that there are 144,000 such persons, bought from the earth as the followers of the Lamb, as firstfruits to God and the Lamb. These 144,000 are the ones which endure faithfully and who through the newness of life rule as kings and priests with Christ. And such will rule also in the Millennial-day.

It is written concerning the Millennial-day, that while the ancient city Jerusalem had a temple, the New Jerusalem, the New Zion or Good Land of the Lord, will be a sanctuary and habitation of the Most High God. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb shall be its temple. Aaron and his family, together with the priestly tribe of Levi, shall minister to the people of the twelve tribes of Israel; and the nations will walk by means of its light.

Now, what does it mean to be a priest (kohen) in the eternal kingdom of God? Every priest taken from among men is appointed in behalf of men over the things pertaining to God, that he may offer gifts and sacrifices for sins. The priest comes near unto the Lord, representing God and his will to his people he serves; instructing them about God and his laws; and in turn, representing the people before God, approaching God in their behalf; offering sacrifices, interceding and pleading for them.

In ancient times of the patriarchs the family head served as priest for his family, the duty passing to the firstborn son after the death of the father. When the Israelites were in slavery in Egypt, the Lord sanctified unto himself every firstborn son of Israel at the time he destroyed every firstborn of the Egyptians, in the tenth plague. And these firstborn males of Israel became the property of the Lord, to be used exclusively in special service to him. But since God could not choose the priests and caretakers of the sanctuary from among the carnal or fleshly Israel, he designated the tribe of Levi for this purpose. When God led his people to Mount Sinai he commanded, Let the priests also who come regularly near to the Lord sanctify themselves, lest Jehovah (יהוה) break forth upon them. This was before the priesthood of Aaron was formally established. The priesthood of Aaron was established in 1512 B.C.; and through this arrangement, the old family-head priesthood was replaced by the priesthood of Aaron; although some continued to follow the old custom of the family-head priesthood, as they do unto this day in some primitive cultures and societies.

And for the induction of the Aaronic priests into office, Aaron and his sons were taken from the Kohathite family of the tribe of Levi to serve as the priesthood for Israel. Their installation ceremonies took seven days, Nisan 1-7, 1512 B.C., while Israel was encamped at the foot of Mount Sinai in Arabia. Moses, the brother of Aaron, a Melchizedek priest, ordained into the office by his Midianite father-in-law Jethro (or Reuel), performed the ceremonies. The tent of meeting had just been completed and set up on the first day of the month, and the Lord's presence was represented by the pillar of cloud above the tabernacle. After Moses had assembled all the sacrificial items, the bull, the two rams, the basket of unfermented cakes, the anointing oil, and the priestly garments; he called the congregation of Israel to gather at the entrance of the tent of meeting, outside the curtain that surrounded the courtyard. And he washed Aaron and his sons Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithmar; this was a baptism, but not by full immersion, as was that of John the Baptist; and put upon Aaron the fancy garments of the high priest. Then Moses anointed the tabernacle and all its furnishings and utensils, the altar of the burnt offering, its basins and utensils. This sanctified them, setting them apart for the exclusive use and service of God. And Moses poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, to anoint and sanctify him. After this Moses clothed Aaron's sons, and caused Aaron and his sons to lay their hands on the head of the bull of the sin offering; and Moses put some of the blood on the altar and poured the rest out at the base of the altar. After many sacrificial offerings and rituals, the priests were officially sanctified to the Lord's holy priesthood.

Their installation to the office of an Aaronic priest took seven days. On each of the six days following their investiture and ordination through their mediator Moses, sacrifices were to be offered in this manner: a young ram in the morning, with a grain offering and a drink offering of wine; and a like sacrifice in the evening as burnt offerings. Each day and night for seven days, the newly ordained priests had to guard the posts of duty at the entrance to the tent of meeting, keeping the obligatory watch of Jehovah (יהוה שמרת), that they might not die. On the eighth day, fully equipped and installed in office, the priesthood officiated for the first time the atonement service for the nation of Israel. The need of cleansing was great, not only because of their natural sinfulness, but also because of their recent disobedience shown by worshipping the golden calf. And at the end of this first service of the Aaronic priesthood, the Lord showed his approval and confirmation by sending fire out from before the Lord which consumed the remainder of the burnt offering, which was upon the altar.

Now, the name Jesus Christ is the name and title of the Son of God from the time of his anointing while on earth. The name Jesus corresponds to Iesous in Greek, Iesa in Arabic, Jeshua or Jehoshua in Hebrew. And it was not an uncommon name during that time; for this reason people referred to him as Jesus of Nazareth, or Jesus the Nazarene, or Jesus of Galilee, and by other names. The name Christ is from Greek Khristos, the equivalent of Hebrew Meshiahh (Messiah), meaning the Anointed One. In the Christian Greek scriptures the name Christ or the Anointed One appears 571 times, Jesus Christ 113 times, Lord Jesus Christ 85 times, Christ Jesus 58 times, The Christ 20 times.

Although the coming of Christ or Messiah, the One whom Jehovah (יהוה משיח) would anoint with his Holy Spirit to be the universal king and priest, had been foretold centuries before Jesus birth; he was not born as the Anointed One or Christ, but the angel of the Lord instructed Joseph to call his name JESUS. At the age of thirty he became the Christ, the Anointed One of God's Spirit; after he was baptized by John the Baptist, his cousin.

Other uses of the term Christ include the title of anointed priests, kings and prophets. Moses was called the Lord's anointed one or Christ; so were Aaron, Saul, David, and others. But the anointing by oil was common for the kings and political (temporal) Christs or Messiahs; and the anointing by the Holy Spirit of God was exclusively for the Spiritual kings and priests of the eternal kingdom of God. There are also lesser Christs, and also false christs, or antichrists. [As in latter days, in 1828 A.D., Joseph C. Dylks, at Salesville, Ohio, claimed to be the Christ who died at Calvary; in 1863 a Persian named Husayn Ali ascended to the Messianic throne of Bahaism, and took the title of Bahaullah; and the adherents of the Bahai faith proclaimed him as Christ returned; and claimed that the prophecies concerning Jesus the Christ applied to him. In 1890 Francis Schlatter of Colorado was hailed as the second Messiah; and when he was asked, Are you the Christ? he always answered, I am. Then in 1901, the Russian Doukhober (Donkhober) sect that settled in Canada, made claim that their leader Peter Vasilyevitch Verigen was the Lord, Christ the Savior. Next year, in 1902, John Hugh Smyth-Pigott of England announced, I am the Lord Jesus Christ, who died and rose again and ascended into heaven . . . Yes, I am He that liveth, and behold I am alive for evermore; who died in 1927. After him George Baker, known as Father Divine, was hailed in New York in the 1930's with slogans such as Father Divine is the Messiah, or Father Divine is King of Kings and Lord of Lords, etc. And in 1961 Kwame Nkrumah, one-time dictator of Ghana, set himself up as the Messiah with his slogan, Seek ye first the political kingdom and all else shall be added unto you; and in his government-controlled newspaper he was hailed as the Messiah, the Christ of our day.]

But Jesus the true Messiah or Christ warned his disciples at the Mount of Olives concerning these things, saying: Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. It is also written that the Word, Jesus (or Mazda or Mathra), in prehuman existence, was God's first creation, his firstborn Son. The person Jesus Christ, who came in the meridian of time, did not begin life here on earth, for he himself spoke of his prehuman heavenly existence. The Scriptures say, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; the same was in the beginning with God; and all things were made by him; without him was not anything made or created. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in the darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not.

Since the Lord is eternal, the Word being with God from the very beginning of his creative works, Jesus was the firstborn of that creation of God. Thus the scriptures identify the Word, or Jesus in prehuman existence, as God's first creation, his firstborn Son; and Jehovah (יהוה ;יַהְוֶה) was truly the Father and life-giver to this firstborn Son. Therefore this Son was a creature of God. Jesus did confirm, saying, I live because of the Father; God being the source of his life. But the Son's share in the creative works did not make him a co-Creator with his Father. The power for creation came from God, through his Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs, Higher Self, Fravashi, or Soul), which is the active force of God. And since Jehovah is the Source of all life, all creatures visible and invisible, owe their lives to Him. The Son, therefore, is not to be considered as co-Creator, but an instrument in the hand of God, through whom Jehovah the Creator worked. And all God's wise purposes involving mankind were made manifest through his Son, Jesus Christ; and Christ represented the power and wisdom of God, also righteousness, sanctification, and release by ransom.

By virtue of his being the creation of his Father, the firstborn Son was unique and different from all other God's sons created or begotten by Jehovah. So the Word was Jehovah's only-begotten Son, as was Isaac the only-begotten of Abraham, although Abraham had another son at that time, and he had six other sons from his wife Keturah; but Isaac was the only-begotten of the Lord. Jehovah said unto Moses, concerning his brother Aaron: Thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth; and I will be thy mouth and his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall say. Likewise, the Word (or Logos, or Mathra) became Jesus Christ. Jehovah used his Son as an instrument to deliver his message to humans on earth. Being God's Word or Spokesman, Jesus said to his Jewish brethren: The doctrine which I teach is not mine, but His that sent me; if any man will do His will, he shall understand the doctrine, and will know if it be of God, or whether I speak of mine own self. Also the angel who guided Israel through the wilderness, and whose voice all Israel was to obey, because Jehovah's name was within him, was also a God's Son, the Word. But the Word is not the only angelic representative through whom the Lord speaketh; for the nation of Israel was ministered to by other sons of God, and the Law covenant was transmitted to Moses by angelic sons of God, other than his Only Begotten Son, or the Firstborn.

The Word's high position among God's creatures as the Firstborn, the one through whom God created all things, and as God's Spokesman, justifies to be called a god or mighty one. The Messianic prophecy by Isaiah foretold that Jesus would be called Mighty God, not the Almighty God; and he would be called ever-lasting Father, the Prince of Peace, unto all those who are privileged to live under him as his subjects. And when Jesus said unto the Jews, I and my Father are one, they took up stones to stone him. And Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me? And the Jews replied, For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy; and because thou, being a man, makest thyself God. Jesus answered them, saying, If he called them Gods unto whom the Word of God came, and the scripture cannot be denied; why, then, say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified and sent unto the world, that he blasphemest, for he said he is the Son of God? And yet they believed him not.

The angels of heaven are sons of God, as was Adam; but the Word (or Logos), called Jesus by the Hebrews, is the Only Begotten Son of God. He is the only one whom God his Father used in bringing into existence all other creatures. He is the firstborn and Head of all the celestial archangels; which archangels are godlike or gods. Therefore, the Lord Jesus Christ is appropriately called the Only-Begotten of God, God the Son, God the Only-Begotten, or the Only-Begotten God. Jehovah God created and raised up his firstborn Son, Jesus, to accomplish all his purposes; and to save and redeem mankind from their fallen state; and to solve the problems that Satan's rebellion had raised. Also to lay the foundation upon which God would accomplish all His future works for the eternal good of His family in heaven and earth.

Now, before the coming of Christ Jesus to the earth, this sacred mystery (or secret) was kept hidden from man since the world began; and the men of faith had awaited the fulfillment of God's promise of a seed of Abraham that can bruise the head of the adversary likened unto the serpent; thereby bring relief to mankind, and take possession of the gates of hell of the enemy; and by whom all nations of the earth would be blessed. And when Jesus came in the meridian of time, through him the sacred mystery was revealed to man. For the secrets of salvation and enlightenment, and the government of the Kingdom had been already revealed to Gaotama Buddha and Zarathustra (or Zoroaster), more than five centuries before; but they were only revealed to those who were initiated into the religion of the ancient fire-worshippers and its various vehicles. The uninitiated were denied both access to the knowledge and the workings of the sacred secrets or mysteries. Those that were initiated were bound by a vow of silence, not to reveal the secrets. Besides the rituals and ceremonies, the initiate learned the secrets of how to be full, and how to be hungry; how to have an abundance, and how to suffer want. These selfsame sacred mysteries of the ancient Holy Order of Zarathustra and of the Buddhist monkhood were revealed to Jesus, besides all the scriptures of the Jews. And this served as the foundation of Jesus' morality.

And as Zarathustra (or Zoroaster), who was also called Mithra (or Mithras, meaning Friend, Savior or Saoshyant, Defender of Truth, and enemy of the powers of darkness); who was created and raised by the priesthood of the eternal kingdom of God and sent to the world as the Word, or Mathra, so was Jesus, or Mithra, sent in the meridian of time as the Word or Mathra to the world. Moreover as all the divine sons of Gods were raised by the Magi, a vehicle of the ancient Order of the fire-worshippers, so was Jesus. The so-called Wise Men of the east who followed the star were priests of the Order of Zarathustra (or Zoroaster). These priests or wise men were angelic beings, having been given the power to materialize suitable bodies for the occasion, and then dematerializing them after completing their assignments; and they remained spirit creatures, employing a physical body temporarily. And although to the Hebrews Jesus was the Word or Mathra made flesh in the form of a Savior and Friend, or Mithra, to the Medo-Persians and Elamites he was Mithra, God of the Sun; and in Rome and Asia Minor he was Mithras. For it was the ancient cult of Mithra which raised all the Mithras that brought the Mathra or the Word of God to mankind; and became their saviors and redeemers, teachers and masters.

Although the date of December 25, as the actual day of Jesus' birth may not be accepted by all, this date of birth is quite acceptable. For Mary did return to Nazareth from Ain Kairim in the month of Tammuz (June/July), after spending three months there. And if she had conceived before she left, in the month of Nisan (March/April) it would make December the month of her delivery. This date was, however, established in memory of Jesus' birth in the fourth century A.D. And in the fifth century the Western Church ordered the feast to be celebrated on the day of Mithraic rites of the birth of the sun and the close of the feast of Saturnalia. This feast of the Romans, mostly Persians and those influenced by them, was celebrated in mid-December for merry-making. Christmas was originally a solar or Zoroastrian festival, celebrating at the winter solstice (about December 22nd), the lengthening of the day, and the triumph of the sun over his enemies. It was a Mithraic feast day, which became a Christian holy day. The influence of the religion of Zarathustra or Zoroaster upon the Law of Righteousness (or the Buddhist Dharma), and later upon the Christian religion is self-evident; each adding new facets to the great mysteries and secrets of the eternal kingdom of God; and bringing mankind closer and closer to the realization of the fulness of salvation, enlightenment, peace, joy, love, and all that ariseth out of the Good Principle (or Sisamoro).

Testimony of the Doctrine of Prayer and Fasting

Now, my beloved brothers, sisters, and friends of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day and Millennial-day Saints --- besides the doctrine of faith, repentance, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ requires an understanding and inclusion of prayer in our daily lives; and some fasting to feed our Souls. For prayer and fasting were an important part of Jesus' life. What is a prayer? It is a worshipful address to the true God, or to false gods. Speaking to God in the absence of the Spirit does not constitute a prayer, as can be seen in the judgement in Eden, and in the case of Cain. Prayer involves devotion, trust, a sense of dependence on the one to whom prayer is directed, love and joy. And the worshipper may ask, request, petition, entreat, supplicate, plead, beseech, beg, implore, seek, inquire, praise, thank or bless, by means of prayer.

Those who are obedient to God's commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his eyes, have the divine assurance that their prayers will be heard. But those who disregard the Word of God, shed blood, or practice wickedness, do not receive a favorable hearing; for their prayers are detestable to him; and the very prayer of such ones becomes a sin. King Saul in his ignorance and rebellion lost God's favor; and although he would inquire of Jehovah (or Yehweh), yet no answer would come to him from His presence. Jesus said that the hypocrites (the double-minded) who sought to draw attention to their self-righteousness and piety in praying, received their reward in full from men, but not from God. Such Pharisees made long prayers, and boasted of their morality, yet they were condemned by God for their hypocrisy. For they drew near with their mouth, but their hearts were far from God and his Holy Word. The individual must have faith in God and in his powers, as a Rewarder of those who seek him, approaching in full assurance of faith. Recognition of one's own sinful state is essential; and reconciliation with God for serious sins, through sincere repentance, humility, and contrition is required. Then God may let himself be entreated and grant forgiveness; no longer will one feel that God has placed barriers so that prayer may not pass through. And though one may not be cut off completely from God's presence, his prayers can be hindered if he fails to follow God's counsel; and those seeking forgiveness must be forgiving toward others.

Primarily prayers involve confessions, petitions or requests, expressions of praise and thanksgiving, and vows. The model prayer given by Jesus to his disciples concentrates on the sanctification of God's name, realization of the divine will by means of promised Kingdom, which government is headed by the Seed of Prophesy, the Meshiahh (Messiah). And the coming of the Kingdom implies the coming into the heart, Love and Joy; and it also means the upcoming judgement upon mankind, to reward the just and to punish the wicked. It refers not only to man's submission to God's will, nor to the doing of God's will by humans, but to God's own acting in fulfillment of his will toward the earth and its inhabitants, manifesting his power to achieve his declared purpose. The one praying, however, also expresses thereby his own preference for and submission to that divine will. Jesus' prayer expresses request for daily bread, forgiveness of debts, protection against temptation, and deliverance from the evil; and it acknowledges that the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory belongs to God forever and ever.

Olivet from Jerusalem

The Lord's Prayer
(Inside the Church of the Lord's Prayer on the summit of Olivet.)

On the very summit of Olivet is the place where Jesus taught the disciples this prayer. And to keep the memory of that event alive a church has been built, called the Church of the Lord's Prayer; just below to the west is Jerusalem in full view, and to the east is Bethany. The Church has an inner court and this corridor extends entirely around it. Set into the walls are thirty-two tablets; on each of them the Lord's Prayer is skillfully engraved. On each marble slab it is inscribed in a different language, that the visitors from all across the earth can read it in their own tongue. The English translation is shown to the left. On the first morning of the dedication feast, Jesus and his disciples went over to Jerusalem from Bethany. And as they came down the slopes of the Mount of Olives, in the plain view of Jerusalem, they met a man who had been born blind, a beggar, asking alms of the passersby. Jesus anointed his eyes with dampened clay and commanded: Go wash in the pool of Siloam. And to reach the pool one had to descend into the deep valley of Jehoshaphat, and ascend the slopes of mount Moriah (upon which now stands the Mosque of Omar, or Dome of the Rock) on the opposite side, a distance of more than a mile. The pool of Siloam was built by Hezekiah and the water was brought forth via a conduit from Gihon (now called the virgin's fountain), some seventeen hundred feet away. Jesus out of pure compassion and mercy told the man to go and wash in the pool of Siloam. And the man prayerfully obeyed his command, and straightway went and did as he was bidden, and he came away seeing. Jesus explained to the disciples that the man had been born blind, that the works of God should be manifested in him.

On his final night with his disciples, Jesus in prayer said that he did not make request concerning the world, but concerning those whom God had given him; and that these were not of the world but were despised of the world. Eventually, it is the knowledge of God's will that governs the contents of one's prayer, for the supplicant must realize that, if his request is to be granted, it must please God. The wicked and the rebellious against God's Word have no favor with him; the supplicant cannot request that which is evil and wicked, or contrary to God's revealed will. At the same time it is the confidence of the faithful that sustains them, knowing that no matter what it is that we ask in righteousness, he will grant us. Jesus told his disciples: If two of you on earth agree concerning any thing of importance that they should request, it will take place for them due to my Father in heaven. While one might pray for material things, such as food, shelter, clothing, etc., materialistic or carnal desires and ambitions are not proper subjects for prayer.

The Christians sometimes will not know just how or what to pray for; but God is aware of their unuttered groanings, and fully understands them; for God's active force, his Holy Spirit, accomplishes all these things. And it may not be until after the needed help has been received that the Christian realizes that what he might have prayed for, but did not know how to, was already set forth in God's Spirit-inspired Word. An acceptable prayer must be made to the right person, Jehovah God, in righteousness, in harmony with God's will and declared purpose. Jesus also admonished us to be persistent, and keep on asking, seeking and knocking, not giving up but finding faith in the power of prayer. For God allows his petitioners to demonstrate the depth of their concern, intensity of their needs, wants and wishes, and the genuineness of their motive. The seeming delay on God's part in answering some prayers is not due to his inability to answer them, but the answer must await God's timetable. At times they must wrestle long like Jacob, to obtain a blessing.

And, although Jehovah God, the Sovereign Ruler, cannot be pressured by numbers into taking action, he does take note of the concern shown among his servants as a body; taking action when they collectively show deep concern and united interest; as in cases involving God's honor, the good of his people, or political demands. The entire collection of psalms consists of prayers and songs of praise to God, its contents illustrating the nature of prayer.

Prayer opens doors and windows through which man's soul may find liberation from the confinement of things which bind, and expand to meet the never-ending love of God. This is a great mystery and sacred secret to know that the Spirit deserves as much or more care as the body; our Spiritual health being as or more important to our well-being as our physical health; the life being more than food, and the body more than raiment. In other words, that which is within is more important than that which is without, the essence being more important than its physical, mental, or emotional manifestation.

As the physiologists and physical therapists emphasize the physical exercise to build muscles and grow strong in body, equally or more important is the building of the Spiritual muscles and growing strong in Spirit, through prayer. For a prayer is for the Spirit exactly what calisthenics are for the body, something to keep one in tune, fit, vital, efficient, healthy, and always ready for the next problem of life.

Now the humble servant, in obedience to the Divine command shall fully draw from the words of latter-day prophet, teacher, a divine friend, and a servant of the Lord, namely, Glenn Clark (whose words on prayer were written circa 1923 A.D.), as a part of his testimony.

There are some modern-day prophets who hold that truth, like light, is impersonal, infinite, universal, and eternal; and they rejoice in being selfless channels by which its radiance may reach humankind. The most exalted of these covet no personal fame, nor expect any reward of their good works; rather they derive their reward from seeing the dawn they so love steadily expanding, increasing into high noon, and flooding all the plain with light. From such Olympian light-gatherers as these I have lit my torch. The only acknowledgement I can conceive of which seems at all worthy of such great souls and personages is the continued spreading of their light; that it may reach a large circle and bring joy to a greater number.

Only a few of these light-givers came to me in the form of books. More came as friends bearing gifts, still more as eager questioners; their very needs bringing into light new conceptions, which had not their hunger drawn them forth, might otherwise never have come into existence. But deserving of gratitude above all the rest, which can never be repaid in spoken words is the silent band of men and women of many churches and creeds, whose prayers have been a mighty force in bringing into existence Truth more exalted than the voice of him who utters it, and Light greater than the lamp that sends it forth.

I do not know why God should have blessed me for the past three years with an almost continuous stream of answered prayer. Some of the answers were marvelous, many unexplainable, all of them joy-giving. But, greater than any particular blessing that came with any particular answer, greater than the combined blessings of all the combined answers was a gift, a blessing, that was so much larger, so much more inclusive than all the other special gifts that it encompassed all within itself. I refer to the peace and happiness and absolute liberation from the bondage of fear and anger and the life-destroying emotions that came to me and revealed the practicability of finding the Kingdom of Heaven in the practical world of men.

Accompanying this great blessing came the impulse to share it with others --- to pass it on to others, that they too might have their burdens eased and their paths made smooth. But whenever I approached a friend to tell him how I prayed, my brain stumbled and words failed me. My method was simple, and defied scrutiny or analysis. Like the air I breathed, it could not be captured and confined in any form. So two years went by. Then one day, while walking home from college, a student said to me: "I wish very much that you would tell me how you pray; won't you tell me sometime?" It suddenly occurrred to me that this was the first time that anyone had put that question to me. I do not know whether it is that every question has its own answer residing in it, just as every seed contains within it the entire life-plan of the completed plant, or the command of Jesus; Ask, and it shall be given you, seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you; or it is the Spirit of Christian humility and love. But this I do know; that in one late evening the answer to this question leaped full-fledged into my brain. For two years I had striven in vain to answer a question that no one had ever asked; and then in a twinkling the answer came.

The words which follow contain the answer to that question. I do not wish the method here described to become a formula; rather the knowledge is to be used in concert with varied human needs, wants, desires, and aspirations. For the knowledge shall open doors and windows through which man's soul may find liberation from the confinement of the things which bind, and expand to meet the ever-expanding love of God. I find the frame for my method of prayer in the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm. I say "frame" because either one of these can be recited in less than half a minute; although a prayer for the materialistically-minded moderns will demand at least fifteen minutes of our time.

In our materialistic worldly existence, I know it may sound impractical and visionary to suggest that the Spirit deserves as much care as the body. But is not our Spiritual health as important to our well-being as our physical health? Is not the life more than the food, and the body more than the raiment? Is not the kernel within the seed and the sap within the oak; and that which is within, vitalizing, propelling the life processes, more important than that which is without and can be seen and touched?

Let me stand, if you will, in the market place with the physical culturists and demand, as they demand, fifteen minutes of your time every day for two months. And while I hesitate to promise, as they promise, that at the end of that time you will find yourself a new man; this I do promise: At the end of that time you will find yourself in a friendly universe, where religion will no longer be a thing to be believed or disbelieved, a thing to be worn or cast off, but where religion will be a part of life as blood is a part of the body. You will find yourself in a new world where your God is no longer confined to churches and meetinghouses, or forms the days, but where he governs every minute of every day of every year. You will find yourself in a new world where immortality will no longer be sought as something far away, to be found at some far distant time, for you will know that you are immortal now, and that the entire universe with all its good and beauty belongs to you now and forever.

Let us take then, as our model, the zeal and steadfastness of the physical culturist, and utilize it in the field of Spirit. To bring these two fields together in our mind will prove very helpful; for a prayer is for the Spirit exactly what calisthenics is for the body --- something to keep one in tune, fit, vital, efficient, and healthy, and constantly ready for the next problem in life. Now what are the underlying principles of physical fitness?

(1) The first principle is that the man shall stretch his muscles, as the caged lion stretches, whenever he can. And the muscles that are seen are not so important as the muscles that are unseen. This is also the first principle of prayer. One should stretch the mind to take in God, not a one-sided, two-sided, or a three-sided view of God, but all. And this stretching should not be for the objective mind, that sees, discerns and controls; but for the subjective mind that is out of sight, into the deep recesses of the brain.

(2) The second principle of physical fitness is to breathe deeply and freely; for such deep breathing clears the brain and avenues of circulation; breathing out the waste products and breathing in the new clear life from the atmosphere which surrounds us. This is also the second principle of prayer. We should cast out the bad and pray in the good. Dismiss from our mind the trouble which seems imminent and affirm emphatically the great promises and truths of God; forgive the sinners, and accept forgiveness of their sins.

(3) The third and final principle of physical fitness is that these exercises should be kept up steadily, daily, until the habit of deep breathing has been transferred to the nervous system; until it becomes an automatic habit, like a man between jobs at his office unconsciously stretches his legs under the table, and continues to breathe deeply and freely from the depths of his lungs. This is also the third principle of prayer --- to make the stretching of mind to see God a continuous habit all through the day; this is the deep breathing of the Soul. It mentally denies the entrance of the bad thoughts to the brain, and expands the good thoughts, a steady and automatic habit of the subconsciousness. This is in accord with Apostle Paul's admonition, "Pray without ceasing."

Now, within the framework of these three principles, as stated above, we shall think in terms of the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm. The first principle of physical fitness and prayer requires the expanding of mind to take in all of God, by stretching out the Spirit or Imagination, as the caged lion stretches his muscles. One might ponder upon the deep meanings and connotations hidden in these powerful scriptures. Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy Name; and The Lord is my Shepherd. Think of what the words Shepherd and Father imply! The more one ponders and thinks upon the scriptures the more the Soul of that person stretches and expands. The following suggested exercise includes seven affirmations; but all must work out themselves in countless other ways the possibilities of stretching the mind to take in all of God in prayer:

Affirmations

1. Our Father in Heaven, we are confirmed that thy Love is as boundless as the sky is boundless; and thy ways of revealing it are as numerous as the stars of the firmament.
2. Thy Compassion and tender mercies are as abundant as the raindrops and green grass.
3. Thy Joy is brighter than the sun at noonday, and thy ways of expressing it as countless as the sunbeams that shine upon our path.
4. Thy Peace and Rest is sweeter than the sweetest thing on earth; and to our Soul it is as the very air we breathe is to our lungs.
5. Thy Spirit is as pure and ancient as the morning dew and the diamond; yet thy Spirit is as impervious to all that is unlike itself as the dew is to diamond.
6. Thy Power is greater than man's horizon; and thy ways of manifesting it are as numerous as the sand on the seashores.
7. Thou keepest all the celestial bodies in their course, without clash or discord of any kind; Thou guideth each of our steps in perfect harmony, for we keep our trust in thee; and acknowledge thee in all things; for thou art the God of Love, giver of every good and perfect gift, and there is none beside thee. Thou art Almighty, All-Pervading, and All-Wise God, in all, over all, and through all. And thine is the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The second principle of prayer requires breathing out waste poisons and breathing in new life from the atmosphere that surrounds us. We should cast out the bad, and pray in the good. This includes certain denials and affirmations. For example, in the Twenty-third Psalm, "I shall not want," and "I shall fear no evil" are the actual denials; and each is followed by a series of affirmations, as shown below:

. . . I shall not want (denial)
He maketh me lie down in green pastures, (Affirmations)
He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my Soul.
He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil. (denial)

For thou art with me. (Affirmations)
Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil.
My cup runneth over . . .

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

Before it is possible to breathe, one must be surrounded by atmosphere and it must be in one. Likewise, before it is possible to commune with God, which is the deep breathing of the Soul, one must know that God surrounds all and is in all; that the Kingdom of Heaven is here and now. As breathing is a mere rhythmic interchange of that which is within for that which is without, a casting out of that which seems to be bad, and receiving, in its stead, of that which seems to be good; so the breathing of the Soul is a casting out of all that would poison, cramp, or depreciate life --- in short all that which is unlike God; and taking in all that is pure, perfect, joyous, holy, which enriches life --- in short all that which is like God.

The finest examples of this rhythmic communion with God can be found in the Psalms of the Old Testament. And as our New England forefathers used to begin the day by offering a prayer and reading a Psalm, why can we not emulate their example and add to it a personal touch of originality by offering a prayer and improvising a psalm? Is not the psalm as much a part of worship as a prayer, and is there any reason why present-day worshipers should be limited to the collection of Psalms preserved for us in the Old Testament? And should we be limited in our prayers to the petitions preserved for us in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the ancient prophets?

As our first Spiritual exercise of the morning was a stretching of mind to take in God, so this is a breathing of the Soul. And just as in the physical breathing the waste products are expelled out, as the fresh, new, life-giving, body-building ozone is deeply breathed into the lungs, holding it till we have completely absorbed the life-giving oxygen; so should we give our denials with expulsive force, turning instantly to the constructive, soul-building affirmations. The trouble with most of our praying, as with our breathing, is that it is too negative. We shut ourselves up in a cramped little three-dimensional room with our negations, breathing in again and again the troubles that we should let vanish in thin air, instead of turning to new and fresh air --- to God.

Marvellous gifts and blessings await those who turn in thought to God and Heaven, and deny the existence of any wrong thing whatsoever in Heaven, for no wrong thoughts, wrong words, or wrong deeds prevail there; for the God and Creator of Heaven is the Almighty God of the Right and the Righteous. Moreover, no wrong thing felt or seen is permanent, therefore affirm to your Self the truth that the opposite condition exists in Heaven, and exists here and now in God's Kingdom. Once one is confirmed in the truths of God, he is on his way to earn great and wondrous rewards that await him. Do not ever deny the affirmations of which you have been once convinced; and ponder upon them often to fully realize the joy of revelations and learning. And if you have money troubles, realize there is no want --- or use of money in Heaven. For poor health, realize there is no sickness in Heaven; for aid in thinking or writing, realize there is no lack of ideas in Heaven; for happiness, there is no unhappiness in Heaven; for criticism and misunderstanding, realize that there is only praise in Heaven; for friends, there is no lack of friends in Heaven; and for worry, there is no worry in Heaven. Remember to learn and understand the truths of the Affirmations.

Now let us consider how we can turn the strength derived in the quiet hour into the daily routine of the world of action; for the test of every life, after all, is how do the hours of contemplation harmonize with the hours of actions? As after fifteen minutes of physical exercise in the morning one finds himself to be breathing a little deeper all day, the same results can be expected from our fifteen minutes of prayer every morning, to be living in the Kingdom of God a little more vitally all day. Here is where we can learn a lesson from the movies. No longer does one have to depend upon newspapers for news; one can see the world's news thrown on the screen if one desires. Then why does one have to depend entirely upon one's prayers for contact with God? Cannot one see, if one knows how, the Spiritual ideas of God revealed in the cinema pictures that flash by in actual life? The moment one awakes to the fact that one lives in God's world here and now, one begins to see in every event a part of the beautiful symmetrical plan of God. Of course, as it flashes by in little separate frames of a fraction of a second each, not every frame of the picture may seem quite perfect; neither would every stitch of a famous tapestry appear perfect to an eye looking through a microscope. Once one reaches this stage, he has found the secret of praying without ceasing; and now the miracles will begin to happen around that person.

When a visitor comes, accept him as a messenger from God, and before long a divine message actually will come to you. Accept every disappointment as a signpost to guide you to some other answer, to a better way. Gradually this practising the presence of God, or living in the Kingdom of Heaven, will become a habit. Then you will wonder why for so many years you had not been living there before. But the best way is to stretch the mind frequently to take in all of God that you can, and practice frequently the deep breathing of the Soul. In other words, one can enter the Kingdom of Heaven only by prayer and meditation. Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy might, mind, and strength; seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his Righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Think of God and Heaven, not of the bad thing you are tossing off into the air. Pray, if possible, out of loyalty to God, for the Love and Joy of it, and not for results. Avoid praying to bring things to pass, pray to see the things that already exist in the Kingdom. Do not limit the avenues by which God will answer your prayers; remember that God's ways of manifesting his love are as numerous as the stars of the firmament. And do not feel responsible for your prayers or the answer to them. God alone is the planner and knows best. Be grateful in all things, and always show gratitude and reverence in your prayers.

Jesus had a power of overcoming trouble, a power of triumphing over the Prince of this world; and he uttered a promise that he would leave us this power, saying: Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do. What is then that power which Jesus promised he was going to leave us, and where shall we find it? Is Jesus' power to heal the sick, to bring peace to the troubled, and harmony out of discord a lost art? I have come to the conclusion that the greatest of all lost arts --- lost for these twenty centuries --- is the great art of living as Jesus practised it; living in such a way that trouble fell like scales from the eyes of all those about Jesus who were in need. If this art is lost, where shall we go to find it? For if it is truly the greatest of all the arts it is certainly worth the seeking.

After some time, having assured myself, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that Jesus meant us to take him absolutely at his word when he said, The works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; and having convinced myself that within Jesus' own life lay concealed the secret of doing these mighty works, I went back down the pathway of history to where Jesus stood before he sent the idea of Christ whirling down the ages. I went to where he stood, and examined carefully, as best I was able, the way he swung the full force of that matchless strength and harmony of thought in the great game of life; then I let my eye follow the course which the Christ idea must have followed in its triumphant flight.

And this is what I found --- that Jesus' attitude toward life was one of converting everything he saw and touched into parables. He stood on this earth as a symbol of a greater world. He gripped the issues of life as mere symbols of eternal and heavenly truths and realities. Petty problems, sorrows and disasters he converted into marvellous symbols of eternal and infinite goodness. Thus nothing was petty, trivial, or without meaning in Jesus' world, for all things combined revealed the fulness of the Kingdom that prevailed in the meridian of time, the Kingdom of Heaven in which he lived and moved and had his being. Moreover, Jesus spake in parables, and without a parable he spake not unto them. Jesus was one above all others who never let his lips say what his mind and heart did not authorize; for he knew that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The parable point of view was at the heart of his being; he thought, spake, and worked in parables.

To me this was a great discovery of my life. It took its rank, in my little universe at least, beside Newton's and Watt's discoveries that apples fall downward and steam pushes outward. And I am firmly convinced that when the religious world as a whole awakes to the full significance and meaning implied in these simple words, the result will be just as transforming to the Spiritual life of the world as the discovery of gravitation and of steam power has been to the scientific and material life of the world. For just as the discoveries of Watt and Newton awakened man to the presence of a new world of physical and material forces outside of him, so the discovery of Jesus' way of looking at life will awaken man to the presence of a new world of cosmic and Spiritual forces within him.

There exists a deeper and closer association of cause and effect between the parables and the miracles of the Lord Jesus Christ. For in Jesus' parabolic interpretation of life actually lay the secret of the signs and wonders that signalized his healing and teaching ministry. If all this is implied in Jesus' parabolic view of life, it behooves us to consider carefully just what manner of thing this mystery is that we call a parable --- this thing that is so filled with moral and Spiritual dynamite.

A parable is an allegorical relation of something real; first it deals with a truth or reality, then it translates it in terms of imagination. For Jesus looked at all things through the lens of the divine imagination. And by means of that fact troubles vanished away, obstacles fell away, the lost became found, the sick became well, sinners became redeemed, and rough places became smooth. He also promised that those who followed him and used the Way he used should have similar dominion over all things on earth, and that greater works than Jesus should they be able to do also.

The imagination is the power we all possess of seeing harmonies, unities, and beauties in things where the non-imaginative mind sees nothing but discords, separations, ugliness. Imagination is the tool of the mind with which we build up our affirmations. The scriptures comfort us when all else fails us. To look at life in fulness of imagination is to see everything about us as a great parable full of deep inner meanings and connotations; with love and goodwill, compassion and mercy, joy and gladness, peace and serenity, wholeness, excellence and perfection; it is to see life truthfully, that is to say, Spiritually. This brings us into a condition of continuous prayerfulness and cosmic consciousness, a condition of continuous companionship of the Holy Spirit (the Comforter, or the Holy Ghost); this is the abode of the Soul or the Higher Self, this is the true and eternal realm of the Spiritual heaven, the realm of immortality and eternal life.

Of all qualities in man the imagination is most godlike; it is the quality which associates him most closely with God. And man, the highest creation of God, was a creation of God's imagination. The source and center of all man's creative powers, the power that above all others lifts him far beyond the level of brute creation, and gives him dominion over all the creatures of the earth, water and air, is the power of the imagination. Moreover, the imagination of man is but the window or door, which when thrown open, lets the divine life stream into our lives. When it is thus thrown open, man is brought into a condition of consciousness which is inspiration. This heavenly inspiration is what links man to the Divine and brings into existence our prophets, seers, saints, poets, composers, mystics, and artists. This is the power that Christ Jesus had, which lifted him far above all other men; which power is now available to all who seek it in righteousness, through prayer and meditation.

The mighty works and miracles of Jesus were the direct outcome of his capacity to convert everything he saw, heard, and said into a parable; and we know a parable is merely an allegorical relation of something real. Therefore, the performing of a miracle is not such an impossible task. It consists merely of looking at the fact or reality through the lens of the imagination, and then letting this parable, or imaginative way of looking at facts and realities, bring to pass the thing which is spoken of as a miracle. And reality, in the eyes of the practical man, is made up of cold, hard facts --- of life. As we look about us in this world, we see all too frequently the quarrels, bickerings, unhappiness, unfaithfulness, treachery, covetousness, lusts of the eyes and heart, materialism, and Spiritual death everywhere. These are facts of life. But what are facts? Fact comes from the word factum, meaning we do or make. While reality is not made but eternal, facts are made and temporal. Love is, quarrels are made; truth is, lies are made; loyalty is, betrayals are made; purity is, impurity is made; life is, sickness is made.

And Jesus, whenever he was confronted with the temporal or made things, turned the lens of his divinely inspired imagination upon them, and converted them into parable, and behold, they stood forth revealed as mere shadows or reflections, upside down, of the reality. And every time Jesus converted a fact into a reality, the people exclaimed that a miracle had been wrought. Jesus did not disregard or overlook the facts of life, rather, he looked at them so much more understandingly than the rest of mankind that he looked straight through them into the underlying reality of which they were the mere counterfeits or reflections. This is what the parabolic view consists of. He looked steadily at the dead girl until he could utter with absolute conviction, based upon perfected understanding, this parable: The maid is not dead, but sleepeth! He looked through the palsied sufferer until he could pronounce with conviction another parable, Thy sins are forgiven thee! For Jesus meant simply going back behind the fact to the reality that fact represents. It does not mean watering the leaf that is waving conspicuously in the sunshine, but watering the roots that no one can see. It does not mean healing a man's skin, but healing the soul; it does not mean dealing with the seen, but the unseen; not with the carnal, but with the Spiritual. Once inner watering is done, the inner cleaning, the outer healing will follow as a matter of course.

Imagination is not something which makes believe that which is not; this is fancy. Fancy converts that which is real into pretence and sham, imagination enables one to see through the appearance of a thing to what it really is. For example, you are reading these words in a room with a perfectly flat floor, which was made flat by the combined skills of the engineers, designers and carpenters. When you look out of the window, the streets and gardens appear flat also. And for many millennia mankind did believe that the earth was flat. Why? Because they believed the evidence of their eyes. At last God raised up a man who looked at the world with his imagination, and he saw that it was round. The same is true with the sun. For thousands of years all mankind believed that the sun sets behind the western hills, or the sun is going down; the earth was the center of the universe, and the sun, moon, and stars revolved around it. Until God raised up another man who used his imagination sufficiently to see through the appearance of things to the reality behind the obvious. And when he insisted that the earth revolved around the sun, and not the other way around as it appears, they mocked at his belief.

Neither did Columbus create a miracle by proving that the earth was round when all the kings and all the king's men knew it was flat. And when he proved it was round, did he actually make it round? No. It was round all the time, he merely demonstrated to mankind that it was round. Did Copernicus make the sun stand still and the earth revolve around it? No, he created no miracle, he merely demonstrated and proved what was the reality behind the fact. And like Jesus, he also marvelled because of their unbelief. Now, did Jesus create a miracle, when he said, The maid is not dead, but sleepeth? No. He merely demonstrated that life is the reality; and death is merely a shadow or counterfeit of life.

Then can we create miracles? Yes, we can if we use our imagination and look steadfastly through appearances of things to the reality behind them. We cannot create miracles by our fancy, by trying to make believe we see things that we do not and cannot see because of selfishness. We can create miracles by faith, by knowing the reality behind the appearance or fact. By faith one can indeed move mountains. But what is the greatest of all realities, the reality around which all lesser realities center, so to speak? The realization which was at the core of all Jesus' miracles, was the truth that Man is eternally united with all that is good, with God and his eternal Kingdom; and he is eternally separated from all that is bad. In other words, knowing that the holy priesthood of God and its endless ministry and works prevail here and now; and by seeing all things in life with the Jesus' lens of inspired imagination, is sufficient to make the sick whole, sorrowful happy, sinful redeemed, and the lost found.

If Jesus thought, spake, and worked in parables, he must have also prayed in parables. For when he asked for physical and material blessings, he must first have translated these needs into symbols of Spiritual values; and prayed not for the material facts but for the Spiritual realities which those facts represented. When he prayed for the things that are seen, he used the language of the unseen. This was the substance of Jesus' prayers: Ask for great things, and the small things will be added unto you; ask for heavenly things, and earthly things will be added therein; seek Spiritual values, and earthly things expressing those values, will be given unto you. Set your affections on things above, not on the things of the earth; seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

Let us apply this method of prayer to two of the commonest things in this country, two things which are generally thought to be so worldly and mundane that they fall outside the proper scope and field of prayer --- namely, business and sports. Here the parable method wil be brought to its severest test. For how can a man in either of these fields with any sense of propriety go to God in prayer unless he can first pass his selfish desires through the filter of Jesus' parabolic view, and bring them forth purified of all dross and sediment of selfish desires (desires arising out of his primeval or ignorant self). Imagine two rival athletic coaches both praying for victory. Imagine the presidents of two rival business firms praying for monopoly of the trade in their line. How can either prayer be answered without disregarding, annulling, or violating the hallowed sanctity of the high office of prayer?

Just let us imagine a scene up in Heaven when two such conflicting prayers are received there. God gathers his angels together, and says: Down there are two earnest men asking for victories. Search through our stockrooms and treasuries and send them their portion of victories. And the angels come back and report, We don't find any such thing up here as victories; but we do find an old record which relates to an angel, the most beautiful of all those who sang before thee, who once made a request to become first in Heaven. If memory serves us right, Thou didst recommend that he journey down to a lower realm, where such requests might more appropriately be granted. Needless to say that the prayers of the two men remained unanswered. How then must one pray for athletic victories?

First of all by seeking the reality behind the idea of victory. What is the real object of these contests? To improve the physical, mental, and Spiritual condition of the men; and tone up the morale or condition of consciousness of the institution they represent. Will victory help this? It might if achieved fairly and honestly, but it is in no wise indispensable or even essential. This conclusion is reached by looking hard at the reality, that the physical condition of the men depends chiefly not on the muscle fibre, but on the condition of the heart and circulation of blood; its parabolic meaning being the love in heart and circulation of joy through the consciousness. Therefore a coach may pray for this reality, rather than the victory or fact which the reality represents. In other words, to pray for victory is bad, actually unmoral, if not immoral. To pray for the team members to do their best is only a little better, for it leaves each member thinking of his own little best, to fulfill his part of the personal responsibility; but it does not get to the root of things, it only waters the leaves of the plant, so to speak. To pray for a Spiritual condition or quality, not physical, will enable an athlete to do his best, and is far better. For it goes down to the roots of things, to the Spirit, the Soul, the Higher Self; to the abiding trust that all are one body in Jesus Christ, and that all power comes from the Father.

And this was all summed up by Jesus when he said; Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, including Love and Joy, and all these things, victory, self-expression, and all else, shall be added unto you. Light, as we all know, comes to us from the sun. And yet scientists tell us that what comes to us as light is no light at all until it strikes the atmosphere that is wrapped around the earth. Then it suddenly breaks up into innumerable sunbeams, and we say that light is here. If anyone traveling through space should meet the sunbeams that are coming from the sun, he would not recognize them as sunbeams. To him they would not appear as light at all, but as something else. Now let us imagine people of the world getting together and deciding to petition the sun to send more light; but their prayers cannot be answered for what they call by the name of light does not exist in the realm of the Sun. Yet the people down below, in their blindness of ignorance, would continue to cry, More light! Give us more light! And the only answer they could receive is, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss.

In the same manner, if two college presidents pray for money, and not for the reality behind this fact; which is the ideas of culture, inspiration, beauty, freedom, wisdom and truths, which the institution represents, the prayers cannot be answered by God. Ideas, not money, are needed; for the money which is needed for endowment, buildings, equipment, and so on is merely the means by which these ideas could be released in the largest possible way, in order to do the greatest possible good to the greatest number. Suppose they pray to the Heavenly Father for money, what would happen? Father might gather up his angels and say: Those two good men down below seem to need money; look through our treasuries and storehouses and send them their just portion, for it is my good pleasure to grant every request of my children. And most likely, angels will return, saying: We have searched all sacred treasuries of our Kingdom, and we find no such thing as money; we have nothing up here that moth and rust corrupt or that thieves can steal. All we can find are ideas, marvellous, glorious ideas, of abundance, of ease, of leisure, of service, of truth. Shall we send them? No, the Lord might reply, wait until they ask. Again, the only answer which seems appropriate, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. But suppose we should ask, seek, and knock for Spiritual ideas, and not for material things, what would happen? Simply this: that a veritable downpour of ideas, almost a hurricane or blizzard of ideas would be shed down upon the petitioner; and as soon as these ideas of truth, culture, beauty, and happiness, struck the atmosphere of this earth, many of them could be converted into good round hard practical dollars, the means by which these ideas could be released in the largest possible way, to do the greatest possible good to the greatest number. God has been accused by some of being a tyrant, and by other names; but not one at any time has ever accused God of being a fool. He knows our practical modern-day needs better than we do ourselves. Not until we set our affection on higher things, and not on things of the earth, will He grant all the requests of his children.

Now, it is written in the scriptures: When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. Is there not, then, a certain amount of hypocrisy and subterfuge in asking for one thing in secret, and desiring another? In asking for ideas, and desiring money; in asking for love and joy, and desiring victory? Therefore, as long as one asks for one thing and desires another his prayers remain unanswered. One will find himself lifted into a purer realm, when he is released from the bondage of material existence; and his thoughts are not bound to the facts, which are made, but to the realities, which are not made, but eternal. Soon he will find himself lifted into a purer atmosphere; and he will not pray for treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal; for where his thoughts and treasures are, there will his heart be also.

Greater than the prayer is the Spirit in which it is uttered. Greater than speaking in parables, thinking in parables, even praying in parables, is living in parables. This is the secret underlying the parable method of speech of Jesus --- the parable method of living. For Jesus allied himself Spiritually with the universe, just as a scientist allies himself with it mentally. And as a scientist talks of and about the great powers of nature that are unseen, Jesus lived, moved, and possessed the powers that are unseen; and he moved amid these Spiritual forces with a grace and ease that are said to be the marvel of the ages. And Jesus himself testified that these powers could be possessed by all men, who take up the cross, follow his footsteps in looking upon life as he did. How did Jesus look upon life? He looked upon it imaginatively, that is to say, Spiritually. For the imagination sees things not in the carnal, but in the Spirit, not in parts but in wholes; not in imperfection but in perfection, not in ugliness but in beauty, not in discord but in harmony. Jesus came to make men Spiritual, whole, beautiful, and harmonious. To that end he talked to them in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them.

How can we, then, account for the failure of Christian churches to live up to the marvelous tenets of Christ Jesus? Is it not because for centuries we have considered religion as a science, not as an art? Is it not because we have taught it in precepts and not in parables? Is it not because we have looked at it in the cold light of reason, and failed to live it in the warm light of imagination? Is it not because we have based our conduct upon dogmas, creeds, and formulae, and not upon the simple parables of Jesus? When, O men of the churches, were we told to cast out the imagination from our midst? Is it not time that we cease making our religion a science merely, and make of it an art, as Jesus did --- an art of harmony, compassion, mercy, love, joy, and brotherhood?

In all other branches of activity, the art basis is considered supreme, and the scientific basis is considered subordinate. In business and sport, the two things that are thought to be so worldly and mundane that they fall outside the realm of prayer, a man is not classified according to what he believes, but according to the efficiency with which he carries out his task. The actual test in golf, for example, is how far and how perfectly a man can drive the ball. But the only test in the art of religion, as contrasted with the science of religion, is how far a man can give his allegiance to the Spiritual conception of the universe, and by his own life and conduct make the will of God prevail. Science talks of and about God, of and about Love, Joy, Peace, Truth, Wisdom, Purity, Harmony; but art expresses these and more. Science investigates and correlates, unifies and explains life's great affirmations; but art grows into, becomes one with, and expresses life's great affirmations. While a man may learn the laws of science in a day, he can grow in an art for all eternity; science is compounded and has ending, art is pure and eternal.

In the realm of science there may be as many hypotheses as there are scientists; in the realm of art there can be but one test: Does it manifest itself in life? Does the orator make one weep, make one laugh, make one act? Then don't ask what theory of elocution he used. Did the boat's crew win the race? Then don't ask what theory of stroke they used. Did a painting please you? Then don't ask what school of painting it represents. The scientists, bound by their ego, ask these questions, and many are ensnared into looking at and learning these facts; and continue to remain in the spirit prison of their illusion of individuality and selfishness forever and ever, until Divine intervention is decreed. In the same manner, did the good man throw open the windows and doors for someone and let God's Holy Spirit enter and fill his home? Did he make one realize he is a Spiritual being living in a Spiritual universe? Then don't ask what his creed is, or to what church he belongs. Don't ask what mansion he lives in, for in our Father's house are many mansions. Suffice to know that he belongs to the Father's house; that he lives in the consciousness of God's all-pervading presence; that in God he lives and moves and has his being.

Prayer is governed by the same laws that govern the growth of the flower in the crannied wall; it is controlled by the same laws that control the flow of a stream, the art of a game, the life of a creature. For as God is in all things, so are his laws prevailing in all things; and as God is the same yesterday, today, and forever, so are his mighty laws the same yesterday, today, and forever. As prayer is life raised to its highest degree, so the laws of prayer are the laws of life raised to their highest expression. A man who learns and practises the laws of prayer correctly should be able to play golf better, do business better, work better, love better, serve better. For to learn how to pray is to learn how to live.

The art of prayer derives its inspiration from the baptism of Jesus, not from the baptism of John; meaning, from the baptism of the Holy Spirit as opposed to the baptism by water alone. And we know John came neither eating nor drinking, nor did he touch a woman, and they said, He hath a devil. Then came the Son of Man (in Hebrew, Son of Adam) drinking and rejoicing, and they said, Behold a man gluttonous and a winebibber. Prayer, as Jesus saw it, was not a withdrawal from life and good things which life affords; rather, it was a glorious taking-in of the fulness of life with a parabolic view, looking at the reality behind the fact.

In the game of golf, the first thing one does is to tee-up the ball, ready for the first stroke. And not until one has driven the ball into a sand bunker a few times and wasted a dozen strokes trying to get it out will he recognize the full significance of the truth concerning prayer. Let the sand serve you, not crush you. For just as a flag cannot grow without mire nor a reed without water, neither can one start a game of golf without sand, nor a life of prayer without trouble. After a man gets out on the fairway he does not always have to use trouble to raise and sharpen his stroke; but no man can make an efficient start in a life of prayer without first having to tee-up his purpose upon a little mound of trouble. Trouble actually is one of the greatest blessings that can come to a man who wishes to learn the game aright, provided he knows how to use it and not let it use him. With sand one makes a tee; and when properly made, it is called a "lie." Use your imagination, your parabolic method of looking at life, and convert your trouble, or tee, into a lie. Moreover, the more sand you find in the box, the better the lie you will be able to make, and the better will be your start.

The first rule to remember is: Don't top the ball. This the primeval instinct leads one to do, and is the grandfather of all the troubles of golf-playing. It is the lower self of man telling him to draw the club up to himself. It is the intrusion of this little self-thought into the great and ancient game. This intrusion in prayer expresses itself in the ever recurring question: What does it mean to me? What advantage, what gain, what glory will I get out of it? This expectation of reward is of the nature of rajas, and belongs to the passions of man, not to virtue. Jesus, being virtuous, had no difficulty with this intrusion or grasping of the primeval or lower self of man. He said: And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. In other words, double-mindedness or the quality of the Druj, is the cause of this intrusion. Such a man who hesitated to take the self-thought, or fear, out of his dealings with God was Jonah; and to this day, when a message is laid upon us to be delivered to mankind, we have our agency to choose to make ourselves a barrier as Jonah, or a channel as Moses or Jesus. The subordination of the little I or lower self to the great I AM or God, is characteristic of all the writers of the scriptures; it is for this reason the scriptures come out of profounder depths of human experience than any other literature.

The second and third rules are allied to the first, as well as to each other. They are: Don't pull the stroke, and don't slice the ball. If you pull the stroke the ball will curve in one direction and become lost in the high trees of Anger at one side of the course; if you slice the ball it will curve in the other direction and be lost in the high grass of Worry at the other side of the course. Both of these don'ts are closely related, and are the lineal children of the inhibition that rises from the thought of self. Exactly the same holds true in prayer. Anger and Worry, the twin offspring of the self-thought, or lower self, have blocked more prayers, ruined more homes and churches, and destroyed more souls of man than all vices combined. Anger is a sign that we do not love God; and worry is a sign that we do not trust God. Anything which interferes with the flow of love and trust toward God blocks the perfect flow of prayer. It was for this reason Jesus added a footnote to the Lord's Prayer, saying: For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. And concerning anger, he said:

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and yet carrieth within thee anger or hatred against thy brother; leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift.

Both anger, or hating God, and worry, or doubting God, are sins, and block the perfect prayer. The fearful or angry are counted among the liars, idolators, sorcerers, whoremongers, murderers, and unbelievers; such have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. And as perfect love casteth out fear, absolute fear casteth out love. Without love we cannot have perfect prayer, nor fear and prayer should be combined on the altar of God. Let man ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed; let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

If one begins a prayer with fear in his heart and ends with fear totally gone, completely annihilated, he may rest assured that his prayer is answered; if not in man's way, at least in God's way. But, if one ends his prayer and fear remains, he may know that his prayer is not answered, and that a purer prayer is needed. If he keeps his trust, and removes his self-thought, his prayer will be answered for a surety. How can one have this perfect trust? By knowing that every need has its own fulfillment, just as every seed has its own fruition; and by using Jesus' method of looking through the need to the reality it represents, parabolically. Wait upon the Lord, and in His own way, and in His own good time, we shall see the harvest issue from the need, just as the farmer sees the full grown wheat come from the seed. Be ye like little children, like the little children that dig their well in the sand of the seashore, and the great ocean, miles deep and wide, is stirred all through and through to fill it for them! Similarly, in the presence of all our human needs, the divine forces in the universe are stirred through and through to fill it for us. Be confirmed in the knowledge, that around us are forces more fitted to take care of us than we ourselves; rest assured in knowing God reigneth for ever and ever, and we are in His hands.

These three don'ts: Don't top the ball, Don't pull the stroke, and Don't slice the ball; meaning, Don't pray with self-thought or fear, Don't be angry when you pray, and Don't worry when you pray, are the essence of the perfect prayer; these are the Three Don'ts of Purification. The one who prays from his Soul or Higher Self, not from his mind, or Lower Self or Ego, all his prayers are heard and answered. The three don'ts, then, are not the don'ts that bind, but liberate man; they make the way straight for the message of God to come to us. If we expect to get a message from the Father of Love and Wisdom, we must see to it that the receiving apparatus is pure and filled with Love and Joy. Any unloving thought clogs the flow of God's boundless love, just as rusty pipes retard or prevent the proper flow of life-giving waters from the great reservoirs in the mountains. Think of God as All-Loving, All-Powerful, All-Perfect, with no anger, with no distrust, with no fear.

Had Jesus turned the power of his miracles of love, compassion, and mercy into a means of self glory, he would have become a wizard, a worker in black magic, a scourge instead of a Christ. The temptations to which Satan submitted him were temptations to use the power of prayer divorced from love, in hypnotism, personal magnetism, clairvoyance, for personal glory and selfish ends. All the great religious leaders, prophets, seers, and revelators, who have lost their way in the histories of the world, had one thing in common --- they let the love drop from their prayers, and let the self in. Such men make prayer a mere system, a mechanical routine, a formula. Whenever this happens, the power that before was kept alive by love is atrophied, and miracles cease to happen; the prayers are no longer answered. For some three hundred years after Christ, early Christians continued to work miracles, many of which were almost as great as those of Jesus himself.

Not until congregations come together to pray in the Spirit, not merely to listen to a sermon or testimony, or go through a ritual, and love prevails in prayers and self is forgotten, then we may expect miracles again; for the blind to see, the lame to walk, and those possessed of fear or doubt, anger, and worry, to be set free from the demons.

The prayer without love is a cursed prayer, in league with the devil. The fig tree in Palestine bears not leaves until after it has borne fruit. One day Jesus came upon a tree that was abundantly covered with leaves without having first borne its fruit. And Jesus, an ensample of forgiveness, mercy and tenderness, cursed the fig tree; and when he and his disciples passed it again, they found the leaves withered. In this parable of the fig tree, the fruit represents the love in our hearts; the leaves are the miracles or active force. As leaves follow the fruit, so the works follow love. The works are permanent only in so far as love preceded them; otherwise they are cursed and will wither away. Accordingly, prayer which is offered without love may sometimes bear leaves, or results of a kind; but if the fruit of love has not first been there it is already cursed. For just as a murder-thought, symbolized by Cain, carried the curse of God on it, so the prayer without love bears the curse of Christ. Even before such a prayer is uttered, it is already dead and had much better never have been born.

Watch the joy of a business man who is committed to the game of golf; watch him put away his troubles, sling his golf bag over his shoulder, and with a thrill of joy step out into the open spaces of the links. Yet what his time in the joyous open spaces is to his physical well-being, prayer is to his Spiritual health; there should be as much or more joy. The more unselfish joy one can put into one's prayer, by focusing on the things of the Higher Self, God-conscious thoughts, the more quickly will come the answer or manifestation of the prayer. For joy binds man to God, and gives him at-one-ment. It is by joy, born of the certainties of God's truths, that man is forever united to all that is good, and forever regenerated; apart from all that is bad. The immediate sense of joy so accompanies the answered prayer, that it is difficult to discern whether that sense is the cause or the sign of fulfillment. It is both, yet neither. The joy synchronizes with the answer, the partner of fulfillment, the inner realization that we are in the presence of God. When this joyous ecstasy is felt by the one who prays, it is a sign that Spiritual harmony has been achieved; this feeling of joy takes its rise from an inner realization, a subconscious sensation of perfect mind and muscle coordination; it is the unity with God first, and unity with man, through love, second, that makes the answer to prayer a certainty.

It is only after one has attained this Spiritual joy a few times in prayer, and has experienced the answer that accompanies it, that he truly knows that God does answer prayer. Thenceforth he turns to prayer with that exhilarating joy with which the golf-player turns to his game; or a scientist turns to his inventions, and with which an artist turns to his creation. As the highest peaks catch the first glow of on-coming dawn, so a man in exalted prayer, praying on the mountain top with love in his heart and joy in his Soul, will be the first to catch the glow of the on-coming answer to the needs of man.

When one bows in prayer, he should not be too deadly in his solemnity; he should rather make it a joyous and exalted outpouring of heart, mind, and Soul to God. Open all the doors of the heart wide to take in the incoming flood of joy; take all that you can, knowing that in so doing you are putting yourself in harmony with Jesus' own purpose in coming to man --- that we might have joy, and that our joy may be full. Know this: God is Love and God is Joy. The nearest thing to love we find in this world is joy. To get all you can of God in your heart, get all you can of joy and radiate it, joyously.

The three don'ts of prayer are merely the opposites of these three do's, which are the same rules restated in their positive form. Namely, to pray, Let out self-thought or fear, and let in God; let out Anger or hating God and let in Love; let out Worry, or doubting God, and let in Joy. We know that love is perfect understanding, for love is the light which makes all things clear; it is the giving up of lower self or ego, and nurturing of the Higher Self. So ask with love and it shall be answered; seek with love, and it shall be found; knock with love, and it shall be opened. For without love all prayer is as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal that profiteth nothing. But love never faileth, love casteth out all fear, love is perfect understanding, love is its own realization, its own completion, its own fulfillment.

And perfect love expresses itself in perfect Joy. This joy radiates throughout the vistas of consciousness, as sunlight plays up and down the vistas of mountains. No human power can prevent the perfect circulation of this joy; for it is propelled by Love which abides in the Higher Self of man. This joy is pure, perfect, complete and life-giving;

> Nothing is sick but this Joy can make whole,
> Nothing is impure but this Joy can make pure,
> Nothing is hid but this Joy can bring to light,
> Nothing is imperfect but this Joy can make perfect.
> For it is propelled by Love, and Love is omnipotent, for > Love is God.

Now, after a man has prayed and the answer has come, the tendency is to lean back with satisfaction thinking that the task is completed. If this were indeed a task it might be so; but true prayer is never a task; it is a rich and blessed sharing with God. True prayer begins with God and must be returned to God, through the gratitude that glorifies God. This gratitude is what puts the seal of permanence upon any act of prayer. The ways and means of expressing our gratitude to God are almost as innumerable as the ways and means of manifesting love. Jesus said, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

It is written, when a man has been saved from sin, the surest way to make his salvation permanent is for him to go straightway and save another man. In the same manner, whenever one gets an answer to prayer, the best way to make it permanent and to ensure future answers is to go and express one's thanks to God, by helping others to find the same blessings that he has found. Gratitude is a most marvelous and cleansing feeling there is. Gratitude sums up, includes, and expresses every attribute essential for prayer. Perfect gratitude is perfect prayer. And to keep one's self in a condition of eternal gratitude is to keep one's self in a condition of eternal prayer. Then one may know what it means to pray without ceasing.

Perfect prayer also requires a fusing of all the various elements into one simple, direct communion with God. A straight line has beginning and an ending; convert it into a circle and its beginning and ending are no more; it represents everlasting to everlasting, infinite, and eternal.

Where there is God, there is Love;
Where there is Love, there is Joy;
Where there is Joy, there is Power;
Where there is Power, God is glorified (through Gratitude);
Where God is glorified, there is Love.

This rhythmic round repeats itself. This is the only example of real perpetual motion of this type known to man; it is perpetual because it begins and ends with God: God, Love, Joy, Power, Gratitude, Love, God. One may start the prayer by lifting his eyes to God and stretching his mind to take in His glory. But start the prayer in Love, and Love will inspire in him Joy; then let him not think on the resultant power that will manifest itself in response to, nor on the glory and majesty that follow; rather let him simply be aware that these things will follow, and will follow as inevitably as night follows day in that vast circle in which the earth turns nearly each twenty-four hours. Let him know this so absolutely that he rests assured in perfect trust, knowing that he will be kept in perfect peace, through keeping mind fixed on God and Godly things. Every prayer thus uttered becomes an eternal prayer. Though one may finish a prayer in five minutes, the prayer goes on forever; for its causes and effects and consequences continue forever and ever, because it is uttered in a circle, with its perpetual motion. It has no beginning and no end, because it comes from God and is returned to God.

Genius is an artist's true joy in his work. What causes one to have joy in his work? His love for that work. For the man who desires to do inspired, artistic, creative work, whether it be in writing, business, teaching, speaking, or in any other vocation or profession, the process of preparation is the same. He should first look to God, from whence cometh his help; then realize clearly that God expresses himself through man in Love; this unselfish love of the Higher Self inevitably finds in its realization the most radiant Joy; this joy, founded of love, releases infinite Power; and this power inevitably redounds to the glory of God, in the form of a condition of eternal Gratitude. A most accurate definition of heaven is: Love of God expressed through Joy, in a condition of eternal Gratitude. Those who have experienced in their hearts the reality of the Kingdom of Heaven within know that it is largely made of Love and Joy. Therefore, remember next time you end the Lord's Prayer, and you will find the complete circle of prayer in one sentence:

> For Thine is the Kingdom (that is, Love and Joy), and the Power and the Glory, forever, Amen.

Jesus never looked at life as the scientists do, in terms of facts or formulae, from the outside; but he looked at it as a great artist would, from the point of view of the Spirit. Whenever he spake of Truth, he always meant the Spirit of Truth. He spake not as the scribes, who clothed the truth by laws, dogmas, and outward things, but as one who lived and moved and spake by the power of the Holy Spirit of Truth. The Spirit of Truth, like the Spirit of Love or Joy, is a condition of consciousness or state of being. It is the Spirit which brings us into at-one-ness with All-Truth. It is a state of perfect discernment, understanding, and unity with the Father. Truth is not a concept; it is the power to conceive and express concepts. As a man thinketh and prayeth in his heart, so is he.

And such is the testimony of the humble servant of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; and of the birth, ministry, death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ who was sent forth in the meridian of time, as the spoken Word in the flesh. Moreover, an insight into the principles of Faith and Repentance, and ordinances of Baptism by full immersion in water, and Baptism of the Holy Ghost has been discussed. But most importantly an additional principle, namely of Prayer, is added in the dispensation of the fulness of time; so that the Millennial-day doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ might include prayer as an important part of the Christian doctrine. Our Church is truly blessed with a precious gift of a Latter-day servant of the Lord, a teacher, prophet, seer, and revelator, brother Glenn Clark, whose words on prayer are most illuminating and pertinent.

Now prayer and fasting go hand in hand; and as prayer is essential for the health and well-being of the Soul or Higher Self, so is its companion fasting. A voluntary abstinence from food and pleasures is an important principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ for developing and sustaining Spiritual strength. Rightly motivated fasts include Godly sorrow and repentance concerning past sins; but fasting is also essential to obtain God's favor during times of great danger or fear, or when seeking divine guidance, enduring tests and trials, meeting temptations; or when studying, meditating, or concentrating on God's purposes.

When sins of the Jewish people were heavy, and they substituted false worship for the true; and they repented not sincerely, but made pretense of worshiping Jehovah God, giving him only mock offerings with words and worshiping for outward show alone; God rebuked them for their hypocrisy, and for not afflicting their soul to show Godly sorrow and repentance. These Jews fasted in the absence of the Holy Spirit; and during their fast, acted as if they possessed righteousness, and pursued the lusts, desires, and pleasures of their hearts and mind. And Isaiah the prophet warned them, saying: Is it such a fast that the Lord hath chosen? A day for the earthly man to afflict his soul? To bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call it a fast, an acceptable offering unto the Lord?

But Christ Jesus' counsel to the faithful was different concerning fasting, for he said; Moreover if ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward in full of men. But ye, when ye fast, anoint thy head and wash thy face and mouth; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father, who is in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. Although the Christian congregations are under no compulsion to fast, to keep the sabbath day holy, through fasting, is truly rejoicing for the saints and holy men; they do not fast to repent or to be sorrowful, but to them fasting is rejoicing, a righteous and willing offering. To such, their reward comes from God, and not from the prince of the world. Moreover, there are no prescribed rules concerning fasting; usually not eating during the daylight hours, from before six o'clock in the morning (or the first hour) until six o'clock in the evening (or after the twelfth hour) constituted a fast day in ancient times; and it is acceptable to God, if offered with a sincere heart in righteousness.

Now, the humble servant shall continue his testimony of the Gospel and the Church of Jesus Christ, during the period which followed Pentecost, the period known as the Apostolic Age.

Testimony of the Church of Jesus Christ after Pentecost

(the beginning of the Apostolic Age, circa 33 A.D.)

We know Christs come and go, so do priests and kings, but the Holy Order of the Priesthood of God, the eternal Kingdom of God, its bureaucracy, continues forever and ever; for it is not a straight line which ends, but a straight line joined together, forming a circle, enabling the things to come into existence in the circular and boundless realm of eternities, even the realm of immortality and eternal life. After the time of the Maccabees, Israel had seized its hereditary dignity; and a part of the house of Aaron which supplied the high priests for Israel, moved into the wilderness, to dwell there. This community of the saints, known as the Community of the Saints of the Last Days, had established itself in the mountains near the Dead Sea, and in other smaller communities; to avoid the sins of the city, and to atone for the the immorality of the new order. They were simple and frugal folk, that pursued agriculture and other trades, but avoided war and harm to living animals; for by now the Law of Piety or Righteousness (Dharma) was fully accepted by all in the kingdom of God, who strictly obeyed the sublime truths of righteousness, which came out of India and Persia. To this community of dedicated and pious souls John the Baptist, son of Zechariah, belonged from his earliest youth. He lived on wild honey, drank little wine, and touched no woman. In other words, John and his followers were Shemitic Buddhists of Palestine.

Mostly John the Baptist was found on the banks of the Jordan, proclaiming the gospel of repentance, baptism by full immersion, and the coming of the Meshiahh (Messiah). John remained faithful to the Torah; and masses, including priests and Pharisees, came to hear him. And they called him the prophet of the living God. But he also drew on himself the anger of Herod Antipas when he warned that the law did not allow him to marry the wife of his brother. And Herod had him arrested, later to be beheaded on the eastern bank of the Dead Sea, in the hill fortress of Machaerus. It was also in this Community of the Saints of the Last Days that Jesus also had dwelt for a season. After the crucifixion of Jesus, his disciples were called the Followers of the Crucified.

The Church which was founded on the teachings of Christ Jesus later came to be known as the Universal or Catholic Church, or the Church of Rome. It began in Jerusalem with Jesus, and the apostles remained there for some years after the Ascension and Pentecost. James, the brother of Jesus, was the first of the disciples, and held the office which was later known as episcopal. Some forty years after Pentecost, circa 73 A.D., the Church and its government bureaucracy in Jerusalem was fully dispersed; although mass migrations to Rome, Asia Minor, Western Asia, and India were already complete before the divinely decreed destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. It became a desolate place; then, after some fifty years of desolation, a new Roman settlement occupied the city.

During the Apostolic Age, the Christian communities were established around most of the eastern Mediterranean. There were three cities, besides Jerusalem, that looked back to one of the apostles or saints of Christ. Antioch, where the name "Christian" was first coined and used, and whose bishop Ignatius (circa 110 A.D.), referred to the Church of Christ as the Catholic Church, looked back to St. Peter; Alexandria looked to Mark the Evangelist. Mark traveled with Paul and Barnabas, but left them; and he was also a close associate of Peter. Thus both Antioch and Alexandria claim a special bond with Peter, and a special dignity as patriarchates. However, Peter's name has been from earliest time associated with the Church of Rome.

The word apostle, the one who is sent forth, refers not only to Jesus' chosen disciple, but to Jesus also; for he was also sent forth by God as His appointed and commissioned representative. Jesus said: A slave is not greater than his master, nor one that is sent forth greater than the one who sent him. But the term is principally used to designate the twelve of the chosen disciples. Some of Jesus' apostles were previously disciples of John; eleven of them were Galileans, Judas Iscariot was the sole Judean; four of them were fishermen by trade, one was a tax collector; James and John, the sons of Zebedee, were Jesus' cousins. Of the twelve, Peter, James and John were closest to Jesus; they alone witnessed the resurrection of Jairus' daughter and the transfiguration; and accompanied him farther into the Garden of Gethsemane on the night of his arrest; and between Jesus and John the beloved his disciple, a special bond of love and friendship prevailed.

The Twelve were selected out of a large group of disciples, and named as apostles by Jesus; that they might continue with him, and that he might send them forth to preach and to have authority to expel demons, and power to bless and heal. But these apostles of God's Son manifested human weakness, nor were they cleansed and purified from their inherited sins of their fathers; ignorance, rashness, hostility, envy, jealousy, and all else that comes out of the little self of man they manifested. And they acknowledged their need for greater faith and knowledge. Despite their years of association with Jesus, and knowing him to be the Meshiahh (Messiah), they all abandoned him at the time of his arrest; and they were doubtful in believing the testimony that Jesus was resurrected; and they were afraid and fearful, and met in locked rooms. But the resurrected Jesus enlightened their minds and filled them with the Holy Spirit; and following his ascension to heaven on the fortieth day from his resurrection, the apostles manifested great joy; and remained continually in the temple praising God.

Moreover, the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon them at Pentecost greatly strengthened the apostles. And it was this great and boundless power of collective Holy Spirit that resulted in great expansion of the Christian congregation; the converts and congregations began to grow by leaps and bounds throughout the known world. The main function of the apostles was to be witnesses to Jesus' fulfillment of Jehovah God's purpose and prophecies; and to his resurrection and exaltation. And as the faith and testimony of the apostles grew, they continued to grow in the Spirit, performed miracles, healings, and wonders, as did their Master and Savior. For Jesus had said: Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the work that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do.

The apostles also occupied a primary position in the formation, organization, and later direction of the Christian congregation. Although they were joined by the Elders, the apostles formed a principal part of the governing body of the rapidly expanding body of Christian congregation. And this body was recognized by all early Christians as the channel of communication used by God to render decisions, and direct the affairs of the congregation throughout the earth. And for its scope, purpose and power pervaded the whole earth, it was later called the Catholic or Universal Church. It was truly a Spiritual church, all the decisions having been made by the power of the Holy Spirit of Truth, even by the power of the Holy Ghost, without much political or temporal consideration; the light and truth of Christ being their only guide. The apostles, therefore, served as a foundation, resting on Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone, for the building up of the Spiritual Temple.

Because of the defection of Judas Iscariot, who died unfaithful, there were eleven apostles remaining; and during the forty days from Jesus' resurrection until his ascension to heaven, one seat remained unfilled. Then, sometime during the ten days between Jesus' ascension and the day of Pentecost the Spirit had revealed unto them, that the vacancy left by Judas should be filled. Initially it was agreed that any individual filling the position of apostle of Christ Jesus must have the qualifications of having been personally conversant with him, having been an eyewitness of his works, his miracles and resurrection. In view of this, it was manifest unto them that in course of time the apostolic succession would become an impossibility. Before Pentecost, two men meeting this requirement were found as suitable replacement for Judas; lots were cast and Matthias was selected. At Pentecost, there were twelve apostolic foundations on which the Spiritual Israel could now rest. Later, Levite Joseph Barnabas became an apostle of the congregation of Antioch, in Syria; and other men were referred to as apostles of congregations, for they were "sent forth" by such congregations to represent them. But the apostleship of these men was not by virtue of apostolic succession, as was that of Matthias.

And it was circa 34/35 A.D. that Saul of Tarsus was converted and later referred to as Paul. He did become one of the founding apostles of Christ Jesus, and was a personal choice of the resurrected and ascended Jesus Christ. The apostle James, brother of John (sons of Zebedee), was not killed until about 44 A.D., when Herod Agrippa I had him executed by sword; making him the first of the twelve apostles to die as a martyr; and the twelve were yet alive at the time of Paul's becoming an apostle. Although Paul was not included among the founding twelve, his position as an apostle was in no wise inferior to others, but was superior to most. And for Matthias was not chosen personally by Jesus, and Paul was, the twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb were to include Paul and not Matthias; and yet the disagreement remained among a few.

Now we may turn to the account of the apostle Luke, who was a physician, faithful companion, and fellow-worker of apostle Paul. More insight into this period of Apostolic Age could be gained through the fourteen Pauline Epistles, or letters of Paul written to various churches, between circa 47 and 65 A.D.; and the letters of apostle Peter. Then, the words of James the prophet to the twelve tribes of Israel; of Jude the prophet to the Melchizedek priests of the church; and of John the prophet to the brethren and to the seven churches in Asia Minor will conclude this portion. And, then, we shall return to Rome, where the Church of Christ and its bureaucracy was finally established; and later a new era of Bishops and Saints (who after the eleventh century came to be known as Popes), emerged out of the ancient Aaronic priesthood of the Palestinian Jews. But the Melchizedek priesthood to which belonged Christ Jesus, and other high priests and elders, remained Spiritual and unseen to the world without.

ACCOUNT OF LUKE (or ACTS OF THE APOSTLES)

(Luke, or Loukas in Greek, and Lucanus or Lucius in Latin, was an apostle of Christ, and a physician by profession; whose account covers a period of about twenty-eight years, from circa 33 A.D. to 61 A.D. During this period four Roman emperors ruled in succession, namely: Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero)

The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach. Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen; to whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. And, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father; which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence. When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey. And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James. These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren. And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty), Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, A-cel-da-ma, that is to say, The field of blood. For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and his bishopric let another take. Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus; and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judaea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God. And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine. But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judaea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words. For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel. And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy. And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know. Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning the same: I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved; therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope. Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David; that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, the Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul; and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common. They sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour. And a certain man lame from birth was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple. Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked for alms. And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us. And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them. Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee; In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk. And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength. And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God. And all the people saw him walking and praising God; and they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple. And they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto the porch that is called Solomon's greatly wondering. And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? Or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk? The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses. And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know. Yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all. All now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers. But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled. Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you. Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be desroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day; for it was now eventide. Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand. And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes; Annas the high priest, Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem. And when they had set them in the midst, they asked, By what power, or by what name, have ye done this? Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel, if we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole, be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus. And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it. But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves, saying, What shall we do to these men? For that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it. But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them; that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus. But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people; for all men glorified God for that which was done. For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed. And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them. And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is. Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done. And now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy Word, by stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus. And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession, and kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet. But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? While it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost; and great fear came on all them that heard these things. And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him. And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in. And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much. Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out. Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost; and the young men came in, and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her husband. And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch. And of the rest durst no man join himself to them; but the people magnified them. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women. Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed every one. Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him (which is the sect of the Sadducees) and were filled with indignation. They laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison. But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, Go, stand and speak in the temple

to the people all the words of this life. And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought. But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; but when we had opened, we found no man within. Now when the high priest and the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow. Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people. Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence; for they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned. And when they had brought them, they set them before the council; and the high priest asked them, saying, Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? And, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us. Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men. The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him. When they heard that, and were cut to the heart, they took counsel to slay them.

Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee (meaning a Persian), named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space; and said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men. For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves, who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him; he also perished, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God. And to him they agreed; and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians (Greeks) against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the Word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude; and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas; and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch, whom they set before the apostles; and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them. And the Word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people. Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen. And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spake, Then they suborned men, which said: We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God. And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council, and set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law; for we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us. And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

Then said the high priest, Are these things so? And Stephen said, Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran (Haran), and said unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall shew thee. Then came he out of the land of the Chaldaeans, and dwelt in Charran; and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child. And God spake on this wise, that his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years. And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God; and after that shall they come forth, and serve me in this place. And he gave him the covenant of circumcision. And so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs. And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt, but God was with him; and delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house. Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan (Canaan), and great affliction; and our fathers found no sustenance. But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first. And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh. Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls. So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem. But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, till another king arose, which knew not Joseph. The same dealt subtly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live. In which time Moses was born, and was exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months; and when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son. And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds. And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel. And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian. For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them; but they understood not. And the next day he shewed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another? But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us? Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday? Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Midian, where he begat two sons. And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sinai (Sina) an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush. When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight; and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold. Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet; for the place where thou standest is holy ground. I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt. This Moses whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush. He brought them out, after that he had shewed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red Sea, and in the wilderness forty years. This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear. This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel, which spake to him in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us. To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us; for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands. Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness? Yea,ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them; and I will carry you away beyond Babylon. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen. Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David. Who found favour before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob. But Solomon built him an house. Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands, as saith the prophet; Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool, what house will ye build me? saith the Lord; or what is the place of my rest? Hath not my hand made all these things?

Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? And they have slain them which shewed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers. Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.

When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth. But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God; and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord. And cast him out of the city, and stoned him; and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my Spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.

And Saul was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, except the apostles. And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed to prison. Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the Word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them; and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed. And there was great joy in that city.

But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery; and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God. And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries. But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done. Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. (For as yet it was fallen upon none of them; only those that were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power; that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter; for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

And they, when they had testified and preached the Word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans. And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert. And he arose and went; and behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for worship, as he was returning, sitting in his chariot reading Isaiah (Esaias) the prophet; the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Isaiah, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him. The place of the scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away; and who shall declare his generation? For his life is taken from the earth. And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? Of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing. But Philip was found at Azotus; and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea.

And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem. And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus; and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven. And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest; it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat,nor drink much.

And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus; for, behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem. And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name. But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel. For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

And when he had received food, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ. And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him. But their laying await was known to Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him. Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples; but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple. But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus. And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem. And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians; but they went about to slay him. Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus. Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda. And there he found a certain man named Aeneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy. And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole; arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord. Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas; this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. And it came to pass in those days that she was sick, and died; whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber. And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them. Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber; and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes; and when she saw Peter, she sat up. And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her alive. And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord. And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon the tanner.

There was a certain man in Caesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always. He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day an angel of God coming to him, and saying, Cornelius. And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter. He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side; he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do. And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually. And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa. On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour. And he became very hungry, and would have eaten; but while they made ready, he fell into a trance, and saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth. Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat. But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean. And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. This was done thrice; and the vessel was received up again into heaven. Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean; behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate, and called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there. While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee. Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing; for I have sent them. Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius, and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek; what is the cause wherefore ye are come? And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee. Then he called them in, and lodged them. On the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him. The morrow after they entered into Caesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends. And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man. And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together. And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean. Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for; I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing, and said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee. Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The Word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ (he is the Lord of all). That Word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power, who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on the wood. Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly. Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins. While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. They asked Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

And the apostles and brethren that were in Judaea heard that the Gentiles had also received the Word of God. And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him, saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them. But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying, I was in the city of Joppa praying. And in a trance I saw a vision, a certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me. Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat. But I said, Not so, Lord; for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth. But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. And this was done three times; and all were drawn up again into heaven. And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Caesarea unto me. And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house. And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved. And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?

When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the Word to none but unto the Jews only. And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord. Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem; and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch. Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith; and many people were added unto the Lord. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, to seek Saul. And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea. Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. Then were the days of unleavened bread. And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in prison; but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him. And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the prison. And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison; and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he said unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. And he went out, and followed him; and believed not that it was true which was done by the angel, but thought he saw a vision. When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of its own accord. And they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him. And when Peter was come to himself, he said,

Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod; and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews. And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying. And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda. And when she recognized Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate. And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is his angel. But Peter continued knocking; and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished. But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter. And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judaea to Caesarea, and there abode. And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon; but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace, because their country was nourished by the king's country. And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory; and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost. But the Word of God grew and multiplied. And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus. And when they were at Salamis, they preached the Word of God in the synagogues of the Jews; and they had also John to their minister. And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus (Elymas). He was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the Word of God. But Elymas the sorcerer (for so was his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. Then Saul, who also is called Paul, filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, and said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand. Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia; and John departing from them returned to Jerusalem. But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down. And after the reading of the law and the prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on. Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience. The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it. And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness. And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan (Canaan), he divided their land to them by lot. And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet. And afterward they desired a king; and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis (Kish), a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years. And when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will. Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus. When John had first preached before his coming, the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel, and as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the Word of this salvation sent. For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the wood, and laid him in a sepulchre. But God raised him from the dead. And he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the Second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption.

But he, whom God raised again, saw no corruption. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins. And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets. Behold, ye despisers, wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you. And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath. Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God. And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the Word of God. But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.

Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the Word of God should first have been spoken to you. But seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the Word of the Lord; and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed. And the Word of the Lord was published throughout all the region. But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium. And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also the Greeks believed. But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren. Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the Word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands. But the multitude of the city was divided; and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles. And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them, they were aware of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and into the region that lieth round about. And there they preached the Gospel. And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from birth, who never had walked. The same heard Paul speak; who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked. And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker. Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people. Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, and saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein. Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead. Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city; and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe. And when they had preached the Gospel to that city; and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed. And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia. And when they had preached the Word in Perga, they went down into Attalia. And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. And there they abode long time with the disciples.

And certain men which came down from Judaea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question. And being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles; and they caused great joy unto all the brethren. And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them. But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying that it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses. And the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter. And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the Word of the Gospel, and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us. And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them. And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me. Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up. That the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world. Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God. But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren. And they wrote letters by them after this manner: The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia. Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment. It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch, and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle. Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation. And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them. And after they had tarried there for a while, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles. Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still. Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the Word of the Lord, with many others also. And some days after, Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the Word of the Lord, and see how they do. And Barnabas was determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark. But Paul thought it not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work. And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other; and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus. And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God. And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

Then came he to Derbe and Lystra; and behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, a Jewess, who believed; but his father was a Greek. Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium. Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters; for they knew all that his father was a Greek. And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem. And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, after they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered them not. And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and begged him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the Gospel unto them. Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis; and from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony; and we were in that city abiding certain days. And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us; whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us. And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the Most High God, which shew unto us the way of salvation. And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And it came out the same hour. And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers. And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, and teach customs which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans. And the multitude rose up together against them; and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them. And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely. Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks. And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God; and the prisoners heard them. And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken; and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed. And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled. But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm; for we are all here. Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, and brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the Word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his household, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go. And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go; now therefore depart, and go in peace. But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? Nay, verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out. And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates; and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans. And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city. And they went out of the prison and entered into the house of Lydia. And when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews. And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures, opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ. And some believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company; and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also; whom Jason hath received. And these all do contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus. And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things. And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go. And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea; who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews. These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the Word with all readiness of mind; and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Therefore many of them believed; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few. But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the Word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people. And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea; but Silas and Timotheus abode there still. And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens; and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his Spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him. Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? Other some, He semeth to be a setter forth of strange gods; because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection. And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is? For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears; we would know therefore what these things mean. For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing. Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth. dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things. And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent. Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead. And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked; and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter. So Paul departed from among them. Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed; among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

After these things Paul departed from Athens and came to Corinth. And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome. And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought; for by their occupation they were tent-makers. And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the Spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads, I am clean; from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles. And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized. Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace. For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city. And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the Word of God among them.

And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat, saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law. And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you. But if it be a question of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters. And he drave them from the judgment seat. Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. And Gallio cared for none of these things. And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn his head in Cenchrea; for he had a vow. And he came to Ephesus, and left them there; but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews. When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not. But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem; but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

And when he had landed at Caesarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch. And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples. And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the Spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John. And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue; whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him; who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace. For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the scriptures that Jesus was the Christ.

And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. And all the men were about twelve. And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God. But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude; he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks. And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul. So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them. Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon themselves to call them which had evil spirits in the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth. And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so. And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded. And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified. And many that believed came, and confessed, and shewed their deeds. Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men; and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver. So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed.

After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the Spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome. So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season. And the same time there arose no small stir about that way. For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen. Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands. So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth. And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. And the whole city was filled with confusion; and having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre. And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not. And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre. Some therefore cried one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together. And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. And when the town clerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter? Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet and to do nothing rashly. For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess. Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another. But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a lawful assembly. For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse. And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

And after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia. And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece, and there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia. And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus. These going before tarried for us at Troas. And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together. And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep. And as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed. And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul, for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot. And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene. And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus. For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia; for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost. And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church. And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews. And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house; testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there. Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself; so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God. And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more. Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God. Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears. And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all. And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him, sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara. And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth. Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days; who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem. And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city; and we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed. And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship, and they returned home again. And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day. And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Caesarea. And we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him. And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy. And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judaea a certain prophet, named Agabus. And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem. Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? For I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done. And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem. There went with us also certain of the disciples of Caesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge. And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were present. And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.

And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law. And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs. What is it therefore? The multitude must needs come together; for they will hear that thou art come. Do therefore this that we say to thee; we have four men which have a vow on them. Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads; and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law. As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them. And when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, crying out, Men of Israel, help; this is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place; and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place. For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.

And all the city was moved, and the people ran together; and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple; and forthwith the doors were shut. And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar. Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them, and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul. Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was and what he had done. And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude; and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle. And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people. For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him. And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek? Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers? But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city; and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people. And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying, Men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you. And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence; and he said: I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day. And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women. As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders; from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished. And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me. And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do. And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus. And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him. And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; and saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee out of Jerusalem; for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me. And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee. And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him. And he said unto me, Depart; for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth; for it is not fit that he should live. And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air, the chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him. And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned? When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest; for this man is a Roman. Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea. And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born. Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him; and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him. On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God unto this day. And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth. Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall; for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law? And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest? Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest; for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people. But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees; and the multitude was divided. For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both. And there arose a great cry; and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man. But if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God. And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle. And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul; for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy. And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul. Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you tomorrow, as though ye would enquire something more perfectly concerning him; and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him. And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul. Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain; for he hath a certain thing to tell him. So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and asked me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee. Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

And Paul's nephew said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul tomorrow into the council, as though they would enquire somewhat of him more perfectly. But do not thou yield unto them; for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him; and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee. So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me. And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night; and provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor. And he wrote a letter after this manner: Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting. This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them; then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman. And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council; whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds. And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell. Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris. On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle; who, when they came to Caesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him. And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia; I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.

And after five days Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul. And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, we accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness. Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words. For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Who also hath gone about to profane the temple; whom we took, and would have judged according to our law. But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands. Commanding his accusers to come unto thee; by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him. And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself. Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship. And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city; neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me. But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men. Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings. Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult. Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me. Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council. Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter. And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him. And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee. He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him, wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him. But after two years Porcius Festus came into Felix' room; and Felix, willing to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

Now when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem. Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him, and desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him. But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither. Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him. And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Caesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought. And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove. While he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all.

But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me? Then said Paul, I stand at Caesar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged; to the Jews have I done not wrong, as thou very well knowest. For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die. But if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar. Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? Unto Caesar shalt thou go. And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Caesarea to salute Festus. And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix. About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him. Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth. Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed; but had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive. And because I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters. But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Caesar. Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. Tomorrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth. And Festus said, king Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer. But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him. Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write. For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself. I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews. Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews; wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently. My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews; which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most strait sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee. And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers. Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead? I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem; and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities. Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests, at midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. But rise, and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee. Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee. To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me.

Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I (Paul) was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. But shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me. Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad. But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but I speak forth the words of truth and soberness. For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest. Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds. And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them. And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds. Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Caesar.

And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius a centurion of Augustus' band. And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us. And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself. And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary. And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia. And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein. And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under Crete, over against Salmone. And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called the fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea. Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them, and said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives. Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul. And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west. And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon. And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat. Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven. And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship. And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship. And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away. But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss. And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar; and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer; for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me. Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country. And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms; and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms. Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day. And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship, Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved. Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off. And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat (food), saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing. Wherefore I pray you to take some meat; for this is for your health; for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you. And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all; and when he had broken it, he began to eat. Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat. And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls. And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea. And when it was day, they knew not the land; but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship. And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoisted up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore. And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves. And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape. But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land; and the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.

And when they were escaped, then they knew that the island was called Melita (Malta). And the barbarous people shewed us no little kindness; for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold. And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live. And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm. Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly; but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god. In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously. And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux; to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him. So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed. Who also honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary. And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux. And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days. And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium; and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli. Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days; and so we went toward Rome. And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and the three taverns; whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard; but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together. And when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me. But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Caesar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of. For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you; because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain. And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judaea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or spake any harm of thee. But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest; for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against. And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening. And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not. And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive. For the heart of this people is waxed gross and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Paul the Apostle and Pauline Epistles

Now, Saul the Apostle was chosen by the resurrected and ascended Jesus Christ to be sent forth unto the Gentiles. He was a Jew, a Pharisee and pupil of Gamalial, of the tribe of Benjamin. His Roman or Latin name was Paul from childhood, and by this name he was later called in view of his ministry to declare good news to the Gentiles (or non-Jews). Paul was born in Tarsus, a prominent city in Cilicia. His father was granted Roman citizenship by Julius Caesar for services rendered during the Egyptian war; and Paul learned the trade of tentmaker from his father's business. At Jerusalem he received instruction from the learned Pharisee Gamalial, especially the Law of Piety (or Dharma), which came out of India and Persia. Paul was well-versed in Greek and Latin, Arabic, Hebrew, and other languages of the east. He had a sister and a nephew who resided in Jerusalem, and Paul remained unmarried during his travels as a missionary.

It was this Saul or Paul, as the young man at whose feet false witnesses, who stoned Jesus' disciple Stephen, laid their outer garments. Paul approved this martyrdom of Stephen, because of the prevailing misdirected zeal for tradition; and he began a campaign of political persecutions against the followers of Christ. He extended his persecution to cities other than Jerusalem, and even procured written authorization from the high priest Joseph Caiaphas to search out disciples of Christ Jesus as far north as Damascus, in Syria; and to bind and bring them to Jerusalem, to be tried by the Sanhedrin. Now, the Sanhedrin was the Jewish high court, located in Jerusalem. Seventy-one members constituted this high court called the Great Sanhedrin. In the time of Jesus' ministry the seventy-one members included one chief high priest and others who had held the office of high priest. It also included members of the high priestly families, older men, heads of the tribes and families, scribes and men of the Law. These men were members of the sects of the Pharisees and the Sadducees. Originally the Sanhedrin was established during Moses' time with the help of his father-in-law Jethro (or Reuel), the high priest of Midian; and was reorganized by Ezra soon after his return from exile, circa 468 B.C. Under Roman rule the Sanhedrin exercised great power over the Jews; and its authority in Spiritual and temporal matters was recognized by all Jews throughout the world. It had full civil and administrative authority; and had officers at its disposal and the power of arrest and imprisonment. This great high court was arranged like the half of a round threshing floor, so that they all might see one another.

Before them stood the two scribes of the judges, one to the right and one to the left; and one of them wrote down the words of them that favored acquittal, and the other of them that favored conviction. In Jerusalem there were lower courts composed of twenty-three members each; these smaller courts were also located in other cities of sufficient size throughout Palestine. The full number of judges comprising the court did not sit on every case; the number varied according to the seriousness of the matter under consideration. Additionally, there were village courts consisting of three men, and a court of seven older men of the village. The Sanhedrin sat from the time of offering of the daily morning sacrifice until the evening sacrifice, but no judgements were rendered on sabbath or feast days. Sometimes the synagogues which were used mainly for education, were also used as places for courts, having the power to inflict penalties of scourging and excommunication. The word senator is derived from Sanhedrin.

Under these conditions Paul of Tarsus travelled, and as he reached near Damascus, Jesus Christ revealed himself to him in a flashing light, and commissioned him to be a witness of the things which he had seen and would see. Whereby those with Paul also fell to the ground because of this manifestation and the sound which they heard. Paul alone understood the words and was blinded. For three days he neither ate nor drank much. Then, while praying in the house of a certain Judas at Damascus, Paul in a vision saw Christ's disciple Ananias come in and restore his sight. When the vision became reality, Paul was baptized, and received the Holy Spirit; then he partook of food and gained strength. Soon after, he began his ministry in the synagogues of Damascus, then went into Arabia. From Arabia he returned to Damascus and became a powerful witness of the Gospel of Christ. There he was persecuted for his preaching, so much so that they sought to put him to death.

Three years after his conversion, Paul arrived in Jerusalem circa 36 A.D., and found that the brethren there did not believe that he was a disciple. But Barnabas came to his aid and led him to the apostles Peter and James. Paul stayed with Peter (or Cephas). And when the brethren learned that the Greek-speaking Jews were making an attempt to kill Paul, they brought him to Caesarea and sent him off to Tarsus; and there he remained nearly seven years, preaching in Syria and Cilicia. He was then brought by Barnabas to Antioch, and after one year paid a visit to Jerusalem. After two more years of missionary work in Antioch, he started with Barnabas and Mark on his first missionary journey. Then came another visit to Jerusalem with Barnabas to attend a church conference with other apostles. After this they returned to Antioch. Paul then started his second missionary journey which lasted about three years, and ended with a short visit to Jerusalem. After a brief stay in Antioch, Paul began his third journey, which lasted about 3½ years. On his return to Jerusalem, Paul was arrested, and sent to Caesarea, where he remained a prisoner for two years; and then he was sent to Rome for trial, suffering shipwreck on the way. He remained in Rome two years, and was then released. Later he visited Asia, Macedonia, Crete, and Spain. At the end of about four years he was again taken prisoner to Rome, and suffered martyrdom, circa 65 A.D. Now, these are the details of Paul's three missionary journeys, his arrest and martyrdom.

After Barnabas had brought Saul from Tarsus to assist in the work at Antioch among the Greek-speaking people there; and after a year's labor, Paul and Barnabas were sent by the congregation of Antioch to Jerusalem with a relief ministration for the brethren there. Accompanied by Mark (John Mark), they returned to Antioch. Thereafter the Holy Spirit guided them that Paul and Barnabas be set apart for special work. And circa 47/48 A.D., Paul and Barnabas, along with Mark, began their first missionary journey. They embarked from Seleucia, the seaport of Antioch, and sailed to Cyprus. In the synagogues at Salamis, on the east coast of Cyprus, they began to preach the Word of God. Traversing the island, they arrived at Paphos on the west coast. There the sorcerer Elymas tried to oppose the witness being given to proconsul Sergius Paulus; Paul then caused Elymas to be struck with temporary blindness. Astounded by what had happened, Sergius became a convert.

After their ministry at Paphos, Paul and his companions sailed for Asia Minor. On their arrival at Perga in the Roman province of Pamphylia, John Mark returned to Jerusalem; and Paul and Barnabas headed northward to Antioch in Pisidia. Although many showed interest there, they were at the end thrown out of the city at the instigation of certain Jewish sects. But they kept love in their heart, and joy in their Soul, and faith in the Divine wisdom of the Father and His Son; they worried not, neither became angry, nor gave self-thought to the matter. They traveled southeastward to Iconium, where certain Jews also incited the multitude against them. Being warned of the evil intent of the people to stone them there, they fled to Lystra in the region of Lycaonia. After Paul healed a man lame from birth, the people of Lystra began to imagine that Paul and Barnabas were incarnate gods. Later, Jews from Iconium and Antioch in Pisidia turned the crowd against Paul, so that they stoned him, and dragged his body outside the city, believing him to be dead.

However, surrounded by fellow Christians, Paul got up and left for Lystra. The next day he and Barnabas went to Derbe. After making several disciples there, they visited again Lystra, Iconium and Antioch in Pisidia; strengthening, and edifying the brethren, making appointments of older men to serve in the congregations that were established in these places. After this, they preached in Perga, and then sailed from the seaport of Attalia to Syrian Antioch. Circa 49 A.D., certain men from Judea came to Antioch, saying that non-Jews had to be circumcised in compliance with the Mosaic law, in order to gain salvation. Although Paul and Barnabas disputed the matter, they along with Titus and others went to Jerusalem to set the issue before the other apostles and elders of the Church. The decision was made that circumcision was not required for Gentile believers; but they should keep from idolatry, eating and drinking of blood, and sexual immorality. Besides providing a letter setting forth their decision, the brethren of the Jerusalem congregation sent Judas and Silas as their representatives to clarify the matter in Antioch. Also in a discussion with Peter (or Cephas), John, and the disciple James, it was agreed that Paul and Barnabas should continue preaching to the uncircumcised (Gentiles).

After this, Peter came to Syrian Antioch and mingled with Gentile Christians; and when certain Jews from Jerusalem arrived there also, he withdrew himself from the Gentiles, and thereby acting contrary to the Spirit's direction; even Barnabas was led astray. Noticing this, Paul censured Peter publicly, as his conduct was detrimental to the progress of Christianity. It is possible that Peter might have intentionally acted this way, to strengthen Paul among the Gentiles.

And it came to pass that Paul and Barnabas contemplated on visiting the brethren in the cities where they had preached during their first missionary journey. Then arose a dispute concerning John Mark, whether to take him along, in view of his having left them the first time, resulting in a split between Paul and Barnabas. Paul therefore chose Silas (or Silvarius) and travelled through Syria into Asia Minor. At Lystra, Paul arranged for the young man Timothy to accompany him, and also circumcised him, although circumcision was not a Christian requirement. For it was in the nature of Paul to become a Jew among the Jews, and a Christian among the Christians.

One night at Troas, on the Aegean Sea, Paul had a vision of a Macedonian man, entreating him, saying: Step over into Macedonia and help us. Considering this to be God's will, Paul and his missionary companions, including Luke the physician, sailed for Macedonia, in Europe. At Philippi, the chief Macedonian city, Paul caused a girl to lose her powers of prediction by expelling a demon from her; which led to his being jailed with Silas. But an earthquake freed them, and the jailer and his household became Christians. After encouraging the brethren, Paul and his companions travelled through Amphipolis and Apollonia to Thessalonica. This was a principal seaport of Macedonia where they established a Christian congregation about the year 50 A.D.; now the city is called Salonika. Originally, a nearby town named Therme, meaning hot spring, was one of some twenty-six towns destroyed by Cassander; who then built Thessalonica (circa 316/315 B.C.). He named it after his wife, the sister of Alexander of Macedonia. This new city was situated on the west side of the Chalcidice Peninsula, on the Thermaic Gulf, now called the Gulf of Salonika. Macedonia was divided into four districts, with Thessalonica the capital of the second district. When Macedonia became a Roman province, Thessalonica was made the administrative seat of its provincial government. So, when Paul and Silas arrived there, some seventy-five miles west of Philippi, they found it to be a thriving metropolis of great importance.

Paul and missionary companions preached in the synagogues of Thessalonica for three sabbaths; and many Greek-speaking Jews and Gentiles became believers. In time those Thessalonian Jews that rejected Paul's message gathered up a mob of idlers from the marketplace, and assaulted the house of Jason where Paul was a guest. For safety's sake, Paul and Silas were sent away at night to Beroea by the Thessalonian brethren. These Baroeans were more noble-minded than the Thessalonians; and they not only received the Word with great eagerness, but carefully examined the Scriptures daily as to whether that which Paul the apostle had preached was so. But soon trouble developed, as the unbelieving Jews from Thessalonica arrived and stirred up a mob, making it again necessary for them to escape. Between the years 50-52 A.D., after leaving Thessalonica, Paul wrote his first letter (or epistle) from Corinth to the Thessalonians. He had sent Timothy to comfort and encourage them, and had received Timothy's good report. In the letter he commended them for their fine example to all the believers in Macedonia and in Achaia; and urged them not to be discouraged because of persecution. During this period, Paul wrote also a second letter to the Thessalonians.

At the time these letters were written, Silas or Silvanus, Timothy, and a few Thessalonians accompanied Paul in his missionary work which began in Corinth, in the fall of 50 A.D., and lasted eighteen months. Paul emphasized the value of prayer in his letters to the Thessalonians; and his fellow workers preached good news with a great deal of struggling, and did not make themselves a burden to them; rather they became gentle and humble, and exhorted them like a father. From the beginning the congregation at Thessalonica experienced persecution. Their faith was so strong, their acceptance of the Word of God so total, and their endurance of suffering and persecution so commendable, that the Thessalonians became the example of Christian faith and humility. For this Paul's rejoicing was great, and he prayed that they may continue to be faithful and abound in love. He also exhorted them to conduct themselves aright, and abstain from fornication; love one another in fuller measure, and work with their hands; and he reminded them of the resurrection, that the dead will rise, therefore no need to sorrow as those who have no knowledge or hope.

And the faith of the Christians at Thessalonica was growing exceedingly, their love for one another was increasing, and they were faithfully enduring trials and tribulations. Some in the congregation however began to contend that the presence of Jesus Christ was needed, for the rumors prevailed that the day of Jehovah was here. It was for this reason that Paul wrote a second letter to the Thessalonians from Corinth; not wanting the brethren to be seduced into accepting false doctrine. And Paul showed them that other events had to precede the coming of Jehovah's day. It will not come unless the apostasy comes first, and the man of lawlessness gets revealed.

When the jealous Jews of Thessalonica instigated riot against Paul, the brethren conducted Paul to Athens. His preaching in the marketplace there led to his being taken to the hill Areopagus; and his defense moved Dionysius, one of the judges of the court that convened there, and others to embrace Christianity. After this Paul went to Corinth, taking up lodging with a Jewish couple Aquila and Priscilla; and worked with them part-time as a tentmaker. It was from here that he wrote his two letters to the Thessalonians. After teaching in Corinth for a year and a half and establishing a congregation, he was again accused by certain Jews before Gallio; but Gallio dismissed the case. Later Paul sailed for Caesarea, first stopping at Ephesus and preaching there. From Caesarea, Paul went to Jerusalem to greet the congregation there; then went up to Syrian Antioch. And from Antioch he wrote his third letter to the Galatians, circa 50-52 A.D. Galatia was a Roman province that occupied the central portion of the region now known as Asia Minor. This central plateau region lay between the Taurus mountains on the South and the mountains of Paphlagonia on the north. In its north-central portion was the city of Ancyra, now called Ankara, the capital of Turkey. The seed of Christianity sown among the Galatians, not only by Paul and Barnabas, but Peter also, bore good fruitage; it was from among them that disciples Timothy and Gaius (Ghaias) came. Although Paul had preached to the Galatians on his first missionary journey, thereafter, a group of certain Jews arrived to insist the Gentile Christians submit to the laws of Moses in order to be saved. Paul shows in his letter that Abraham, who lived over four hundred years before the law of Moses, was saved by faith in the Gospel; so, how could it be argued that the law could either save a man or make a believer in Christ more perfect? And Paul wrote in his letter to the Galatians, that man is saved by the grace of God through faith in Christ and nothing else; any other teaching is the perversion of the truth of God. Man is made right in the sight of God by faith, and becomes son of Abraham, and of the people of God, by faith. And for man is made free in Christ, he must never allow false beliefs or other humans to rob this gift, by dragging him down to the idea of working for one's salvation, but must live out of the Gospel unto the end. This requires submission to the Spirt of God, and loving our neighbor as ourselves.

On his third and last missionary journey, Paul revisited Ephesus and labored there for some three years. From Ephesus he wrote his fourth letter to the Corinthians, and dispatched Titus to assist the Christians there. Following a riot instigated against him by the silversmith Demetrius, Paul left Ephesus and headed for Macedonia. Receiving news from Corinth through Titus, Paul composed his fifth epistle, or the second letter to the Corinthians, in Macedonia. Now, Corinth was one of the oldest and most prominent cities; and a seat of governmental authority, and a leading commercial city of Greece. And due to international maritime traffic and commercial nature, the city of Corinth to the common man was known as the city of whoredoms. All land traffic, commercial or otherwise, going north and south had to pass Corinth in traversing the isthmus, which at its narrowest point measures only three and a half miles across. And international maritime traffic was drawn to Corinth, because navigators generally preferred to make use of this isthmus between the Gulf of Corinth and Saronic Gulf; rather than risking a dangerous two hundred mile trip around the storm-swept capes at the southern end of the peninsula. Thus, ships from Italy, Sicily, Spain, and other places, sailed across the Ionian Sea, through the hundred-mile long Gulf of Corinth; and docked at the deep-water harbor of Lechaeum, the western port city tied in with Corinth by long walls. Ships from Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt came through the Aegean Sea and anchored at the eastern ports of Cenchreae or Schoenus. The importance of Corinth in Paul's time was so great that it was known as "the bridge of the sea."

The tolls levied on the cargoes flowing across the isthmus contributed much to Corinth's wealth; the city was built up on two terraces, one about one hundred feet above the other. At its center was the spacious Agora or marketplace, lined with colonnades and public buildings. Rows of shops opened out into the marketplace, especially meats and foodstuff, wine and intoxicants. Near the center of the Agora was found an elevated outdoor speakers' stand, called the Bema or Rostra, extending out from the terrace that divided the upper and lower levels of the Agora. Built of white and blue marble with richly decorated fine carvings, the stand had two waiting rooms alongside with mosaic floors and marble benches. The Bema also served as the judgement seat; here Jews that were opposed to the Christian message of Paul brought him for a hearing before proconsul Gallio.

Corinth was located at the northern foot of the Acrocorinth, a steep rocky hill that towers some 1,500 feet above the city and about 1,857 feet above sea level. On a clear day Athens, some forty miles away, can be seen from here. (Bema is shown in the foreground; Acrocorinth in the background.)

In the days of Paul, Corinth was the capital of Achaia; and gross immorality of the commercial world had even corrupted some minds of the congregation of God that was in Corinth; a certain man of the Christian congregation had taken his father's wife. Therefore, Paul found it necessary to rebuke the congregation, for such fornication has never been permitted in Israel, not even among the heathen nations. There were no fewer than a thousand prostitutes or pimps (courtesans) to be found at the temple of Aphrodite; and in prayers gods were petitioned to multiply the number of the cities' prostitutes.

And it came to pass, that Paul received disturbing news about conditions in the Corinthian congregation; the house of Chloe informed him that dissensions existed among the Corinthians. Also Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus came from Corinth with similar news. Moreover, Paul had received a letter of inquiry from the Christian congregation in Corinth concerning various matters of church doctrine. In his first letter to the Corinthians, circa 55 A.D., Paul exhorts them to unity. Following men is foolish worldly wisdom, and brings divisions; glory not in man or self but in God, who supplies all things through Christ; God teaches his wisdom to holy ones by his Holy Spirit; Spiritual building work should be tested, and inferior work destroyed. Paul exhorts the Corinthians that they should clean out immorality, expel the incestuous man; brother should not take brother to worldly court; Spiritual or moral uncleanness defiles God's temple, prevents entering the Kingdom. Fornication makes a member of Christ's body one flesh with a harlot; fornication is a sin against one's body. Paul also writes about the sexual due of marriage to be rendered, but with consideration, for marriage is a better course. Christians are not to depart from unbelieving mate, if possible, for family merit to mate and children may eventually help mate to accept truth. It is proper and right to marry, if one marries only in the Lord. The convert may remain circumcised or uncircumcised, single or married, free or slave. Plus other matters concerning conscience and circumstances of brethren, congregational order, resurrection, and other exhortations.

Paul's second letter to the Corinthians was written circa 55/56 A.D., from Macedonia. Titus had brought a favorable report to Paul, concerning the first letter to them, for it had awakened in them sadness in a godly way, repentance, and an earnest desire to reconcile themselves with God. To this Paul responded in his second letter commending them for their favorable reception. After the Pentecost of that year, Paul departed for the seaport of Troas, where he was disappointed at not meeting Titus, who had been sent to Corinth to assist in the collection for the holy ones in Judea. Thus Paul proceeded to Macedonia, where Titus the Greek Christian who labored with Paul, joined him to bring the report from Corinth concerning his first letter; then Paul wrote his second letter to the Corinthians. In this letter Paul commended them for their faith, forbearance and humility, urging them to be kind, forgiving, and comforting; and to forgive the repentant man they had excommunicated from the church at Corinth. And to encourage them to proceed further with the relief work for their needy brethren and their families in Judea. Yet there were those in that congregation who challenged Paul's authority as an apostle; making it necessary for him to defend his apostolic position, by means of the ancient weapon of the adversary, that is to cause friction, and thereby by reducing the power, overwhelm the foe. Thus it was forced upon Paul to defend God, by defending himself by the power of the Holy Spirit. Moreover, he had to condescend and show the passion side of man by appearing to boast. Yea, to look at the appearance of things or fact, and not at the parabolic truth which that thing or fact represents is the only way the men of passion and of the world look at everything. Yet many believed that Paul had boasted.

Before leaving Europe with a contribution from the brethren in Macedonia and Achaia for the needy Christians in Jerusalem, Paul wrote the sixth of his epistles to the Romans, between 55 and 59 A.D., from Corinth. Paul's scribe Tertius transcribed this letter, and Phoebe of Cenchreae, who lived about seven miles away, carried it. On his way to Jerusalem, Paul visited Troas and raised the accidentally killed young man. This was Paul's third missionary journey; and as he prolonged his discourse until midnight at Troas with the brethren, exhaustion and fatigue overcame a young man named Eutychus. Because of the heat of many lamps, smoke, and crowded conditions in the upper chamber, Eutychus fell into deep sleep and fell down from a third-story window. The physician Luke, Paul's companion, diagnosed that the young man was not merely unconscious, but was picked up dead. As did Elisha the prophet in resurrecting the Shunammite's son, Paul threw himself upon Eutychus and embraced him. Then Paul said: Stop raising a clamor, for his soul is in him. And life was restored to him.

Paul's letter to the Romans was written to the Christian congregation at Rome, the center of the empire. Many Jews dwelt there, having returned after the death of emperor Claudius, who had banished them during his reign. Paul's purpose was to settle the differences that existed between the Jewish and Gentile Christians; and to bring unity among them as one man in Christ. He taught that the Jews and Gentiles are equal before God; and righteousness comes by God's grace and mercy, through faith in Jesus Christ. All men have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God, both Jews and Gentiles are under the bondage of sin and its consequences. Men are inexcusable for not glorifying the Lord their God, their Creator and Maker, and turning to uncleanness, idolatry, and Spiritual death. All face judgement by God, through Christ; all the world is liable to God for judgement; one professing to teach the Law, yet breaking it, dishonors God. Real circumcision is not that on the outside; those keeping the righteous requirements of the Law will be judged righteous; those with circumcised hearts are the real Jews. God has maintained His own complete righteousness while declaring men righteous; this He does on the basis of Christ's ransom sacrifice. Men of all sorts exercising faith in Christ are declared righteous, a free gift of God. Thereby God is not of the Jews only, but of all people and all nations. Abraham was declared righteous through faith before the Law of Moses was given, and during the time of God's forbearance. Righteousness comes by faith, not by works as payment of debts. Christ's one act of justification results in declaration of righteousness from many trespasses to men of all sorts. Free gift through Christ results in declaration of righteousness from many trespasses. Paul also wrote in his letter to the Romans concerning those that are baptized into Christ are baptized into his death and into his resurrection; and that public declaration of faith in Christ is essential for salvation.

After Troas, Paul and his companions stopped at Miletus, a city on the west coast of Asia Minor, that is now in ruins, between 56 and 59 A.D. At Assos, Paul took a vessel that by-passed Ephesus, because of wanting to reach Jerusalem before Pentecost. From Miletus he sent messengers to the elders of the congregation of Ephesus, some thirty miles away. And when the elders of Ephesus arrived, Paul reviewed his own ministry among them, and admonished them to take care of themselves and the flock, and warned them of the danger of oppressive wolves entering the congregation; and encouraged them to stay alert and awake. And when he told them at Miletus that he would see them no more, they fell upon Paul's neck and tenderly kissed him, and then conducted him to the boat, which was to take him to Jerusalem. And as Paul continued his journey, Christian prophets along the way foretold that bonds awaited him at Jerusalem. Their prophecies were fulfilled. While Paul was at the temple to cleanse himself ceremonially, Jews from Asia Minor stirred up mob violence against him; but Roman soldiers rescued the apostle. On his way up the stairs to the soldiers' quarters, Paul received permission to address these Jews. As soon as he mentioned his commission to preach to the Gentiles, violence erupted anew. Inside the soldiers' quarters Paul was stretched out for whipping to ascertain the nature of his guilt. But Paul prevented this by calling attention to his Roman citizenship. The next day Paul's case came to the Sanhedrin. Paul, realizing that he would not get a fair hearing, spoke words which created division between the Pharisees and the Sadducees, making resurrection an issue; he being a Pharisee, and a believer in resurrection. Thus Paul succeeded in setting the Sadducees, who did not believe in resurrection, against the Pharisees and vice versa.

A plot against Paul the prisoner made it necessary to transfer him from Jerusalem to Caesarea. A few days later high priest Ananias, with some of the elders of the Jews, and their orator Tertullus came to Caesarea to present their case against Paul before Felix the governor; accusing him of stirring up sedition and trying to profane the temple. Felix kept him under house arrest for two years. When Felix was replaced by Festus, these Jews renewed their charges. The case was heard again at Caesarea, and Paul, to prevent a transferal of the trial to Jerusalem, appealed to Caesar. Later, after stating his case before Herod Agrippa II, Paul with some other prisoners was sent to Rome.

On the way to Rome, Paul and those with him suffered shipwreck on the island of Malta. After spending the winter season there, they finally arrived at Rome. Paul was permitted to stay in his own hired house, though under soldier guard. Shortly after, Paul arranged a meeting with the principal men of the Jews; but only some believed. The apostle continued to preach to all those who came to him between 59 to 62 A.D. During this time he wrote his letters to the Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon, and to the Hebrews.

Paul's letter to the congregation in the city of Philippi, in the province of Macedonia, some six hundred miles away, was written between 59-61 A.D. In the course of his second missionary tour a congregation was established there about 50 A.D. Now, during Paul's house arrest in Rome, Epaphroditus made the trip from Philippi, and worked to assist Paul, and had fallen very sick. When Epaphroditus had recovered, Paul sent him back with the letter. The Philippian congregation had shown great love and regard for Paul, and had generously sent him material provisions during his three-week stay in Thessalonica. Later, the brethren in Jerusalem entered into a period of intense persecution, and needed material help; and the Christians in Philippi, themselves being very poor and undergoing trials and tribulations, had nevertheless demonstrated a readiness to contribute even beyond their ability. This Paul appreciated, and cited them an example to the other congregations. And now when Paul was under house arrest, the Philippians not only sent material gifts in abundance for Paul, but also sent their personal envoy Epaphroditus, a man valuable to them. And this man of zeal and courage assisted Paul in his work, even endangering his own life. Consequently, Paul commended him highly to the congregation of the city of Philippi. In this letter, Paul exhorts the congregation of Philippi in the province of Macedonia to make sure that the weightier matters of the principles make not others to stumble. We can rejoice even when the enemies of the truth speak about it contentiously, for this only serves to publicize the truth; prayer by God's servants is effectual. Christians' unity and courage in the presence of their opponents is a proof from God that he will deliver his servants and confound his enemies. Humility brings exaltation from God; and God can be thanked for his grace and mercy when one of his faithful servants recovers from an illness. To what extent the Christian has made progress, he should continue walking orderly in this same routine in order to receive the prize. Moreover, Paul admonishes the congregation of Philippi, that the Christians should look to the heavens, where their citizenship exists, not to earthly connections. They should not be anxious; in every situation they should submit their petitions to God, and he will give peace, and protect their heart and mental powers from corruption; they should at all times ponder upon the right and praiseworthy things of God.

The letter to the Colossians was written by Paul the apostle of Christ Jesus to the Christians in Colossae. The city of Colossae was located in southwestern Asia Minor; it was in the Roman province of Asia, although it formed part of the ancient region of Phrygia. It lay near the upper end of the Lycus River valley, about eleven miles east of Laodicea (today's Denizli). Colossae was known to be an important textile source, noted for its fine wool of unusual hue. The population of Colossae included the original Phrygians who displayed a strong tendency toward spiritual fanaticism; the Greeks speculated much and indulged in philosophical arguments; and the Jews were strict adherents to the law of Moses and its dietary and sabbath requirements. Paul wrote this letter to the Colossians for two primary reasons: Epaphras had brought Paul a report of the congregation's faith and love in Christ; and also Philemon's slave Onesimus was returning to his master in Colossae. So Paul utilized this circumstance by sending his letter there by means of Onesimus and his companion Tychicus. A deceptive philosophy and false views were preached by the non-Christians of Colossae; Hellenistic precepts and shadows of the Mosaic law were taught by the men of the world. The apostle Paul warned the Colossian congregation not to be deceived by the false doctrines of the natural man, who merely looks at facts or shadows of things, and perceives not the substance, or the reality behind the facts, according to Christ. Paul also warns the congregation concerning mock humility and asceticism, saying: These very things are, indeed, possessed of an appearance of worldly wisdom and self-imposed form of worship and mock humility, a severe treatment of body; but they are of no value in combating the satisfying of the flesh. Let no man rob you of your reward in Christ by teaching mock humility and worshipping of angels.

During this same period, circa 59-61 A.D., Paul also wrote to the Ephesians, Philemon, and the Hebrews; while he was yet under house arrest in Rome. The letter to the congregation at Ephesus was carried by Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister. Ephesus was the most important city of the Roman province of Asia, and was known to be an abundantly wealthy city. Paul in his letter to the Ephesians exhorts them concerning the sacred secret of God's will, the Holy Spirit, God's grace and mercy, and other marvellous things; and warns them against materialism, immorality, demonism, vices and wickedness.

The letter to Philemon, chronologically Paul's tenth letter, was transcribed and carried by Paul's servant Onesimus, to encourage Philemon to accept his run away slave Onesimus back with compassion and kindness. Now, Philemon was a Christian brother and fellowlaborer at Colossae, Paul had been an honored and favored guest of Philemon, his wife Apphia, and their son Archippus; and accordingly Paul loved this household in Colossae. And it so happened, that Onesimus, Philemon's slave, had deserted his master, and even stole funds to buy his passage to Rome, where he met Paul and became a Christian. The letter to Philemon illustrates Christian grace, mercy and forgiveness.

Paul's letter to the Hebrews was written between 59-61 A.D. to the Hebrew Christians in Judea. By now twenty-eight years had passed away since Christ Jesus' resurrection and ascension. During the earlier part of this period severe persecutions had been brought upon these Jewish Christians in Jerusalem and Judea by the Jewish religious leaders of the Sadducees and the Pharisees; resulting in death of some and scattering of most to Rome, Asia Minor, and throughout Europe. And Herod Agrippa I had James the apostle executed with the sword, to die as a martyr. Some time after this, material needs of the Christians in Jerusalem became so great, that the brethren and sisters of other congregations, such as Achaia and Macedonia, were given opportunity to demonstrate their love and unity by sending aid.

The Christian congregation in Jerusalem was comprised almost entirely of the Jews; those who had come to a knowledge of the truth, and were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. At the time Paul wrote this letter to the Hebrews, the congregation in Jerusalem was enjoying a most marvellous period of Spiritual awakening and bliss. But the new body in Christ was in desperate need of further counsel and encouragement. The time was nigh at hand for the Christians to obey Jesus' warning to flee from the city when they should see Jerusalem surrounded by encamped armies. (And in 66 A.D. it did take place, when Cestius Gallus' troops withdrew after beginning an attack on the city; then in 70 A.D. Jerusalem and its temple was razed to the ground by the Roman general Titus.) The weaker members of the Christian congregation had to strengthen themselves by preparing for the prophecy to be fulfilled within a few years. The opposition they faced from the non-believing Jews put their faith to test; they needed to learn to endure, and grow in the Spirit. But, most importantly, Paul's letter to the Hebrews deals with the priesthood matters, and brings to light to the ancient priesthood of Aaron the advantages and the truths concerning the priesthood of the Order of Melchizedek; its superiority over the Aaronic priesthood, as the superiority of the essence over its material manifestation.

The twelfth letter of Paul was written between 61 and 64 A.D. to Titus, a brother, who was appointed by Paul to correct the things that were defective and to make appointments of older men in various congregations on the island of Crete. The letter served as a guide for Titus and gave him apostolic support for the performance of his duties there. His task was not easy, for he had to contend with the rebellious men. And Paul wrote to him, saying: There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision; whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for personal gain.

The last two of the fourteen epistles of Paul are to Timothy; which were composed between 61 and 65 A.D. The first letter was written from Macedonia, and the second from Rome. Now, Timothy was taught the Law by his mother Eunice, a Jewess, and his grandmother Lois. His father was a Greek. It was circa 50 A.D., when Paul arrived at Lystra, and stayed at Timothy's home, in the course of his second missionary journey. At this time Timothy was a well-favored young man of the brethren in Lystra and Iconium. And these brethren were moved by the Holy Spirit which was in him, and they did prophecy concerning him; and the elders of the congregation joined with Paul and laid their hands upon Timothy; and set him apart for a particular service. Paul chose Timothy as a traveling companion, and also had him circumcised, to avoid giving Jews an occasion for stumbling. With Paul, Timothy shared in church activities in Philippi, Thessalonica and Beroea. When opposition stirred up by Jewish fanatics made it necessary for Paul to leave Beroea, he left Timothy and Silas behind to care for the new believers there. Then, Paul sent word to Beroea, advising Timothy to visit the brethren at Thessalonica, encouraging them to remain faithful despite tribulation.

During Paul's third missionary journey, circa 52-56 A.D., Timothy again traveled with the apostle. And while at Ephesus, Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians, wrote: I am sending Timothy (or Timotheus) to you, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord; who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways in Christ, that which I teach every where in every congregation.

After Paul was released from his confinement, circa 61-64 A.D.; Timothy again shared with the apostle in the ministry, remaining in Ephesus at his instructions. During this time the Melchizedek priesthood was conferred upon him, enabling him to appoint overseers and ministerial servants of the Church of Christ. Timothy was Paul's most favorite disciple and friend; of whom the apostle wrote to the Philippians: I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy (Timotheus) shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state; for I have no man of a disposition like his who will genuinely care for your state; for all seek their own advantage, and not that of Jesus Christ. Ye know the proof he gave of himself, that like a son with a father, he hath served with me in the Gospel. And the faith which is in him is without any hypocrisy.

Paul's first letter to Timothy was composed in Macedonia, and the second in Rome. This is the background into the first letter: In circa 56 A.D., when meeting at Miletus with the elders of the Ephesus congregation, Paul said to them: I know this, that after my going away oppressive wolves will enter in among you, and will not treat the flock with tenderness, and from among you shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. And within a few years, all Paul's words were fulfilled; and the situation concerning the teaching of false doctrines had become so serious that Paul encouraged Timothy to stay in Ephesus, that he might command certain ones not to teach foreign doctrines about which our fathers have warned us, and endless genealogies, without works or substance, which arise out of the false self of man, and therefore are false and deathly to the Soul. Thus Timothy had to wage spiritual warfare inside the Christian congregation to preserve its purity and substance, and nurture faith among the members of the congregation. And the value of prayer was emphasized; for the congregation to prosper, prayer could not be overlooked or forgotten. So that Christians may continue in love and goodwill, compassion and mercy, joy and gladness, and peace and serenity, it was proper and necessary for them to pray; with love in their heart, joy in the soul, and gratitude in their breath. This meant approaching God only in love, and only in the absence of self-thought, anger or worry. Timothy was also taught that the women were to keep their God-assigned place in the scheme of things; that only qualified men serve as overseers and ministerial servants, for such would serve as a strong bulwark against apostasy; that deserving widows receive assistance from the congregation; that due consideration and double honor be given to the older men holding various offices within the congregation; that slaves conduct themselves aright toward their owners; that all remain content with what they had, not seeking to be rich; but to develop Spiritually and find the Kingdom of Heaven, and God's righteousness, then all that which is needful shall be added unto them. Timothy was not to act according to the double-minded learning, nor to share in sins of others through hasty appointments; and Timothy was to take a little wine, for the sake of his stomach; and was to conduct himself aright in all things, and to instruct the rich not to be high-minded, and to turn away from empty talk and speeches.

Then in 64 A.D., a great fire ravaged Rome, destroying about a fourth of the city. And it was rumored that Caesar Nero was responsible for it; to protect himself Nero placed the blame upon the Christians. This prompted a wave of violent governmental persecution. It was about this time that the apostle Paul was again placed under house arrest in Rome. This time, apparently forsaken, suffering in chains and facing imminent death, Paul wrote an encouraging letter to Timothy, preparing him to resist apostate members of the congregation, and to stand firm in the midst of persecution. In the strength of Jehovah, Paul wrote the second letter to Timothy; exhorting him to stir up like a fire the gift of God which is in him through the laying of Paul's hands upon him, meaning the gift of the Holy Ghost. For God gave us not a spirit of cowardice, but that of power and love and soundness of mind. Therefore we should not become ashamed to be the witness of the Lord Jesus, nor of his apostles who have been persecuted and imprisoned; but take our part in suffering evil for the good news, according to the Holy Spirit of God.

1. First Epistle to the Thessalonians

Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ; in the sight of God and our Father; knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God. For our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the Word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost; so that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. For from you sounded out the Word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing. For they themselves shew of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God. And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

For yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain. But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the Gospel of God with much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile; but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness. Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children. So being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail; for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe. As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children; that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his Kingdom and glory.

For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judaea are in Christ Jesus; for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews. Who both killed the Lord Jesus; and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always; for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy.

Wherefore when we could not longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone. And sent Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellowlabourer in the Gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith. That no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know. For this cause, when I could not longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you. Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith. For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God. Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith? Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you. To the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication. That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour. Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God; that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth (this injunction), despiseth not man, but God; who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia; but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more. And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you. That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangels, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of Light, and the children of the Day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do. And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord; and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves.

Now who exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and among all men. Rejoice evermore; pray without ceasing; in every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophesyings; prove all things; hold fast that which is good; abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole Spirit and Soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.

Brethren, pray for us; greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

2. Second Epistle to the Thessalonians

Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet; because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth. So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure. Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which also ye suffer. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and that you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe because our testimony among you was believed in that day. Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power; that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming; even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them they perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie. That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the Truths. Whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by the Word, or our epistle. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish yourselves in every good word and work.

Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you. And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men; for all men have not faith. But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.

Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us; for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you. Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not do his work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him; that he may be ashamed. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother. Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle; so I write. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

3. Epistle to the Galatians

Paul, an apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead; and all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia. Grace be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel. Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the Gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any contrary gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? Or do I seek to please men? For if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. But I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it by man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it. And profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers. But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood. Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus. Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days. But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother. Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia; and was unknown by face unto the churches of Judaea which were in Christ. But they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed. And they glorified God in me.

Then fourteen years after, I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that Gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means I should run, or had run, in vain. But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised; and that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage. To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the Gospel might continue with you. But of those who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me; God accepteth no man's person; for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me. But contrariwise, when they saw that the Gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the Gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; for he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles. And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision. Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do. But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed. For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles; but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision. And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel, I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law alone; for by the works of the law alone shall not flesh be justified. But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid. For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. I do not frustrate the grace of God; for if righteousness come by the law alone, then Christ is dead in vain.

O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you? This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? If it be yet in vain. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doth he do it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

For as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith; but, The man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree; that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.

Brethren, I speak after the manner of men. Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds as of many, but as of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the Law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is One. Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid; for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the Law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all, but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ. Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods. But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are; ye have not injured me at all. Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the Gospel unto you at the first. And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? For I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth? They zealously affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them. But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you.

Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are also an allegory, for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar (Hagar, Hajirah), for this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children that she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son, for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised alone, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love. Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth? This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded; but he that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be. And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? Then is the offence of the cross ceased. I would they were even cut off which trouble you. For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another. This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, disputations, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like. Of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are Spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For every man shall bear his own burden. Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand. As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ. For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh. But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God. From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your Spirit. Amen.

4. First Epistle to the Corinthians

Paul, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother; unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus; called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours. Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ. That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you. So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I had baptized in my own name. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas; besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel; not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect. For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.

For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Because the foolishness of God is wiser than the wisdom of men; and the weakness of God is stronger than the strength of men. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are. That no flesh should glory in his presence. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect; yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought. But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. Which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?

Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? But we have the mind of Christ.

And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto Spiritual, but as unto temporal (carnal), even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal? Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. For we are labourers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool,that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain. Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is the Lord God's.

Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful. But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment; yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness; and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God. And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes, that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another. For who maketh thee to differ from another? And what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it? Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us; and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you. For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men. We are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised. Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwellingplace; and labour, working with our own hands; being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it. Being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons I warn you. For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me. For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church. Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you. But I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power. For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power. What will ye? Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you. For I verily, as absent in body, but present in Spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed. In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my Spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators; yet not only the fornicators of this world, or the covetous, or extortioners, or idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no, not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? And if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? How much more things that pertain to this life? If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church. I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? No, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren? But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers. Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you; but ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. What? Know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? For two, saith he, shall be one flesh. But he that is joined unto the Lord is one Spirit. Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body. What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your Spirit, which are God's.

Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me; it is good for a man not to touch a woman. Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence; and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband; and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one the other, except with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency. But I speak this by permission, and not of commandment. For I would that all men were even as I myself. But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I. But if they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn (with desire of need). And unto the married (brethren) I command, not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband. But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband; and let not the husband put away his wife. But to the rest speak I, not the Lord; If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband; else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases; but God hath called us to peace. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? Or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife? But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches. Is any man called being circumcised? Let him not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? Let him not be circumcised. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God (is everything).

Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called. Art thou called being a servant? Care not for it; but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather. For he that is called in the Lord, a servant, is the Lord's freeman; likewise also he that is called, free, is Christ's servant. Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men. Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God. Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord; yet I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful. I suppose therefore that this is good for the present distress, I say, that it is good for a man so to be. Art thou bound unto a wife? Seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? Seek not a wife. But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh; but I spare you. This I say, brethren, the time is short; it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not. And they that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away.

But I would have you without carefulness. He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord. And he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife. There is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in Spirit; but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband. And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction. But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry. Nevertheless he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well. So then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better. The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord. But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment; and I think also that I have the Spirit of God.

Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him. As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but One. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, as there be gods many, and lords many, but to us there is but One God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge. For some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled. But meat commendeth us not to God; for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worse. But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to them that are weak. For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols? And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

Am I not an apostle? Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? Are not ye my work in the Lord? If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you; for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. Mine answer to them that do examine me is this, Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working? Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? Or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man? Or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written; that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. If we have sown unto Spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your temporal (carnal) things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ. Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? And they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel. But I have used none of these things; neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me; for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void. For though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel! For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward; but if against my will, a dispensation (of the Gospel) is committed unto me.

What is my reward then? Verily, that when I preach the Gospel, I may make the Gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the Gospel. For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the Gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you. Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air. But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.

Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea. And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, and did all eat the same Spiritual meat (food). And did all drink the same Spiritual drink; for they drank of that Spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ. But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man. But God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry. I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread. Behold Israel after the flesh; are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar? What say I then? That the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? Are we stronger than he? All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not. Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth. Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience sake. For the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience sake; for the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other, for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience? For if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that for which I gave thanks? Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God; even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ. Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you. But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of every woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God. Every man (of the Gentiles) praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head; for that is even all one as if she were shaven. For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered. For a (uncircumcised or Gentile) man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of the man. For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man. Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels. Nevertheless neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord. For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God. Judge in yourselves, is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? Doth not even nature itself teach you that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering. But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God. Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you; and I partly believe it. For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper. For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What? Have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? Or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? Shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread. And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.

Now concerning Spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit. To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble are necessary. And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need; but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked. That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret? But seek earnestly the best gifts; and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

Follow after charity, and seek Spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God; for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the Spirit he speaketh mysteries. But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied; for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying. Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine? And even things without life-giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air. There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification. Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me. Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of Spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church. Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my Spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the Spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also; I will sing with the Spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also. Else when thou shalt bless with the Spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all; yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

Brethren, be not children in understanding; howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men. In the law it is written, with men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not; but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe. If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all. And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth. How is it then, brethren? When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God. Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints. Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church. What? Came the Word of God out from you? Or came it unto you only? If any man think himself to be a prophet, or Spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant. Wherefore, brethren, seek to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues. Let all things be done decently and in order.

Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand. By which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures. And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve. After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time. For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am; and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. Therefore whether it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed. Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest by your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we die! Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners. Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame. But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain. But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed its own body. All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon; and another glory of the stars, for one star differeth from another in glory.

So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a Spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a Spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening Spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is Spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is Spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on Immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem. And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me. Now I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia; for I do pass through Macedonia. And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whithersoever I go. For I will not see you now by the way; but I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit. But I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost. For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries. Now if Timotheus come, see that he may be with you without fear; for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do. Let no man therefore despise him; but conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me; for I look for him with the brethren.

As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren; but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. Let all your things be done with charity. I beseech you, brethren; ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruit of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. That ye submit yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus; for that which was lacking on your part they have supplied. For they have refreshed my spirit and yours; therefore acknowledge ye them that are such. The churches of Asia (Minor) salute you. Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house. All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with an holy kiss. The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand. If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anatama Mara-natha; being interpreted, soulless bondman of the Devil.

5. Second Epistle to the Corinthians

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia: grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort. Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so also the consolations abound by Christ. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer; or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation. For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia (Minor), that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life. But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead; who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver; in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us.

Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf. For our rejoicing is this: the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward. For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end. As also ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus. And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit. And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judaea. When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? Or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay? But as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay. For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us . Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God. Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts. Moreover I call God for a record upon my soul, that to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth. Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy; for by faith ye stand.

But I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in heaviness. For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me? And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you. But if any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me, but in part; that I may not overcharge you all. Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many. So that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow. Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him. For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also; for if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes in the person of Christ; lest Satan should get an advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices.

Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's Gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother; but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia. Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place. For we are unto God a sweet savour in Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things? For we are not as many, which corrupt the Word of God; but as of sincerity, as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.

Do we begin again to commend ourselves? Or need we, as some others, epistles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you? Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men. Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart. And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward. Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God. Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit. For the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech. And not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not. But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost. In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not; lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. Persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. So then death worketh in us, but life in you. We having the same Spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak. Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you. For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God. For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal (perceptual); but the things which are not seen are eternal (conceptual).

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life (Immortality). Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; for we walk by faith, not by sight. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labour, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body; according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men; but we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences. For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf; that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory in appearance, and not in heart. For whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God; or whether we be sober, it is for your cause. For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead. And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh,yet now henceforth know we no more, therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's sake, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee; behold, now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation. Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed. But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings. By pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned. By the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left. By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed. As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own bowels. Now for a recompence in the same, I speak as unto my children, be ye also enlarged. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man. I speak not to condemn you; for I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you. Great is my boldness of speech toward you, great is my glorying of you; I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation. For, when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears. Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus. And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent; for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season. Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter. Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you. Therefore we were comforted in your comfort; yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his Spirit was refreshed by you all. For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth. And his inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him. I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things.

Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia. How that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves. Praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints. And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God. Insomuch that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace also. Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also. I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich. And herein I give my advice; for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago.

Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have. For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For not that other men be eased, and ye burdened; but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want; that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality. As it is written, He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack. But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you. For indeed he accepted the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you. And we have sent with him the brother, whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the churches, and not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind. Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us; providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men. And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which I have in you. Whether any do enquire of Titus, my partner and fellowhelper concerning you; or our brethren the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ. Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf.

For as touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you. For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many. Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready. Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting. Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, and they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your bounty, whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifuly shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work. As it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor; his righteousness remaineth for ever. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness. Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God. For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God. While by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the Gospel of Christ; and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men; and by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

Now Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who in presence am base among you, but being absent I am bold toward you. But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, wherewith I think to be bold against some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh. For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds. Casting down fancies, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. And having in a readiness to subdue all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.

Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's. For though I should proclaim somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, I should not be ashamed. That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters. For letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but bodily presence is weak, and speech contemptible. Let such an one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present. For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise. But we will not proclaim things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you; for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the Gospel of Christ. Not proclaiming things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to our hand. But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly and indeed bear with me. For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him. For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles. But though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the Gospel of God freely? I robbed other churches, taking wages, to do you service. And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man; for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied. And in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will keep myself.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Aachaia. Wherefore? Because I love you not? God knoweth. But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we. For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works. I say again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boast myself a little. That which I speak, I speak not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, in this confidence of boasting. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also. For ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye are wise. For ye suffer, if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face. I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak. Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly) I am bold also.

Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? So am I. Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool.) I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not. In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me. And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago; whether in the body, I cannot tell, or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth, such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth, how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such an one will I glory; yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities. For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth; but I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me. And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh; the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong.

I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me, for I ought to have been commended of you; for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing. Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds. For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? Forgive me this wrong. Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you; for I seek not yours, but you. For the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. And I will

To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints, Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world. For God is my witness, whom I serve with my Spirit in the Gospel of His Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers. Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you. For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some Spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established. That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me. Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto, that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles. I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also.

For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written. The just shall live by faith. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse. Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations; and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools; and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man; and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.

Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves. They that changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, the Blessed for ever. Amen. For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections; for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature. And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet. And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient. Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents; without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful; who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things. But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things. And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance? But after thy hard and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. To them who patiently continue to do well, seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life. But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath; tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile; for there is no respect of persons with God.

For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law. For not the hearers of the law are just before God; but the doers of the law are justified. For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves. Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness; and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another, in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel. Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God; and knowest his will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law. And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness; an instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law. Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?

Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written. For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law; but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision. Therefore if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law? For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.

What advantage then hath the Jew? Or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way; chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. For what if some did not believe? Shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? God forbid; yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, that thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? I speak as a man. God forbid; for then how shall God judge the world? For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner? And not (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say) let us do evil, that good may come? Whose damnation is just. What then? Are we better than they? No, in no wise; for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin.

As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways; and the way of peace have they not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes.

Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets. Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference. For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, at this time his righteousness; that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus the Messiah. Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also. Seeing it is One God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law.

What shall we say then that Abraham our father, as pertaining to the flesh, hath found? For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God. For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

But to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? For we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? When he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised, that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also. And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect; because the law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no transgression. Therefore it is of faith, that by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all.

As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations, before him whom he believed, even God; who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were. Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was spoken, so shall thy seed be. And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body, now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb. He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God. And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness. Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. For until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come. But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many. And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift; for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offence of one came upon all men unto condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord and Messiah.

What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in the newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him. Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousnes unto sin; but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace. But then? Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh; for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness. For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Know ye not, brethren (for I speak to them that know the law), how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in the newness of Spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet. But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead. For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me. Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good. Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful. For we know that the law is Spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not.

For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh. That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be Spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the Sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject of vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that which we see not, then do we with patience wait for it . Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit; because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son; that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come; nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh. Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises. Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen. Not as though the Word of God has taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel. Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed. For this is the word of promise, At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son. And not only this; but when Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac; for the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth; it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.

What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?

What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much longsuffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction. And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory. Even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles? As he saith also in Osee, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved. And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God. Esaias (Isaiah) also crieth concerning Israel, Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved. For he shall finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness; because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth. And as Esaias said before, Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha. What shall we say then? That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumblingstone. As it is written, behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence; and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? That is to bring Christ down from above. Or, Who shall descend into the deep? That is, to bring up Christ again from the dead. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach. That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

But they have not all obeyed the Gospel. For Esaias (Isaiah) saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me. But to Israel he saith, All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.

I say then, hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith of Elias? How he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying, Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life. But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded. According as it is written, God hath given the the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear, unto this day.

And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumblingblock, and a recompence unto them. Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always. I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid, but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, to provoke them to jealousy. Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness? For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office. If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them. For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? For if the firstfruit be holy, the lump is also; and if the root be holy, so are the branches. And if some of the branches be broken off; and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed (grafted) in among them; and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree, boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in. Well, because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not highminded, but fear. For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he should also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity, but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.

And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in; for God is able to graff them in again. For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive tree? For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the Gospel, they are enemies for your sakes; but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief; even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counsellors? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice; holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God. For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, if prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; if ministry, let us wait on our ministering. Or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in Spirit; serving the Lord. Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Blessing them which persecute you; rejoicing with them that do rejoice, and weeping with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as can be endured, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For for this cause pay ye tribute also; for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour. Owe no man any thing, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things; another, who is weak, eateth herbs. Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him that eateth not judge him that eateth; for God hath received him. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand. One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks. For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.
For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. But why dost thou judge thy brother?
Or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself; but to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean. But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat (food), now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died. Let not then your good be evil spoken of; for the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. For meat destroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence. It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. Hast thou faith? Have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith; for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbour (Fellowman) for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me. For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus. That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God.

Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers. And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name. And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people. And again, Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people. And again, Esaias (Isaiah) saith; There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust.

Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost. And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another. Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God, that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the Gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost. I have therefore, whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God. For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the Gospel of Christ. Yea, so have I strived to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation. But as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand. For which cause also I have been much hindered from coming to you.

But now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you, whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you. For I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled with your company. But now I go into Jerusalem to minister unto the saints. For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem. It hath pleased them verily; and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their Spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in temporal things. When therefore I have performed this, and have sealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain. And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessings of the Gospel of Christ. Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me; that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judaea; and that my service which I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints; that I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed. Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

I command unto you that Phebe our sister, a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea, ye receive in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you; for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also. Greet Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus, who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles. Likewise greet the church that is in their house. Salute my well beloved Epaenetus, who is the firstfruits of Achaia unto Christ. Greet Mary, who bestowed much labour on us. Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellowprisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me. Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord. Salute Urbane, our helper in Christ, and Stachys my beloved. Salute Apelles approved in Christ. Salute them which are of Aristobulus' household. Salute Herodion my kinsman. Greet them that be of the house-hold of Narcissus, which are in the Lord. Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa, who labour in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which laboured much in the Lord. Salute Rufus chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine. Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them. Salute Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints which are with them. Salute one another with an holy kiss. The churches of Christ salute you.

Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple. For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf; but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

Timotheus my workfellow, and Lucius, and Jason, and Sosipater, my kinsmen, salute you. I Tertius, who transcribed this epistle, salute you in the Lord. Gaius mine host, and of the whole church, saluteth you. Erastus the chamberlain of the city saluteth you, and Quartus a brother. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my Gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the ever-lasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. To All Wise God, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen.

7. Epistle to the Philippians

Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank my God upon every remembrance of you; always in every prayer of mine, for you all, making request with joy; for your fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now. Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ; even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart; inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace. For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment. That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God.

But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel. So that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, and in all other places. And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the Word without fear. Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds; but the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the Gospel. What then? Notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always; so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour; yet what I shall choose I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better. Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith. That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

Only let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs; that ye stand fast in one Spirit, with one mind working together for the faith of the Gospel. And in nothing terrified by your adversaries; which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake; having the same conflict which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men.

And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings. That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the Word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice, with me. But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state. For I have no man likeminded, who will naturally care for your state. For all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's. But ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the Gospel. Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me. But I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly. Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and fellowsoldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants. For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because ye had heard that he had been sick. For indeed he was sick nigh unto death; but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. I sent him therefore the more carefully, that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful. Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and hold such in reputation. Because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, to supply your lack of service toward me.

Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord. To write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe. Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision. For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more. Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee. Concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect. But I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ. Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord. And I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which laboured with me in the Gospel; with Clement also, and with other my fellowlabourers, whose names are in the book of life. Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, Rejoice. Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity. Not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. Notwithstanding ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction. Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the Gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity. Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account. But I have all, and abound; I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God. But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you; all the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Caesar's household. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

8. Epistle to the Colossians

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother, to the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the Gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth. As ye also learned of Epaphras our dear fellowservant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ; who also declared unto us your love in the Spirit.

For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you; and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and Spiritual understanding. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God. Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness. Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son; in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature. For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him. And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is at the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.

And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. And you, that were sometimes alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in his sight. If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister. Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church. Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the Word of God. Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints. To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. Whereunto I also labour, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh; that their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgement of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ. In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the Spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him. Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power. In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses, blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary (or false) humility and worshipping of angels; intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, and not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God. Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using; after the commandments and doctrines of men? Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body; not in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh.

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence and covetousness, which is idolatry; for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience. In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all. Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering. Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and Spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eyeservice, as menpleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons.

Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven. Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving. Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds. That I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak. Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man. All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellow-servant in the Lord. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts, with Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here. Aristarchus my fellowprisoner saluteth you; and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him; and Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellowworkers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me.

Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis. Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you.

Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house. And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it. The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

9. Epistle to the Ephesians

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus: Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all Spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will; to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself. That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him. In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the Word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints; cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what are the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints; and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power. Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places. Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church. Which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all.

And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air; the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, by grace ye are saved. And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands. That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel; and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace. And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby. And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God. And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward; how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, as I wrote afore in few words. Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto His holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who treated all things by Jesus Christ (the Lord Meshiahh). To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him. Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory. For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints its breadth, and length, and depth, and height. And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called. With all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism; One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. That we hence-forth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ. From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart. Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness; but ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus. That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the Spirit of your mind. And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour; for we are members one of another. Be ye angry, and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath. Neither give place to the devil. Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling savour. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light. For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth, proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light. Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit, speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and Spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the saviour of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ; so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it. That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church. For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right. Honour thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise, that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth. And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ. Not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men. Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening, knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him.

Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit; and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds; that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak. But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

10. Epistle to Philemon

Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellowlabourer; and to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellowsoldier, and to the church in thy house: Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints. That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus. For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds; which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me; whom I have sent again; thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the Gospel. But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever. Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord? If thou count me therefore a partner, receive him as myself. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it; albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord; refresh my bowels in the Lord. Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say. But withal prepare me also a lodging; for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you. There salute thee Epaphras, my fellowprisoner in Christ Jesus. Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellowlabourers. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

11. Epistle to the Hebrews

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also He made the worlds. Who being the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person, and upholding all things by the Word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said He at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when He bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, He saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels He saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment. And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. But to which of the angels said He at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will? For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him.

But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee. And again, I will put my trust in him. And again, Behold I and the children which God hath given me. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle, and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; who was faithful to Him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house. For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after. But Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. Wherefore, as the Holy Ghost saith, Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness; when your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do always err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. So I sware in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called Today; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end. While it is said, Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. For some, when they had heard, did provoke; howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses. But with whom was he grieved forty years? Was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them; but the Word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest; although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works. And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief. Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, Today, after so long a time; as it is said, Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God (referring to the Millennial day). For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.

Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. For the Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. Who can have compasssion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins. And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, today have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek (Melchisedec). Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared, though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; called of God an high priest after the Order of Melchizedek, of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God. Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do, if God permit. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come; if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God. But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak. For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister. And we desire that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end. That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath. That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek.

For this Melchizedek, king of peace (salem), priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him, to whom also Abraham gave tithes, a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of salem, which is, King of peace; without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils. And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham. But he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises. And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better. And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth. And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham. For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchizedek met him.

If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the law), what further need was there that another priest should rise again after the order of Melchizedek, and not be called after the Order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. And it is yet far more evident, for after the similitude of Melchizedek there ariseth another priest, who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek.

For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God. And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made priest. For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek (for when the priesthood is conferred, it is forever). By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death. But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such an high priest became us, holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once, when he offered up himself. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore.

Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. A minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount (Sinai).

But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant. And over it the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing, which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience. Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation.

But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself,now to appear in the presence of God for us. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world. But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? Because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law. Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins. But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God. From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us; for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching. For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgement and fiery indignation, which shall devour the sinners (adversaries).

He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions. Partly, whilst ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used. For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance. Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. For by it the elders obtained a good report. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he being dead yet speaketh. By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him, for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. But without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Through faith also Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised. Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable.

These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city.

By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called. Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. By faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones. By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment. By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible. Through faith he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the firstborn should touch them. By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned. By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.

And what shall I more say? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephtha; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets. Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame; and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin. And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of Spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. Follow peace with all men; and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord; looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of food sold his birthright. For ye know how afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected; for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more. For they could not endure that which was commanded, and if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it was to be stoned, or thrust through with a dart. And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake.

But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. To the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all; and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven. Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. For our God is a consuming fire.

Let brotherly love continue. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body. Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled; but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have; for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation. Jesus Christ (the Lord Meshiahh) the same yesterday, and today, and for ever. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein. We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle. For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the high priest for sin, are burned without the camp. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you. Pray for us; for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of an everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation; for I have written a letter unto you in few words. Know ye that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you. Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you. Grace be with you all. Amen.

12. Epistle to Titus

Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness. In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began; but hath in due time manifested his Word through preaching, which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Savior. To Titus, mine own son after the common faith; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior.

For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children not accused of riot or unruly. For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not selfwilled, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate. Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision; whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith. Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth. Unto the pure all things are pure; but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but even their mind and conscience is defiled. They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine; that the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience. The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh holiness; not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things; that they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the Word of God be not blasphemed. Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works; in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you. Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again. Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things. For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men. For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared; not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior, that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men. But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain. A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject (him); knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis; for I have determined there to winter. Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them. And let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful. All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

13. First Epistle to Timothy

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Savior, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope; unto Timothy, my own son in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine, neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith; so do. Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned. From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully, knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine. According to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry, who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious; but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting. Now unto the King Eternal, Immortal, Invisible, the Only Wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck; of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks, be made for all men. For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is One God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle; I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not; a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array. But, which becometh women professing godliness, with good works. Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity. For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

Likewise must the deacons be grave, not doubletongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre. Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus. These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly. But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit; seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God (which he hath ordained unto man) is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer.

If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness. For bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation.
For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe.
These things command and teach. Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery (elders). Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren; the elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity. Honour widows that are widows indeed. But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew piety at home, and to requite their parents; for that is good and acceptable before God.
Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day. But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth. And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless. But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work. But the younger widows refuse; for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry, having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.
And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not. I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. For some are already turned aside after Satan. If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward. Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses. Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure. Drink no longer (strange) water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities. Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself.

But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food, shelter, and raiment, let us therewith be content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath Immortality, dwelling in the Light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded; nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called; which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

14. Second Epistle to Timothy

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, to Timothy my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day. Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy. When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting (laying) on of my hands. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God. Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. For the which cause I also suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us. This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia (Minor) be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain. But, when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day; and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also. Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully. The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits. Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things. Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to the Gospel. Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the Word of God is not bound. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory. It is a faithful saying, For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us; if we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself.

Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness. And their word will eat as doth a canker; of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus. Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work. Flee also youthful lusts; but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes. And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Now as Jannes and Jambres (of the Pharaoh's court) withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was. But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience; persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra (what persecutions I endured) but out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them. And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me; for Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.

Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; the Lord reward him according to his works; of whom be thou ware also, for he hath greatly withstood our words. At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me; I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Salute Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus. Erastus abode at Corinth; but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick. Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

Now, besides the epistles of Paul, the epistles of James a brother of Jesus, Peter the apostle, Jude the prophet, and the words of John the apostle and revelator provide more insight into the period between 45 and 98 A.D. They will be discussed in the following order:

Epistle of James (a brother of Jesus)	A.D. 45-62; Jerusalem
First Epistle of Peter (the Apostle)	62-63; Babylon of Egypt
Second Epistle of Peter (the Apostle)	63-64; Babylon of Egypt
Epistle of Jude, brother of James (a prophet of God)	64-69; Palestine
First Epistle of John (the Apostle and Revelator)	85-96; Ephesus
Second Epistle of John (the Apostle and Revelator)	85-96; Ephesus
Third Epistle of John (the Apostle and Revelator)	85-96; Ephesus
Revelations of John (the Apostle and Revelator)	96-98; Patmos

James, son of Joseph and Mary, and half brother of Jesus, was not an apostle of the Twelve, but an overseer and apostle of the Christian congregation at Jerusalem; the other three natural brothers of James, Mary's natural born sons of Joseph, were: Joseph, Simon and Judas. It was to this James that the resurrected Jesus appeared personally; while James was assembled for prayer together with his mother, brothers, and apostles in an upper chamber in Jerusalem. James, Peter (Cephas), and John were considered the pillars of the Christian congregation at Jerusalem. (This James is not to be confused with James the son of Zebedee or James son of Alphaeus, the apostles of the Twelve.) Great was the virtue and piety of James, brother of Jesus, who wrote his letter to the twelve tribes of Israel that were scattered abroad, to his Spiritual brethren and saints, who hold to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

James' letter was written (between 45 and 62 A.D.) to exhort the fellow believers to display faith and endurance amid their trials, and to warn them against sins resulting in divine disapproval. For some had fallen away, and were taken captive into the snares of material riches and vanity; and they failed to discern the truth of parable and fell into the realm of facts; they merely became the hearers of the Word, neither to meditate or act upon it. And they began to use their tongue loosely and wrongly, and their cravings for sensual pleasures were causing fights, wars, and murders among them. Their desire for material things and possessions brought them into contact with the merchants and nobility; temporal or passing pleasures were bought at the loss of eternal joy and gladness; love and goodwill of Christ was traded off for selfishness, anger and worry; compassion and mercy was replaced by envy and vengeance; peace and serenity was lost to the lusts of the eyes and heart. James' words were written by the power of the Holy Spirit, in response to such prevailing conditions in Israel.

Two letters of Simon Peter the apostle were written between 62 and 64 A.D., prior to the outbreak of Nero's persecution in 64 A.D. These letters were composed in Babylon of Egypt near modern Cairo; and were written for the congregations in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, regions of Asia Minor, and to the faithful brethren in Christ in general. Now, as Paul was to minister unto the Gentiles, Peter was to minister unto the circumcised; and Babylon was a center of the Jews. The Christians to whom the apostle Peter addressed his first letter were undergoing serious trials and tribulations; and they needed encouragement, guidance, and support. Peter wrote this letter prior to his martyrdom to comfort and encourage the Jewish Christians in Asia Minor. He exhorts that suffering is part of the Christian life and that God has an imperishable reward reserved for those who trust him. And those who were contemplating a return to Judaism, under the priesthood of Aaron, were told that the Church is now a chosen nation and is established under the Melchizedek priesthood, of the Order of the Son of God.

Early Christians lived difficult lives of persecution and suffering for the sake of their faith; Peter's first letter tells them that it is worth it, no matter what the price. God knows all that is occurring, and in his eternal plan will work everything out for the best of the believers. Christians must simply trust him, and live with their eyes lifted up to heaven, knowing that their home is there, not here on earth. And because of God's mercy, they had received a new birth to a living hope, giving them reason for rejoicing. They had been bought with Christ's precious blood; and by putting away the filth of the flesh, the selfishness of material existence, and through prayerful supplications they had come unto the fold. As living stones they were built upon Christ Jesus, to become a Spiritual house or temple; they were a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a righteous and delightsome people. Christians had reason to endure sufferings and maintain fine conduct. They were to expect sufferings, for even Christ died once for all time concerning sins of man, a righteous person for the unrighteous ones. Sharing in the sufferings of Christ is in itself a reason for rejoicing, for it would bring much love and joy and gratitude at the end in heavenly existence. To be reproached for the name of Christ constitutes an evidence of having God's Spirit. The trials themselves result in the testing and building of faith, which is essential for salvation. And by faithfully enduring they would continue to experience God's care; and he would make them firm and strong.

In his first letter Peter exhorts that Christians are never to suffer because of being the law breakers of the nation in which they dwell, without a just cause; rather their conduct should be exemplary, which would serve to silence the ignorant. This involves every aspect of a Christian life, his relationship to the secular government, church, and family. He should keep his speech pure and true, free from defiling practices of the nations. Within the congregation, older men should serve as shepherds, not to lord it over the sheep, but to work willingly and eagerly, without any expectation of reward; the joy of work being sufficient in reward. All Christians are to be hospitable, seeking to build one another up, having pure love for one another, and girded with compassion and lowliness of mind.

The second letter of Peter was written to assist Christians to make their calling and choosing sure by the power of the Holy Spirit, to avoid being led astray by the false teachers and ungodly men within the congregation. Christians are urged to have and develop faith, virtue, knowledge, self-control, endurance, godly devotion, prayer, meditation, pure love, joy, and gratitude. And to pay attention and ponder upon the prophetic word, which is the manifestation of God's Spirit; and must guard against the corruptors, deceivers, and tempters. Jehovah's day and promise of new heavens and a new earth is certain; but the ignorant and rebellious give no heed, as they didn't in Noah's day. But Jehovah is patient, compassionate and merciful, and gives persons opportunity to repent and escape destruction.

The letter of Jude, brother of James, a prophet of God, was written to Melchizedek priesthood holders of the Church of Christ; it was composed between 64 and 69 A.D., in Palestine. At this time a threatening situation developed within the church, as immoral and ungodly men had slipped into various congregations in Palestine. Jude wrote this letter to warn the leadership of the church concerning this evil, and exhorted them to remain faithful to the true faith of the ancient saints, for the sake of common salvation. He admonishes the brethren to help each other in coping successfully with corruptive influences inside the congregations; and to put up a hard fight against the immoral persons, maintaining pure worship and proper conduct, by praying with the Holy Spirit; for the prayers without the Spirit of God within are abomination, and cursed already; for such prayers are in league with the Devil, and cannot be answered by Jehovah God.

Finally, of the three letters of John the apostle, son of Zebedee* and Salome, and younger brother of apostle James, two are parabolic letters; one was written by John in behalf of the apostles to the brethren of the holy priesthood, and the other was addressed to a certain congregation. Parabolically, John refers to the priesthood as little children, the congregation as the elect lady, himself as the elder; his third letter was addressed to a certain Christian named Gaius (Gaias), whom he commended for walking in the truth, and for his hospitality, love, and faithful work. These letters were written between circa 85 and 96 A.D., from Ephesus.

By now John was well-stricken in years, and was the only living apostle of the original twelve. He was one of three most intimately associated with Jesus. Peter, James and John were not only with Jesus at the mount of transfiguration, they were the only apostles that were allowed to enter the house of Jairus, and were taken to the garden of Gethsemane by Jesus, on the night of his betrayal. But John the beloved, or John the divine, was truly Jesus' beloved. John sat next to Jesus at his last Passover and the institution of the Lord's Evening Meal. It was also this selfsame John who, at Jesus' crucifixion, was entrusted with the care of Jesus' mother. While Jesus was still on earth, he did say that John would survive the other apostles. And John did serve Jehovah more than sixty-five years after Pentecost day, 33 A.D., when the Holy Spirit was poured out by Jehovah upon some 120 disciples in the upper room at Jerusalem; and from that time John's baptism ended; and the baptism in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost was preached instead. In 49 A.D., John was present at the conference of the governing body on the issue of circumcision for the Gentiles. And at Jerusalem, Paul referred to John as one who seemed to be one of the pillars of the congregation. Toward the end of his life John was exiled on the isle of Patmos, by emperor Domitian; and was released by his successor emperor Nerva, between 96 and 98 A.D. Patmos is located some thirty-five miles west of Asia Minor, and within 150 miles from the seven churches of Asia, to which the last parabolic letter of John was addressed. During his exile on this small volcanic island, about nine miles long and five miles wide, quite barren and rocky, with a very irregular coastline, John was given the Revelation of Jesus Christ by means of his angel; and was commanded to write down the Revelation of the words of prophecy which must come to pass in God's appointed time.

Now, the epistles of James, Peter, Jude, and John, eight altogether, written between 45 and 98 A.D., are as follows:

Epistle of James

(A natural brother of Jesus, and an overseer and apostle of Christ Jesus in the congregation at Jerusalem; his letter was composed between 45 and 62 A.D., in Jerusalem)

James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted. But the rich, in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth; so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment, and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool. Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called? If ye fulfill the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well. But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment.

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is One God, thou doest well; the devils also believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness; and he was called the Friend of God. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? For as the body without the Spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation. For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind. But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? Either a vine, figs? So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? Let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated; full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God. Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy? But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy; who art thou that judgest another? Go to now, ye that say, Today or tomorrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will (Inshallah, in Arabic), we shall live, and do this, or that. But now ye rejoice in your boastings; all such rejoicing is evil. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned; behold, the judge standeth before the door. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy. But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms (hymns). Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Elias (Elijah) was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.

First Epistle of Peter

(An apostle of Christ Jesus; and the first bishop or pope of the Universal (Catholic) Church at Rome. Both of his letters were composed between 62 and 64 A.D., in Babylon of Egypt.)

Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia (Minor), and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you. Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations. That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth; though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you.

Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance, but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy.

And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning in fear; forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you. Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently. Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible (by the Word of God) which liveth and abideth for ever. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away. But the Word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you.

Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings; as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby. If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious. Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a Spiritual house, an Holy Priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the Word, being disobedient; whereunto also they were appointed. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into marvellous light. Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God; which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the king, as supreme, or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men. As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honour all men. Love the brotherhood, fear God. Honour the king. Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward. For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps; who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree; that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives, while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear; whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel. But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands. Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord; whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear, having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us; not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin. That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men; but to the will of God. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles; when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you; who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For for this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit. But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins. Use hospitality one to another without grudging. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour. Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world. But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand. The church (of Christ) that is at Babylon (of Egypt, near modern Cairo), elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Second Epistle of Peter

Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord. According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you; who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you; whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment, and spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly. And delivered Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord. But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption. And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls; an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children. Which have forsaken the right way and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, but was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbade the madness of the prophet. These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness; those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise others liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb: The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you, in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets; and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Savior. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts; and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the Word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same Word are kept in store; reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless. And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood for them that are unlearned and unstable, which they wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Epistle of Jude
(Brother of James, a prophet of God;
his letter was written to the Melchizedek priests of the Christian church; and was composed between 64 and 69 A.D., in Palestine.)

Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called: Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. But these speak evil of those things which they know not; but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. Woe unto them! For they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear; clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have committed; and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ. How they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have compassion, making a difference. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

First Epistle of John

That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you; that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his Word is not in us.

My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his Word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the Word which ye have heard from the beginning.

Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you; because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his fellowman (brother), is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his fellowman abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his fellowman is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the Wicked One. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, because ye are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the Wicked One. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us. Instead, they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. But ye have an unction from the Holy, and ye know all things.

I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; but he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not let any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him. And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not; whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil. Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother (fellowman).

For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you. We know that we have passed from death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And this is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; Every Spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. Those that are of the world, speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his Only Begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No mortal hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We love him, because he first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God; and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous. For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him. If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it. All unrighteousness is sin; and there is a sin not unto death. We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, that the Wicked One toucheth him not. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.

Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

Second Epistle of John

The elder unto the elect lady and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth; for the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth as we have received a commandment from the Father. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it. For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist. Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink, but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full. The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen.

Third Epistle of John

The elder unto the well beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth. Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth. For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth. Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; which have borne witness of thy charity before the church; whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well. Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. I wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not. Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words; and not content therewith; neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God; but he that doeth evil hath not seen God. Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself; yea, and we bear record; and ye know that our record is true. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee. But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Revelations of John

The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John, who bare record of the Word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all the things that he saw. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand.

John to the seven churches which are in Asia (Minor). Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne. And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the Word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last. And, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia (Minor); unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks. And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter. The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write: These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars. And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write: These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich, and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Behold,the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days; be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches, He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is. And thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate. Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write: These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass. I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, all thy works; and the last to be more than the first. Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts; and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden. But that which ye have already hold fast till I come. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain that are ready to die; for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David; he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth. I know thy works. Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my Word, and hast not denied my name. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Because thou hast kept the Word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name.

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven; and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. And immediately I was in the Spirit; and behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone; and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats; and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices; and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto cyrstal; and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within; and they rest not day and night, saying,
Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.
And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever, the four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

And I (John) saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not; behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.

And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see. And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer. And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword. And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine. And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth. And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the Word of God, and for the testimony which they held. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains. And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

And after these things I beheld four angels standing on the four corners of the earth; holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God; and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea; saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. Of the tribe of Juda (Judah) were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Dan were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Aser (Asher) were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthali were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses (Manasseh), were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi (Al-Levi) were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. They cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God. Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple (sanctuary); and he that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up. And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood; and the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood; and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter. And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise. And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth; and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months; and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails; and their power was to hurt men five months. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter. And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men. And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand; and I heard the number of them. And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone; and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone. By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths. For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails; for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt. And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood; which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk. Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud; and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire. And he had in his hand a little book open; and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth; and cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth. And when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices; and when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write; and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not. And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven; and sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. And I (John) took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

And there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it not rain in the days of their prophecy; and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand; and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

And behold, there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth; and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God, day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! For the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness; into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast; and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

If any man have an ear, let him hear. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins (in the sight of God). These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand; the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

And I looked, and beheld a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped. And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God. And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God. And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire, and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, O King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

And after that I (John) looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened. And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image. And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of the dead; and every living soul died in the sea. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire (of the Sheol). And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues; and they repented not to give him glory. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent; and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. So he carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderness; and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen; and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas that great city Babylon, that mighty city! For in one hour is thy judgment come.

And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more; the merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble; and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, and saying, Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off; and cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! For in one hour is she made desolate. Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee. And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee; for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God. For true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me (John), Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God. And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not. I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; worship God, for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

And I saw heavens opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a two-edged sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God. That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth; and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them. And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

And I (John) saw new heavens and a new earth; for the first heavens and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write, for these words are true and faithful. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the Water of Life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.

And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me the replica of that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, the names of the twelve tribes of the Children of Israel. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth; and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel. And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

And he shewed me a pure river of Water of Life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life; which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true; and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. Behold, I come quickly; blessed is he that keepeth the saying of the prophecy of this book.

And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things. Then said he unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God. And he said unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end; the first and the last. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

I Jesus (Jeshua, Jehoshua; Iesous in Greek) have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the Water of Life freely. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add otherwise unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away substance from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book (of revelation).

He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

V. THE FIFTH EPOCH: FROM JESUS TO MOHAMMED (2-1 B.C. - 632 A.D.)

Now, as we know, the Catholic Church or the Universal Church of Christ had its roots in Jerusalem. And the Church needed another capital and center, which it found in what was then the capital of the world, Rome. And at this time Rome had acquired a new significance when the Republic became the Empire under Caesar Augustus, between 31 B.C. and 14 A.D. There was a strong Jewish community already established in Rome, for the Romans had conquered Judea in 63 B.C. In 46 B.C. Gaius Julius Caesar became dictator of Rome, and by 44 B.C. he subdued all opposition. Gaius was his personal name, Julius that of his clan or house, and Caesar was the regal title, which in German was Kaiser, and in Russian Czar; corrupted forms of the Arabic Qaisar. Then his adopted son Gaius Julius Caesar Octavian (Octavianus) became the ruler of the realm in 31 B.C., and in 27 B.C. was accorded the title Augustus by the Roman Senate, becoming known as Caesar Augustus. Thereafter, the next four Roman emperors, namely Tiberius (14-37 A.D.), Gaius or Caligula (37-41 A.D.), Claudius (41-54 A.D.), and Nero (54-68 A.D.) became the sovereign rulers.

After Nero came Galba circa 68/69 A.D., Otho 69 A.D., Vitellius 69 A.D.; Vespasian 69-79 A.D., during whose time Jerusalem was destroyed in 70 A.D.; then came Titus 79-81 A.D., and Domitian 81-96 A.D. And during his later years John the apostle and revelator was exiled at the isle of Patmos. Finally during Nerva 96-98 A.D., and Trajan 98-117 A.D., the first Bible canon was completed.

From the earliest time the Gentile converts to Christianity were more numerous than the Jews, and they constituted the majority in Rome. And among the churches of the Apostolic Age, the Church in Rome during the time of Nero became the center of Christian martyrdom. To the Roman authorities the Catholic or Universal Church seemed to be a new and mischievous Jewish development, to which no limit could be placed. Although Jews remained separate as the seed of Abraham and the children of Israel, they had already, over the centuries past, made it possible for people without that pre-eminent pedigree to attach themselves to Jewry; as was the case with the Herods, who were the descendants of Edom, sons of Esau.

During this early period of the Church, the Holy Scripture was a collection of sayings and deeds of Christ Jesus and his immediate followers. This collection was used for a social purpose, to be read when the faithful gathered together for worship. The Gospels were short, and could be read in a few hours; these were collected by the Christians from the apostles. Then the Apostolic Church in Rome chose with authority from all the available scriptures, and a canon of Scripture was established by the ecclesiastical authority of the Church. The language of the early Christian Church was not Latin but Greek; and many converts were called Heretics, the persons who chose for themselves what Christianity was to mean, what parts they would believe and what parts they would disbelieve. At the same time, the Jewish converts to Christianity had to embrace the new teaching that was centered on the person of Christ; and had to accommodate change, with enthusiasm, from the old orthodoxy in which they were brought up. They saw great new vistas opening before them, but they were also confused as to their relationship with the Christ, and with their God the Father whom they had been brought up to worship as One God. The Hellenistic influence upon the civilized world which began with the conquests of Alexander of Macedonia some three hundred years before, and the Roman influence some two hundred years before, created an extraordinary conglomeration of peoples living in the same political and economic society, but holding numerous different beliefs about the fundamental purpose of human existence. The Greek and Roman deities whose cults had begun as the local worship of particular peoples, had spread as those people had spread; and these were mixed with Zoroastrian and Buddhist beliefs of the oriental world, and those of Egypt.

Jesus had promised Simon Peter, or Kephas, saying: Thou art Peter (rock) and upon this rock I will build my Church. And during Jesus' life on earth Peter was considered the disciples' representative; and was to build the Church upon the Rock. Peter was given the keys of the Kingdom of God, and the power to bind and loosen. He was a native of Bethsaida (house of fishing), a district in which Hellenistic influences were strong. His Greek name Simon, equivalent of Shemitic Symeon or Simeon; and his brother Andrew also carries a Greek name. Peter and Andrew later moved to Capernaum, and engaged in the fishing business in partnership with James and John, sons of Zebedee. It was here that they were called by Jesus to serve the Kingdom and become fishers of men. Although among the Jewish Christians who were unwilling to believe that Gentiles too were to receive the Holy Spirit, it was Peter who convinced them that to the Gentiles also God has granted repentance unto life; and it was Peter who opened the way for the missionary work under the wings of the Apostolic Church. And whenever differences of opinion on important matters arose, as between the Hellenists and the Hebrews, the authority of Peter was acknowledged and his decisions upheld. As Peter was the head of missions to the Jews and the circumcised, Paul was the head of missions to the Gentiles and the uncircumcised. And both had recognized their individual calling from God. Peter, however, was very much closer to Jesus and the Church in Jerusalem than Paul. So much so, that when Paul revisited the congregation in Jerusalem after fourteen years, he referred to Peter as a pillar of that Church.

All these experiences prepared Simon Peter for his ultimate calling to become head of the Apostolic Church of Christ, the Universal or Catholic Church of Rome. And it was here that the seat of the Spiritual and temporal government of the world was established. And it was in Rome that Peter and Paul were martyred. There were two ways or roads in Rome, called the way of life and the way of death, and Nero in the prime of his life, galloped through the Vatican Valley (the depression between the Janiculum and Monte Mario), where the emperor had rebuilt and enlarged the circus of Caligula. It was an open, breezy district. On the south were Caesar's beautiful gardens, with artificial lakes and naumachiare (boat fishermen), the Tiber fishermen, fought their mimic battles. On the north, was the ancient via Cornelia, a road lined with tombs and adjoined by a hill and wooded ranges, where sacrifices were made to Phrygian goddess Cybele in the earliest Roman times, and the Etruscan soothsayers or Vates had their oracles or revelations. Therefore the hill derived its names the Oracle Hill or Collis Vaticanus. And in this Vatican quarter lay the burial place of Romulus, and Augustus had had a family tomb built, on the bank of the Tiber, north of the Campus Martius. This tomb later became the mausoleum of the emperor Hadrian, and then papal stronghold, under the name of Castel Sant Angelo. So the Vatican valley was called the way of death.

But for Nero it was the way of passion, or the way of the world. Here the eighty-foot obelisk that Caligula had looted from Egypt could be seen; the circus was Nero's favorite sport, and always had been an integral part of the life of Rome; and the best charioteers and horses were more famous than the poets. And it came to pass, that one day a crowd assembled around Caesar's private circus and good-temperedly asked to be admitted. Nero had the gate thrown open, and drove his chariot and his well-trained thoroughbreds with a golden fillet in his hair, reins wound around his green tunic, around the metae, the two columns that marked the ends of the spina. And his driving brought storms of applause from the crowd and the bystanders. From then onwards he cultivated the art of feeding the mob, merchants and noblemen, with sensations and thrills. In this respect emperor Nero was the father of modern organized sports.

It is written that Simon Peter baptized his converts by laying on of hands, near the reedy, goat-browsed swamps on the other bank of the yellow-green Tiber, after they were baptized by water. And there arose a sinister spirit of competition between him and Nero, of which only God was aware. While the emperor, with a zither on his arm and a mark on his face appeared unto the Roman subjects, the Apostle before the city gates contended with the magicians and sorcerers, whom the emperor's mad lust for popularity and attention attracted to Rome from the ends of the earth. Among them also was Peter's old adversary, Simon Magus (the Magician), the hypocritical Samaritan, who after having been baptized by water, wanted to buy the Holy Ghost from Peter. And Peter rebuked him, telling Simon his heart was not right in God's sight, and urging him to repent and pray for forgiveness. For Magus had also moved to Rome with all the apostles and the congregations of Judea and Palestine. And in Rome also this Magus was the cause of discord and dissension.

The Gentiles began to proclaim Simon Magus a new god to Italy, who called himself the great power; on the morrow, at the seventh hour (twelve o'clock), he would fly over the city gate, and make spirits appear, restore sight to the blind, and give back to cripples the use of their limbs! Peter was now alarmed, thinking: Was Satan crawling in Christ's wake? He roused himself and in the middle of the Via Sacra refuted the soulless words of the Antichrist; but the people laughed at Peter. And the next day they all went out to watch the magician fly. Behold, the magician climbed to a high place, and thence began to fly around the city. Peter began to pray to his Lord, saying; If Thou wouldest continue to allow him to do this, those who believe in Thee will be scandalized, and the signs and wonders which Thou hast given them through me will be worthless. But God heard and knew the prayer of his servant; the flying magician crashed and broke his thigh. And the Romans, no different than the mobs of the East, pelted the injured man with stones, then went home and acquitted Peter altogether. In Nero's time there were some thirty thousand Jews in the metropolis. But the Jewish Christians were generally zealous and passionate individuals, often contending with foreign magicians, soothsayers and wizards, in front of the temple of Rome, and trespassing the domains of Nero, whom the Lord had also appointed to carry out his political and temporal works.

Then, on the nineteenth day of July, 64 A.D., the great fire of Rome started; which event was secretly longed for by the emperor Nero for the sake of feeding the mob, the merchants and nobility, with sensations and thrills; but he dared not discuss it with anyone openly. Rome burnt. The sky was as bright as when the deluded Caligula, known as lunatic (37-41 A.D.) used to illuminate his nightly theatrical shows with crowned torches; and lights and shadows flickered through the narrow streets. But now sparks leapt from one quarter to another. The wooden buildings and houses seventy feet high, became walls of fire, for Caesar Augustus had warned people against building too high. The breeze from the Campagna carried the fire over the constructed alleys; the inhabitants took refuge in the market-places, but many were struck by falling beams. Along the Via Sacra, which was less than ten yards wide, people ran through smoke clouds towards the gates. Some marble temples and imperial buildings served as sanctuaries and shelters; but the flames even crept through them and the state-owned hills of ancient Rome.

During this time Nero remained in his country estate at Antium. But within a few hours after the outbreak, the inferno of the burning shops between Palatine and the Caelius, where the oil for the lamps of Rome was stored, and nearby Circus Maximus, were engulfed by the flames. The heart of Rome was burnt out. Soon came out emperor Nero, and he was to be seen everywhere, promising gifts of corn and temporary housing, but this time the applause was missing; instead there was doubt and fear and mourning. No one amid the crowded tenements knew when or where the fire started; some said the circus stables, others in Suburra, or some other places. Nero the actor now had a stage set for him; and the people began to believe the rumor that the emperor had fired the city so as to be able to build himself a golden house.

And Rome burned for six days and seven nights; the fire came to a halt at the foot of the villas and their parks on the Esquiline. Of the fourteen districts of the city, three were completely burned to ashes, four escaped, and others were a smoking mass of ruins. Many gods of ancient Rome had lost their homes; the temples of Vesta, of Luna, of Jupiter, the great altar of Hercules, the palace of king Numa were destroyed; and the protective deities were driven away by fire and sulphur. So the people who suffered turned envious and angry toward those who escaped. And they began to murmur, saying, Why was there no damage to the quarters of the Jews and the Orientals in Trastevere and by the Capena Gate? But none replied to them that they were forbidden to live inside the walls, neither were the other foreigners allowed to dwell there. They dwelt in miserable conditions in shanties between the Tiber quay; their corn granaries, their booths on the Fabricius Bridge were also spared. Now Nero and his men began to spread the rumor that perhaps it was the Jews who somehow or other were responsible for the fire.

Thereupon Peter gathered together the frightened Jewish Christians at the palace of Pudens, and also at the house of Aquila and Priscilla, a favored Christian couple, and exhorted them: Stifle with good deeds the suspicion of ignorant people; love the brotherhood, fear God, honor the king even when his actions are strange. And the old man faced his trembling brethren triumphantly, and said: What a glory, to suffer lashes for misdeeds of which one is innocent; are we not called upon to imitate Christ in his suffering? Was it not only when one suffered for one's own good deeds that the grace of God began to flow?

And the Romans, or the Hellenists, were puzzled at the Jewish Christians, and Christians in general, saying, A strange conspiracy; no images are to be seen in the assembly rooms of the Christians, and the little they possessed they gave to those even poorer than themselves. The Christians were believed to be a charitable people that made themselves useful in the universal impoverishment, receiving invisible rewards for their charity from an unknown (or unseen) God; and they did not burn their dead, but like the Israelites, buried them, and a burial society interred them in caves or stone vaults. Soon Nero threw open Caesar's gardens and allowed temporary homes to be built there. The Campus Martius with its clumps of trees and swamps began to look like a military camp. Tents and huts were spread out as far as the Vatican valley. Then Nero announced his building plans; the foundations were already laid for a huge palace quarter on the plain between Palatine, Caelius, and Esquiline, with artificial lakes, gardens, vineyards and cultivated fields. But Nero did not succeed in obtaining their favor; for they were distressed for losing their lands and possessions, and having been forced to move, and they were convinced that it was Nero who set the fire. In turn, he raised taxes, saying: Let the ruin-dwellers pay for the new palaces!

Nero was distressed and shaken, for he, as all deluded men, treasured popularity, the lust of his eyes and heart, thrills and sensations above everything. So he decided to bring a series of splendid circus games, to last for weeks and months. But his counsellors advised him against it for the treasury was empty; instead they advised him to find a scapegoat to shift the blame. And thus the Christians became the culprits. The Christians held among other things, that master and slave are equal in the sight of their Deity; what mattered was not hair-dressing and golden cloaks, but that which was hidden in man's heart. And after a slave was converted, the Christian elders always went to his master and asked for his freedom, and sometimes bought with money his freedom, without ever telling the slave. And the counsellors of Nero argued: And how on earth would one exist in Rome if there were no slaves to carry the litter, do the laundry, and wait upon their masters? Not to mention the workers in the quarries and brickworks. The slave is a chattel, not a man; he thinks, feels, and reacts differently. Where could one find three servants attending to the bath? In our society, they said, a Roman loses face if his domestic staff is reduced. Abolish corporal punishment for slaves, and they would be soon sitting at table with you; give them money and property, and they would be soon filling most of the public offices. O Caesar (Nero), have them branded on the forehead, otherwise you will never recognize them again among the courtiers; cover them with tar and burn them alive; throw them to the wild beasts in your circus, before they eat up your glory and your money. And the counsellors reminded Nero, It is the Christians that urge your servants to rest from their labor, and turn the heads of our philosophers, and cast doubt on your divinity. And these traitors refuse to worship the emperors. Surely, O emperor, you would not continue to spare these enemies of the people, these despisers of the world? Let them go to their heaven.

Now, Nero saw the advantage of this advice; that people would stop calling him a fire-raiser, would forget the high taxations, their hunger and homelessness. And it came to pass that the emperor gave the Christians a feast to satisfy their lowest animalistic instincts. And for this purpose he chose the public gardens between the island in the Tiber, the Janiculum and the Vatican hill, a shady sort of place, convenient for musical feasts, whoredoms, fights and deaths. The emperor had once built a country house there for his Egyptian mistress, Cleopatra; and in that mock paradise she spent two years with her natural son. Now Nero, aroused by his base instincts of murder and revenge, went to the park with his actors, engineers, pyrotechnists, and turned the park into a glittering sea of fire and light; living bodies of Christians were bound to the stakes on either side of the main streets, whose clothes were soaked in sulphur and pitch to make a blaze that turned night into day. And Nero took great delight in the burning bodies of the Christians, and laughed with an insane laughter, beating his body and his head, and rejoicing his victory over the Christians. And Nero dressed himself as the god Apollo, and drove through the avenues of smoking bodies. This terrible punishment and judgement extinguished forever the quarrels between the Jewish Christians and the Gentile Christians; and the people howled with satisfaction as the emperor drove past. And Peter's words were read to the Christians, which said: After ye have suffered a little, Christ Jesus will call you unto his eternal glory. And they began to see this to be the end of the world; and wondered why they were not all carried up at once to heaven, filled with jubilation, tears and cries of martyred brethren.

In the meantime, Peter had been arrested, and was in the Mamertine prison at the foot of the Capitol. Linus, the senior deacon, led the prayers. And the congregation begged Mark, Peter's interpreter and travelling companion, to write down with care all that the Apostle Peter had told him of the words and deeds of the Lord; and Mark consented, and soon began to write from memory. Weeks and months passed without news of Peter their bishop; and during this time Paul had also been arrested, and he wrote to Timothy from there, saying: I am even now ready to be sacrificed, and the time of my dissolution is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith. As to the rest, there is laid up for me a crown of justice which the Lord the just judge will render to me on that day; and not only to me, but to all that love his coming. And Paul asked his old friend to visit him before the winter, and to bring his cloak and the books, especially the parchment, which he missed very much in the prison.

And while Peter was kept a prisoner among others in an underground dungeon, he baptized two of the wardens and no less than forty-eight fellow-prisoners in the well therein. His friends brought the news that their bishop would be freed during the coming night and that Processus and Martinianus, Christian centurians, were ready to expedite his escape; and they implored him to leave the city. His worth as a living eye-witness to Christ Jesus' ministry, death, and resurrection was great in the sight of the congregation and God. Peter obeyed, but asked to go away alone. He put on other clothes and walked out into the darkness of the Appian Way; and when he reached the place where travellers to Spain and Gaul turn right, along the Via Ardeatina, and those for Asia keep straight on for Naples and Brindisi, he hesitated for a moment. Suddenly he saw a figure approaching towards him; it reminded him of Jesus. Peter raised his eyes, weak from captivity in the dark dungeon, and asked the personage which was clothed in light; Lord, whither goest thou in this form? And the Lord replied, I am going into Rome to be crucified. Peter said in wonderment, Lord, wilt thou be crucified a second time? And the Lord replied, Yea, Peter, I will be crucified again.

Then Peter gained his strength, and turned back to Rome, and went to the brethren to tell them of his vision. And it came to pass, that Peter was arrested again, and he met Paul also in fetters. Nero the emperor had them brought before him at his country house on the Ostia road; here he pronounced the sentence of the Senate concerning Peter and Paul: The Galilean fisherman to die on the cross; and Paul, as a Roman citizen, by the sword.

So they carried Peter back to the city, but Paul to a point farther along the well-watered valley, by the side of the Ostia road. There the apostle to the Gentiles was beheaded. The body of Paul is said to have been hidden and buried by a pious Christian matron named Lucina, on her nearby farm. And about the same time circa 67 A.D. Peter, too, suffered a martyr's death. He was executed at Naumachia, near the obelisk of Nero's circus on the hill, on the tomb-lined Via Cornelia. The cross for Peter was set up near Caesar's pleasure gardens, between the two terminal columns of the spina, around which Nero once used to drive his chariot. (And for three hundred years the site of martyrdom of Peter, who was later considered officially to be the first pope of the Christian church, remained without a monument. Initially only a large oak tree marked the spot. For a time the apostle's grave was surrounded by pagan tombs, brickworks, meadows, and vineyards. On 10th June, 68 A.D., about a year after the apostle's death, Nero took his own life.)

Now, from the time of Peter and Paul's martyrdom, circa 67 A.D., until the time of pope Gregory I the Great, the Jurist, Benedictine, papal legate, cardinal deacon, and also called town prefect (590-604 A.D.), sixty-three popes occupied Peter's chair, and Gregory I was the sixty-fourth. Now the time was nigh at hand that the prophecies of Daniel concerning the stone cut without hands be fulfilled. For this purpose the prophet and emperor of the nations of Islam was raised up in Arabia, in the city of Mecca (or Becca), where the black meteorite is buried. Mohammed was born on 29 August, 570 A.D., and was twenty years old when Gregory I the Great was elected on September 9, 590 A.D.

Pope Gregory I, the first monk and Benedictine on the apostolic throne, and his scribe on the other side of the veil.

Benedict of Nursia

The first Benedictine abbey at Monte Cassino. Benedict of Nursia (480-543) was the spiritual father of forty-nine popes.

The Benedictines were a religious group living under the Rule of St. Benedict of Nursia; these were and are the monks of the Benedictine Order. Unlike other orders of the time, it had no general-superior, but consisted of a federation of autonomous congregations professing the same Rule and way of life. The individual monastery was a self-contained, fully-independent family, where the abbot-president was bestowed with some limited authority; and the individual abbeys of the union mostly remained under their own abbot. The Benedictines aimed at the sanctification of the individual members, who might undertake any work which was not at variance with community life and with the chanting of the Divine Office. They focused on missionary and educational enterprises, cherished their work, and exerted great influence. It was the zeal of the Benedictines that evangelized the Teutonic tribes and developed the culture of northwestern Europe. Their abbeys were centers of arts and letters. And many latter day educational institutions, such as the universities of Paris, Cambridge, and Bologna, find their origin in such monastery schools.

St. Benedict of Nursia was the founder of Western monastic organizations, and the initiator of a legislative code, called St. Benedict's Rule. He was born at Nursia in Umbria about 480 A.D. While staying at Rome, he was shocked by the city's lusts and corruptions; therefore, he retired to the Sabine hills, where he joined a group of men who shared similar desire for a life of quiet and prayer. After his first miracle, he was forced to retire into the seclusion of a grotto, Sacro Speco, a few miles away at Subiaco. There for three years he lived as a hermit in poverty, hard labor, and prayer — the three principal features of his future Rule. Romanus, a monk from the nearby monastery, supplied him with food. Soon his reputation for sanctity and wisdom spread abroad; and he reluctantly became abbot of a neighboring monastery. But his ideas of monastic life were so different from those of the prevailing monks, that after an attempt had been made to poison him, he returned to his cave. So many came to Subiaco to seek his guidance that in time he had twelve monasteries in the valley, with twelve monks and a superior in each; and in the thirteenth he lived as abbot with a few chosen disciples. Again forced by the molestations of a jealous priest nearby, Benedict established a more centralized foundation at Monte Cassino, midway between Rome and Naples, after destroying its vestiges of paganism. There he was taken up in 542/43 A.D., shortly after the visit of Totila, king of the Goths. And in the writings of pope Gregory the Great, he refers to the saint, saying, the Benedictine Rule is the saint's real biography.

A brief account of each of the sixty-three popes after St. Peter is herewith presented. Imperfections, the essential part of the temporal church, and their manifold manifestations can be seen in these accounts. Although Christ lives in the Universal or Catholic Church of Rome, he lives as crucified; and these imperfections are viewed as the Cross of Christ.

(67-76 A.D.)

Linus was born in Tuscia (or Volterra). Paul sent greetings from himself and Linus in his letter to Timothy. He worked directly with Peter and Paul, being a senior deacon before his accession. He was martyred under emperor Titus Flavius Domitian, who revived the practise of offering sacrifice before the emperor's image.

3. St. Anacletus (Cletus)

(76-88 A.D.)

Born in Rome, Anacletus constructed a crypt in Rome for the relics of Apostles Peter and Paul. He was from the immediate circle of the Apostles; and was also martyred under emperor Domitian.

(88-97 A.D.)

Clement I also had direct contact with the Lord's Apostles. He was born in Rome about the time of Jesus' death and was the son of the Roman patrician Faustus. He recounts himself, in his letter to the Christian community at Corinth, in the year 95, how in a journey through the East he came to know the disciple Peter, who was at that time having some difficulty with a magician called Simon.

If the Christian communities were to survive within the Roman Empire, said Clement, bishop of Rome, they must adhere to an organization of the community, separate from that of the State.

The Corinthian church had tried to depose their own bishop and deacons, saying that their regulations would deaden the free, heavenly faith. Bishop Clement urged them in his letter not to destroy the work of love by unjust and godless jealousy, whereby death has come into the world. He wrote that Christ is from God, and the Apostles are from Christ, and he quoted from Isaiah; I will appoint their bishops in righteousness and their deacons in faithfulness. He asked why the Corinthians no longer took collections. Did they think that now that the Holy City had been destroyed there were no longer any Christian poor?

(This letter to the Corinthians was frequently copied and translated into other languages; the original manuscript is now in the British Museum in the Codex Alexandrinus, a Bible manuscript presented by Cyril, patriarch of Constantinople, to the king of England in 1688.) The following is also from this letter:

> All must be done according to the order given to us by the Lord, at the prescribed times. The sacrifice and the divine service are to be performed, not as it suits us and with no regularity, but at the times prescribed. . . Those who do this are pleasing to God and blessed. The senior priest has been allotted his special duties, the priests have been appointed their proper places, and the deacons have their office to fulfill, while the layman is bound by the lay instructions. And thus, my brethren, let each one of us be well-pleasing to God with a good conscience in the place to which he has been appointed.

In the same year, 95 A.D., Clement bequeathed the care of his flock to Evaristus, when he was banished to a place on the Crimea, where he preached the word of God until he was tracked down by the enemies of Christianity and drowned in the Black Sea.

Bishop Clement's house in Rome, toward the end of the second century, contained a shrine of the sun-god Mithras. Three churches have been built on this one site, one above the other; on the lowest level the bishop's house with the oratory of the first Roman Christians and the room of the sun-god Mithras, then the lower church of the Constantinian era, and finally the basilica of San Clemente, which still stands today.

(The remains of bishop Clement were brought back to Rome from Russia by Cyril and Methodias, the apostles of the Slavs, and were laid to rest in the old basilica at the end of the ninth century.)

5. St. Evaristus

(97-105 A.D.)

Evaristus was a Greek, of Jewish parentage, born in Bethlehem. He was appointed successor by bishop Clement on Clement's banishment to the Crimea. He founded the parochial system, dividing Rome into parishes. He also died a martyr.

6. St. Alexander I
(105-115 A.D.)

Alexander was a native Roman. He was beheaded and his body was buried in the catacombs. He is credited with the inauguration of the institution of holy water.

7. St. Sixtus I (Xystus)
(115-125 A.D.)

Sixtus was a Roman, and his rule lasted for ten years.

8. St. Telephorus
(125-136 A.D.)

A Greek anchorite, who had lived the ordered life of the desert, Telephorus' pontificate was disturbed by a series of grave heresies. He took the old customs of Lent and molded them into one definite rule. He also inaugurated Midnight Mass at Christmas. During his time the first Christian Apology was addressed to the emperor, written by Quadratus, a disciple of the Apostles, aimed to explain the position of the Christians. Persecution continued and under emperor Hadrian Telephorus was martyred.

9. St. Hyginus
(136-140 A.D.)

Hyginus was a Greek philosopher, born in Athens. During his pontificate two gnostic heretics settled in Rome and taught there. One, named Cerdo, at first attached himself to the Roman Church and attempted to present his own doctrines. Eventually he was excommunicated. Another gnostic teacher, Valentinus, also sought to attach himself to the Christian community, but was rejected and founded his own sect. Hyginus is principally remembered for his regulation of minor clerical orders.

10. St. Pius I

Pius I was an Italian born in Aquilegia. He reigned at the time of the Christian persecutions under Hadrian. He was brother of Hermas, who was of servile origin and author of a famous early Christian work, The Shepherd, which advocated a pardon of grave sins, in particular apostasy.

11. St. Anicetus

Anicetus was Syrian, born in Anisa. During his pontificate Justin was martyred, who had addressed a defense of the Christian faith to the emperor. This defence was called the Apology.

St. Polycarp, aged bishop of Smyrna, who was soon to be martyred, and was a disciple of St. John, visited Rome to discuss with Anicetus whether Easter should be celebrated on a Sunday or on the 14th of Nisan irrespective of the day of the week on which it fell. Polycarp and Anicetus failed to reach agreement, however their friendship was unimpaired. Anicetus accused his clergy of being overly concerned with their personal appearance, and issued a series of regulations expressing his censure and wishes.

12. St. Soter (Soterus)
(166-175 A.D.)

Soter was Italian, born either at Fundi or Campania. Eusebius (c.260-341 A.D.) in his History of the Church has preserved some sentences from a reply by the bishop of Corinth, Dionysius, to a letter sent to his church by Soter. Dionysius thanks him for the alms he had sent to several churches and for his letter of valuable exhortation in which he had urged a firm profession of faith and union with bishop and presbyters (elders). His letter, Dionysius said, would be publicly read during the celebration of the liturgy together with the Epistle of St. Clement. Soter turned his eye to liturgical errors and insisted on the correct and orthodox observance of all sacred customs. In searching for these abuses he came in contact with many of the poorer Christian communities and these he made it a special mission to assist.

13. St. Eleutherius (Eleutherus)
(175-189 A.D.)

A Greek deacon born in Nicopolis, Eleutherius was first accorded the honors of sainthood by the ninth century hagiographer, Ado. His Greek name, Freeman, suggests that Eleutherius was a freed slave. During this pontificate, the Christians of Lyons were troubled with the Montanist heresy, named after the Phrygian founder Montanus, which sect had an uncompromisingly ascetic tendency. Eleutherius formulated plans for the conversion of such far off places as Britain.

14. St. Victor I

Victor was from the Latin community in Africa. He paved the way for general councils by ordering local bishops everywhere to call synods (ecclesiastical councils) to consider and, he hoped, to condemn the practise of celebrating Easter on 14 Nisan. The bishops obediently called their synods, but those of Asia Minor refused to abandon the practise. Bishop Polycrates of Ephesus in particular addressed a firm protest to Victor, who decided to overcome this opposition by excommunicating the strongly rebellious. Irenaeus (missionary and writer, and father of the Greek Church) dissuaded him from such an extreme measure. The important point was that at his command the synods were held throughout the Christian world.

15. St. Zephyrinus

Zephyrinus was a Roman. Zephyrinus appointed his successor, Callistus, to the post of archdeacon, a position analagous to that of Secretary of State today; and placed him in charge of Christian cemeteries. This pope reconciled to the Church most of the Adoptianist followers of Theodotus, who taught that Jesus was a man, who was adopted as the Son of God. Zephyrinus was buried in or near the newly opened cemetery of Callistus.

16. St. Callistus I (Calixtus)

Entrance to the church of the catacombs. (Subterranean Rome provided shelter for the persecuted Christians.) Pope Callistus (Calixtus) opened the catacomb named after him, later known as the papal crypt.

Callistus had been the slave of Carpophorus, a highly placed Roman Christian. His name, meaning very handsome, was the kind of name that masters often gave to slaves born in their households. His master placed him in charge of a bank, which failed. In his attempts to get creditors to pay their debts, Callistus forced his way into a synagogue and sought to arrest some Jews who owed the bank money. They denounced him as a Christian. He was scourged and sent to the Sardinian mines, but through the intervention of the Roman bishop (whom he was to succeed) he was released. He was appointed archdeacon by Zephyrinus, and became his successor when Zephyrinus died.

Callistus for the first time allowed repentant murderers, adulterers, and fornicators to be forgiven, and reconciled with the Church; and recognized as valid marriages between free persons and slaves, marriages unrecognized by Roman law. Both of these policies occasioned great protest within the Church. During his reign Hippolytus, whose brilliance had won him a considerable following, declared Callistus' election to have been invalid and then he (Hyppolytus) allowed his disciples to bestow upon him the title of Head of the True Church. Thus for the first time there was an anti-pope.

Callistus was martyred in 222 by being thrown into a well by a pagan mob; and he was buried in the catacomb of Calepodius.

(222-230 A.D.)

Urban was a Roman; and because of persecution he was forced to live underground. In the year 230 Cecilia, (later St. Cecilia), the last of the great family of Caeccilii, sent her betrothed, Valerianus, to Urban, and her instructions were preserved for finding Urban's vault below the Appian Way. She wrote, "My beloved, go out by the Capuan Gate until you come to the third milestone. There you will find some poor people who will ask for alms. I have always been generous to them and they know my secret. They will guide you and bring you to the aged and holy Urban. My friend, be advised, and do not hold the sun too dear, nor the stars, but follow him down into the realm of darkness."

18. St. Pontian (Pontianus)
(July 21, 230 - September 28, 235 A.D.)

A Roman, Pontianus was banished to Sardinia by emperor Maximin, as was the anti-pope Hippolytus. Knowing he had little hope of return, Pontianus resigned his episcopate on September 28, 235. He and Hippolytus became friends in their banishment and soon after, Pontianus died from suffering and hardships.

19. St. Anterus (Antherus)

(November 21, 235 - January 3, 236 A.D.)
A Greek, Anterus' pontificate lasted only 43 days. He died and was buried in the papal cemetery of Callistus (where fragments of his epitaph have been discovered).

20. St. Fabian

(January 10, 236 - January 20, 250 A.D.)
Fabian was a Roman farmer. He was a layman and a stranger, who happened to be present when the election of a new head of the Roman Church was being held. A dove flew in and settled on his head, which was taken by the electors as a mark of divine choice. St. Cyprian, the bishop of Carthage, writing to his successor, praised Fabian's holiness. The persecution of the Christians, which had eased up under Philip began anew under emperor Decius, who declared that death was the penalty for all who would not forsake Christianity; and Fabian was beheaded, after a pontificate of fourteen years.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year and two months)

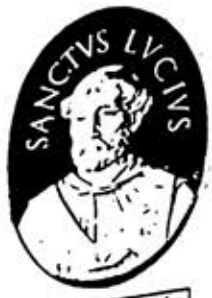
(March, 251 - June, 253 A.D.)
After a vacancy of fourteen months, due to the persecution which had resulted in the beheading of Fabian, Cornelius was elected to the office. He was a Roman. However a prominent member of the Roman community, Novation, refused to accept the decision and had himself officially set up as anti-pope. But Novatian's supporters fell away, and he was expelled from the church by a Roman synod. Cornelius was sentenced with banishment under emperor Gallus, to Centumcellae (Civita Vecchia) where he died a martyr in June, 253. His epitaph was found in the crypt of Lucina adjoining Callistus' cemetery, the first papal epitaph in Latin.



22. St. Lucius I

(June 25, 253 - March 5, 254 A.D.)

A Roman priest, Lucius was banished after his election, but allowed back in Rome by emperor Valerian, Decius' second successor. Just twelve months after his election he passed away peacefully.

23. St. Stephen I

(May 12, 254 - August 2, 257 A.D.)

A Roman priest, Stephen cautioned the clergy to wear ecclesiastical vestments only inside the churches. Emperor Valerian became envious of the Church's wealth and the persecutions began again. Stephen perished in exile.

24. St. Sixtus II (Xystus)

(August 30, 257 - August 6, 258 A.D.)

A Greek deacon, his consecration was done secretly because of the persecution. Sixtus II gathered his congregation in Mass in defiance of the law, and during the Mass imperial troops broke in. In order to prevent a massacre of the congregation, Sixtus II stepped forward with four deacons and they were all beheaded on the spot.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant eleven months)

(July 22, 259 - December 26, 268 A.D.)

Until Valerian's departure to the East, a successor could not be elected, but an invasion of the Roman Empire caused cessation of the persecution at this time, and a peaceful relationship between Church and State ensued. Dionysius, who was a Greek anchorite, sent alms to Caesarea for the ransom of Christians captured in a barbarian raid. When he died, he was buried in the cemetery of Callistus.

26. St. Felix I

(January 5, 269 - December 30, 274 A.D.)

Felix was a Roman, and during his reign heresies were abundant, but met with discipline. The catacombs ceased to be the meeting places for the Christians and churches were built. Felix on his death was also buried in the catacomb of Callistus.

27. St. Eutychian (Eutychianus)

(January 4, 275 - December 7, 283 A.D.)

Eutychian was born in Luni, Italy. Bishoprics grew, in numbers and size, and certain powers of authority were delegated to higher bishops who were termed Metropolitans. (Eutychian's epitaph has been found in the cemetery of Callistus.)

28. St. Caius (Gaius)

(December 17, 283 - April 22, 296 A.D.)

Caius was born in Salonae, Dalmatia, and died just before the long peace was broken by the last and most terrible persecution. In a letter to a church member at Hierapolis, he mentions the tropaie or relics of Peter and Paul. (His epitaph has also been discovered in the cemetery of Callistus.)

29. St. Marcellinus

(June 30, 296 - October 25, 304 A.D.)

Marcellinus was Roman and during this period a dreadful persecution came about. Emperor Diocletian had been well disposed toward the Christians, but his chief lieutenant, Galerius, persuaded him against them, and an edict was issued which resulted in the destruction of churches and scriptures; and slavery, degradation or death for all who refused to renounce their faith. The details of Marcellinus' death have been lost.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant three years and seven months)

30. St. Marcellus I

(May 27 or June 26, 308 - January 16, 309 A.D.)

A Roman, Marcellus' refusal to reconcile apostates made him unpopular with the laxer members of the church. He set out to provide new places of worship for the faithful, but was banished by emperor Maxentius, and died in exile.

31. St. Eusebius

(April 18, 309 or 310 - August 17, 309 or 310 A.D.)

Eusebius was a Greek doctor and priest. The recalcitrant apostates were sufficiently numerous to set up an anti-pope named Heraclius. Emperor Maxentius banished Eusebius to Sicily, where he died.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant between eleven months and one year and eleven months)

32. St. Melchiades (Miltiades)

(July 2, 311 - January 11, 314 A.D.)

Melchiades was an African priest. During his time Constantine became emperor of Rome, and was a great patron of Christianity. Constantine bestowed on Melchiades the Lateran Palace, thenceforth to be the place of residence of the pope. Melchiades convened a meeting of bishops, many of whom had suffered greatly under the persecutions, and they were honored by emperor Constantine.

33. St. Sylvester I (Silvester)

(January 31, 314 - December 31, 335 A.D.)

Sylvester was a Roman priest and when he succeeded to the office, he brought Peter's remains back to the Vatican Hill and, at emperor Constantine's wish, preserved them in a siiver (later bronze) shrine.

Constantine's father had become Augustus in the west, upon the abdication of emperors Diocletian and Maximian in 305. When his father died at York the following year, Constantine was proclaimed Augustus by his troops, and became officially recognized after the defeat of Severus in 307. In 312, on the eve of the Battle of Milvian Bridge, near Rome, Constantine saw a fiery cross in the heavens. The following night the emperor saw the emblem of Christ yet again. The next morning he gave orders for the armour of his troops to be marked with the symbol. The army of emperor Maxentius was beaten; the one way of retreat, the Milvian Bridge over the Tiber above Rome, gave way under the mass of fugitives and Maxentius was drowned. This was the beginning of the empire that established Christianity as the State Church.

Sylvester I (restores the Magi, of the Order of Zarathustra, to life)

One year after the occupation of Rome, Constantine issued the Edict of Milan to protect the Christians. They now had equal rights with other subjects. Constantine tried to reconcile all religious factions and champions of various beliefs. He gave the clergy of the Catholic Church the same privileges as the hitherto official priesthood. They were exempt from public service and taxation, and the jurisdiction of the bishop's court was recognized. Also the right to inherit was granted the Church. The Christian sanctuaries were protected by right of asylum, as were the temples of other religions. After five years of Constantine's rule, all the standards of the Roman army bore the monogram of Christ and the words: "In this sign, thou shalt conquer." Constantine drew up the first Christian military church service. On Sunday, the legionaires marched to the parade ground. At a given signal, Christians and non-Christians gazed upward with uplifted hands, and said the prayer that was composed by Constantine himself: Thee alone do we recognize as God; we acknowledge thee as king; and from thee do we implore help. From thee we have received victory and through thee we have won the mastery of our foes. We give thee thanks for the benefits we have received, and hope to thank thee for further benefits. To thee do we turn with our prayer of supplication. Grant to our emperor Constantine and his sons, beloved of God, a long and victorious life.

Emperor Constantine (280-337) conquers Rome for the Christians, and bishop Sylvester enters the Eternal City. He wears the simple tiara, similar to the head-dress of a high priest, with the Corona or lamina aurea, a golden fillet, which held the turban in place and left two strips of byssus linen hanging down the back.

In March, 321, the emperor enacted a law restricting work on Sundays; he ordered the venerable day of the Sun to be celebrated as a day of rest.

In 323, a struggle began between Constantine and his brother-in-law Licinius, emperor of the eastern half of the empire. Constantine was victorious and now ruled East and West under the labarum, the imperial standard upon which the initial letters of the name of Christ were worked in gold on a purple ground in Greek script.

Constantine asserted his power in the Church in the early summer of 325 when he called the first general council of the empire at Nicea. He presided over this assembly of 318 bishops, as well as representatives of politics and learning. The assembly was held among the glittering gold and gemwork of the central hall of the imperial palace. The emperor in his purple took his seat in a golden chair in the middle when invited to do so by the bishops. Much of his speech, which was given in Latin, and translated into Greek, alluded to his victories, and expressed quite clearly what he thought about disunity among the Christian fathers. He called himself the fellow-servant of the bishops, but was not hindered from guiding them with all the more vigor. The purpose of the conference at Nicea was to provide for the Church what it lacked, a creed and an administration, the unity of orthodoxy. The Nicene Creed was issued and the doctrine of the Church was adopted as a law of the empire.

Three hundred and eighteen bishops assembled on the emperor's command at the Imperial Council of Nicea in 325. (Relief from the Arch of Constantine.)

Constantine's mother, who had been the wife of Constantius, was later canonized as St. Helena. She carried out the restoration of historic spots in the Holy land, had earth brought to Rome from the historic spot on Mount Calvary, and brought to Rome part of a cross found in a water tank hewn out of rock. She built a chapel at each of the martyr's tombs.

The construction of a New Rome began in Byzantium on November 26, 328 A.D., with 40,000 workers being employed, at a cost of 60,000 pounds of gold. The project was carried out in a little more than seventeen months. In the 25th year of Constantine's reign, on May 11, 330 A.D., the new capital city of the Roman empire was inaugurated, and renamed Constantinople.

In 326 Constantine's wife, the empress Fausta, denounced his son by his first wife and also his nephew, as being traitors and planning to overthrow Constantine, who had them executed. Later he found that it had been a plot created by Fausta to clear the way to the throne for her own son. Fausta was put to death, and her palace was given to the bishop of Rome, together with the adjoining basilica, founded by the emperor, and henceforward it was the residence of the popes. Constantine sought absolution for causing the death of his family members. Though a leader of the Church for so many years, he had never been baptized, putting it off because of the theory that the later the better; because baptism washed out all the sins that had occurred before. He died on May 22, 337 A.D., shortly after his baptism.

Constantine gave a golden crown for the use of pope Sylvester and his successors, but Sylvester rejected it, contenting himself with a white Phrygian cap.

The Arian conflicts and divisions caused doctrinal debates and arguments during this time, named after Arius; who held that the Son was not truly divine, but First of all creatures, by whom the remainder had been created.

Sylvester died after a reign of almost twenty-two years.

34. St. Marcus (Mark)

(January or June 18, 336 - October 7, 336 A.D.)

Mark, a Roman, took no part in the Arian controversy. Two basilicas were built during his time; he reigned for less than one year.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

35. St. Julius I

(February 6, 337 - April 12, 352 A.D.)

Many other conflicts and issues threatened during this time. The Roman Julius held up as a preserver of orthodoxy and custodian of dogma. After the death of Constantine, emperor Constantius favored the Arians and frowned at Rome, and was courageously defied by Julius. In a letter from Julius to bishop Athanasius of Alexandria, Julius refused to allow that the decision of a local council must be final, and pointed out that the papacy was the final court of appeal.

(May 17, 352 - September 22-24, 366 A.D.)

Liberius was a Roman deacon. He was the first of the pontiffs not to be given sainthood. Immediately on election he was thrown into the Arian controversy, and when he failed to comply with Constantius' wishes to allow communion to Arians, he was exiled to Thrace, where he remained for two years. Meanwhile a Roman deacon, Felix, was introduced into his See and served as anti-pope. When brought back from exile, Liberius capitulated and signed documents in favor of the Arians, condemning bishop Athanasius, who had been ousted from Alexandria by his Arian opponents.

37. St. Damasus I

(October 1, 366 - December 11, 384 A.D.)

A Roman deacon of Spanish descent, Damasus was one of two rival candidates. The other was Ursinas, who was chosen first, by a minority of electors. Damasus was elected by a majority in the Lateran. Riots by Damasus' supporters cost some lives, and charges were brought against Damasus by the imperial court, including charges of instigation to murder. Bishop Damasus was acquitted, and he summoned and conducted a Roman synod with his own case on the agenda. Was the Roman bishop to be subject to the civil law, rather than an ecclesiastical tribunal? The emperor made no reply to the decisions of the synod; and Ursinus remained anti-pope until his banishment in 367.

Bishop Ambrose of Milan was an able statesman during this time who caused that Rome should again be looked to as having precedence over the other churches, as being the first See of Apostle Peter.

In 382, Jerome (Hieronymus) came to live in Rome at Damasus' invitation. He counseled and instructed the bishop and actually held much of the Lateran administration in his hands. Jerome was commissioned to produce an improved and reliable Latin version of the Bible, from which emerged the Vulgate (a term that dates from the twelfth century).

Damasus was particularly devoted to the martyrs whose bodies lay in the catacombs, and he enlarged the access to the crypts and passages where they were buried, and composed epitaphs in verse. He died at age eighty, and though he had wished to be buried among those in the cemetery of Callistus he was not; in the words of his inscription: I feared to offend the ashes of these holy ones.

38. St. Siricius

The election of Siricius, a Roman deacon, was a defeat for the ascetic faction led by Jerome. Jerome left Rome for the east and remained hostile to Siricius. Siricius issued a decree enjoining celibacy on the clergy in major orders.

It was his pontificate that witnessed the unprecedented spectacle of an erring emperor bowing before the anger of a prelate. Emperor Theodosias (Theodosius), when several of his officers were brutally murdered in Thessalonica, put the whole city to the sword. He admitted his guilt, sorrow, and unhappiness, but bishop Ambrose of Milan refused him admittance to the sacred premises, unless Theodosias made public confession of his sins. Thus he kneeled in front of one of his own subjects, the bishop of Milan, stripped of the emblems of his exalted rank, petitioning for clemency; and humbly accepting accusation, rebuke, and ecclesiastical justice.

(November 27, 399 - December 19, 401 A.D.)

Anastasius was a Roman deacon. He dispatched a series of letters condemning the doctrines taught by Origen, who was a third century philosopher and follower of Christ; he died in 254, as a result of political persecution and torture. Anastasius also wrote to an African ecclesiastical body against the Donatist conflicts and issues.

40. St. Innocent I

(December 22, 401 - March 12, 417 A.D.)

During the pontificate of Innocent I, who was an Italian born in Albano, Rome was besieged by Alaric and the Visigoths from the Baltic regions. Innocent was in Constantinople when he received word of this, in 410; and he went to Rome to meet the king of the Visigoths, who promised moderation, proclaiming himself a Christian; and the Visigoths did show unexpected reverence to the ecclesiastics and places of worship in Rome.

Innocent's decrees and letters were dispatched widely and were considered authoritative. It is said that he informed a certain bishop Exuperius that absolution must not be refused to anyone dying penitent.

St. John Chrysostum, patriarch of Constantinople, was a victim of the personal hostility of empress Eudoxia and the intrigues of Theophilus of Alexandria, and was unlawfully deposed and exiled. He had appealed to the pope, among other prelates. Though Innocent was powerless to help him, he refused communion to his persecutors, and later had his name returned to the diptychs -- the tablets from which names were read at Mass.

St. Innocent died in 417 and was buried at the Ursum pileatum.

41. St. Zosimus (Zozimus)

(March 18, 417 - December 26, 418 A.D.)

Zosimus, a Greek born in Mesarea, was mainly occupied during his brief reign with the heresy of Pelagianism, which denied the doctrinal belief of original sin.

42. St. Boniface I

(December 28 or 29, 418 - September 4, 422 A.D.)

An irregular election resulted in the assumption of the papal title by archdeacon Eulalius who was anti-pope to Boniface until March, 419, when he was ejected from the Basilica by the emperor's soldiers. Boniface was elected in a correctly held election four months after Eulalius. He defended papal jurisdiction over Illyricum against the patriarch of Constantinople. The right of appeal to Rome was denied in 419 by an African council. Boniface was a Roman priest before his accession.

43. St. Celestine I

(September 10, 422 - July 27, 432 A.D.)

Celestine, who was Italian, dispatched Palladius, the first missionary to Ireland. St. Augustine of Africa died during this pontificate, and was held up by Celestine as the supreme doctor of grace.

Augustine (Aurelius Augustinus) was an African; his father was a pagan, his mother a Christian from an early age. During his early life, he was a teacher of grammar, and then professor of rhetoric at Milan. According to his autobiography, Confessions, written at age forty-five: I reeled through life in lust and whoredom and squandered my strength. At a turning point in his life, he picked up the letters of Paul and read, Not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying; but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof. Augustine and his son were baptized in Milan in 387 by bishop Ambrose. He became a priest, first an assistant, then a preacher deputizing for the bishop at Hippo, Africa. Finally the aged bishop and the people chose him as the next bishop of Hippo. During this time, the world was in turmoil; Alaric in Rome, the Visigoths on the banks of the Garonna and in Provence, Goths in Greece, Vandals in south Spain, Swabians in north Spain, Burgundians across the Rhine. The Empire was breaking up. Augustine wrote much, and was an inspired thinker in a humble corner of Christendom. Many came to visit him, local African bishops, and high officials from Rome. Above all, my dear brethren, he wrote, We must love God and then our neighbor; for that is the principal commandment that has been given us. The sentence stood at the head of his monastic rule of life, which was read out once a week, to prevent its being forgotten — and this was the oldest Monastic rule in Christendom. Love for Augustine was so exemplified in Christ and the Apostles that he found that without love all is dust, but that with it all was perfection. Love he commended as a rule of conduct even for eating, for clothing, for speaking, and for all behavior. Man should give himself to everyone, quite consciously and from the heart. Within my soul is a light that no world contains, he wrote; Melodies that no time consumes, perfumes that no wind blows . . . my soul rejoices with a united love that is not succeeded by disgust. That is what I love . . . An injury to this love was for him an injury to God. From his cell in the episcopal cloister, Augustine's ideas penetrated to the center of the world -- from the little seaport of Hippo on the Mediterranean to Rome. And he entered into a labor which seemed to him necessary as soon as he became bishop. He translated the Latin Bible, based on the original Greek, or Septuagint, into the popular Italian provincial dialect; and called his version Italia or Italic, by which he meant a definite text which in the course of time influenced the Vulgate of his friend Jerome.

Augustine was bishop of Hippo for thirty-four years. For fourteen years he recorded the ideas which comprise his De Civitate Dei, a comprehensive survey of the City of the World and of the Church. Then came the invasion of the Vandal tribes, which created a panic through North Africa, with desolation and flight in every quarter. The aged and weak Augustine was not spared an encounter with the Vandals. A companion wrote: The man of God did not share the thoughts and feelings of the other concerning the raids and the havoc wrought by the pitiless enemy, but as he became more exalted in his thoughts or sunk more deeply in them, he foresaw therein great dangers, and even death, for souls. The siege of Hippo by the Vandals began in June, 430. Augustine, seventy-six years old, and the author of two hundred and thirty-two works, withdrew to his cell, overcome by sickness. He had the penitential psalms copied on parchment and fixed to the wall, so that he could read them from his bed; thus cleaned his heart and mind without disturbing the others. He had said, However innocent your life may have been, no Christian ought to venture to die in any other state than that of a penitent. On August 28, 430, he died, a year before the end of the siege.

Pope Celestine, in letters to the bishops of Vienne and Naibonne, admonished them that absolution should not be denied to truly repentant sinners on their deathbed; and he urged that the system of bishops being chosen merely by popular acclaim should be discontinued.

The Nestorian controversy also occurred during the time of Celestine I. Nestorius, a famous orator and bishop of Constantinople, held that Mary could not be called the Mother of God, being herself human; and that there were two Christs, one a God, born of the Father, and the other a man born of Mary. The Third Ecumenical Council was called at Ephesus, with the result of the deposing and banishment of Nestorius by emperor Theodosius II.

This Roman priest, as bishop of Rome, like his predecessors, held that Peter's authority passes to the bishop of Rome -- that the Holy Apostle Peter has handed down to his successors that which he received. Sixtus entirely rebuilt the Liberian Basilica and dedicated it to Mary to celebrate the formal definition of her title, Mother of God.

During this period, the emperor of Rome selected a deacon from the Roman clergy to be his envoy in the settlement of a dispute between the military commander and the civil magistrate of Gaul. This deacon was to be the next bishop of Rome, Leo I.

45. St. Leo I, the Great

(September 29, 440 - November 10, 461 A.D.)

Leo was Italian, born in Tuscia. He greatly raised the status of the episcopal See of Rome. The so-called dynasty of Peter, prince of the Church, was established with a solemn and inviolable decisiveness. In this way, the succession of bishops in Peter's chair at Rome became the genealogical table of the papacy.

In 451, an ecclesiastical council was held in Chalcedon, a suburb of Constantinople, attended by more than 350 bishops. The spirit of Leo was dominant, and under his guidance and influence a Confession of Faith was adopted and signed by every bishop, declaring Christ to have two natures in one individual. "We all unanimously teach that we confess one and the same Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, that he is perfect in his divinity and likewise perfect in his humanity, true God and true Man, with a soul endowed with reason . . ." The Copts, the Christian descendants of the ancient Egyptians, adhered to the doctrine of one spirit and nature in Christ. From this time onward they split from the Catholic Church.

Leo carried on prodigious correspondence in letters; examples of his writing are preserved in the form of ninety-six sermons and between one hundred forty-three and one hundred seventy-three letters.

In 452, Attila the Hun advanced on Rome. But with epidemics and famine plaguing his ranks, he agreed to meet with pope Leo, and the result was the withdrawal of the Huns from Italy.

A migrating tribe of Scandinavian origin, advanced from Hungary through Gaul and Spain into Africa. Their king, Genseric, banished the bishops from Africa to Corsica, where they were forced to fell trees for shipbuilding. The Vandals, as they were called, proceeded toward Italy, with the report preceding them of the intention to burn Rome. The emperor, Maximus, was ineffective, and no defense was offered; he was murdered by a soldier of his own bodyguard. When all temporal authority had vanished, Leo took control and heroically went out of the city to meet with Genseric. The city was not put to fire, but fourteen days of looting ensued, Leo himself was forced to surrender some of the valuable church utensils into the Vandals' hands. When the enemy left Rome, Leo held a solemn service of thanksgiving, but only a few of the faithful were present. He said; One is ashamed to say this, and yet one dares not be silent. You value the devils higher than the Apostles, and godless spectacles have a greater following than the blessed martyrs. Who has restored security to the city? Who has liberated it, preserved it from massacre? Circus games, or the solicitude of the saints? Turn to the Lord, acknowledge the miracles he has manifestly wrought on our behalf, and ascribe our liberty not, as the godless do, to the influence of the stars but to the ineffable mercy of the Almighty, who has softened the rage of the barbarians.

Leo was the first bishop since Peter to be interred in the Atrium of Peter's basilica built by Constantine.

46. St. Hilarius (Hilary, Hilarus)

(November 19, 461 - February 29, 468 A.D.)

One of Leo's trusted aides, Hilarius, who was Sardinian, succeeded to the papacy. Ecclesiastical definition and discipline occupied a great deal of his energies, particularly in Spain and Gaul. He added several new churches and oratories, also libraries, public baths, and other municipal buildings.

47. St. Simplicius

(March 3, 468 - March 10, 483 A.D.)

Simplicius, an Italian born in Tivoli, witnessed the events that marked the ending of the Western Roman Empire, with the dispossession of emperor Romulus Augustulus by Odoacer, the Rugian chief.

Simplicius pronounced null and void any alienation of Church property by a future pope to reward those who had voted for his election.

48. St. Felix II (III)

(March 13, 483 - March 1, 492 A.D.)

A Roman, Felix was married before ordination; his three children died during his pontificate. He was the first bishop of Rome who designated his successor. Felix II wrote to emperor Zeno of Byzantium: Supreme power has been entrusted to you over world concerns, but it is your duty to leave ecclesiastical matters in the hands of those whom God has appointed to control them. You must leave the Church free to follow her own laws.

49. St. Gelasius I

(March 1, 492 - November 21, 496 A.D.)

African by birth, but a member of the Roman clergy from his youth, Gelasius thrived in controversy, and canon law was gained from his decrees. He declared that the world is ruled by the emperor and the priests, but that the latter are more important since they will have to give an account even for kings in the day of judgement, and that the emperor must submit to prelates in divine matters.

During Gelasius' time, revenues were regulated and property divided; and he became renowned as a builder of asylums and patron of the poor. (An account book survives detailing the revenues from all church properties, the rentals in gold and silver, payable four times a year; on the feasts of Peter, Paul, and Andrew, and on the pope's birthday.) Monks were his favorite companions and his private life was one of austerity, penance, and prayer.

(November 24, 496 - November 19, 498 A.D.)

Anastasius was a Roman. He adopted a more conciliatory attitude toward Constantinople. He was charged with doctrinal laxity after receiving into communion Photinus, deacon and envoy of bishop Andrew of Thessalonica, who had been denied communion because of his teachings. During this pontificate the Frankish king, Clovis, was converted to Catholicism.

51. St. Symmachus

(November 22, 498 - July 19, 514 A.D.)

Symmachus was Sardinian. On the same day he was consecrated in the Lateran Basilica, anti-pope Laurentius (Lawrence), a Roman by birth, was consecrated bishop of Rome in Santa Maria Maggiore (Saint Mary Major).

In 501 Symmachus fixed the Easter festival at March 25, instead of April 22. Some of the clergy protested and made serious allegations against the pope: that he was given to criminal indulgence with women, was selfish, sold clerical offices to the highest bidder, and squandered church property. There was strife and bloodshed between the rival parties for years. The division reached its height when anti-pope Laurentius took up residence in the Lateran. Symmachus was a prisoner in St. Peter's, where he had taken asylum. Finally king Theodoric gave definitive recognition of Symmachus, and Laurentius submitted and received the See of Nocera.

For the first time the assertion was made that the office of Peter's successor transcends his person. Deacon Ennodius, secretary to Symmachus, in 503 published a written defense to the incriminations, stating that in the case of the bishop of Rome, the innocence and sanctity inherited from Peter must be taken for granted. The first episcopal See was not subject to any outsider's judgement.

Finally in peaceful possession of his See, Symmachus restored or ornamented several churches, and built others. He was generous with alms for exiled African bishops.

52. St. Hormisdas

(July 20, 514 - August 6, 523 A.D.)

Hormisdas was of Roman nobility born in Frusino. His father's name was Justus, but his name is interesting in that it is a Persian name meaning servant of Ahura Mazda, the Wise Lord of the Zoroastrians.

As a deacon, Hormisdas played an active part in reconciling the partisans of Symmachus and Laurentius, which reconciliation was completed while he was pope.

Hormisdas supervised a reorganization of the Spanish church; and his last days were gladdened by the news that the Vandal persecution of the church in Africa had been ended by the accession of king Thrasamund.

His epitaph praises Hormisdas for bringing the Roman division to an end and reconciling the Greeks.

53. St. John I

(August 13, 523 - May 18, 526 A.D.)

An Italian born in Tuscia or Populonia, his reign was two years, nine months. He came to Rome when young, and was archdeacon when elected pope.

Pope John was ordered by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, with threat of force, to undertake an embassy to Constantinople to ask for restitution of the Arian churches and permission for Arians converted under imperial pressure to return to their former creed. Theodoric was an Arian, a Goth, and wanted to help the Arian Goths in the East. John was received fifteen miles out of the city with parades and processions. At Easter Mass, the pope was given the highest place of honor at the emperor Justin's right hand. The pope celebrated Mass according to Roman rite, in Latin, and carried out the coronation ceremony then customary on such solemn occasions. The emperor took off his crown, and John replaced it on his head. Outside, the populace rejoiced at the alliance of their emperor with the bishop of Rome. The Catholics were enthusiastic; the Arians hoped for escape from their predicament. But the results of the negotiations were meagre. Theodoric was angry when the bishop of Rome returned without a basic agreement, and threw the pope and his retinue, bishops and emissaries, into prison. Being old and infirm, John was unable to survive such adversity and died after a few days. He is honored as a martyr.

On the death of John I, Theodoric at first had refused to allow the See of Peter to be filled. Finally he chose Felix III or IV, who was an Italian, and a member of the faction favorable to the Goths. Theodoric summoned the Goth and Arian bishops under his chairmanship. A summons was issued to all Christians demanding that they accept the Arian creed in three days. There were to be Arian churches everywhere. Two hundred thousand Goths were held in readiness for the execution of these measures. On the very day the edict was to come into force, August 30, 526, king Theodoric died. For twenty years following this, Goths and Byzantines fought for control of Italy and Rome.

Theodoric's successor, the minor Athalaric and his regent mother, issued a Royal Edict that ecclesiastical courts were to be the sole judges of clerical conduct, even when an erring churchman violated the ordinary civil or criminal codes.

As Felix approached his death, he proclaimed his successor, archdeacon Boniface II.

(September 22, 530 - October 17, 532 A.D.)

Boniface II was a Goth from Rome, son of a German; and was chosen as successor by Felix before his death. The majority of the Roman clergy refused to recognize the choice and elected Dioscuros, who was anti-pope to Boniface until his death less than a month later. Boniface in full synod called for a constitution to be formed which would grant him right to select a successor. Such a storm of protest greeted this announcement that another synod was called and the constitution which he had so enthusiastically sponsored was burned publicly by the pope himself. When he died, the man he named as his successor, Vigilius, was not elected.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant two and one-half months)

(January 2, 533 - May 8, 535 A.D.)

After a vacancy of two and one-half months and an outbreak of disorder which included riots, and attempts to buy the papacy, Mercurius was elected, and was the first pope to change his name on election, to John II. This changing of name did not occur again until John XII (955-964 A.D.), though after that time it became the custom. John II passed a severe decree against simony, the selling and buying of holy things.

57. St. Agapetus I (Agapitus)

(May 13, 535 - April 22, 536 A.D.)

A Roman archpriest, Agapetus was the first pope to be officially proclaimed papa, instead of simply episcopus. He was the second pope to visit Constantinople and he did it, like the first, John I, at the request of the king of Italy, who at this time was Theodahad. Emperor Justinian was a threat to Goth king Theodahad, therefore his request to Agapetus to go to Constantinople.

Agapetus did not persuade Justinian to give up his dream of a united empire, however he accomplished other purposes. The Byzantine patriarchate was held by Anthimos, a man of little grace and no popularity, who had been put in his place by empress Theodora. At request of the disturbed clergy, Agapetus ordered Anthimos to quit his seat; the empress convinced Justinian that this was an affront to imperial commands and privileges. Justinian threatened Agapetus with banishment, but the pontiff received his words with sadness and refused to be awed by them. He said, I came to gaze upon a Christian emperor Justinian. In his place I find a Diocletian whose threats, however, terrify me not. Such courage from an aged and unarmed man cooled Justinian's wrath and finally he agreed that Anthimos be deposed. Agapetus consecrated to the Byzantine See a rightful occupant. However the pope died shortly after, and his remains were conveyed back to Rome.

58. St. Silverius, Martyr

(June 1 or 8, 536 - banished March 11, died December 2, 537 A.D.)

The son of previous pope Hormisdas, Silverius was born in Campania or Frusino, and his election was imposed by the Gothic king Theodahad. Meanwhile Justinian's army had taken Rome and empress Theodora used the opportunity to accuse Silverius of treasonous communication with the Goths; had him deposed and exiled to the island of Ponza, where he soon perished. Theodora's choice, Vigilius, was then enthroned.

59. Vigilius

(March 29, 537 - June 7, 555 A.D.)

The pontificate of Vigilius was unquiet, irresolute, and factious. He issued letters of orthodox policy which countered the wishes of Justinian. He was seized and carried to Constantinople, where he capitulated in doctrinal debate in the emperor's presence. He was detained seven years in Constantinople. Vigilius' letters show extreme vacillation and placation of the various powers of the time. In spring of 555 he was permitted to leave Constantinople, but died on the way to Rome, at Syracuse, on June 7, 555.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant ten months)

(April 16, 556 - March 4, 561 A.D.)

Pelagius had been sent to Constantinople by Agapetus as his nuncio (official representative of the pope at a foreign court). He remained there many years, though he was in Rome in December, 540, when the Gothic king Totila captured and pillaged the city; and as acting head of the Roman clergy he administered relief to many. Pelagius was Justinian's choice for Vigilius' successor. His consecration was greeted by indignation because of the conciliatory attitude he adopted in negotiating with Justinian. But his talents in preventing and healing the conflicts and divisions helped to dispel the antagonism. As a result of the conflict between Justinian's troops and the Goths, Italy was laid waste, and the people reduced to poverty. Pelagius, who came from a noble and rich Roman family, not only donated his entire personal fortune, but performed other acts of charity. He bore the title, "Father of the poor and of his country," when he died in 561.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

61. John III

(July 17, 561 - July 13, 574 A.D.)

Pope John was consecrated after a four month delay due to the need for imperial confirmation, as Rome was politically part of the Byzantine empire. He ordered restoration to their Sees of Gallic bishops deposed for criminal behavior; some years later they were once more condemned and deposed. This was a turbulent and war-torn period and the part played by the pontiff is described on an inscription which still existed in the fifteenth century: In the midst of straits he knew how to be bountiful, and feared not to be crushed by a tumbling world.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant ten months)

62. Benedict I

(June 2, 574 or 575 - July 30, 579 A.D.)

Nearly a year went by before the imperial confirmation arrived to sanction the installation of Benedict I. War again was ravaging Italy, and the Lombards, another body of Germanic invaders, were attacking that part of Italy that still remained in imperial hands. At the time of Benedict's death, the Lombard duke of Spoleto was besieging Rome.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

63. Pelagius II

(November 26, 579 - February 7, 590 A.D.)

Pelagius was a Goth, born in Rome. He did not wait for the imperial confirmation, but was consecrated and installed without it. The responsibility of temporal affairs of the countryside around Rome was being forced on the papacy. Pelagius appealed to Constantinople, and also to the Franks. He sent deacon Gregory (who would be his successor) to Constantinople, and Gregory finally persuaded the emperor, now Maurice, to come to aid with the dispatch of a relief expedition. Pelagius also strove to preserve and improve hierarchial harmony, and when certain bishops threatened to withdraw into one of the several divisions, he wrote that they were doing so for the sake of superfluous question.

A temporary truce was finally made with the Lombards, but pestilence followed, and Pelagius succumbed to the bubonic plague.

64. St. Gregory I, the Great

(September 3, 590 - March 12/13, 604 A.D.)

Gregory was the first pope to come from the Benedictine Order, an order which has produced 49 popes, 200 cardinals, 1,600 archbishops, 4,000 bishops, 15,700 abbots and innumerable scholars and writers. More insight into the Benedictines is necessary, before their impact on St. Gregory can be fully understood. Benedict was the son of a Nursia nobleman, and with the corruption in Rome in the late fifth century, he broke off his education and lived for three years as an anchorite in a cave near Subiaco, in the Sabine hills. Afterward, Benedict was chosen to be abbot of a monastic community which twice tried to poison him in order to be rid of a strict superior. At Subiaco, Benedict established twelve little monasteries, each consisting of twelve monks, led by a superior. When again beset by enemies, he moved to Monte Cassino, halfway between Rome and Naples. The remains of a temple of Jupiter served as a foundation for the monastic settlement. One of the towers of the fortress became home for Benedict, from where he could see the ploughed fields, orchards, and kitchen gardens of the monastery.

Benedict from time to time had visions, in which he saw other men and other ages. After such visions his friends often found him weeping in his cell. One morning he rose earlier than his brethren, and while gazing out the window, suddenly saw light pouring from above, dispelling the darkness of night and shining so brilliantly that this light streaming into the darkness surpassed the light of day. In this vision the whole world was brought before his eyes in a single sun-ray. Yet normally his manner was quiet, sober, and composed. The Benedictine motto was "Prayer and Work." The monastery was self-supporting, and even supplied the neighboring town with provisions.

Rome had not greatly concerned itself with the foundation of Monte Cassino and its progress. Benedict held no ecclesiastical office. He received his spiritual authority from God directly. The Benedictine vow comprised the three promises of stability (of place), virtuous monastic conduct, and obedience. Above all, the novice was required to renounce his self-will, so as to be able to bear the glorious and heroic arms of obedience; he had to do his duty without hesitation, as if the order came from God. It was Benedict's practice to discourage new arrivals, and his monastic rule read, "If a man come desirous of entering the monastic life, entrance is not to be granted easily, but rather one should act in accordance with the words of the Apostle: 'Try the spirits if they be of God.'" Avoid pride, Benedict said, hate self-will, flee from arrogance of any kind. The good that you find in yourselves, ascribe to God, not to yourselves. But always recognize evil as your own work and lay it to your own account.

Benedict's concern was for the Soul of a man, for that which cannot be seen. His aim was to awaken it, teach it, shape it. It was with this in view that he had founded Monte Cassino. Here the monk was to settle for life in his monastic family. The abbot imposed a permanent obligation in commanding the novice never to leave the monastic life. The local stability of life matched the permanence of man in God. Stability of place was the basis for the cultivation of the land as it was of morality and learning. All that the monks did was in God's service, manual labor as well as mental and spiritual. So they did it with an inner joyfulness, resulting in an outward cheerful composure. Benedict's description of an ideal abbot is as follows: He must be chaste, sober, and merciful, ever preferring mercy to justice, that he himself may obtain mercy. Let him hate sin and love the brethren. And even in his corrections, let him act with prudence, and not go too far, lest while he seeketh too eagerly to scrape off the rust, the vessel be broken . . . taking, then such testimonies as are borne by these and the like words to discretion, the mother of virtues, let him so temper all things, that the strong may have something to strive after, and the weak nothing at which to take alarm.

The monastic Rule is the only written document that Benedict left. Just as everything that Benedict did was clear and comprehensible, so was the working of his Rule. At the end of the Rule he stated that he had put it into writing so that by observing it in the monasteries we can develop certain moral worthiness and the beginnings of a virtuous monastic life.

Benedict's gift of prophecy enabled him to announce the day of his departure from the world. Six days previously he ordered his grave to be dug, so that he might contemplate it. Then he was suddenly seized by a wasting fever. When he felt the end to be near, on 21st March, 547, he told his disciples to carry him into the church. There he asked for the viaticum (final communion before death). Holding his enfeebled body upright, with hands raised to heaven, he continued praying until the breath left his body.

Now, pope Gregory was also appointed prefect of Rome, the highest civil post. He had received thorough training as a civil servant, and had distinguished himself as a jurist, politician and diplomat. Profoundly moved by his father's death, he decided to go into a monastery, away from the affairs, ambitions and intrigues of the world in which one strove to hide the heart in cunning wiles and conceal meaning with words. He handed over the whole of his large fortune to the monastery; his Sicilian properties alone provided for the establishment of six monasteries.

Gregory was born at about the same time as Benedict wrote his Rule for Monks. When he withdrew to the monastery, it was Benedict's Rule he assumed. Among Gregory's voluminous writings were his Dialogues; the second volume of four was devoted to Benedict's life and his miracles.

Pope Benedict I summoned Gregory from the cloister, and obedience forced Gregory to comply. In 577, he was chosen one of the youngest of the seven deacons who directed the ecclesiastical divisions of the metropolis. The next pope, Pelagius II, appointed him nuncio in Constantinople, an important office. Though he never learned Greek, he made many friends among the members of the imperial family and the court. But while a diplomat in Constantinople, Gregory took with him some brethren from St. Andrew's monastery, "so that moved by their example, I might be held, as by the chain of an anchor, to the firm land of prayer, while buffeted with the ceaseless waves of worldly business." It was to these monks that he delivered the commentaries on the Book of Job which grew into the huge work, the Moralia. When he returned to Rome, he again retired to the cloister there, of which the pope had made him abbot in 585.

And when Pelagius II succumbed to the plague, Gregory was chosen to succeed him. However, he could not be confirmed until approval was received from the emperor in Constantinople, a process which took seven months. Rome at this time showed the ravages of the invasion of the Lombard barbarians, along with floods and pestilence. Gregory was moved by all the sufferings of the people, and he arranged for a great procession of intercession, in which the clerics from seven different churches and their congregations assembled in the great church of Santa Maria for prayer and penitence; then four days later, the procession to the church of St. Peter, all clad in black and veiled as a sign of mourning, with Gregory at the head. When the confirmation arrived from Byzantine emperor Maurice, Gregory tried to flee away. Finally, they discovered his hiding place and escorted him according to ancient custom to the tomb of the Apostle Peter, where he made his confession of faith, and was consecrated bishop of Rome.

Within a few months of his election, his reflections bore fruit in the most personal of all his books, The Pastoral Care. In this work he describes the way in which one should approach this highest office; how, having reached it, one ought to live; how, living rightly, one should teach others; how, teaching the truth, one should daily reflect on one's own weakness. This became one of the favorite handbooks of the Middle Ages.

One of Gregory's first acts was to replace with clerics and monks the lay officials serving the papal apartments. His household was to serve as a model for the Christian way of life. At this time the Visigoth king of Spain, Reccared, was converted to Christianity, and in 612 this king issued an edict forcing the Jews to choose between baptism and emigration. Time after time Gregory intervened to prevent forcible conversion of the Children of Israel.

A large part of the functions of civil administration in this period had fallen on the shoulders of the pope. This extensive work of organized alms-giving was financed in part by donations, but largely from the revenues of Church property. The Roman Church was the richest landowner in Italy. Gregory tightened up the administration of these lands and placed it in the hands of carefully chosen agents. Many of his letters are detailed instructions to his agents in charge of Church possessions, including instructions on the most profitable way of making use of cattle, and the sale of surplus agricultural implements. He resolutely refused to let the Church reap the profits of oppression, took every possible precaution against the exploitation of the peasants, and dealt personally with every complaint. When he heard that a beggar had starved to death in Rome, he shut himself up for three days, and did not say Mass, but examined his conscience as a sinner.

The Roman See was given primacy of honor and its faith was regarded as the norm for Christendom; but this did not prevent emperors, especially Justinian, from legislating for the Church or taking an active interest in the appointment of its higher personnel. No pope of the time would have questioned this state of affairs, and Gregory was no exception. When conflict arose, Gregory's principle was to obey the emperor as a loyal subject and remonstrate with him when he thought his decision transgressed the established law.

When the bishop of Constantinople gave himself the title of "universal bishop," Gregory protested, and assumed for himself the title of servus servorum Dei, servant of the servants of God, which title is the pope's to this day.

Six years after his enthronement, Gregory sent prior Augustine and forty monks from the Benedictine monastery in Rome to convert the Anglo-Saxons. He obtained letters of recommendation for them from the emperor and announced their coming to the bishops of Marseille, Arles, Lyons, and Tours. He engaged interpreters and gave the mission every possible assistance. However, Augustine returned to Rome with no success to report and asked to be released from his mission. Gregory wrote to the monks: It would have been better, my beloved sons, never to start a good work than to give it up once started, so you must carry out with the utmost zeal the good work which you have begun. Neither difficulties of travel nor the talk of censorious people must deter you. Complete with energy and enthusiasm the mission on which God has sent you. For you know that your labors will be followed by the glory of eternal reward. A year later king Aella and ten thousand of his subjects were baptized. Two sees, each with two bishoprics, were set up at London and York respectively. Augustine became archbishop, with his seat at Canterbury. Gregory left Anglo-Saxon customs and forms of worship alone, to change by themselves through the influence of the Christian world.

Gregory worked also against poverty of the soul. The priest must set an example, and guard carefully against impure motives. He said, Moses trembled when the Lord admonished him, yet every weakling chases after offices of greater responsibility.

Gregory's accomplishments are even more when considered with the chronic sickness with which he was afflicted, a stomach complaint which at one time kept him in bed for nearly two years. He also suffered from gout.

Gregory also made a collection of ancient and modern songs for church use, and heard them by teaching the little children to sing; for he loved children, and was loved of them. From such works emerged the liturgical Mass book for antiphonal singing. He wrote four books about the cure of souls, a lengthy commentary on Job in thirty-five sections, and a large collection of stories of the Saints, and miracles.

It is said, that he was taken up March 12, 604, to be resurrected into his favorite place, the land of Arabia, near the ancient shrine of Abraham; and his great divine mission was to begin there. And the Roman See remained vacant for six months.

We have now learned the difference between a pope (or bishop of Rome) and a prophet of the Lord. The pope is called the vicar of Christ and the servant of the servants of Christ; appointed of Christ, the prince of the Apostles; to occupy the seat or throne of St. Peter, who was given the keys to bind and loosen whatsoever in earth, that it may be bound and loosened in heaven. And the pope is the head of the temporal church of Christ, built upon politics and imperfections to give it continuity. Moreover, the pope is usually of Hellenistic or Heretic background, and a fisher of men. A prophet, on the other hand, is called a spokesman of Christ, and the servant of Christ; appointed of Christ the Son of God, to occupy the seat of the head of earthly archangels. And he is the head of all the Melchizedek (Spiritual) and Aaronic (temporal) priesthoods of God; and the head of the church of the Saints. A prophet's church is not built upon politics or imperfections, but upon truths and perfections; for the pursuit of truth, perfections, and excellence is essential for the Spiritual Church of Christ and for the human Soul. Moreover, a prophet is usually not of Hellenistic or Aryan background, but of Jewish or Shemitic background.

And now returning to the Persians and the Arabians in the East, let us begin from where we left off. The genealogy of the Arshak (Arsha or Arsaces) kings, the Parthians, until the time of Phraates IV, circa 37 to 2 B.C., has already been provided. These descendants of Artaxerxes II of the Achaemenid kings of Persia continued until about 227 A.D. Then the Sasanian kings took over, and continued to rule until the reign of Yazdagird III (c.632 - 651 A.D.). Then began the rise of Islam; and eventually the entire civilized world came under the sway of the zealous new nation of Islam, as it was prophecied by Daniel the prophet some twelve hundred years before.

During the rule of the Parthians, great changes took place in Iran, in realms of art, religion and literature; which left lasting imprints on people's minds. This was a period of transition from an ancient era to medieval era, which was as different as the early Parthians were from the later. It was these Parthians that established the canon of the religion of Zarathustra (or Zoroaster), which was passed on to the Sasanians, and down to the present day. And the Parthian bards sang to their nobles about the heroes, or Pahlavans, of their national epic. Although the Parthian rule is reckoned to be 284 years, from Arshak to Tridates III, the government continued under a line other than that of Arshak, until about 227 A.D.

The Sasanian empire of Persia began with Sasan, a shepherd of king Papak, who ruled the city of Istakhr near Persepolis. Sasan was a descendant of the Achaemenids, but he kept this secret until Papak had a dream which was interpreted that the son of Sasan would one day rule the world. So Papak gave his daughter to Sasan; and from this union Ardashir was born. And more honor was bestowed upon Papak the king when he was made director of the Anahita shrine at Istakhr. Afterwards, while he and his sons were busy with the affairs of state, they retained their dignity as the head of the temple. Papak had a small court with no bureaucratic tradition. After Ardashir became king of kings of Iran, he inherited the feudal organization of the Parthians. Ardashir reinstated the old Persian empire with its various institutions, as well as the religion of Zarathustra, which was eclipsed under the Greeks and the Parthians. The rest of the acts of the Sasanian kings, are they not recorded in the secular histories?

The Magi, or the Wise Men, known as the Magicians, (likened to the modern Parsees of India) were the telestial priesthood of the cult of the worshippers of Ahura Mazda, the Wise Lord of Truth and Light. The Magi had a great influence upon the world, because they were closest to the people. They observed the ancient laws of the Aryans, performed rituals and ceremonies of the ancient Aryan priesthood, ministered to the grassroots of the civilized world; and were a vital part in the scheme of things of the eternal kingdom of God, by ministering to the future sons and daughters of God.

Although Mithra was worshipped before the time of Zoroaster or Zarathustra, by the time of the Parthians the cult of Mithra (Mithras), meaning Friendship (friend) or Covenant (contract), was well-established; which cult began after the passing away of Zarathustra or Zoroaster of the Spitamas. And this was the position of Zarathustra; the position of Archangel Mithra, head of the Worshipful Ones or Yazatas, in the eternal Kingdom of God. And Mithra was worshipped by the Magi, along with Anahita and Varuna, as one of their gods, both by the Persians and by the Indians of Ind. And the cult of the Magi continued in performing its divine functions assigned to them by the Kingdom; most important being seeing to the birth of all divine children of God; to bless and prepare them in the Spiritual matters, and much more. Jesus son of Mary, after he was created and raised up as Jesus the Melchizedek Priest, or Christ, was worshipped as Mithras by the Romans, a few centuries later; for Jesus was also a divinely conceived child, as was Mithra or Zoroaster. Mithra was usually depicted with a halo of sun around his head.

It is said that the birth of Mithra or Mithras was from the cosmic egg, the womb of the priesthood of God. This god of the Magi holds the flaming torch to symbolize light entering the world, and a two-edged sword, or dagger to slay the bull, the double-minded Druj. He is surrounded by the signs of the zodiac to symbolize the cosmic significance of his birth. Two paintings from a temple of Mithras or Zoroaster at Dura on the Euphrates are shown below.

Mithras or Zarathustra, hunting the forces of evil.

Mithras or Zarathustra, after his ordination at the age of thirty.

And the Magi priests believed and preached that Mithras' birth comes from the Rock, attended by the shepherds with their flock; and that Mithra shoots an arrow into the Rock, and produces life-giving waters. Mithra is God of light, defender of truth, and enemy of the powers of darkness. And in the Mithraic communion meal, the worshippers wearing the masks of their grades, partook of the sacrament from the four loaves, each bearing the sign of the cross; they broke the bread to symbolize the communion with the Son (Sun). This was usually done in a cave, which symbolized the cosmos. The origins of this priesthood are found in Egypt.

The initiates of the cult of Mithra were divided into seven grades of ascending order. Each grade symbolized the ascent of the soul through the heavens. The symbol of the first grade was that of the raven, and the initiate wore a raven's mask. The mask of the second grade was that of the bride, to symbolize that he is wedded to the cult; he wore a short yellow tunic with red bands and was thought to stand under the protection of Venus.

The third grade was that of the soldier; the initiate knelt naked and blindfolded; then a crown was offered to him on a sword, which he rejected, having no crown but Mithra. He wore the mask of the warrior to symbolize the knowledge of God and the fight in defence of truth.

The fourth grade was that of the lion; and was the first of the four higher grades. He wore an animal mask at some communion meals, and at others red tunics with purple stripes. Now having entered the grade of fire, he was able to attend the sacred altar flame. Upon entry to the grade of lion and into the sixth grade the initiate was purified with honey, and various masks representing many symbols were used. The seventh grade was that of the father or the elder, the earthly representative of Mithra. He took the god's place at the communion meal, and was responsible for the discipline and teaching of the faithful; his symbols included ring and staff, a Persian cap, and a sickle.

To the Buddhist of India, Mithra or Mitra was known as Maitreya, a friendly and gentle Buddha, a Saoshyant or Savior, a Messiah-like buddha, which is to come. Some called Mitra the sun god of the day; and Varuna was associated with night and waters, the all-embracer and bearer of the moral order. But in Persia, Rome and other regions, Mithra (or Mithras) was the most important of the terrestrial gods, or the Worshipful Ones, the Yazatas; in India Varuna was given a higher status in their hierarchy of gods. Mithra-Varuna (representing the sun and moon) were invoked together. Together they mounted their shining chariot; and they dwelt in a golden mansion which had a thousand pillars and a thousand doors. And in this great palace, which was built by the Creator, there is no night or darkness, no wind, hot or cold, no disease, or corruption produced by the demon gods. Mithra is said to ride forth in his chariot pulled by four immortal white horses or reindeer, shod in gold and silver. He is the first God to approach across the Hara, in front of the immortal swift-horsed Sun; he is the first to seize the gold-colored mountain tops; from there he surveys the land of the faithful. Both Mithra and Varuna are described as cosmic rulers upholding order in the world of gods and men, for Covenant or Contract and True Speech are the basis of all ordered life in the heavens above, the earth below and all across. Through adherence to covenant and true speech, mankind is united and falsehood overcome; and by faithful observance of ritual duties, the sun is made to shine and rain to fall. Mithra is the one who preserves Order and Truth; he attacks and defeats the demon of Lie. It is Mithra who judges when the contract or covenant concerning the various periods of world history is completed. Moreover, in his concern for Truth he judges the soul at death with Sraosha and Rashnu; and brandishes his mace over hell three times daily, so that the demons do not inflict greater punishment to sinners than they deserve. Mithra was prayed to by the Persian soldiers at the manes of their horses; and before going into battle, the Persian king with his generals and counsellors passed around the ranks of the armed men, praying to the Sun, Mithra, and the Sacred Fire. Romans also prayed to him (Mithras) in the same manner. By the time of the Christian Era, the cult of Maitreya Buddha, Savior or Saoshyant, a Messiahlike Buddha which was to come, was already widespread among all Buddhist sects of India. And with the coming of Christ Jesus, all was combined into one, and Christianity became the religion of all different people with the same common purpose and ideals of salvation and enlightenment; and it shall remain so until the Second Coming of Christ in the fulness of time.

MOHAMMED THE APOSTLE OF THE LORD (ALLAH); AND THE BEGINNING OF ISLAM

Now, let us acquire some background into the land of Arabia; that we may fully understand the mission of the Arabian prophet and emperor Mohammed, meaning "the Praised One;" in a mixed culture of Jews, Christians, pagan Arabs, and patriarchal Abrahamites. It was into this Abrahamite branch of the human family was born the chosen one of the Lord, his anointed one.

Mohammed was chosen out of the descendants of Abraham, through his firstborn son Ishmael. He was not only to be the Apostle, a messenger, or the One who is sent forth, of the One God (Allah in Arabic; Eloh in Hebrew), but Mohammed was also chosen to fulfill the prophecy of Daniel concerning the Stone which was cut without hands, which was to smite the Kingdom upon its feet of iron and clay, and to break them into pieces. And the Stone was to become a great mountain, even to fill the whole earth. The dwellers of Mecca or Becca, where the black meteorite (stone cut without hands or the venerated Black Stone) is buried, had been the most holy shrine of all the Arabs and Hebrews before the nation of Israel was organized and established. The Hebrews and Arabs came to the House of Allah or Eloh, the Kaaba, for pilgrimage; here also are preserved the footprints of Abraham. Many descendants of Moses, the Al-Levi, the Ephraimites, and Ishmaelites dwelt round about the cities of Mecca and Medina. These, although accepting Moses as their prophet, and Allah or Eloh as their One God, were now left helpless, for the Kingdom had moved to Rome; only the Patriarchal government of Israel remained in Palestine and Arabia. And it was to Rome that all the Arabian nobility went to acquire knowledge and higher education. Yet these Arabians and Hebrews were collectively referred to as the children of Israel, for they claimed their descent from Jacob, and intermarriages among them were common; and matrimonial alliances were encouraged to unite different tribes for political, economic, or spiritual purposes.

Although the Jews and Christians were superior to the Abrahamites, for they had their scriptures, the Abrahamites were basically seeing and hearing people, with keen visual and perceptual abilities, truly people of the world. These Arabs preferred to live the natural man, or the lower self of man, meaning, to abide in Adam, for they were under the curse of Adam, and were inheritors of the sins of their fathers. The Jews and Christians, however, were people of the Book, and were basically readers and doers of the law. These preferred not the ways of the world, but of God; and while the Christians sought the terrestrial glory, and Jews the Celestial, their Arabian brethren preferred telestial existence. It was for these reasons that a covenant people under the banner and laws of Islam were brought into existence, not only to fulfill the prophecies of Daniel, but also because the people of Arabia and Palestine were like sheep and goats gone astray, without a shepherd, and without a fold. Moreover, many Jews and Christians waited impatiently for the Comforter to come, which Jesus had promised to send; but they understood him not, for the Comforter or the Holy Spirit of Truth was already sent forth by the Father, when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the day of Pentecost, 33 A.D., upon some one hundred and twenty disciples of Jesus. Yet nearly six hundred years had passed away since the time of Jesus; and Jews, Christians, and Abrahamites of Arabia and Palestine waited impatiently for another prophet to emerge and guide their way. Jews waited for the prophecies of Daniel to be fulfilled; the Christians waited for the Comforter which was promised by Jesus; and the Abrahamites waited for the day when the true worship of the God of Abraham would once again be restored. It was these patriarchal Arabians who sought the ancient religion of Abraham; such were known as the Hunafa (plural of Hanif, meaning those who have turned away from false worship and religion and held the way of the truth to be the right conduct). To these belonged Mohammed, the future prophet of the nation of Al-Islam, the religion of Surrender to God's will, purposes, and designs.

The country of Arabia is a large tract of land, east of the Red Sea. It is bounded on the north by the Syrian Desert, on the east by the Persian Gulf; on the south by the Indian Ocean, and on the west by the Red Sea. This vast region, about twice the size of France at the height of its worldly greatness, was divided into several provinces. To the north lies the hilly portion, which from ancient times was inhabited by the Edomites and the Midianites, the descendants of Esau, the twin brother of Jacob, and the descendants of Abraham's son Midian by his concubine Keturah. Below it is the region of Hijaz (or Hejaz), with its city of Medina (or Modena), known as Yathrib in ancient times. Hijaz stretches from north to south between the Red Sea and the chain of mountains which runs down from the Isthmus of Suez to the Gulf of Aden (Eden). This vast tract of land has no navigable rivers; the rivulets which are found here and there make the soil fertile. The rainfall is scanty, and the country generally arid and sterile, except where enough drinking water is found; but wherever water is found, fertility is remarkable.

By the middle of the sixth century A.D., there were three major towns in northern Arabia. All three were located in the mountainous region called the Hijaz, bordered by the Red Sea on the west and the great desert to the east. In the central section of the Hijaz was Yathreb (or Yathrib), a fertile oasis made up of farms and small villages spread over some twenty square miles. About two hundred and fifty miles south was Taif (or Tayef), a cool summer refuge in the mountains, used by wealthy Arabian families. Immediately northwest of Taif was Mecca, which lay some fifty miles inland from the Red Sea; and was on a rocky ravine, surrounded by mountains, devoid of all vegetation. Of these three towns, Mecca was by far the most prosperous and important. It was the crossroads of the thriving caravan trade. Vast camel trains, bearing spices, perfumes, precious metals, ivory and silk, passed through the town; headed north on the way from Yemen and Hadhramaut to the markets of Syria; and headed east from the Red Sea across the desert to Iraq. Besides the ever-increasing profits from caravans, there was a brisk pilgrimage business, for in Mecca was from ancient times Arabia's holiest shrine.

This shrine was founded by Abraham and Ishmael, and was located in the center of the town of Mecca, housed in a modest cube-shaped building, known as the Kaaba. Among its religious objects was the hallowed stone, known to the Arabs as the stone which was cut from the mountain without hands, the black meteorite, embedded in a wall in one corner.

The high lands of Yemen, called Jibal Ul-Yemen, rise high, and are split up into numbers of wide and fertile valleys. Here great numbers of fruits and vegetables are grown, including coffee, indigo and date palm; the climate is mild and winter frost is not uncommon; and there are two wet seasons, one in spring, and the other in autumn. Round about Mecca (or Becca) Hijaz is a broken country, which is some thirty miles from the granite heaps of Jabal Kora and about fifty miles from the shores of the Red Sea. Here the rugged rocks reflect the fierceness of hot sun; barren valleys, dry torrent beds, and little herbage provide scanty subsistence to the flocks; these form the chief features of the country. Eastward of this arid and gaunt country lies a tract called Tayef, covered with vegetation and shady trees, where apples, figs, pomegranates, peaches and grapes grow in abundance.

The earliest inhabitants of Arabia were of the same stock as the ancient Chaldeans, the original chosen ones of God, who dwelt in Aden (or Eden in English). They built huge palaces and temples there; the ruins of their famous tanks still exist in our day near Aden. It was here that Adam was ordained a high priest; and it was from here that both Adam and Eve were cast out from the Garden of the Righteous, even the Garden of Eden. It was also these Chaldeans that carried civilization to Egypt and Mesopotamia, and to the uttermost parts of the world. Their civilization was taken over by the descendants of Heber or Eber (ancestor of all Hebrews), especially by Joktan (Kahtan in Arabic) son of Heber; and the descendants of Joktan's brother Peleg inhabited the regions of Mesopotamia and Haran. Although they had Shemitic features, their skins were lighter than most of their Arabian brethren.

Holiest shrine of Arabia, the Kaaba, which was founded by Abraham and Ishmael. A 50-foot high stone cube draped with black brocade, it is shown in this souvenir scroll of the 15th century A.D. To the left was its only door and a recess containing the sacred Black Stone that pilgrims kiss. A colonnade, shown in the drawing, once circled the Kaaba; this opened onto an array of holy structures, including: the domed Zamzam well, and two companion storehouses (left); a shelter covering the footprints of Abraham (center), and a pulpit (right).

The Abrahamites, mostly the descendants of Ishmael son of Abraham, the remnants of the tribe of Ephraim, and descendants of Moses, dwelt in and around the city of Mecca where the stone cut without hands (the black meteorite) was buried; in the Kaaba, which was originally built by Ishmael and Abraham.

In Mecca, there were arranged in the holy temple of the Kaaba three hundred and sixty idols, representing all the gods and goddesses that the Arabs worshipped. The Jews and Christians, large numbers of whom had settled in Arabia, followed their own religion; but the Abrahamites mostly worshipped idols, sun, moon, and stars. The three hundred sixty idols in their temple signified every degree within the Wheel of the World. Each city, like each tribe, had its own separate gods and goddesses, its separate temples and forms of worship; and these gods served as the mediators and intercessors between people and God.

These Arabs of Hijaz and Yemen since the ancient times have been god-loving and god-fearing people, albeit in ignorance and burdened with the weight of tradition upon their shoulders. And all the great advancements in the realms of Spirit, Words, and Works, are attributed to the seeds of these people, planted and raised even in the uttermost parts of the earth. Every religious literature and scripture which now exists or is yet to come, comes from the people whose roots are imbedded in these Arabs and their region. Yea, also this humble servant of the Lord finds his roots in the descendants of Moses, the Al-Levi, who dwelt in the regions of Mecca and Medina, and in numerous other walled cities, even in the uttermost parts of the world; usually under various titles or nom de plumes, never revealing their true ancestry.

The principal merchant tribe among the Arabs of Hijaz was that of the Koraish (Quraish or Kohresh); which in Arabic meant merchant. And the Koraish were the noblest of the merchant class of people; always proud of their ancestry, they maintained a high social position in the community. Ishmaelites, primarily being merchants and tradesmen, could generally be referred to as the Koraish. There lived in the third century of the Christian era a descendant of Ishmael, named Fihr, son of Maad, son of Adnan. Then, in the fifth century, Korsay (Kossay), a descendant of Fihr, made himself head of Mecca, and gradually of the whole Hijaz. At this time Mecca was in ruins, a decayed city, consisting chiefly of huts and tents. Korsay rebuilt the Kaaba; and erected himself a palace in which the principal chamber was used as the council hall (Dar-un-nedwa) of the people, for transaction of public business; and caused the chosen of the Koraish to live in houses of stone built around the temple. During his administration, rules for proper government were made; for levying taxes and supplying food and water to the pilgrims to Mecca, who came from all parts of Arabia to worship at the temple built by Abraham and Ishmael.

About the year 480 A.D., Korsay died, and was succeeded by his son Abd-ud-Dar. Upon Abd-ud-Dar's death a dispute broke out among his grandsons and the sons of his brother Abd Manaf about the succession to the rulership or patriarchate of Mecca. This dispute was settled by a division of authority. The administration of the revenues, water supply of Mecca, and temporal affairs were entrusted to Abd-ush-Shams (meaning servant of the sun), a son of Abd Manaf; and the Spiritual affairs, the guardianship of the Kaaba, of the council chamber, and of the Military Standard were given to the grandsons of Abd-ud-Dar.

And it came to pass that Abd-ush-Shams transferred his authority to his brother Hashim, a leading merchant of Mecca, noted for generosity to strangers. Hashim died about the year 510 A.D., and was succeeded by his brother Muttalib, surnamed the Generous. Muttalib died circa 520 A.D., and was succeeded by his nephew Shayba, known as Abdul Muttalib, a son of Hashim. In the meantime, the grandsons of Abd-ud-Dar were growing rich, and now began to envy the position Hashim's family enjoyed through their good and generous works. They tried to grasp the entire authority to become rulers of Mecca; and on their side was ranged Ommeya, the zealous son of Abd-ush-Shams. In spite of the opposition, the high character and piety of Abdul Muttalilb enabled him to rule Mecca for nearly fifty-nine years. He was assisted in the government by the Elders, who were the heads of ten principal families.

It was during this time, 570 A.D., that Hijaz was invaded by a large Abyssinian army under the command of Abraha. This chief on his march towards Mecca rode on an elephant, an animal these Arabs had never before seen, and they became sore afraid; they prayed to Allah (or Eloh in Hebrew) for help. The invading army was destroyed, partly by an epidemic and partly by a terrible storm of rain and hail that swept over the valley where the Abyssinians were encamped. The year was called the Year of the Elephant.

Abdul Muttalib had several sons and daughters; among the sons, four were publicly known, namely: Abd Manaf, surnamed Abu Talib; Abbas, the progenitor of the future Abbaside Caliphs; Hamza, and Abdullah. Another son was Abu Lahab, who was later called the persecutor of Islam. Abdullah, the youngest of Abdul Muttalib's sons, was the father of Mohammed. Abdullah was married to a lady of Medina (or Yathreb), named Amna but he was taken up in the twenty-fifth year of his life, not long after his marriage. A few days after his death Amna gave birth to a son, who was named by his grandfather MOHAMMED, meaning the Praised One, on the 29th day of August, 570 A.D., in the year of the elephant.

Mohammed lost his mother when he was only six years of age, and was then thrown upon the care of his old grandfather Abdul Muttalib. After confiding the young son of Abdullah to the charge of Abu Talib, who succeeded him in the patriarchate of Mecca, Abdul Muttalib died in 579 A.D. It was in the house of his uncle, Abu Talib, that Mohammed spent his early life. He was of sweet and gentle disposition, painfully sensitive to human suffering; and much loved by his friends and kinsfolk. Burden of labor was imposed upon him from his early life, and he had to tend the flocks and herds, taking turns with other younger members of the family. From childhood Mohammed was given to Spiritual learning and meditation. He travelled twice into Syria with his uncle Abu Talib, in the merchant caravans, and there noticed their wranglings and strife, and the misery of the people. No record of Mohammed's life is revealed between the time of death of his grandfather and the twenty-fourth year of his life; and he was nowhere to be found in Arabia.

In his twenty-fifth year of life, Mohammed married a lady named Khadijah, one of the noble descendants of Moses. She had already married twice before, and was some fifteen years older than he; and he remained faithful to her for the remaining twenty-six years of life with her on earth. She bore him three sons, all of whom died in childhood, and four daughters. All the girls survived, but only Fatima (surnamed the Beautiful) bore him descendants. Khadijah was a wealthy widow in whose service Mohammed was employed. So faithfully and honestly did he transact the widow's business, that the report of his good works reached Khadijah's ear, and she asked him to marry her; for this union was decreed in heaven. This marriage gave him rank among the notables of Mecca, and his good conduct earned him the surname Al-Amin, the trustworthy. Mohammed lived very quietly for the next fifteen years, appearing in public only once or twice, here and there. During this time he revived the foundation or league which had been formed many years before, for the protection of widows, orphans, and helpless strangers; and settled by quickly discerning a quarrel which could have resulted in grave consequences. He was known for his piety and gentle manners, faithfulness and stern sense of duty. And these attributes were manifested in the title which was bestowed on him, namely Al-Amin, the Trusty.

One of Mohammed's particular qualities was his fondness for children, who flocked around him whenever he left his house; and it is said that he never passed them without a kindly smile.

Every year, sometimes alone and sometimes with his family, he spent a month in meditation and Spiritual communion in a cave in Mount Hira, not far from Mecca. One night as he lay in the cave wrapped in his mantle, the Holy Spirit of God told him to arise; and as he arose, he beheld the angel Gabriel which was sent to minister to him. At this time (610 A.D.), Mohammed was forty years old. And the angel came to him with a coverlet of brocade whereon was some writing; and gave him the holy Scripture of God, saying, Read! Mohammed said, What shall I read? So the angel pressed him with it so tightly that Mohammed thought it was death; then the angel let him go, and said, Read! Then he said:

> Read! in the name of thy Lord, who createth;
> Createth man from the substance of the clot.
> Read! Thy Lord is most beneficent,
> Who teacheth by the pen;
> Teacheth man that which he knew not.

When he awoke, the words remained as if inscribed upon his heart. He went out of the cave on the hillside to ponder upon that which had happened. Immediately he heard the same awful voice, saying, O Mohammed, Thou art Allah's messenger (Apostle), and I am Gabriel. And as he raised his eyes, he beheld the angel, in the likeness of a man, standing in a cloud above the horizon. Again the dreadful voice said, O Mohammed, Thou art Allah's messenger (Apostle) and I am Gabriel. Mohammed stood quite still, turning away his face from the approaching brightness; but whithersoever he turned his face, there stood the angel confronting him. He remained thus a long while; and at length the angel disappeared. In great distress of mind, he returned to his wife Khadijah. She comforted and consoled him, saying that his conduct had been such that Allah, or God, would not let a harmful spirit come to him, and that it was her hope that he was to become the Prophet of his people. And although Khadijah knew the faith of the Abrahamites, she was of the tribe of Al-Levi or the Levi, and knew the scriptures of the Jews and the Christians.

On their return to Mecca, she took him to her cousin Waraqa ibn Naufal, an old man, who knew also the scriptures of the Jews and Christians. He blessed Mohammed by the laying on of hands, and said that the heavenly messenger who came to Moses of old had come to Mohammed, and that he had been chosen as the prophet of his people.

Mohammed was now under greater distress than after his vision at Mount Hira; for he being a Hanif, sought true religion in the natural and regarded with distrust intercession of spirits, sorcerers and even poets. He was distressed with the burden of responsibility, as a chosen one from among all mankind. This Divine nature of the call of God he could not understand at first, nor did he begin to read the scriptures which were given to him. Through continued revelations his testimony began to grow, however, and he became filled with the Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs); and with enthusiasm accepted the title, The Slave of Allah; a much higher abode than the Servant of the Servants of the Lord, the Pope or Vicar of Christ.

For nearly the first three years of his ministry or mission, the Prophet preached only to his family and intimate friends; while the merchants of Mecca regarded him as one who had become a little mad. But Khadijah his wife tried the Spirit which had come upon him, and testified to the people, saying that the Spirit proved to be good. Then the revelations ceased to come from God, and he suffered fear and self-doubt. After many days of prayer, fasting, and meditation, to which he was accustomed, he received the revelation ordering him to begin his work, to arise and warn the people. Thus in the third year, in 613 A.D., he began to preach in public. He taught that Allah, the Lord, was not one god among many but the One and Eternal Sovereign of the universe; and that men must be grateful to Him for their existence and worship only Him, and obey only His laws. He preached that all believers are equal before God, and that the rich must share their wealth with the poor. He warned that man's destiny was in God's hands, and there would be a Day of judgement for all men.

Until now, pagan Arabs used to believe that death was the end of all existence. Now Mohammed's message was that every man would be held accountable in an afterworld for his deeds on earth. And merchants and tradesmen were stunned at his preaching; for they believed that a man was judged by how much wealth he had accumulated during his lifetime. And for those who accepted God, and Mohammed as his Apostle, there would be justice in this world and a glorious life after death. But for the unbelievers there would be hell-fire and terrible tortures. The business, to buy or sell, with the clan of Mohammed, nor hold any conversation with that clan. They all signed it, and this document (Sahifah) was deposited in the Kaaba, the holy shrine. Then for the next three years the Prophet was shut up with all his kinsfolk in their stronghold, which was situated in one of the gorges which run down to Mecca. Only at the time of pilgrimage could he go out and preach, or did any of his kinsfolk dare to go into the city. And it came to pass, that the righteous among the Koraish grew weary of the boycott of old friends and neighbors. So their Elders decided to review the matter, and when the document (Sahifah) which was placed in the Kaaba was brought out for reconsideration, it was all eaten up by white ants, except the words Bismika Allahumma (In Thy Name, O Allah). When this marvel was seen, all ban was removed with great rejoicing and celebration; and the Prophet was again free to go about the city.

The Jewish tribes and learned rabbis of Yathrib (or Medina), a city more than two hundred miles away, already knew of Mohammed and his divine mission. They rejoiced greatly in knowing that the prophecy of Daniel would be fulfilled through this man. All around Yathrib Jewish tribes and learned rabbis had already warned the pagan Arabs and Abrahamites that soon a prophet of the Jews would come among the Arabs; with whom, when he came, the Jews would destroy the pagans and the heathen nations, under his banner; and the Great Stone would roll upon the surface of the earth, to destroy false worship and idolatry, as the tribes of A'ad and Thamud which had been destroyed of old. The deputation of the Jewish rabbis swore allegiance to Mohammed in a first pact of Al-Aqabah; and the oath was administered and a treaty of peace and union was established.

The Jewish deputation returned to Yathrib with an Islamite teacher in their company; and soon there was not a house in Yathrib wherein there was not mention of the messenger of Allah, the Lord. In the following year, at the time of pilgrimage, seventy-three Jewish converts to Islam came from Yathrib to Mecca to vow allegiance to the Prophet, and invited him to their city of Al-Medina (the city par excellence). At Al-Aqabah, by night, they swore to him to defend and protect him as they would their own wives and children. And it was here, in the second pact of Al-Aqabah, decided concerning the Hijrah, or the Exile to Yathrib; which was to begin on the 20th day of June, 622 A.D.

Soon all the Jews of Mecca and Abrahamites who were in a position to emigrate began to sell their properties and leave Mecca. When the Koraish became aware of the hidden exodus of the most important and influential families to Yathrib or Medina, they began to fear the loss of trade and their own power; and dreaded the thought of what might happen if Mohammed escaped. And they began to plot against the Prophet, to murder him. As they feared the vengeance of his clan upon the murderer, they cast lots and chose slayers out of every clan, who sought his death; all these were to attack the Prophet simultaneously and attack together as one man. Thus the blood would not be upon one man, but on all the Koraish. It was at this time that the Prophet received the revelation ordering him to make war upon his persecutors, until persecution is no more, and the religion is Allah, the Lord, only.

The last of the able converts to Al-Islam that remained in Mecca were Abu Bakr, Ali son of Abu Talib, and Mohammed himself. Abu Bakr, a man of wealth, had bought two riding camels and kept a guide in readiness for the Flight to Medina (or Yathrib). And while the Prophet waited God's command, the Koraish plotted to murder him. On the night which was appointed for his murder, the slayers were to strike him as he came out of the house, either in the night or in the early morning. Mohammed knew that they would not injure Ali, for he was well-loved by all for his righteousness and piety; so he gave his cloak to Ali, bidding him lie down in the bed so that anyone looking in might think that Mohammed lay there. Then as he left the house, a blindness fell upon the would-be assassins; and he passed by them unnoticed, putting dust on their heads when he passed by them. He went straightway to Abu Bakr's house, and then together they went to a cavern in the desert hills and hid there till the hue and cry was past. And Abu Bakr's son and daughter and his herdsmen brought them food and tidings after nightfall. Thus the Flight of Mohammed from Mecca began on the 20th day of June, 622 A.D. This is called the Hijrat (or Exile); in English, the Hegira.

When the Koraish found that their intended victim had escaped with Abu Bakr, they severely maltreated Ali; and pursued after them. But they could not find the cave where the fugitives were hidden. Once the search party came quite near to their hiding place, and Abu Bakr was afraid; but the Prophet said, Fear not! Allah is with us. As the party came near the mouth of the cave, behold, the Lord had caused a spider web to be spun and a dove's nest to be built at the entrance of the cave; and they were convinced none was hidden inside that cave and left. Mohammed and Abu Bakr remained inside the cave for two days. In the evening of the third day they set out on the long journey to Yathrib. After travelling for several days by unfrequented paths, they reached Yathrib on Friday, the 2nd day of July, 622 A.D. This marks the end of the Prophet's thirteen years of humility, persecution, and preparation for the task for which he was raised up. For the next ten years he would serve as a ruler of a State, even of the empire of Arabia, the commonwealth of Islam.

At Yathrib the Jewish tribes and their learned rabbis had often spoken to the pagan Arabs and Abrahamites, saying that a prophet of the Jews was soon to come among the Arabs; and they waited for his coming with great rejoicings. And when Mohammed and Abu Bakr arrived at the outskirts of Yathrib, the Jews had recognized him as their Prophet; and the people of Yathrib welcomed him with great enthusiasm. So many people wanted to be the Prophet's host that he decided to stay wherever his camel stopped first. After a great suspense, the camel stopped at the humble dwelling of Abu Ayyub; who was so overwhelmed that the Prophet had to get down from his camel and console him.

Thereafter, the ancient name of the city was changed to Medinat un-Nabi (the city of the Prophet), or simply Al-Madina or Medina; and even to this day, it is known by this name. A modest mosque, place of worship, was built of bricks and mud, covered with palm-leaves; and here he preached the beneficence, mercy and glory of the eternal and Almighty God, inculcating strong moral principles to preserve the soul of man. He taught them brotherly love, kindness to children, widows and orphans; gentleness to animals, reliance on the Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs) for guidance; and submission and full surrender to the will of God, His purposes and designs.

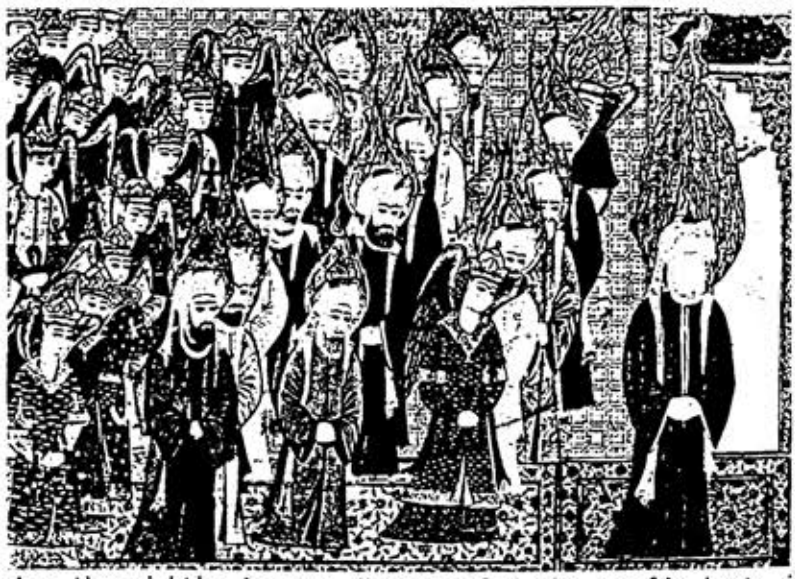
So many people in Medina wanted to be the Prophet's host that he decided to stay wherever his camel stopped first. After creating great suspense for the Islamites of the city, the camel chose the humble dwelling of Abu Ayyub, who was so overwhelmed that the Prophet had to calm him.

A sixteenth century painting of Prophet Mohammed at the pulpit. After the faithful were called to prayer, he preached to them, and said: Love God with all your heart, mind and soul, and weary not of the Word of God or its mention.



During the night's journey, Mohammed led the angelic hosts in prayer in a celestial mosque. There he met Moses, Jesus, and Abraham. And of Abraham he said: Never have I seen a man more like myself. In the first row, right behind the Prophet, is the angel Gabriel and at the top of that row to the right is Michael, the Lord's archangel.

Mohammed's stay with Abu Ayyub was temporary; soon his followers built a structure that would serve both as his place of abode, and the chief mosque of the city. The Prophet himself helped his followers clear the ground and lay the bricks. And the devout laborers sang hymns of praise to God, while they worked. After the mosque was completed, Mohammed announced the hours of prayer. First he thought of using the Christian clappers or Jews' horn to call the faithful to worship; but Gabriel told him to use the human voice instead; and it was done. Mohammed fasted on the traditional Day of Atonement, and according to the Jewish custom prayed facing Jerusalem. And it came to pass that the Jews and Christians resented the idea of giving equality to the new converts to Al-Islam, mostly pagan Arabs and Abrahamites; and considered the Koran not to be the ultimate Word of God. This brought about dissensions and quarrels among the people of Medina, and Mohammed became bitter against those who opposed him. Thenceforth, the fast of the Day of Atonement was replaced by an entire month of fasting during the ninth month of the Islamic lunar calendar, the month of Ramadan. The Qiblah, the place toward which the faithful turned their faces in prayer, was changed from Jerusalem to Mecca; and Bilal, an Abyssinian convert, became the first crier, or Muezzin, whose ringing voice called the faithful to prayer. A certain attitude of Mohammed toward life and his occasional fits of anger, however, brought him much pain and suffering through stomach ailments, gout, headaches; when he became utterly angry, a vein swelled up in his neck and right temple; also his head was of large size. Mohammed loved children and pets, especially pigeons. He was of medium complexion and height, with small hands and feet, although in some portraits he is depicted otherwise.

Thus all the converts to Al-Islam were commanded to prostrate themselves toward the Kaaba in Mecca, the shrine of Allah, the Lord of heavens and earth, the Universal Sovereign. The kissing of the Black Stone, the venerated meteorite cut without hands, was authorized; but no idolatry or worship of man-made objects was allowed. At this time Medina was inhabited primarily by two tribes which had been at feud with one another. The Arabian Prophet abolished all tribal distinctions, and grouped the inhabitants of Medina under one generic name, Ansar, or Helpers; the people of Mecca who followed him were called the Exiles, or Muhajjarin. Then he committed himself to the task of introducing order in Medina, and organizing the commonwealth of Islam, by issuing a Charter which abolished all blood-feud and lawlessness. Equal rights and protection were secured for the Jews who dwelt in large numbers in and around Medina; and they bound themselves to help the Islamites.

Now, the Meccans, especially the Koraish, were much angered with the people of Medina for sheltering Mohammed and his disciples. And the Koraish began to confiscate the properties of the kinsfolk of Mohammed and his disciples that dwelt in Mecca, and some were tortured by beating and others were put through cruel persecutions. Then Mohammed asked the Lord, saying, O thou the Lord of thy apostles, what should thy servant now do? And he received the revelation: War is ordained unto thee and thy people in the cause of Allah, O Mohammed, go ye and spoil their caravans. Thus Mohammed commanded his followers, that Allah was with them, and that they should raid the Meccan caravans passing through the territory of Medina.

One of these raids led to the first serious battles between the Islamites (mostly patriarchal Jews and Abrahamites; and pagan Arab converts), and the Meccans. Two years after the Islamites had migrated to Medina, it was told to Mohammed that a richly laden Meccan caravan was about to pass near Medina. He immediately made plans to carry out the Lord's command to attack it; but the word of this reached the caravan, whose leader changed its route, and rushed a messenger to Mecca asking for reinforcement; the caravan subsequently escaped, but the Islamites ran into the reinforcement at the valley of Badr, at a caravan stop (caravansarai) a few miles southwest of Medina. Mohammed had about three hundred able-bodied men, the largest force he had ever assembled; and the Meccans had nearly a thousand. The Islamites could not turn back without loss of face. And the Meccans said, Now we will teach them to leave Mecca and its trade alone. Mohammed directed his followers from a nearby shelter, spending his time mostly in prayer and supplication. Behold, the small army of the Prophet had defeated the Koraish, that they ran hither and thither.

And this great victory for the converts to Al-Islam, was a sign unto them; that the hand of the Lord was in it; and the Stone would indeed roll all across the earth, and destroy the idols and idolatry. People were now confirmed that Mohammed was indeed an apostle (or messenger) of the Lord. The Islamite warriors rejoiced in the news that the cause of God could bring rewards on earth as well as in heaven; and the warriors shared the booty from the raids. If victorious they got booty; if killed in battle, they were sure of going to heaven, where the Prophet promised them the most sensual and lustful pleasures known on earth, fulfillment of all their whims and fancies. This the Prophet promised to the warriors and the zealots.

In the second year of Hijrah, or Exile, there were occasional raids by the Meccans. In the third year, Abu Sufian, son of Harb, son of Ommeya, with a large army of the Meccans and their allies, entered the territory of the Medinites. A battle took place at the foot of mount Ohod in which the Medinites were defeated, but the loss of the Meccans was too great and they retreated to Mecca. But Jewish tribes of Banu Kainuka and Banu Kadhir, who acted as spies to the Meccans, and dwelt in the suburbs of Medina, were expelled.

The next year, however, the Koraish attacked the Islamites at Medina with a force of 3,000 men, inflicting on them a minor defeat; and the Prophet himself was said to be wounded in the battle. Two years later, in 627 A.D., the Meccans were determined to wipe out Mohammed and his religion of Islam. They mounted a full scale attack on Medina with 10,000 trained men, and a front line of 600 horsemen. Then Salmon, the Persian disciple of Mohammed, an experienced man in fortifications, advised Mohammed to dig a deep dry moat in front of the exposed portion of the city; this tactic was unknown to the desert dwellers. The implementation of this plan so confused the attackers that it rendered their cavalry useless and stopped their march. The Meccans remained encamped outside Medina, negotiating with a Jewish clan inside the oasis to attack Mohammed and his followers. And while they were thus engaged in negotiations, the Lord turned the weather cold. After forty days of unsuccessful efforts, now defeated and short of supplies, the Meccans returned home.

But afterwards Mohammed dealt harshly with the Jewish tribe that negotiated with the Meccans. He proclaimed the decapitation of all their men, some six hundred in number, and the enslavement of their women and children; and he gave his followers their land to settle in. By this dramatic act the Prophet showed unto all the Jews, and also to the enemies of Islam, that former tribal loyalties were no longer approved in the kingdom of God, but only the Spiritual and temporal loyalty of the religion of Al-Islam, the religion of total surrender to God's will, purposes and designs.

In the sixth year of Hijrah (627/28 A.D.), Mohammed granted the monks of the Monastery of St. Catherine, near Mount Sinai, and to all Christians, a Charter. By it the Prophet secured the Christians important rights and privileges; and the Moslems were prohibited under severe penalties from violating or abusing anything whatsoever granted unto them. In this Charter the Prophet undertook upon himself and his followers to protect the Christians and guard them against all injuries; and to defend their churches and the residences of their priests. The document included these specific sanctions:

- The Christians were not to be unfairly taxed.
- No bishop was to be driven out of his bishopric.
- No Christian was to be forced to leave his religion.
- No monk was to be expelled from his monastery.
- No Christian pilgrim was to be detained from his pilgrimage.
- No Christian churches or buildings were to be pulled down for the sake of building Mosques or houses for the Moslems.
- Christian women married to Moslems were given the right to keep their own religion; no compulsion or annoyance was to be used for their conversion.
- If the Christians should need assistance for the repair of their churches or monasteries, or other assistance in preserving their religion, the Moslems were to assist them.

After this, in 628 A.D., Mohammed set out on a pilgrimage to Mecca with fourteen hundred of his followers. The Meccans, hearing about this, sent out two hundred horsemen to stop it. Threats of fights prevailed, but both sides agreed upon a treaty that provided a ten year truce between the rival cities of Mecca and Medina; and the Islamites could return to Medina with the condition that they could return to Mecca on pilgrimage the following year. And the following year, 629 A.D., Mohammed led two thousand converts on pilgrimage to the Kaaba in Mecca; but the deep hostilities between the Koraish merchants of Mecca and Spiritual converts to Islam prevailed, and the truce was broken. In the selfsame year, Mohammed also despatched embassies to the king of Persia, Boran, and to the Byzantine emperor, to invite them to join the commonwealth of Islam. Boran rejected the proposal, but the Byzantine emperor received the envoy with courtesy. Another ambassador sent to a Christian prince subject to Byzantium, who dwelt near Damascus, was cruelly murdered.

In the seventh year of Hijrah, the Jews of Khaibar revolted; but were soon reduced to subjection. Their lands and property were guaranteed to them, with the freedom of choice of their religion, upon payment of a fixed land tax. Soon after, in accordance with the treaty of truce established between the Meccans and the Medinites, the Islamites of Medina visited the Kaaba in Mecca; and the Koraish vacated their city so as not to come in contact with Mohammed and his followers. They remained separate for three days, then returned when the Islamites returned to Medina. The Koraish, then, treacherously attacked a Meccan tribe which was in alliance with the Moslems, and killed a large number of them. The injured people appealed to the Prophet and Emperor of the commonwealth of Islam for redress. The reign of iniquity and oppression had lasted long enough at Mecca; and the hour of its cleansing was now nigh at hand. Soon after, in the year 630 A.D., Mohammed marched to Mecca with a force of ten thousand able-bodied men to settle the matter. By now the Koraish were weakened by the loss of many of their leading men, and discussions over the rulership of Mecca. The cavalry of the Koraish put up a show of defence before the town, but were routed without bloodshed; and the Prophet entered his native city as a victor. The inhabitants of Mecca expected vengeance for their past misdeeds; but Mohammed proclaimed a general amnesty. Only four criminals condemned by justice were chastened, and most were forgiven. In their relief and surprise, the whole population of Mecca hastened to swear allegiance. Then, he caused all the idols in the holy shrine, the sanctuary, to be destroyed; and said: Truth hath come, darkness hath vanished away; verily falsehood is fled, how utterly powerless were their gods.

In the selfsame year, 630 A.D., when Mecca was conquered, and once again became the Spiritual center of Al-Islam, the Abrahamites and angry pagan Arab tribes gathered together to regain the Kaaba. So the Prophet led twelve thousand men against them at Huneyn. In a deep ravine, his troops were ambushed by the enemy, and almost put to flight; but Providence had written a victory for him. In the end, when the Prophet and his bodyguards of the army of the faithful stood firm, the victory came; and the booty was enormous, for many of the hostile tribes had brought with them everything they possessed. The tribe of Thaqif was also among the enemy at Huneyn; therefore the faithful in their zeal besieged their city of Taif, and finally reduced it. After this, the Prophet appointed a governor of Mecca; and himself returned to Medina, to the boundless joy of the Ansars, the Helpers; for they were now afraid that he might forsake them and make his native city Mecca the capital.

In the ninth year of Hijrah, a large number of embassies came from all quarters to accept Islam. The principal companions of the Prophet and leading Jews of Medina received these envoys in their houses, and entertained them with their customary time-honored Arabian hospitality. On departure, they always received an ample sum for travelling expenses, Behold, ye have rights over your wives, and your wives have rights over you; treat each other with kindness. Verily, ye have taken one another on the security of God, and have been sanctified by the Word of God, and made lawful unto you by the laws of the lands.

And as to your slaves! See that ye feed them with such food as ye would eat yourselves, and clothe them as ye would clothe yourselves. And if they commit a fault which ye are not inclined to forgive, then part from them; for such are the servants (angelic hosts) of the Lord, and are not to be treated harshly.

Ye people! hearken to my words, and understand the same. Know that all the Faithful of Islam are brothers unto one another; ye are one nation and one brotherhood.

Nothing which belongs to another is lawful unto his brother, unless freely given out of goodwill. Guard yourselves against committing injustice.

Let him who is present this day, tell unto those that are absent; for behold, he that shares the knowledge with others gains more than the one who hears it.

Most of the pagan Arabs and the Abrahamites of this time, 632 A.D., were the hearers of the Word; for the written Arabic was merely in its rudimentary stages of development. Three fragments from manuscripts of the Koran, shown below, reveal the developing forms of Arabic writing, from the rudimentary Kufic script of the eight century A.D., and the gliding Kufic of the ninth century, to the developed cursive form of the thirteenth or fourteenth century A.D.

On his return to Medina, Mohammed the apostle of the Lord settled the organization of the provinces and tribal communities. Officers were sent to the provinces and tribes to teach them the duties of Islam, administer justice, and collect tithes (or Zakat). And when Mohammed was asked by his disciples about the future of the government and how long it would last, according to Allah's plan, Mohammed replied, The commonwealth of Islam shall grow and pervade the earth; and it shall continue to increase past a thousand years, until the gathering of the Jews takes place; and One greater than I shall be sent forth. Then the end shall come.

The Five Pillars of Islam, faith in the Lord, prayer, almsgiving, fasting and pilgrimage, comprised the ritual obligations of all the converts to Islam; and gave the religion its unique Spiritual strength. The first pillar, or faith, was based on the Shahada, the declaration of belief through which converts joined Islam. It was quite simple, easy to remember, in poetic Arabic. And even to this day one may recite the Shahada in front of any Islamite, and it makes him an Islamite. A man had only to say these words:

> I testify, There is no god but Allah, and Mohammed is His Prophet. (La Ilaha illa Allah; Mohammed ur rasul Allah.)

Thus all Islamites profess their belief in the Oneness of God, and Mohammed as his Apostle or Messenger. They also accept three other articles of faith: belief in the Revelations of Mohammed (or Koran) as the Word of God; belief in angels as the instruments of God's will; and belief in a Day of Judgement for all men. After the profession of faith there could be no turning back; for punishment for apostasy is Spiritual death.

In Islamic doctrine there were five canonized major Prophets or Apostles of God before Mohammed: Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus. Each of these apostles had brought forth the Word of God in his own lifetime; but men kept straying from it. And each time a new apostle or prophet had to be sent forth to save men from their fallen and deathly existence; and minister peace, safety and salvation unto them. The religion of Mohammed, called Islam, meant peace, safety and salvation.

The final Word of God during this period was the Koran; which included the revelations received by the prophet Mohammed during the past two decades. Some of his faithful followers, unable to read or write, memorized the entire Koran, containing approximately 78,000 words; yet others had written them down. The angels and archangels were conceived by the Islamites as the celestial attendants or God's messengers; they were to perform many tasks for the eternal kingdom of God; such as supporting the Lord's throne, guarding the gates of Paradise and Hell, and interceding with God in behalf of men. Two of these archangels, Gabriel and Michael, ministered unto Mohammed; but the Lord (or Allah) never revealed Himself unto Mohammed, as he did unto Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus. For as the task of apostle Peter was to minister unto the Jews, and of apostle Paul to minister unto the non-Jews and the uncircumcised; the task of apostle Mohammed was to minister unto the pagan Arabs and Abrahamites. However, eventually Islam was to pervade the earth, and all Jews were to unite themselves under the banner of Islam; until the re-gathering of Israel and building of a New Jerusalem.

It was the angel Gabriel who delivered the revelations to Mohammed; and it was the angel Michael who executed God's commands for the universe, such as sending the winds and rains. Angel Israfil was assigned to blow the trumpet on the Day of Judgement; and Isra'il was called the angel of death, who appeared to dying men to take away their last breath. The final article of faith, of the first pillar of Islam, was the belief that after death there would be a Day of Judgement for all men. At that time those destined for Hell would be separated from the blessed, who would go to Paradise. Only God knew when the world would end; but the final day would be announced by a shattering trumpet blast, and the dead would be summoned from graves and hiding places to be judged according to their deeds on earth. The records of their actions shall be placed in the right hand for those that are judged righteous; and those that are found unrighteous, their records shall be placed in the left hand. The guilty souls, realizing that their power has gone and wealth has been profitless, will hear the angel recite the following:

Seize them and bind them
Then burn them in the fire
Then with a seventy-cubit chain subdue them
For they disbelieved in God's law
And sought only their own selfish ends.

But for the faithful who believed in God and treated others with charity and compassion, exquisite delights awaited them in Paradise. This heaven was described as a garden of bliss where the faithful reclined on thrones encrusted with jewels, around which circulated youths forever young, with goblets of pure drink; the choicest of foods, and houris (beautiful maidens) "like guarded pearls," a reward for good actions.

Prayer was the second pillar upon which Islam rested; it was the most important duty of each Moslem. Through prayer he paid homage to God, acknowledging that he owed his existence and all that he possessed to Him. Two types of prayers were used; private or inner prayer (dua), or the prescribed ritual prayer (salat). According to the nature and the needs of the pagan Arabian tribes and ancient Abrahamites, this duty was performed five times a day; but God required no specific hours or times of prayer and supplications. This was a traditional temporal rule to discipline their unruly nature, and to replace ignorance with the knowledge of God. The first prayer occurred shortly after dawn, when the faithful were awakened by the muezzin's (crier's) voice, exhorting that "prayer is better than sleep." And at the appointed times the muezzin climbed to the minaret, the tower of the mosque, and called the faithful to prayer, his powerful voice ringing out:

God is most great (Allahu Akbar)
I testify there is no God but Allah (the Lord)
I testify that Mohammed is the Messenger of Allah Come to prayer
Come to salvation
God is most great!
There is no God but Allah.

In all ancient representations, Mohammed is not shown with a halo of light around his head as is shown around Jesus; but he is always depicted with an aureole of flame; and always veiled, with a few exceptions, one of which is seen in the Persian miniature at left.

The third pillar of Islam is the giving of alms. By donating part of the wealth one owned, one purified the rest of his wealth. There were two kinds of alms, the first, sadaqa, was given voluntarily; and the second, zakat or tithe, was mandatory. Zakat was not a tax, but a "loan to God." It was collected by the state and used to meet the needs of the poor and needy, widows and orphans; and to help slaves buy their freedom; and also to equip volunteers for the holy wars. The zakat or tithe was paid in kind, in crop, animals, precious metals, cash, or other means.

The fourth pillar of Islam is fasting. Fasting was observed during the daylight hours of the entire lunar month of Ramadan. Shortly before dawn sleeping faithfuls were awakened by the beating of a drum, a knock on the door, or by the melodious call of the muezzin from the minaret; for the last brief meal. From the time when the light made it possible to discern a white thread from a black one, until the sunset, they were to eat or drink nothing, and abstain from carnal relations. During the hours of fasting, work continued, and daily chores and activities were to be conducted in a spirit of restraint and kindness. The Prophet had disapproved of extreme asceticism, and fasting was not seen as a punishment, but rejoicing in God and his manifold blessings and gifts. In conjunction with prayer, fasting doth bring a person closer to God. By fasting they also learned to discipline their bodies, and understood the sufferings of the poor; thus enlarged their compassion and mercy. The annual fasting also atoned for the sins committed during the year.

These restrictions of the daylight hours usually gave way to gay festivities at night. The moment the day's ordeal was over, signaled by the call of the muezzin (in later times by the firing of a cannon), a holiday spirit affected everyone, especially the young. The pangs of the fast were first broken with a few dates or a refreshing drink of some sort. After this appetizer, everyone sat down to the long awaited meal called evening breakfast, known as iftar, at which families gathered together. When the meal was over few persons slept. All night the markets, streets and lanes were crowded with strollers. In the mosques, preachers expounded to large congregations on the importance of fasting and the holy month; outside there were various entertainments, conjurors doing tricks, acrobats tumbling; and poets and storytellers reciting their verses and tales surrounded by crowds. The end of the month's fasting was observed by a joyous celebration, a feast lasting up to three days; during which new clothes were worn, and friends and relatives embraced and greeted one another.

The fifth and final pillar of Islam is the pilgrimage to Mecca, an ancient Arab custom, going far before the time of Abraham; where the sacred meteorite, the stone cut out of the mountain without hands (the Black Stone) lies buried. It was meritorious to visit Mecca and the Kaaba at any season; but pilgrimage, known as Hajj, was obligatory to each Islamite. It took place once a year, in the month of Dhul Hijja, two months after Ramadan. Before the nation of Israel was organized and established in the wilderness of Sinai, all people of Arabia, both Jews and Gentiles, came to Mecca on pilgrimage; even until the time the Temple in Jerusalem was built under Solomon, all Jews went to Mecca on Hajj. Even during the time of Apostle Mohammed, and including Mohammed himself, people prayed facing toward Jerusalem, and the pagan Arab tribes took over the ancient holy shrine, which was built by Abraham and Ishmael; and Mecca became a commercial town, rather than a Spiritual center of the Arabs. And it remained in this degenerated condition until the time of Mohammed, under whom the religion of Abraham was once again revived, under the banner of Islam. And all the Spiritual Israel was gathered together once again under the carnal and temporal Israel, namely the newly formed commonwealth of Islam. And while the five pointed star (or stars) within the crescent (☪) became the symbol of the Moslems; the star of David (✡) remained the symbol of Spiritual and temporal Israel. Most early Islamic mosques and sacred items included the Star of David as an emblem of their sanctity. One of the many such Islamic illustrations is shown below, which includes the so-called Jewish Star of David; for originally Islam was a Jewish religion for both Spiritual and carnal Israel, but without the tribal differences. All tribes and nations were united under one religion, Al-Islam.

A Star of David is capriciously hidden in the masonry lattice work in this ninth century mosque of Qayrawan in Tunisia.

Throughout all ages the Hajj or pilgrimage to Mecca has been considered by the Arabs as a most holy act. Nothing was more inspiring and holy than the preparations, the departure, and return of the pilgrims on Hajj; even for those who were not making the holy journey. These occasions were marked by rituals and ceremonies, charged with deep emotion. Many pilgrims sacrificed and saved money all of their lives to spend on the holy trip. Once the pilgrim had arrived on the outskirts of Mecca, all people sanctified themselves by washing from head to foot; for during the forthcoming days he would concentrate on the care of his soul rather than his body. From that moment, he was forbidden to shave or cut his hair or nails, or have carnal relations. Following the ablutions, male pilgrims replaced their worldly garments with two seamless lengths of white cloth, wrapping one around the waist and the other around the shoulders; women usually wore a long, plain robe. The donning of the garment was accompanied by specified prayers, and the recitation of the Talbiyah, the pilgrim's statement that he had come in answer to the command of God.

Upon entering Mecca, the pilgrim proceeded directly to the Kaaba, where he kissed the Black Stone. He then walked around the holy shrine seven times, reciting different prayers in glorification of God. Next he ran seven times between two small hills nearby, a custom whose roots are embedded in prehistoric times. The single most important ceremony of the pilgrimage was held at Arafa, in a valley some nine miles from Mecca, on the ninth day of Dhul Hijja. After traveling from Mecca by camel, horseback, or on foot, the pilgrims gathered there in the afternoon, on and around a small hill. In an awesome ceremony, tens of thousands of pilgrims stood erect before God, prayerfully; and listened to a sermon preached by some dignitary. This was the greatest moment in the life of a Muslim; moving him deeply and inspiring him with a powerful sense of faith. After sunset the pilgrims turned back toward Mecca, spending the night at Muzdalifa, a village not far from Arafa. The following day they proceeded into Mina, halfway between Medina and Arafa, where they threw pebbles at stone pillars that symbolized the devil and temptations.

In Mina the Hajj came to a dramatic climax as each pilgrim made a sacrifice to Allah, cutting the throat of a goat, sheep or camel. And for those pilgrims who did not care to perform the blood rite themselves, special butchers were on hand. Part of the meat was cooked and eaten by the pilgrims, and the rest was given to the poor. This sacrifice took place on the tenth day of Dhul Hijja; and is performed by Islamites all over the world. They celebrated the day as the Great Festival with an exchange of gifts and presents, and wearing new clothes. Following the sacrifice, the pilgrims were allowed to cut their hair and don their worldly clothing. The last of the ceremonies were performed upon returning to Mecca, where the pilgrims made seven final circuits of the Kaaba and ran as many times as before between the two small hills nearby, thus bringing the Hajj to an end. For all pilgrims the ceremonies left a lifelong impression. Henceforth they were known as Hajji, a title of great honor, representing an act of devotion that God would count in their favor on Judgement Day.

Thus the five pillars of Islam, namely: faith, prayer, almsgiving, fasting and pilgrimage, formed an essential part of the complex system of legislations that regulated the behavior of the converts to Islam. This legislation, known as the Sharia (the clear path to be followed), was the most distinctive aspect of Islamic life.

The last days of the Prophet and Emperor Mohammed were remarkable for the calmness and serenity of his mind, which enabled him to preside at the public prayers until within three days of his leaving this mortal existence. One midnight he went to the place where his old companions were lain in slumber of death; and he prayed and wept by their tombs, invoking God's blessings for his companions resting in peace. He chose Ayesha's house, which was closest to the mosque, for his stay during his illness. For, after Khadijah his wife was taken up, Mohammed was given several other wives by God; and Ayesha, daughter of Abu Bakr, Mohammed's old friend, was sealed unto him by the Holy Spirit of promise, while she was less than ten years old, and playing with her dolls; for so Abu Bakr desired; but the Prophet took her not in until she was come of age. Mohammed's wives lived in separate apartments around the courtyard of his house; and he took turns staying with them.

It was the tenth year of Hijrah, in his sixty-third year that Mohammed fell ill. He developed a sudden fever accompanied by violent headaches, and spoke to Ayesha of upcoming death; but she ignored him. Then the Prophet called his other wives to move into the dwelling of Ayesha. From there he staggered to the mosque, supported by Ali on his right and Fazl the son of Abbas on his left; where he reminded his followers that the faithful will follow him to Paradise, and that the unbelievers will be punished. After the usual praises and hymns to God, he addressed the brethren, saying: Brethren, if I have wronged any one of you, here I am to answer for it; if I owe aught to any one, all I may happen to possess belongs to you. Then he prayed and implored heaven's mercy upon those present, and for those who had fallen in the persecution of their enemies; and recommended to all people the observance of the religious duties; and the practice of a life of peace and good will. And he concluded with these words of the Koran: The dwelling of the other life we will give unto them who do not seek to exalt themselves on earth, or to do wrong; for happy issue shall attend the pious. From the tone of his voice Abu Bakr knew that the hour of his departure had come. For the last time the Prophet returned to Ayesha's apartment. As the death agony came upon him, he muttered: Nay, I have chosen the exalted company in heaven! And all of his wives witnessed as he passed away in Ayesha's arms. At noon on Monday, 8th June, 632 A.D., while praying earnestly in a whisper, the spirit of the Prophet took flight to the blessed companionship on high.

The word of Mohammed's death spread quickly throughout Medina; and his followers were swept by a shock, on the verge of pain and distress. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon Abu Bakr, and by the power of the Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs) he thus shouted: Know that Mohammed is dead; but whichever of you worship God, know that God is alive and does not die. Then he quoted the verse from the Koran, which said: Mohammed is a prophet only, there have been prophets before him; if he dies or is slain, will ye turn back? He who turneth back doth no hurt to Allah (the Lord); Allah is alive and dieth not, and rewardeth the thankful.

For ten years Mohammed presided over the commonwealth of Islam; and during this time a great change had taken place in the character of the Arab people. The ancient system of private vendetta was put to an end, along with tribal vows and unities of the past. By the appointment of delegates to different tribes and cities, with powers and authorities to decide all disputes, this end was achieved; and impetus was given to trade and commerce. The style of living and mode of dress underwent a great change, especially among women. The reckless freedom and inordinate affection or hate of heathenism was abandoned, and manners became almost austere; gambling and drunkenness were forbidden. Before Mohammed's time, Most Arabians were cursed with communal living, and therefore no privacy was available for women; but now special apartments for women became customary.

Now also arose the question as to who was to succeed in the government of the commonwealth of Islam. Mohammed had often indicated Ali, his cousin, son of Abu Talib (Fatima, Mohammed's daughter was married to Ali), as his successor; but had laid down no official rules of succession. This gave scope to individual ambitions and strife, at the cost of Spirituality in Islam; and in later times became the cause of dynastic wars, religious differences and corruption. Among the Arabs, the chieftancy of a tribe is not hereditary, but elective; and all members of the tribe have a voice in the election of their Chief. The election is made on the basis of seniority among the surviving male members of the deceased chieftain's family. This old tribal custom was followed in the choice of a successor to the Apostle. Abu Bakr, by virtue of his age and the position he had held in Mecca, occupied a high place in the estimation of the Arabs, and was hastily elected to the office of Khalifa (Caliph) or viceregent of the Apostle Mohammed; counterpart of the office of the Roman pope who succeeded Apostle Peter. The viceregent or Khalifa Abu Bakr was recognized as a man of wisdom and moderation; and his election was gladly accepted with the usual faith and piety of Ali and all the chief members of Mohammed's family.

After the multitude had sworn allegiance to him, Abu Bakr addressed them: Behold me, behold me charged with the care of government. I am not the best among you; I need all your advice and all your help. If I do well, support me; if I mistake, counsel me. To tell truth to a person commissioned to rule is faithful allegiance; to conceal it is treason. In my sight, the powerful and weak are alike; and to both I wish to render justice. As I obey God and his Prophet, obey me; if I neglect the laws of God and the Prophet, I have no more right to your obedience.

As soon as the news of the Prophet's death was announced, the unruly spirit of the Arabs broke forth; and a great fear fell upon the true believers of the Faith. Some of the tribes who had only recently abandoned idolatry, reverted immediately to their evil and wicked ways; and several imposters who had appeared in distant provinces in the lifetime of the Prophet, began harrying the converts to Islam. Within a short time, the true Faith had shrunk to the confines of the city of Medina. And once again a single town had to contend against the idolatrous and hostile Arabian hordes of the Peninsula.

This uprising and rebellion of the tribes was due to, firstly, the strict rules of morality enforced by Islam; and, secondly, their unwillingness to pay the poor-tax. The first task of the Caliph, after the funeral ceremonies of the Prophet, was to organize the administration of the Empire, and stand on guard against the rebels. Mohammed had shortly before his death issued orders for the dispatch of an expedition into Syria to seek reparation for the murder of the Islamite envoy. To fulfill the words of the Prophet, troops had been gathered in the neighborhood of Medina; but now the expedition became urgent because the northern tribes had fallen away after the disaster at Muta, where the faithful Zaid had lost his life. Abu Bakr, now well stricken in age, thus addressed the troops; and spake to Osama, the son of Zaid, who was made the head of the expedition:

> See that thou avoidest treachery; depart in no wise from the Right. Thou shalt mutilate none, neither shalt thou kill child or aged man, nor any woman. Injure not the date-palm, neither burn it with fire; and cut not down any tree wherein is food for man or beast. Slay not the flocks or herds or camels, saving for needful sustenance. Ye may eat of the meat which the men of the land shall bring unto you in their vessels, making mention thereon of the name of the Lord. And the monks of the shaven heads, if they submit, leave them unmolested and protect them. Now march forward in the name of the Lord, and may He protect you from the sword and pestilence.

Now, while Osama was away in the north, Medina was attacked by the rebels, but they were beaten back. Osama also gained victory over the Syrians, and shortly after returned to assist Abu Bakr to pacify the insurgent of the Peninsula. The principal work of subjection was entrusted to Khalid son of Walid, a ferocious warrior and skilled general. Some tribes gave in their support, but many remained unyielding. With them severe battles were fought, in which both sides suffered great losses. At the battle of Hemama, the tribe of Banu Hanifa were subdued, and their leader the imposter Mosailima was killed. The work of pacification in the northeast of Arabia brought the Islamites into conflict with the wandering tribes subject to Hira, a semi-Arab kingdom which at that time was under the suzerainty of Persia.

From Hejr (Hajar), the northwest corner of Arabia, at this time under the Persians; and westward of the lower branch of the Euphrates lies the waterless tract, a continuation of the Arabian Nafud. Over this vast tract roamed the nomadic hordes, whose names alone have been changed, but their manners and habits have remained the same; these were chiefly Christians. After pacifying the Peninsula, the two generals, Khalid son of Walid, and Mosanna (Mothanna) son of Haris Shaybani of the tribe of Banu Bakr, who were operating in Hejr were prompted to repress the raids of the wandering tribes of Hira, which were also under the suzerainty of Persia. While Khalid was ferocious, Mosanna was gentle and kind-hearted; and the two worked well together. The Persian governor of Chaldaea offered battle on the frontier, and was defeated with heavy loss; and Hira, after some resistance, surrendered to the Islamites. Following the example of the people of Hira, great landowners of Chaldaea (the dehkans) joined the cause of Al-Islam; and were guaranteed their possessions, subject to a fixed land-tax. The peasantry were left untouched, safe in the enjoyment of their fields and lands. This was done during May-June, 633 A.D.

The conquest of Hira alerted the Persian government to the upcoming danger. A young and rising power, under a covenant with God, with zeal and national sentiment in the form of religious enthusiasm, was now about to devour their rich and powerful Aryan or Japhetic empire. It comprised within its dominion the whole of Persia, Bactria, and all inferior provinces of Central Asia to the confines of Tartar and India; along with Irak and Mesopotamia. About this time, August, 634 A.D., Caliph Abu Bakr sent Khalid into Syria with half the troops; the other general, Mosanna (Mothanna), was left alone with a small force to block the Persian host which was sent to drive the Islamites out of Chaldaea. Realizing the strength of the Persian army, Mosanna withdrew his advanced posts, and proceeded to Medina to ask for reinforcements, but found the aged Caliph dying. On the 23rd of August, 634 A.D. (22nd of Jamadi II, 13 A.H.), he died after a reign of only two and a half years.

Abu Bakr is described as a man of a very fair complexion, thin countenance, of slender build, with a stoop. Before he became a disciple of the Apostle, he wielded great authority over the Koraish as one of their chief magistrates; and his wealth as a merchant and his sagacity as a chief gave him great consequence among the Meccans. Like Mohammed, Abu Bakr was extremely simple in his habits; gentle but firm, he devoted all his energies to the administration of the newborn Commonwealth and to the good of the people. By night he would disguise himself and sally forth to help the distressed and relieve the destitute. For a time after his election, he continued to maintain himself with his own private income, but finding that he was not able to pay sufficient attention to the affairs of the Commonwealth, he consented to receive six thousand dirhem annually from the Treasury; on his deathbed, however, he was so troubled at having taken public money that he had one of his properties sold, in order to refund to the State the sum he had received. Such were the simple and pious souls, the companions of Mohammed the Apostle (messenger) of God.

Before his death, Abu Bakr had nominated Omar as his successor to the Caliphate; and his appointment was accepted by the people. Omar's accession was of immense value to Islam; for he was a man of strong moral character, with a keen sense of justice, full of energy and force. His first task, after reorganizing the internal administration of Arabia, was to hurry reinforcements to the help of Mosanna (Mothanna). These troops were under Abu Obaid, who, upon arrival on the scene of action, officially assumed the command. Without listening to the prudent advice of Mosanna, he gave battle to the Persians, at a place where he was unable to maneuver, and incurred a heavy defeat, in which he was killed. The Persians, however, did not press their advantage, and were ultimately defeated with great loss by Mosanna, at a place called Buwaib, on the western branch of the Euphrates. Mosanna again reoccupied the country and re-entered Hira.

About this time a new sovereign held the throne of Persia, namely Yazdagird III (Yezdjard III), who began his rule in 632 A.D. He was young, energetic, and ambitious; and was bent not only on driving the Islamites from Hira, but also on conquering their country. He sent out an army of 100,000 men, which marching southward was to overwhelm the Moslems, and oust them from their possessions. The armies of Islam under Mosanna were wholly unable to cope with this enormous force; so they abandoned Chaldaea, and retired to the borders of the desert, where they awaited reinforcements from Medina. And while they thus waited, Mosanna their great general was stricken down by the Chaldaean fever. Saad, son of Wakkas, who brought the additional troops sent forth by Caliph Omar, assumed the commandership of the whole army of Islam, amounting to 30,000. The battle that followed lasted three days. On the third day the Persian host were defeated with terrible loss, and their general killed; so they fled toward the north. This was the battle of Kadessia, which was fought in the month of Moharram, in the fifteenth year of Hijrah (February-March, 636 A.D.). Now Chaldaea was reoccupied without opposition; but the people of Hira, who had torn up the treaties made with Mosanna (Mothanna), were punished for their defection by the imposition of a higher tax. After receiving the submission of the towns and villages in the neighborhood of Hira, Saad turned towards Babylon of old; where the broken remnants of the Persian host had reassembled under Firuzan, Hurmuzan, and Mihran. They were beaten by the army of Islam; Mihran escaped to Madain (the Two Cities), the Persian capital at this time; Hurmuzan fled to his government at Ahwaz, beyond the Persian range; and Firuzan found refuge in Nehawand, where the treasures of the Persian king were kept.

A permanent hold over Chaldaea was impossible, so long as there remained the large encamped army of the Persians, under Mihran. Saad was therefore compelled to march upon the royal city. Like the Baghdad of Mansur (which was completed 150 years after Hijrah) fifteen miles higher up the river, it was built on both sides of the Tigris. The western portion, called Seleucia, was founded by the Seleucids, the descendants of Alexander's general; the eastern part, called Ctesiphon, was built by the Persian monarchs. The two cities together were called Madain. The palaces of the kings and nobility were luxurious and attractive; and the first sight of them considerably impressed the simple desert dwellers. After a siege of some duration, Madain, the descendants of Mada or Medes, the Aryans, opened their gate, and this was followed by the submission of the entire country lying to the west of the Tigris. A Service of Thanksgiving (Salat-uz-Zafar, or Prayer of Victory) was held at the palace of the Chosroes, and the whole army offered thanks to the Lord in humble prayer, prostrating themselves to the ground. The capture of Madain was accomplished during March, 637 A.D. (or Safar, 16 A.H.).

Saad now became the civil and military head of Irak, which included Mesopotamia; and he made Madain his headquarters. He established himself in the royal palace, where the offices were located, and a cathedral service was held every Friday in the Grand Hall. From Madain he conducted the administration of the province. But it was not long before another conflict was forced upon the converts to Islam. The Persian king, who was stationed at Holwan on the western side of the mountains, sent forward a large force to recapture Madain. This army was met at Jalula in December, 637 A.D., and defeated with terrible loss. As a result, Holwan was itself captured and strongly garrisoned by the Islamites. And when the spoils of Jalula and Madain arrived at Medina, Caliph Omar was found weeping. When asked his reason, he replied that he saw in those spoils the future ruin of his people. He was right, for now the tides of Spiritual Islam, its austerities, self-sacrifices, and virtues began to be corrupted by war and passions of men; and the Spiritual religion of the Prophet, Islam, was soon to be replaced by the political and temporal power of Al-Islam. While the patriarchal Jews, Abrahamites, and Spiritual Israel remained devoted to the essence of the religion of Islam; and faithfully obeyed the precepts of Islam, the Five Pillars of Islam, namely faith, prayer, fasting, alms-giving, and pilgrimage; the temporal Israel, under the banner of Al-Islam, were to subdue the earth and destroy idolatry and false religion, wherever it was to be found. It is for this reason that the Moslems were referred to by the Christian and Jewish congregations as Iconoclasts, the destroyers of idols or icons.

After the capture of Holwan, a treaty of peace was concluded with the Persian king Yazdagird III (Yezdjard III), by which the Persian range of hills was made the boundary between the two empires; and the Caliph now issued official decrees that the Moslems were in no wise to go beyond that limit. The country at the head of the Persian Gulf, as far as the range of hills on the eastern side, had been already reduced to subjection, and the seaport of Obolla had fallen into the hands of the Moslems. Now Ali, the husband of the Prophet's daughter Fatima, was the greatest and noblest scholar of the time, having descended from Hashim's son Abdul Muttalib, through Abu Talib, of the Spiritual family of the patriarchal Arab rulers and priests of Mecca; as opposed to the Koraish, the temporal and commercial Arab merchants and rulers of Mecca, and its holy shrine. And with the advice of Ali, Caliph Omar began a great survey throughout his realm to determine the needs of the people. As a result, a new system of assessment was introduced, and the burdens of the peasantry were lightened, that they were well-secured in the possession of their lands and properties. The tax imposed on the large land-holders by the Persian monarchs was revised, a complete network of canals was designed for the purposes of irrigation, and a decree was issued for giving advances to the cultivators whenever needed.

The sale of the land was strictly prohibited, to safeguard against the eviction of the native peasantry. And other domains of the Persian kings, the royal hunting forests, the abandoned possessions of fugitive princes and land-holders, and the property appertaining to the fire-temples from where the priests had fled, became the property of the Islamic State. These were administered by agents appointed by the Caliph in Medina. The income from State domains, after defraying the public charges, was distributed among the Arab settlers. Yazdagird, the king of Persia, however, was determined to fight the Arabs, for the capital and two of his best provinces had been lost, and his governors were out of hand, while his army desired a fresh advance against the Moslems. Hurmuzan, the governor of Ahwaz, repeatedly attacked the Arab settlements; and whenever he was beaten, he sued for peace, but always broke it at the first opportunity.

About this time, 638 A.D. (17 A.H.), two new cities were built in Irak; namely, Basra (Bussorah) on the Shatt ul-Arab, chiefly populated by the northern Arabs; Basra took the place of Obolla and became the seaport of Irak. Kufa on the western bank of the Euphrates, three miles south of Hira, was peopled by the Yemenite Arabs; Kufa took the place of Madain, which was abandoned as unhealthy. Both cities were laid out on a similar design. A square was made, with the principal mosque in the center, and the governor's mansion close by. The streets were straight, wide and spacious; the market places were large and commodious, and public gardens numerous.

And it came to pass, that because of incessant raids of the Persians, and apprehension caused by a large army gathered in the north by Yazdagird to attack the Arabs, the Islamic army in Mesopotamia sent a deputation to the Caliph in Medina for permission to repel the threatened danger. Omar inquired of the deputation the cause of the frequent uprisings on the part of the Persians. He said, Maybe the Moslems treat the Zimmis (non-Moslem subjects) badly, that they break their promise and persistently rebel against us. They answered, Not so; we do not deal with them otherwise than with honesty and good faith. Then the Caliph said unto them, How can that be? Is there not one honest man among them? And the leader of the deputation answered, Thou hast forbidden us, O Commander of the Faithful, to enlarge our boundaries; and their king is in their midst to stir them up. Two kings in no wise can exist together, until the one expel the other; it is not that we have treated them harshly, but that their king has incited them to rise against us after having made submission. And so it will go on, forever and ever as the cross of the devil; lest thou shalt remove the barrier and permit us to go forward and expel their king; not till then shall their threats and annoyances cease. Hurmuzan also, who had been brought as prisoner to Medina, and had adopted Islam, supported the same views. Thereupon, Omar was convinced that the ban against an advance toward the east must be withdrawn; and it was so decreed. In self-defence, and in the name of Allah, the Lord, war upon the Chosroes and their realm was declared.

Yazdagird (Yezdjard) for the last time put all his resources together to give a great battle to the dwellers of the desert; for he despised them for removing him from his capital, and depriving him of some of his choicest provinces. The news of the Persian preparations caused great excitement in Medina; and the Caliph at once hurried off reinforcements towards the frontier. A general, named Noman, who was engaged with the Persian raiders in the south, was placed in command of the Islamic forces. The battle which took place at Nehawand, at the foot of the Elburz mountains, decided the fate of Asia, and thus was called the Victory of Victories. The Persians, although outnumbering the forces of Islam by six to one, were defeated with terrible loss. Their king fled from place to place, until he was killed some years later by one of his own men, at a distant village on the confines of Turkestan. Thus in the twenty-first year of the Hijrah, 642 A.D., all Persia officially passed under Islamic dominion; although its capital and major provinces already came under the rule of the Arabs in 640 A.D. Noman the general was, however, killed in this battle, just as the victory was won.

As in Mesopotamia, the Caliph took immediate measures to settle the peasantry securely in their possessions. They were released from the severe oppression of the large land-holders and tyrants; their tax assessments were revised and placed on a stable basis, the broken aqueducts were restored and new ones built. And the dehkans, the land-holders, kept their estates, subject to the payment of a fixed tax. Freedom in choice and religion was guaranteed to all; those who chose to remain outside the Empire of Islam were called Zimmis, or non-Moslem subjects; they paid a higher tax in consideration of being exempt from military service. The bulk of the Persians adopted Islam gladly, and without compulsion. Among these converts and Arab settlers intermarriages became frequent; numbers of Persians were introduced into the tribal brotherhood of Arabs as Mawalis (friends or clients).

In Palestine, the Romans held some strongly garrisoned places, such as Caesarea on the sea, Jericho, Jerusalem, Ascalon, Gaza, and Jaffa. The township of Zoghard (Seger, or ancient Pentapolis), and all the region between the southern end of the Dead Sea to the Arabian Gulf was a dependency of Palestine. To the north of Palestine was the beautiful country called Syria by the Romans; and Barr-ush-Sham, or simply Sham, by the Arabs, with the historical cities of Damascus, Hems (Emessa), Aleppo (Chalybon), Antioch and others. The Roman Empire of Constantinople, even after losing several of its European dependencies, was a huge bureaucracy. Its resources, wealth, power and might were boundless. It included the spacious Peninsula of Lesser Asia, encompassed by three seas, and included the rich maritime cities, Syria, Phoenicia, and Palestine, Egypt the granary of the surrounding nations, plus the vast strip of territory extending from the Egyptian coast to the Atlantic; including once renowned dominions of Cyrene and Carthage.

And it came to pass that in order to repel the invaders, Heraclius came in person to Hems (Emessa); and from there sent forth four separate armies to crush the Arab generals. At the first news of this, the Islamic governors (or Ansars), having consulted each other by a rapid exchange of messengers, decided to concentrate all their forces on one point. Accordingly, all four divisions met in April, 634, at Jaulan, near the river Yermuk (Hieromak). Now, the Yermuk is an obscure river, which rising in the highlands of Hauran, falls into the Jordan, a few miles south of the Lake of Tiberius. About thirty miles above this junction with the Jordan, it forms on the northern side a semi-circular loop, which encloses a vast plain suited for the encampment of a large army. The banks of the Yermuk are rugged and steep; at the neck of the loop there is a ravine, which forms the entrance to the flat space inside. This spot is called Wakusa. The Romans considering it protected, as it appeared to them on all sides as a natural camping ground, caused their forces to march into it without any fear of the Arabs. But the Arabs quickly perceived the enemy's mistake; and crossing towards the northern side of the river, a little higher up, took up their position immediately by the side of the ravine, ready to strike the moment the Romans issued from within. The two armies watched each other for two months, until Caliph Omar, getting tired of the waiting, sent Khalid, the son of Walid, from Chaldaea into Syria. Marching across the desert, Khalid joined the forces of Islam before the Romans knew of his approach.

The army of Heraclius numbered 240,000, while the army of Islam was about 40,000 souls. And the will of God prevailed; the Romans had already lost their heart, having been beaten in several attempts to escape from the trap in which they had been caught. At last on the morning of August 30, 634 (the last day of Jamadi II), led by their priests, the Roman army issued from its camp to give battle to the Arabs; this was called the battle of Yermuk. The Romans were defeated with fearful slaughter, a part of their army was driven into the river and drowned; the whole of southern Syria lay at the feet of the Arabs. In this battle the Roman losses were about 140,000; and the Arabs lost only some 3,000, because of their advantage.

It was about this time that Abu Bakr had died, and the news of his death had been brought to the camp of Islam, before the battle began; but it was not made known by Khalid until the fight was won. And Caliph Omar, having disliked Khalid for his ferocity, deposed him from chief command, and made wise and far-seeing Abu Obaidah the General-in-Chief. Khalid worked under Abu Obaidah, and one by one the Syrian cities capitulated to the Moslems. Damascus, Hems, Epiphania (Hama), Kinnisrin (Chalics), Aleppo, and other important towns opened their gates to Abu Obaidah. At last they presented themselves to Antioch, the rival of Constantinople the capital of the Roman East. It was held by a large garrison, and a few remnants of those that had fled from other places. The population of Antioch was large, enervated by luxury and pleasure. One small battle outside the city, in which the Arabs were victors, so frightened the citizens, that after a siege of a few days they surrendered.

While Abu Obaidah had thus subjugated the greater part of Northern Syria, the operations of Amr, the son of Al-Aas were no less successful in Palestine. The Roman governor, named Artabin, had assembled a large army for the defence of the Province; and had placed bodies of troops at Jerusalem, Gaza, and Ramleh. But he himself with a portion of his forces remained at Ajnadin, a village east of Jerusalem, between Ramleh and Bait ul-Jibrin. The generals of the army of Islam, after detaching troops to hold in check Jerusalem, Gaza, Ramleh, and Caesarea, now advanced upon Artabin. The battle that followed was as disastrous to the Romans as was the battle of Yermuk. The Roman army was entirely destroyed; only a few escaped with Artabin, and found refuge within the walls of Jerusalem. After the victory of the battle of Ajnadin, the Arabs obtained with no difficulty the submission of the towns of Jaffa, Nablus (Neapolis); Berytus, Sidon, Laodicea, Apamea, and Gobula opened their gates without a fight. Jerusalem, garrisoned by a heavy force, resisted the siege for a time; then the Patriarch sued for peace, but refused to surrender the place to any but the Caliph in person. Omar acceded to the request; and traveling with a single escort without any pomp or ceremony, arrived at Jabia, where he was met by a deputation from Jerusalem.

At Jabia he accorded them religious freedom and possession of their churches, subject to a light tax. He then proceeded with the deputation towards Jerusalem, where he was received by Sophronius, the Patriarch. Caliph Omar and the head of the Christians entered the sacred city together, conversing on its antiquity. Omar declined to perform his devotions in the Church of the Resurrection, in which he chanced to be at the hour of prayer; but instead prayed on the steps of the Church of Constantine. Omar explained to the Patriarch, saying: For had I done so, the Moslems in future age might have infringed the treaty, under the pretence of imitating my example.

After this, the marauding of Armenian and Kurdish tribes in Mesopotamia led to punitive expeditions, which ended in subjugation of Kurdistan and Armenia. And the Romans again took the offensive. Just before the spring of 638 A.D., Heraclius, joining forces with the still unconquered people in the east, poured a large army into Syria. The cities which had capitulated to the Moslems, now opened their gates to him; and the Christian Arab tribes also gave their support. Then an army from Egypt landed on the seaboard, and reoccupied Northern Palestine. Now the position of the Arabs was threatened from all directions. But the Lord was with them; though outnumbered in some places twenty to one, they defeated the Romans. Constantine, the son of Heraclius, was also defeated, and fled with a remnant. Northeast Syria once again submitted to the Islamic rule, except Caesarea on the coast, assisted by Egypt. But the flight of Constantine broke the spirit of many Roman soldiers, and Caesarea surrendered under the guarantee of protection. Thus the subjugation of Syria was completed in about one year, between 23 January, 638 and 12 January 639 A.D. Seven hundred years after Pompey had deposed the last of the Macedonian kings, now Syria bowed again under the banner of Islam, during the reign of Caliph Omar.

After their defeat, the Romans continued to raid into the Islamic territories. And in order to erect an impassable barrier between themselves and the Arabs, they converted into a veritable desert a vast tract on the frontiers of their remaining Asiatic possessions. All the cities in this doomed tract were razed to the ground; fortresses were dismantled, and the population carried away further north. It was not the work of the Islamites, but because the Romans committed all the abominations and were dead in the Spirit, God stirred up the spirits of the Byzantine barbarians, and their hordes razed them to the ground.

Iyaz, the general of the Islamic army, who now commanded in Northern Syria, passed the mountains of Taurus, and reduced the province of Cilicia, with its capital Tarsus, the ancient monument of Assyrian kings. He carried the Islamic arms as far as the Black Sea. His name became one of terror to the Romans in Asia Minor. About this time, the energies of the Empire were diverted to the creation of a fleet; and it was not long before they rode masters of the sea. The Roman navy fled before them to the Hellespont, and the islands of the Greek Archipelago were later conquered and reduced. And it came to pass, that Egypt again began to make trespasses into Syria, and the harassment to which the seaboard was subjected by the Romans led Caliph Omar, after much deliberation, to authorize an expedition into the land of the Pharaohs. Amr, son of Al-Aas, started with 4,000 men, and in the course of three weeks subjugated the country of the Byzantines. The Romans, fleeing from other parts of Egypt, took refuge in the well-fortified city of Alexandria. After a siege of some duration, the city surrendered on favorable terms. Soon the whole of Egypt, up to the borders of Abyssinia on the south and Libya on the west, became subject to the Islamic Empire. As in all other countries, immediately after conquering, measures were taken to improve the condition of the peasantry; old irrigation works were restored, and ancient canals connecting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea were cleared out. The Egyptian Christians, called Copts, belonged to the Melchite sect; and were treated with marked favor, because of their goodwill towards the Moslems. (In 645 A.D., Alexandria was recaptured by the Romans; but a year later it was won back by the Islamites or Moslems.)

In the twenty-third year of Hijrah, 644 A.D., Northern Arabia and Syria were visited by a severe famine and pestilence, in which some twenty-five thousand people perished. Some of the best and most prominent men among the Islamites, including Abu Obaidah, Yezid, Shorabhil and others fell victims to the epidemic. The cry and wail which went up from Syria called the Caliph from Medina. Omar was nearly seventy years of age, and he undertook the journey, as before, with a single attendant. He visited the bishop of Ayla, guaranteed afresh the privileges to the Christians, and by his presence and speech revived the spirit of the people.

Upon his return to Medina, the Caliph devoted himself to planning and administrative matters of the new Commonwealth of Islam. But the hand of an assassin put an end to his temporal involvements; as a foreigner who bore the Caliph some grudge inflicted on him a fatal wound. Before his death, however, he had appointed an electorate, consisting of six notable men of Medina, to choose his successor. Omar is described as stern but just, farsighted, thoroughly versed in the character of his people. During his rulership of the unruly Arabs, he had held the helm with a strong hand, and severely oppressed the natural tendencies of the primeval man Adam. He had also established a department of finance, to which he entrusted the administration of the revenues; and had introduced fixed rules for the government of the provinces. Omar was a man of towering height, strong build and fair complexion; of simple habits, austere and frugal; always accessible to the meanest of his subjects, wandering about at night to inquire into the condition of the people without any guard or court. Such was the greatest and most powerful ruler of the time.

Although in righteousness and piety Caliph Omar entrusted the election to the six notables of Medina, this deviation from tradition paved the way for Ommeyade intrigue. The Ommeyades generally were worldly, material people of lusts, desires, full of anger, hostility, and animosity toward God and godliness; selfish men fallen into the curse and snares of the natural man Adam, brute beasts; those who had fallen off the Chinvad Bridge, and were condemned unto eternal torment and misery.

Such were generally the Ommeyades. They now formed a strong party in Medina; they had been by nature enemies of the Hashimides, the family of the Prophet. These Ommeyades were in truth Koraish merchants and tradesmen, whose god was political power and money; and religion to them was to make mockery. And because they did burn in their jealousy, envy, anger and disbelief, their skins were darkened and bodies diseased. And so is the saying, they are whited sepulchres; clean without, filthy within and deathly all over.

After the fall of Mecca these Ommeyades had adopted Islam for motives of self-interest, but in their hearts they resented the Prophet and his followers; for their primeval and selfish nature contradicted all that which was taught by Islam. They saw the growth and progress of Islam as personal aggrandisement. Their hatred of the simple and austere companions of the Prophet Mohammed burnt in their hearts. They viewed with ill-concealed jealousy the old Islamites who formed the Council of State, and held the chief offices of government. The pure and simple lives of these Saints were a standing reproach to them. And they easily found allies among the chiefs of the Bedouin tribes attached to them by kinship. Through their intrigues they succeeded in keeping Ali out of the Caliphate. After much debate and discussion, lasting several days, the choice fell upon Osman, son of Affan, a member of the Ommeyade; and he was elected on 7th November, 644 A.D. Osman, though virtuous and honest, was old and feeble in character, and quite unequal to the task of the government of the unruly race of the desert dwellers. He fell at once, as they had anticipated. The affairs of the government were run entirely by his secretary, Merwan. And Merwan was one of the most unruly of the Ommeyades, who was once expelled by the Prophet for breach of trust. Ali, with his usual faithfulness to the service of the Lord, gave his allegiance to Osman as soon as he was elected.

Under Osman began a bitter feud betwen the Hashimides and the Ommeyades, which lasted over a century, besides many other evils which sprang from the feud. The Arabs in general, being creatures of feelings and sensations, rather than of principles and self-discipline, had been brought under discipline and order by the personality of the Prophet and Emperor Mohammed. The firmness of Abu Bakr and Omar had kept them under discipline. They now began to see their advantage under the Ommeyade (or Koraishite) predominance; and began to sow the seeds of dissension and sedition in remoter regions and distant parts. And the old racial jealousy between the Modharites and Himyarites, which had nearly died out, began to smoulder afresh, with grave consequence to Islam.

Osman displaced most of the lieutenants employed by Omar, and appointed in their stead incompetent menial members of his own family. During the first six years of his rule, the people, though grievously oppressed by the new governors, remained quiet. And the dangers from common enemies kept the armies employed. The incursions of the Turks in Tansoxiana led to the conquest of Balkh; similarly, Herat, Kabul and Ghazni were captured. The risings in Southern Persia led to the subjugation of Kerman and Sistan; and the Byzantine inroads from the north led to an advance into Asia Minor, toward the Black Sea. Then in Africa, Tripoli and Barca; and in the Mediterranean Cyprus, were conquered. A large fleet sent by the Romans to reconquer Egypt was destroyed off Alexandria.

And while the dominion of Islam continued to extend unto the distant parts of the Empire, Ali and the Companions of the Prophet kept Spiritual Islam alive in Medina. In the public mosque at Medina, Ali and his cousin Abdullah Ibn (son of) Abbas, delivered weekly sermons on philosophy and logic of religion, the traditions, rhetoric and law; others taught different subjects. This nucleus of the Spiritual/Intellectual movement displayed itself in great force in later times at Baghdad. In the meantime the weakness of Osman the Caliph, combined with ignorance and intrigues of the menials which surrounded him, resulted in dissensions, complaints, and divisions within the Empire. Loud complaints of exaction and oppression by the governors of the provinces began pouring into the capital. Although Ali at times warned the Caliph as to the dangers of being surrounded by incompetents in the government, Osman paid no need to Ali's counsels, and relied on the evil genius of Merwan. At last the deputations from the provinces arrived at Medina, to demand redress. They were sent back with promises. On their way home they intercepted a forged letter of Merwan, with likeness of the seal of the Caliph, containing directions to the local governors to behead the leaders of the deputation on their arrival at their destinations. Aroused by this treachery, they returned to Medina, and demanded the surrender of Merwan; and this demand was enforced by the members of the house of Ommeya (Muruj uz-Zahab). The ill-fated Osman met this demand with a stern refusal. Enraged at the behavior of the Caliph, they besieged him in his house. In fear, the Ommeyades deserted the Caliph, and fled toward Syria, where their kinsman Muawiyah was governor. In spite of this Ali defended the Caliph, and faithfully protected him from harm and intrigue. But two of the besiegers sealed the wall of the house, and there killed the aged Caliph. Osman at this time was eighty-six years old. He died on 17th June, 656 A.D. (18th Zul Hijja 34 A.H.). Osman is described as a man of medium size, bearded and large of limb, and without any strength of character. His chief merit was piety. Habitually he bestowed large gifts upon his relatives. On several occasions he provided his evil genius secretary Merwan with income from the public treasury of the State; which made him quite unpopular among the Faithful.

After the martyrdom of Osman, Ali was proclaimed Caliph without opposition, on 23rd of June, 656 A.D. During the past three administrations he had been a prominent member of the Council of State, always in earnest, assisting and helping the Caliphs, without any expectation of reward. And many of the administrative and municipal projects undertaken during the reign of Omar were due to his counsel; and whenever Omar journeyed abroad, he left Ali as his deputy in Medina. He was the scholar and teacher to the priests and nobility of his time. Most of his leisure time he devoted to study, contemplation and education of his sons. Upon his election he walked with the usual simplicity to the public mosque; and there, leaning on his long-bow, received the oath of fealty from the people; declaring to them at the same time that he would resign the office to any one who was more worthy. Now, being the husband of Fatima, the Prophet's daughter, united in Ali became the hereditary right with that of election by the Faithful.

From the beginning, Ali was beset with the hostility of the Ommeyades. With honesty of purpose which always distinguished him, he immediately upon his accession gave orders for the dismissal of corrupt governors appointed by Osman; the resumption of the fiefs and estates that had been bestown at public loss upon his favorites unworthily; and the distribution of the revenues according to the rules laid down by Omar. These orders gave great offence to the corrupt who had enriched themselves under the reign of Osman. Some obeyed, but many revolted against the orders. And Muawiyah, the son of Abu Sufian, who held the government of Syria, with the wealth of the Province collected a large force of mercenaries, bound to him by love of gain and plunder. Supported by the spirit of his comrades, Muawiyah thus raised the banner of rebellion.

Ali was not only faced with this situation, but his refusal to give Talha and Zubair, two prominent members of the Koraish, the governments of Kufa and Basra had converted their superficial alliance into bitter hatred. Ayesha, the daughter of Abu Bakr, being fair in appearance, but corrupt and carnal within, developed a hatred for the piety of Ali. She fanned the flame, it is said; and Talha and Zubair forsook their oath of fealty, and escaped first to Mecca, and then towards Irak, where they were joined by Ayesha. They were able to collect a large army with the object of attacking the Caliph. Thereupon Ali sent his forces from Medina, and besought them several times to desist; but to no avail. The fight took place in the Valley of the Lion (Wadi-us-Saban) at Khoraiba, where Talha and Zubair were killed; and Ayesha was taken prisoner, and afterwards sent back to Medina, with pomp and respect.

After settling matters in Chaldaea and Mesopotamia, the Caliph's army proceeded towards Syria. There they met the rebels at a place called Siffin, to the west of Rakka. Muawiyah was brought to Ali to bring about a peaceful settlement; but being puffed up in pride he laid down impossible conditions. To avoid unnecessary shedding of blood, Ali offered to end the quarrel by personal combat, but the Ommeyade refused. Yet Ali would not allow his troops to attack the enemy; he commanded the troops to await the attack, and to spare the fugitives, and treat the captives kindly. The rebels were defeated in three successive battles; Muawiyah was about to flee from the field, when his accomplice Amr, son of Al-Aas, saved them from destruction. He made his mercenaries tie copies of the Koran to their lances and flags, and shout for quarter. The soldiers of the Caliph at once desisted from pursuit. The Caliph saw through the trick played by the mercenaries, but the clamour of the army led him to consent to their demands for arbitration. The choice of an arbitrator on the Caliph's side fell upon an old man, weak in character, and secretly hostile to Ali, named Abu Musa Ashaari; and Amr son of Al-Aas represented Muawiyah. At this display of foolishness Ali retired in disgust with his army toward Kufa. Here, the men who had been most clamorous at Siffin for arbitration, now were altogether against it, denouncing it as sinful. They openly mutinied (hence called the Kharijis), and withdrawing to Nahrwan on the borders of the desert assumed a threatening attitude. They refused either to return to duty, or return to their homes. Their conduct became so threatening to the security of the Empire, that Caliph Ali was compelled to attack them. Many fell in the battle, but a few escaped to Bahrain and Ahsa, where they formed the center of the fanatical horde, which time after time harassed the Empire by their uprisings and attacks.

And it came to pass, that one of the Caliph's representatives turned a traitor at Daumat ul-jaudal. Amr had advised him that for the peace of Islam, both Ali and Muawiyah should be put aside; that Abu Musa should pronounce the deposition of Ali, then he should depose Muawiyah; and that being done, they should elect a new Caliph. The simple Abu Musa fell into the trap, and mounting the pulpit he declared: I depose Ali from the Caliphate! Amr, mounting after him, said: I accept the deposition of Ali, and appoint Muawiyah in his place. This unusual announcement confused and humiliated the followers of the Caliph; and the two parties separated, vowing undying vengeance. Abu Musa retired to Medina, where he was granted a pension from the Ommeyade court. After this, the Caliph was hampered by the difficulties in the eastern frontier, and Muawiyah, through intrigue and murder secured Syria and proclaimed himself Caliph, and conquered Egypt.

And on the 27th of January 661 A.D. (17 Ramadan, 40 A.H.), Caliph Ali was struck down by the hand of an assassin, while offering his devotions at the public mosque at Kufa. Ali is described as the best-hearted Islamite of his day. Mild, beneficent and humane, his life had been devoted to the cause of Islam. He was a man of smaller height, but inclined to stoutness, with flowing beard, soft grey eyes, and a look of great amiability and kindness. His bravery had won him the title of the "Lion of God;" and his learning, that of the "Gate of Knowledge." By Fatima, Ali had three sons and four daughters. She survived the Prophet, her father, only a few months. While she was yet alive in the world, Ali never married another, although the Shemitic custom permitted him to do so. Fatima was a remarkable woman for the time of Arabia in which she lived; she was clever, learned and witty; her sermons, songs and aphorisms reveal the depth of her character and nobility of mind. Her virtues earned her the title of "Our Lady of Light," by which name she is known to the Faithful of Islam. She is described as tall, slender, and endowed with great beauty, which caused her to be called az-Zahra, the Beautiful. Thus with Ali ended the Spiritual Republic of Islam, in 661 A.D. And from now on the temporal or political nation of Islam would begin its work to conquer the world, and destroy idolatry and falsehood; and the Stone would roll upon the earth and subdue it, that the words of Daniel the prophet be fulfilled, every whit. And when this would be accomplished, the end of the world would come, and the Righteous from the uttermost corner of the earth shall be gathered in one place; and the Jews shall build a New Jerusalem. Then the Kingdom of the Messiah will be established to replace the Kingdom of the Apostle, forever and ever. Thus the end of the Islamic Empire shall constitute the beginning of the Kingdom of the Messiah.

Now, was Mohammed a Jew, a Christian, or an Abrahamite (Islamite)? The first three Revelations that were arranged in the Holy Koran, are the essence of the entire Koran. Although many Islamites believe that their Lord's Prayer, called The Opening or Al-Fatihah is the essence; and others call the second Revelation, entitled The Cow, or Al-Baqrata, the Koran in little. These revelations testify to the true religion of Mohammed; and that he was indeed a chosen vessel, an Apostle of the Lord; who was raised up and sent forth to fulfill the words of Daniel the prophet, and to destroy idolatry and falsehood. It is for this reason the religion of Al-Islam is referred to as the religion of the Iconoclasts.

ESSENCE OF THE HOLY KORAN
(excludes non-pertinent text)

I. First Revelation of Mohammed: The Opening or Surat-ul-Fatihah

(This is also called The Lord's Prayer of Islam; or Ummul-Quran, the Essence of Koran. It was revealed at Mecca, prior to the Flight to Medina.)

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful:
Praise be to Allah, Lord of the Worlds;
Owner of the Day of Judgement;
Thee alone we worship; Thee alone we ask for help;
Show us the straight path;
The path of those whom Thou hast favored; not of those who earn Thy anger, nor of those who go astray. Amen.

II. Second Revelation of Mohammed: The Cow or Surat-ul-Baqrata

(This is also called the Koran in little; it was revealed in Medina, before the battle of Badr.)

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful:

This is the Scripture whereof there is no doubt, a guidance unto those who ward off evil; who believe in the Unseen, and establish worship; and spend that which we have bestowed upon them; and who believe in these revelations and that which hath been revealed aforetimes, and are certain of the Hereafter. Such depend on guidance from their Lord; these are the successful. As for the disbelievers, whether you warn them or not, it is all one for them; they believe not.

Allah hath sealed their hearing and their hearts, and on their eyes there is a covering; theirs will be an awful doom. And of mankind the hypocrites say, We believe in Allah (the Lord) and the Last Day, but in their heart they believe not. They think to beguile Allah and those who believe, and they beguile none save themselves, but they perceive not. In their hearts is a disease, and Allah increases their disease; a painful doom is theirs because they lie. And when it is said unto them, Make not mischief in the earth, they say, We are peacemakers only. Are they not indeed the mischief-makers? But they perceive not.

And when it is said unto them, believe as the people of Al-Medina believe, they say, Shall we believe as the foolish believe? Are they indeed not foolish (to believe in the Day of Judgement and Resurrection)? And when they fall in with those who believe, they say, Yea, we believe! And when they return to their devils, they declare, Lo, we are with you, verily we did but mock the believers. Allah leaves them alone to wander blindly, to kick against the pricks. These are they who purchase error at the price of guidance, thereby they fail in whatsoever they do, neither do they seek guidance. Their likeness is as of one who kindleth fire; and when it shedeth its light around him, Allah taketh away their light and leaves them in darkness, where they cannot see. Deaf, dumb and blind, they return no more. The hypocrites are likened to a rainstorm from the sky wherein is darkness, thunder and lightning; they thrust their fingers in their ears for fear of death, when it thunders; and the lightning almost snatcheth away their sight from them. As often as it flasheth forth for them they walk therein, then they stand still in darkness. If Allah willeth, He could destroy their sight and their hearing; Lo, Allah is able to do all things.

O mankind, Worship the Lord your God, who hath created you and those before you, that ye may ward off evil; who hath appointed a resting place for the Faithful, and the sky their canopy; who causeth water to pour down from the sky, thereby producing fruits as food for you. Therefore, set ye up no rivals to Allah when ye know better. And if ye are in doubt concerning that which We reveal unto our bondman (Mohammed)*, then produce another revelation like thereof; and call your witnesses beside Allah if ye are truthful. If ye do it not, and ye can never do it, guard yourselves against the fire prepared for the disbeliever, whose fuel is of men and stones.

Give glad tidings, O Mohammed, unto those who believe, and do good works. For theirs are Gardens underneath which rivers flow; their joys in Paradise (or Heaven), in a rapturous bliss, will bring to mind the joys the righteous tasted in their life on earth. As given in aforetime, so it is given to them in its similitude. There the righteous will find rest to their soul; and with pure companions they shall dwell there for ever. Lo, Allah disdaineth not to coin the similitude even of a gnat. Those who believe know that it is the truth from their Lord; but those who disbelieve say, What doth Allah (the Lord) wish to teach us by such a similitude? Thus the Lord misleadeth many, and guideth many. And He misleadeth only the miscreants; those break the covenant of God after ratifying it, and sever that which the Lord hath enjoined, and make mischief on earth; these are the losers.

How disbelieve ye in the Lord when ye were dead and He gave life to you! So will He give you death, then life again, and then unto Him ye will return. (This is the resurrection, and the second birth.) He it is who created for you all there is in the earth; then turned He to heaven, and fashioned it as seven heavens; and He is the Knower of all things. And when thy Lord (O Mohammed) said unto the angels: Lo, I am about to place a viceroy (apostle and emperor) in the earth, one who will do harm therein and will shed blood. And the angels said, Wilt Thou place such an one, while we sing hymns in Thy praise and sanctify Thee? He said: Surely I know that which ye know not.

And the Lord taught Adam all things, that he was able to name animals and plants; and showed them to the angels, saying: Name these if you are truthful. And the angels said, Be Thou glorified! We have no knowledge, saving that which Thou hast taught us; Lo, Thou, only Thou, art the Knower, the Wise. Then the Lord said: O Adam! Inform them of their names; and when he had done so, the Lord said, Did I not tell you that I know the secrets of the heavens and the earth; and I know that which ye disclose and which ye hide. And when it was told unto the angels to prostrate themselves before Adam, they fell prostrate, all save Iblis (the Devil); he demurred through pride, and so became a disbeliever. And they said: O Adam! Dwell thou and thy wife in the Garden (of Eden; or of the Righteous); and eat freely of the fruits thereof, but come not nigh this tree lest ye become wrongdoers. But the serpent caused them to transgress and be expelled from the happy state in which they were. And the Lord said, Fall down (O race of Adam), each of you a foe unto another; there shall be for you on earth a habitation and provision for a time. Then Adam and his wife repented, and received from their Lord words of revelation, and He relented toward them. Lo, the Lord is Relenting and Merciful. Then the Lord cursed the others in the Garden, saying: Go down, all of you, from hence; but verily there cometh unto you from Me a guidance; and whoso followeth My guidance, there shall no fear come upon them, neither shall they grieve. But they who disbelieve, and deny our revelations, such are rightful owners of the Fire. They will abide therein.

O Children of Israel! Remember my favor wherewith I favored you; fulfill your part of the covenant, that I might fulfill mine; fear Me, and believe in that which I reveal; confirming that which ye possess already (of the Scriptures). Be ye not first to disbelieve therein, and part not with my revelations for a trifling price, keep always your duty unto Me. Confound not truth with falsehood, nor knowingly conceal the truth. Establish worship, pay the poor due, and bow your heads with those who bow (in worship). Enjoin ye righteousness upon mankind while ye yourselves forget (to practice it)? And ye are the readers of the Scriptures! Have ye then no sense? Seek ye help in patience and prayer, and truly it is hard, save for the meek and the humble-minded; who are confirmed in their faith that one day they must meet their Lord, and unto Him shall they return.

O Children of Israel! Remember my favor wherewith I favored you, and how I preferred you to all creatures. Behold, guard yourselves against the day when no soul will in aught avail another, nor will intercession be accepted from it, nor will compensation be received from it, nor will they be helped. And remember when We did deliver you from Pharaoh's folk, who afflicted you with dreadful torment; slaying your sons, and sparing your women. Then was a tremendous trial from the Lord. And when We brought you across the Red Sea, and rescued you, and drowned the folk of Pharaoh in your sight. And when We did appoint for Moses forty nights (of solitude), and ye chose the calf when he had gone from you; thus became ye wrongdoers. Then, even after that, We pardoned you in order that ye might give thanks; and We gave Moses the Scriptures and Criterion (of right and wrong), that ye might be led aright.

And when Moses said unto his people: O my people! Ye have wronged yourselves by choosing the calf (for worship); so turn in penitence to your Creator, and let the guilty prostrate themselves; that will be best for you with your Creator, and He will relent towards you. Lo, He is the Relenting, the Merciful. And then when ye said: O Moses! We will not believe thee, till we see Allah (the Lord) plainly; and, behold, while ye yet gazed the lightning seized you; and the thunder and quaking froze your hearts in fear. Then We revived you, that ye might give thanks. And We caused the white cloud to guide your journey; and sent manna and the quails, saying, Eat of the good things wherewith We have provided you. We wronged them not, but they did wrong themselves. And when We said, Go into this township and eat freely of that which is therein, and declare Hittatun (meaning, repentance and submission to God's will); that their sins be forgiven, and they become partakers of the blessings of Heaven, with eternal increase apportioned to the Righteous. But the evil-doers distorted the word to another meaning, rebellion; instead of repentance.

And when Moses asked for water in the wilderness of Sinai, We said: Smite thy staff upon the rock; and there gushed forth twelve springs, so that each tribe knew their drinking place. Therefore, O ye Children of Israel, eat and drink of that which Allah (the Lord) hath apportioned unto you, trespass ye not, nor make mischief in the earth. And when ye said, O Moses! We are weary of one kind of food, so call upon thy Lord that He may bring forth for us of that which the earth produces as we ate in Egypt, of its herb, its cucumbers and its corn and lentils and onions; he said, Would ye exchange that which is higher for that which is lower? Go down to the settled country, and there ye shall find that which ye demand. Thus humiliation and wretchedness were stamped upon them, and they were visited with wrath from Allah (the Lord). For the hypocrites (double-minded) disbelieved the revelations of Allah, and tempted the Lord, and slew the prophets wrongfully. Lo! those who believe in that which is revealed unto thee, O Mohammed; the Jews, the Christians, the Sabaens, and whoever believeth in the Lord and the Last Day and doth Good Works, surely their reward is with their Lord; and there shall no fear or grief come upon them.

And remember, O Children of Israel, when We made a covenant with you, and caused the Mount to tower above you. (And gave you Commandments), saying; Hold fast to that which We have given you, and always keep in memory that which is therein, that ye may ward off evil. Then, even after that, ye turned away; and if it had not been for the grace of Allah (the Lord) and His mercy, ye would have been among the losers. Remember, how We said unto those who broke the Sabbath; Be ye apes, despised and hated! And We made them an ensample to the succeeding generations, and an abomination to the Godfearing.

And when Moses said unto the rebellious; Lo, Allah (the Lord) commanded you that ye sacrifice a cow, they said: Dost thou make a game of us? He answered; Allah forbid that I should be among the foolish! They said; Pray for us unto the Lord that He make clear to us what cow she is. Moses answered; Lo! He saith, Verily she is a cow, neither with calf nor immature -- she is between the two conditions -- so do that which ye are commanded. They said: Pray for us unto thy Lord that He make clear to us of what color she is. Moses answered; Lo! He saith, Verily she is a yellow cow. Bright is her color, gladdening beholders. They said; Pray for us unto thy Lord that He make clear to us what she is. Lo! cows are much like us; and lo! if Allah wills, we may be led aright. Moses answered; Lo! He saith, Verily she is a cow unyoked, she plougheth not the soil nor watereth the tilth, whole and without blemish. They said; Now thou bringest the truth. So they sacrificed her, although reluctantly.

O Children of Israel, remember when ye slew a man (Jesus), and disagreed concerning it; and Allah brought forth that which ye were hiding. And We said, Let him be smitten, that Allah may raise him from the dead; that Allah might show forth His portents, that ye may understand His handiworks. Even after that, your hearts were hardened and became as rocks, yea, worse than rocks, in hardness. For indeed there are rocks out of which rivers gush forth, and indeed there are rocks split asunder so that water floweth from them; and indeed there are rocks which fall down for the fear of Allah. Allah is not unaware of what ye do. What hope can be expected of those who used to listen to the Word of Allah, then used to change it, after they had understood it, knowingly? And when they fall in with the Faithful, they say: We believe. But when they return to their own, they idle talk that which Allah hath disclosed to them, that they may contend before the Lord concerning it. Have ye then no sense? How long wilt thou remain stiffnecked, O Children of Israel? How long wilt thou mock God and wander in disbelief, and deceive thyself that Allah seeth not the hidden things? For thine eyes canst see Him and thine ears canst hear His voice. And woe be unto those who write scripture with their hands, and say; This is from Allah, that they may purchase a small gain therewith. Woe unto them for that their hands have written, and woe unto them for that they earn thereby. And they say; The fire of punishment will not touch us, save for a certain number of days. Nay, but whosoever hath done evil, his sin surrounds him; such are the rightful owners of the Fire, they will abide therein. And when We made a covenant with the Children of Israel, saying; Worship none save Allah (the Lord), and be good to the parents and to the kindred, and to the orphans and the needy, and speak kindly to mankind; establish worship, and pay the poor-due. Soon ye brake the covenant, and slid back, save a few of you, being averse. And when We gave you a commandment, Shed not the blood of your people, nor turn your people out of your dwellings; and ye ratified, and were witness (referring to the treaty which the Jews of Al-Medina made with the Prophet in 622 A.D. or 1 A.H.). Yet ye it is who slay each other and drive out a party of your people from their homes, supporting one another against them by sin and transgression.

And if they came to you as captives ye would ransom them, as if their expulsion was itself unlawful for you. Believe ye in part of the Scripture and disbelieve ye in part thereof? And what is the reward of those who do so, save disgrace in the life of the world, and on the Day of Resurrection, they will be judged unjust, and consigned to the most grievous doom. For Allah is not unaware of what ye do. Such are those who buy the life of the world at the price of the Hereafter; their punishment will not be lightened, neither will they be ministered.

And verily, We gave unto Moses the Scriptures, and caused a train of messengers to follow after him; and we gave unto Jesus, son of Mary, clear proofs, and supported him with the Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs). Is it not so, that when there cometh unto you a messenger with that which ye yourselves desire not, ye grow arrogant and unruly; some ye disbelieve and some ye slay? Yea, Allah hath cursed them for their unbelief, little is that which they believe. Evil is that for which they sell their souls, that they should disbelieve in that which Allah hath revealed; grudging that Allah should reveal of His bounty unto whom He will of His bondmen. They have incurred anger upon anger, and a shameful doom awaits the disbelievers.

And when it is said unto them: Believe in that which Allah (the Lord) hath revealed, they say; We believe in that which was revealed unto us aforetimes. And they disbelieve in that which cometh after it, though it is the truth confirming that which they possess. Say unto them, O Mohammed, Why then slew ye the prophets of Allah aforetimes, if ye are indeed believers? If the abode of the Hereafter in the providence of Allah is indeed for you alone and not for others of mankind (as ye pretend), then long for death, for ye must long for death (of the worldly existence) if ye are truthful. But they will never long for it, for they have been led into the snares of their own delusions. Lo! Allah is aware of evildoers. These are the greediest of mankind for the life of the world, greedier than the idolators; each one of them would like to be allowed to live a thousand years; and even a thousand years would by no means save them from doom. Allah is Seer of all that they do.

Say, O Mohammed, to mankind: Who is an enemy to Gabriel (the angel of Revelations)! For he it is who hath revealed unto thee this Scripture by Allah's leave; confirming that which was revealed before it; a guidance and glad tidings to the believers. Who is an enemy to Allah, His angels and messengers, Gabriel and Michael! Then, lo! Allah is an enemy to the disbelievers. Verily, We have revealed unto thee clear tokens, only the miscreants will disbelieve in them. And when cometh unto them a messenger from Allah (the Lord), confirming that which they possess, a party of those who have received the Scripture fling the Scripture of Allah behind their back, as if they knew not; and follow that which devils falsely related against the Kingdom which was established under Solomon. Solomon disbelieved not; but the devils disbelieved, teaching mankind magic and the works which were revealed to the two angels in Babel, Harūt and Marūt. Behold, the two angels taught it not anyone till they had asserted: God is only a temptation and illusion. And from these two angels people learn that by which they cause division between man and wife; but they injure no one, save by Allah's leave. And they learn that which harmeth them, and profiteth them not. And surely they do know that he who trafficketh therein will have no happy portion in the Hereafter; and surely evil is the price for which they sell their soul.

If they had believed and kept from evil, a recompense from Allah (the Lord) would be better, if they only knew.

O ye who believe, say not unto the Prophet: Listen to us! but say, Look upon us! and be ye listeners, meek and humble; not haughty and stiff-necked. For such there is a painful doom. Neither those who disbelieve among the people of the Scripture nor the idolators love that there should be sent down unto you any good thing from your Lord. But Allah chooseth for His mercy whom He will, and He is of infinite bounty. (Addressing primarily the Jewish and Christian brethren of Al-Medina.)

Such of Our revelations as We abrogate or cause to be forgotten, We bring in place one better or the like thereof. Knowest thou not that Allah (the Lord) is able to do all things; and to Him belongeth the sovereignty of the heavens and earth; and ye have not beside Allah, any friend or helper? Would ye then question your messenger as Moses was questioned aforetimes? He who chooseth disbelief instead of faith, verily he is gone astray (to be left alone to kick against the pricks). Many of the people of the Scripture will desire to make you disbelievers, through envy on their part; forgive them, and be indulgent toward them, until Allah give command. Lo! Allah is able to do all things. Establish worship, and pay the poor-due (or Az-zakah, a tax in proportion to the worth of property, collected from the Faithful and distributed to poor Islamites). And let all your works be in Charity, without the expectation of any reward in return; and whatever of your substance ye shall give in the cause of Allah, ye shall find it returned several fold, by His grace. Lo! Allah is Seer of what ye do. And there are those who say: None entereth Paradise unless he be a Jew or a Christian. Nay, but whosoever surrendereth his purposes to Allah while doing good works, his reward is with the Lord; and there shall no fear come upon them, neither shall they grieve. Behold, Jews say Christians follow not the truth, and Christians say Jews follow not the truth; yet both are readers of the Scriptures. Allah (the Lord) will judge between them on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein they differ.

And who doth greater wrong than he who forbiddeth the approach to the sanctuaries of Allah, and striveth for their ruin. As for such, it was never meant that they should enter them except in fear. Theirs in the world is disgrace, and in the Hereafter an awful doom. And they say: Allah hath taken unto Himself a Son; be He glorified! Nay, but also whatsoever is in the heaven and the earth is His; all are subservient unto Him, the Originator of the heavens and the earth. When He decreeth a thing, He saith unto it only: Be! and it is.

And those who have no knowledge say: Why doth not Allah speak unto us, or some sign come unto us? Even so, as they now speak, spake those before them; their hearts are alike. We have made clear the revelation for people who are sure. Lo! We have sent thee, O Mohammed, with the truth, a bringer of glad tidings and a warner; and thou wilt not be asked about the owners of hell-fire. And the Jews will not be pleased with thee, nor will the Christians, for their disbelief and hypocrisy; say unto them: Lo! the guidance of Allah Himself sufficeth thy purpose; and if thou shouldest follow their ways (of false religion), after this knowledge which hath come unto thee, then the presence of the Lord would be withdrawn, and thou wouldst have no protecting friend or helper. Those unto whom We have given the Scriptures, and those who read it with the guidance of the Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs), believing in it and doing good works, shall come forth in the resurrection of the righteous, and a portion shall they inherit in Paradise; but whoso disbelieveth, they are the losers here and in the Hereafter.

O Children of Israel! Remember My favor wherewith I favored you and how I preferred you above all creatures, and established you a holy nation of priests and kings, to be your God. But, now guard yourselves against a day when no soul will in aught avail another; nor will their prayers and supplications be heard; nor will intercession be of any use to them; for the presence of the Lord shall be withdrawn from them.

And when We made the House (at Mecca) a resort for mankind and a sanctuary; and said, Take as your place of worship the place where Abraham stood to pray. And We imposed a duty upon Abraham and Ishmael, saying: Purify My house for those who go around, and those who meditate therein, and those who bow down and prostrate themselves. And when Abraham prayed:

The veiled Prophet with an aureole of flame around his head is portrayed praying on his prayer mat beside the Kaaba, which was built by Abraham and Ishmael.

Abraham's Prayer

My Lord! Make this a region of security, and bestow upon its people fruits, such of them as believe Allah and the Last Day; the Lord answered: As for him who disbelieveth, I shall leave him in contentment for a while, then I shall compel him to the doom of fire -- a hapless journey's end.

And when Abraham and Ishmael were raising the foundations of the House, Abraham prayed: Our Lord! Accept from us - Lo! Thou, only Thou, art the Hearer, the Knower.

Our Lord! and make us submissive unto Thee and of our seed a nation submissive unto Thee; and show us our ways of worship, and relent toward us. Lo! Thou, only Thou, art the Relenting, the Merciful.

Our Lord! and raise up in their midst a messenger from among them who shall recite unto them Thy revelations; and shall instruct them in the Scripture and in wisdom, and shall make them grow. Lo! Thou, only Thou, art the Mighty, the Wise.

And who forsaketh the religion of Abraham, save him who befooleth himself? Verily We chose him in the world, and lo! in the Hereafter he is among the righteous. When his Lord said unto him, Surrender! Abraham replied, here I am; I have surrendered to the Lord of the Worlds. The same did Abraham enjoin upon his sons (both Ishmael and Isaac worshipped Allah). And Jacob said unto his sons: O my sons, lo, Allah has chosen for you the true religion; therefore die not save as men who have surrendered (unto Him). And when death drew nigh, Jacob said unto his sons: What will ye worship after me? They said, We shall worship thy God, the God of thy fathers, Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac, the One God, and unto Him we have surrendered. Those are a people who have passed away; theirs is that which they earned, and yours is that which ye earn. And ye will not be asked of what they used to do.

And those who say: Be Jews or Christians, then ye will be rightly guided; say unto them, Nay, but only the upright are rightly guided, as was Abraham, for he was not of the idolators. And this is the religion of Abraham: To believe in Allah (the Lord) and the Day of Judgement (or the Last Day), and in all that hath been revealed from the time of Adam unto this day; and all that will be revealed, according to the grace, mercy and power of God. This is Islam: Man's surrender to God's will and purpose; to be the bondman of Allah implies the liberation of man from all other servitude. Thus it is written, Make thyself worthy of the service of the Lord; find first thy Higher Self and live righteously, then all that which is needful and good will be added unto thee, and thou shalt dwell in Paradise.

And say unto the people of the Scriptures: We take our color from Allah (the Lord), and who is better than Allah at coloring? We are His worshippers. Why dispute ye concerning Allah when he is our Lord and your Lord; we are accountable for our works, and ye for yours. Were Abraham, Ishmael and Isaac, and Jacob, and the patriarchs Jews or Christians? Were they not of the true faith, and believers of Allah (the Lord)?

The foolish of the people will say: What hath turned them from the qiblah? (The place toward which all Israel turned at prayer. Before this change, all Islamites turned toward Jerusalem where the Temple which Solomon built was; now through Prophet Mohammed it was revealed that Islamites should turn at prayer toward Mecca, the holy Temple which Abraham built for the Lord. And before the nation of Israel was established, all Arabs and Hebrews turned toward Mecca to pray.) Say unto them, O Mohammed: Unto Allah (the Lord) belongeth all Sovereignty, and He alone knows what is best for what people; He guideth whom He will unto a straight path. Thus We have appointed you a middle nation, a terrestrial kingdom; that ye may witness against mankind, and that the messenger may be a witness against you. Behold, We appointed the qiblah which ye formerly observed, that We might know him who followeth the Messenger, from him who doth not. In truth it was a hard test, save for those who were guided by Allah. But it was not Allah's purpose that your faith should be vain, for Allah is full of pity, Compassionate and Merciful toward mankind.

We have seen the turning of thy face to heaven for guidance, O Mohammed. And now verily We shall make thee turn toward a qiblah which is dear to thee. So turn thy face toward the Inviolable Place of Worship (meaning the Kaabah at Mecca); and ye (O Islamites), wheresoever ye may be, turn your faces (when ye pray) toward it. Lo! those who have received the Scripture know that is the truth of their Lord. And Allah is not unaware of what they do. And if thou brought unto the people of the Scripture all kinds of portents, they would not follow thy qiblah, nor canst thou be a follower of their qiblah, nor of them followers of the qiblah of others. And if thou shouldst follow their ways after the knowledge which hath come unto thee, then surely thou wilt become guilty of disobedience. Those unto whom We gave the Scripture recognize this Revelation as they recognize their own sons. But lo! a party of them knowingly conceal the truth. (For Mohammed and his people knew not that it was all in the fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel, concerning the Stone which was to roll upon the earth, to destroy idolatry and falsehood.)

And thus saith the Lord: Whencesoever thou comest forth, turn thy face toward the Inviolable Place of Worship; and wheresoever ye may be (O Islamites) turn your faces toward it (when ye pray) so that men may have no argument against you, save such as do injustice. Fear them not, but fear Me; so that I may complete My grace upon you, and that ye may be guided aright. Even as We have sent unto you a messenger from among you, who reciteth unto you Our revelations and causeth you to grow, and teacheth you the Scripture and wisdom, and teacheth you that which ye knew not. Therefore remember Me, I will remember you. Give thanks unto Me, and rebel not against Me. O ye who believe! Seek help in steadfastness and prayer; lo, Allah is with the steadfast.

And call not those who are slain in the way of Allah "dead." Nay, they are living, only ye perceive not. And surely We shall try you with something of fear and hunger, and loss of wealth and lives and crops; but to the steadfast We give glad tiding. When the trials, afflictions, and persecutions come unto them, they bear it in humility, knowing that they come from the Lord to purify and perfect them; and they wait for their reward in the Hereafter; and a portion in Paradise is reserved for those who endure unto the end.

Lo! the mountains of As-Safa and Al-Marwah are among the manifestations of Allah. It is therefore no sin for him who is on pilgrimage to the House of God (in Mecca), or visiteth it, to go around (as the pagan Arab custom is). And, behold, he who doth good of his own accord, Allah is Aware and Responsive. But those who hide the proofs and guidance which We reveal, and the Scripture is made clear, such are accursed of Allah (the Lord) and accursed of those who have the power to curse. Unless such repent and forsake the evil, and make an acceptable offering unto the Lord, they remain cursed forever. Behold, the Lord is Relenting and Merciful to those who repent and seek him.

Therefore of whatsoever faith ye are, remember: the Lord your God is One Lord, the Beneficent and Merciful. Love Him with all your heart and soul, and do good works, and ye shall be blessed from on high. Lo, the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the difference of night and day; and the water which Allah sendeth down from the sky, to revive the earth, after its death, the ordinance of the wind, and the cloud's obedience between heaven and earth; and the great ships that run upon the sea, all these are signs of Allah's sovereignty, for the people who have sense.

Yet of mankind are some who take unto themselves objects of worship which they set as rivals to Allah, loving them with a love like that which is due to Allah only. Those who believe are stauncher in their love for Allah. Oh, that those who do evil had but known, when they behold the doom, that power belongeth wholly to Allah (the Lord), and that He is severe in punishment. O mankind! Eat of that which is lawful and wholesome in the earth, and follow not the footsteps of the devil. Lo! he is an open enemy to you; he enjoineth upon you only the evil and the foul, and that ye should tell concerning Allah that which ye know not.

O ye who believe! Eat of the good things wherewith We have provided you, and render thanks to Allah (the Lord) if it is indeed He whom ye worship. He had forbidden you carrion, and blood, and swineflesh, and that which hath been immolated to any other than Allah (the Lord). But he who is driven by necessity, neither craving nor transgressing, it is no sin for him. Lo! Allah is Forgiving, Merciful. And those who hide aught of the Scripture which Allah hath revealed, and purchase a small gain therewith, they eat into their bellies nothing else than fire. Allah will not speak to them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He make them grow. Theirs will be a painful doom. These are they who purchase error at the price of guidance, and torment at the price of pardon. How persistent are they in their strife to reach the Fire.

It is not righteousness that ye turn to Jerusalem or Mecca; but righteous is he who believeth in Allah (the Lord), the Scripture and the Prophets, the Last Day, and the angels; and giveth of his substance, for the love of the Lord, to kinsfolk, to orphans, the poor and the needy, and to the wayfarer, and sets slaves free; observeth proper worship, and abides in the Covenant; and withstands temptations, trials and tribulations. Such are they that are Faithful, such are the God-fearing.

O ye who believe! Retaliation is prescribed for you, even as it was prescribed unto those before you, that ye may ward off evil. In the month of Ramadan was revealed the Koran, a guidance and clear proof for mankind and the Criterion of right and wrong. Whosoever of you is able, let him fast the month, and whosoever is unable, let him fast the same number of days during the year. (Until this time the Faithful used to fast from the evening meal of one day until the evening meal of the next, and intercourse with wives was prohibited; and if they fell asleep before they had taken their meal or were of weak constitution, they fainted and came near to death. It was for this reason this Revelation was given to all Israel through Prophet Mohammed, by the grace and mercy of the Lord; that mankind may fast during the daylight hours; from before the sunrise to the end of sunset.) For Allah (the Lord) desireth not hardship for you, but ease; that ye may complete the period of fasting joyously, and magnify the Lord for having guided you; that peradventure ye may be thankful. It is made lawful unto you to go unto your wives on the night of the fast. Allah is aware that ye are deceiving yourselves in this respect, and He hath turned in mercy toward you and relieved you; that ye may partake of Allah's bounty which he hath ordained unto you; and eat and drink until the light of dawn is sufficient enough to see the white thread from the black. Behold, Allah expoundeth His revelations to mankind that they may ward off evil.

And eat not up of your substance among yourselves in vanity, nor seek to use it wrongfully. Spend your wealth for the cause of Allah, and do good works. Lo! Allah loveth the beneficent. Of mankind there is he who saith: O Lord! Give unto us of this world; he hath no portion in the Hereafter. And of them also is he who saith: O Lord! Give unto us that which is good in this world, and in the Hereafter that which is good therein, and guard us from the doom of Fire; for such there is in store a goodly portion out of that which they have earned. Allah is swift at reckoning. Be careful of your duty to Allah, and know that unto Him ye will be gathered.

And of mankind there is he whose conversation on the life of this world pleaseth thee, O Mohammed, and he calleth Allah to witness as to that which is in his heart; yet he is the most rigid of opponents. And when he turneth away from thee, his effort in the land is to make mischief and mockery, to destroy crop, cattle, and women. Allah loveth not mischief. And when he is warned: Be careful of thy duty to Allah, pride taketh him to sin; Hell will settle his account, an evil resting-place. And of mankind is he who would sell himself, seeking the pleasure of Allah, and Allah hath compassion on His bondmen. O Children of Israel! Come, all of you, into submission unto Him; and follow not the footsteps of the devil. Lo! he is an open enemy for you. And if ye slide back after the clear proofs have come unto you, then know that Allah is Mighty and Wise, severe in punishment. Ask the Children of Israel, saith the Lord, How many a clear revelation We gave them! Lo, Allah punishes those who alter the grace of God after it hath come unto him.

Beautified is the life of the world for those who disbelieve; they make a jest of the believers. But those who keep their duty to their Lord will be above them on the day of resurrection. Allah (the Lord) giveth without stint, to whom He will. In ages past mankind were one community, and He sent unto them prophets as bearers of good tidings and as warners; revealed therewith the Scriptures with portions of His boundless Truths, that He might judge between mankind as to wherein they differed.

And only those unto whom the Scripture was given differed concerning it, after clear proofs had come unto them, through hatred one of another. And Allah by His will guided those who believed unto the truths which were given unto them. He guideth whom He will unto a Straight path.

O Children of Israel, think ye that ye will enter Paradise while yet there hath not befallen unto you the like of that which befell those who passed away before you? Affliction and adversity befell them, they were shaken as with earthquake, till the messenger of the Lord was brought forth with good tidings. Warfare is ordained unto you, although it may be hateful; for it happens that ye may hate a thing which is good for you, and love a thing which is bad. The Lord knoweth, ye know not. In drink and games of chance lies great sin, and some utility for men of the world; but the sin of them is greater than its usefulness. Wed not idolators till they believe, for a believing bondwoman is better than an idolatress though she please you. Nor give your daughters in marriage to idolators till they believe and become converts; for a believing slave is better than an idolator though he please you. Behold, the idolators invite you unto the Fire, and the Lord inviteth unto the Garden and unto forgiveness by His grace, mercy and might; and gives His revelations to mankind that haply they may be saved.

And concerning menstruation, it is a necessary ailment; so let the women alone at such times and go not unto them till they are cleansed. After they have purified themselves, then go in unto them as the Lord hath enjoined upon you. Truly He loveth those who turn unto Him, and loveth those who have a care for cleanliness. Your women are tilth for you to cultivate, so go to your tilth as ye will, and through good works and obedience to God's laws, indulge in all things; knowing that one day ye will meet Him, and be accountable for all your works.

Bethink thee of the leaders of the Children of Israel after Moses, how they said unto a prophet; Set up for us a king and we will fight in Allah's (the Lord's) ways. He said: Would ye then refrain from fighting if fighting was prescribed for you? They said; Why should we not fight in Allah's way when we have been driven from our dwellings with our children? Yet, when fighting was prescribed for them, they turned away, all save a few of them. Their prophet said unto them, Lo! Allah (the Lord) hath raised up Saul (Talut in Arabic) to be a king over you. They said: How can he have kingdom over us when we are more deserving than he is, since he hath not been given wealth enough? He said: Lo! Allah (the Lord) hath chosen him above you, and hath increased him abundantly in wisdom of the world and stature. Allah bestoweth His sovereignty on whom He will. He is All-Embracing, All-Knowing. And when Saul (Talut) set out with the army, he said; Lo! Allah will try you by the ordeal of a river. Whosoever therefore drinketh thereof is not of me, and whosoever tasteth it not save in the hollow of his hands, is of me. (The same test was used, at the Lord's command, by Gideon of Ophrah, of the tribe of Manasseh, one of the Judges of Israel when he led ten thousand men to the water to be tested; merely three hundred scooped the water to the mouth by hand, the remainder bent down upon their knees to drink.)

showed him his food and drink which had rotted, saying: Look at thine ass! And, that We may make thee a token unto mankind, look at the bones, how We adjust them and then cover them with flesh! And when the matter became clear unto him, he said, I know now that the Lord is able to do all things.

And when Abraham said unto his Lord; My Lord! Show me how Thou givest life to the dead, He said: Dost thou not believe? Abraham said, Yea, but I ask in order that my heart may be at ease. His Lord said: Take then four of the birds and cause them to incline unto thee, then place a part of them on each hill, then call them, they will come to thee in haste!

The likeness of those who spend their wealth in the Lord's way is as the likeness of a grain which groweth seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. He giveth increase manifold to whom He will; He is All-Embracing, All-Knowing, All-Mighty, and All-Wise. Those who spend their wealth for the cause of the Lord, without expectation of reward, verily, their reward is with their Lord; and there shall no fear come upon them, neither shall they grieve. O ye who believe, a kind word with forgiveness is better than almsgiving followed by injury. Render not vain your almsgiving by reproach and injury, like him who spendeth his wealth only to be seen of men and believe not in Allah (the Lord) and the Last Day. Such a man is likened to a rock covered with the dust of the earth; a rainstorm smiteth it, leaving it smooth and bare; they have no self-control and in folly they find joy. And those who spend their wealth in the cause of the Lord, and for strengthening of their soul, are likened to a garden on a height. The rainstorm smiteth it and it bringeth forth its fruit several-fold.

O ye who believe! Spend of the good things which ye have earned, and of that which the earth bringeth forth; and seek not the bad with the intent to spend thereof in almsgiving, when ye would not take it for yourselves save with disdain. The devil promiseth you destitution and enjoineth on you lewdness; but the Lord promises you forgiveness from Himself with bounty. He giveth wisdom unto whom He will, and the recipient is given in abundance; but none remember Him, save those of understanding. Whatever alms ye give or vow, lo, Allah knoweth it; but wrongdoers have no helpers.

If ye publish your almsgiving, verily, ye have earned your reward in the world; but if ye hide it and expect no reward in the world, behold, a much better reward awaits you in the Hereafter, and it atones for some of your ill-deeds. Those who swallow usury cannot rise up save as he ariseth whom the devil hath prostrated by his touch. That is because they say, Trade is just like usury. Nay, for Allah permitteth trading and forbiddeth usury; He hath blighted usury and made almsgiving fruitful. And Allah loveth not the impious and guilty. Lo! those who believe and do good works, establish worship and pay the poor-due, their reward is with their Lord and there shall no fear come upon them neither shall they grieve. And if the debtor is in strait circumstances, let there be postponement until the time of ease; but if ye remit the debt as almsgiving, it would be better for you, if ye did but know. And guard yourselves against a day in which ye will be brought back to the Lord; and every soul will be paid in full that which it hath earned, and they will not be wronged.

Behold, unto Allah (the Lord) belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth. And whether ye make known what is in your minds or hide it, He will bring you to account for it. He will forgive whom He will and He will punish whom He will. The Lord is able to do all things. The messenger believeth in that which hath been revealed unto him from his Lord and so do the Faithful. Each one believeth in the Lord and His angels and His Scriptures and His messengers. No distinction is made between any of His messengers, for they all say: We hear and obey, grant us Thy forgiveness our Lord; unto Thee is the journeying.

The Lord asketh not a soul beyond its scope. For it is only that which it hath earned, and against it only that which it hath deserved. Our Lord! Condemn us not if we forget, or miss the mark! Our Lord! Lay not on us such a burden as Thou didst lay on those before us! Our Lord! Impose not on us that which we have not the strength to bear! Pardon us, absolve us and have mercy on us! Thou, our Protector, give us triumph over the disbelieving folk.

III. Third Revelation of Mohammed
The Family of Imran or Suratul Imran (or Ale-Imran) (Revealed between the third and fourth years of Hijrah)

In the name of Allah (the Lord), the Beneficent, the Merciful:

The Lord, there is no God save Him, the Alive, the Eternal. He hath revealed unto thee (Mohammed) the Scripture with truth; confirming that which was revealed before, even the Torah and the Gospel. And as aforetime, for a guidance to mankind, the Criterion of right and wrong. Lo! those who disbelieve the revelations of the Lord, theirs will be a painful doom. The Lord is Mighty, and Able to requite the wrong; and nothing in the earth or in the heavens is hidden from Him.

The Lord is He who fashioneth you in the wombs as pleaseth Him; there is no God save Him, the Almighty, the Wise. He it is who hath revealed unto thee the Scripture wherein are clear revelations, the substance of the Book (the Torah and the Gospel), and others of the Prophets which are allegorical. But those who are doubtful in their hearts pursue the allegorical, seeking to cause dissension by seeking to explain it, to hide their ignorance and disbelief. The Faithful, who believe therein, believe the whole, not the part; but only men of understanding really heed. The Lord is He who gathereth mankind together to a Day of which there is no doubt; and faileth not to keep His promise. On that Day, neither the riches nor the progeny of those who disbelieve will aught avail them with the Lord; they will be fuel for fire. Like Pharaoh's folk and those who were before them, they disbelieved the revelations of the Lord so Allah seized them for their sins; Lo! He is severe in punishment. They who disbelieve the revelations of the Lord shall be overcome and gathered unto Hell, an evil place of abode.

Was that not a token for you, when two hosts met in the battle (of Badr); one army fighting in the way of the Lord, and another twice their number, fighting against the cause of the Lord? Thus the Lord strengtheneth with His succour whom He will. Lo! herein is a lesson for those who have eyes to see and ears to hear. Beautified for mankind are the lusts and passing pleasures of life, joys of offspring, pride and vanity of the stored-up heaps of gold and silver, horses and cattle branded with their mark, possessions of lands and properties, and all the comforts of life. But, behold, with the Lord is a more excellent abode; those who ward off evil, and remain faithful to the end, for them the Lord hath prepared Gardens underneath which rivers flow; with pure companions, contentment and joys, they abide therein forever. The Lord is Seer and Protector of His bondmen.

The steadfast, the truthful, and the obedient say: O Lord! Lo, we believe in Thee and the Last Day; mayest thou forgive us our sins and guard us from the punishment of Fire! They spend and hoard not, and pray for pardon in the watches of the night. The Lord is witness that there is no God save Him; the angels and men of learning too are witness, maintaining His creation in justice. Lo, the religion with the Lord is the surrender to His will and guidance. (It is called Al-Islam in Arabic.) Those who formerly received the Scripture differed only after the knowledge of the truth was revealed unto them, through their sins and transgressions among themselves. Though they possess the Scripture, they read it not with the Holy Spirit (Rūh-el-Qudūs), neither do they obey the commandments therein, nor keep the covenants which they made with God. Have they surrendered to God's will? If they did, verily, they are rightly guided; but whoso disbelieveth the revelations of God, lo, the Lord is swift at reckoning, and a painful doom awaits them. Such are they whose works have failed in the world and the Hereafter, and they have no helpers.

Behold, the Lord is the owner of Sovereignty; He givest unto whom He wilt, and withdrawest from whom He wilt. In His hands are all things, and He is able to do all things. He causest the night to pass into day, and the day into the night; He bringest the living from the dead, and the dead from the living. And, behold, He givest sustenance to whom He chooses, without stint.

Let not believers take disbelievers for their friend in preference to the believers; whoso doth that forsaketh his connection with the Lord, and is taken captive by the Devil; unless he is guarded and takes proper precautions. On the Day of Resurrection, each soul will come forth into the resurrection of the just or the unjust; and none can escape the test of time. Behold, Allah (the Lord) preferred Adam and Noah, and the family of Abraham and the family of Imran (father of Moses) above all His creatures; they were descendants one of another.

And when the wife of Imran (Emram) said: My Lord! I have vowed unto Thee that which is in my belly as a consecrated offering; accept it from me. Lo, Thou and only Thou art the Hearer, the Knower! And when she was delivered, she said: My Lord! I am delivered of a female. Allah knoweth best what she was delivered, the male is not as the female, and lo, I have named her Mariam, and lo, I crave Thy protection for her and her offspring from Satan. This was before Aaron (Harun) and Moses (Musa) were born. And when Mariam (also called Elizabeth) wife of Zachariah the priest went into the sanctuary and ate of the shewbread, he said, O Mariam, why eatest thou of this? She answered: It is from Allah (the Lord). Allah giveth without stint to whom He will. Then Zachariah prayed unto the Lord, and said: O My Lord! Bestow upon me of Thy bounty goodly offspring; Lo! Thou art the Hearer of prayer. And as he one day stood praying in the sanctuary, the angel called to him, saying: Allah giveth thee glad tidings of a son whose name is to be John (Yahya in Arabic); who cometh to confirm a word of the Lord, a lordly and chaste prophet of the righteous. Zachariah said: My Lord! How can I have a son when age hath overtaken me already and my wife is barren? The angel answered: So it will be; Allah doth what He will. Then Zachariah said; My Lord! Appoint a token for me, that my soul be at rest. The angel said, The token shall be that thou shalt not be able to speak unto mankind three days except by signs; remember thy Lord without ceasing, and praise Him in the early hours of morning and at night. And this selfsame Zachariah was made a guardian to Mary the mother of Jesus.

And when the angel appeared unto Mary, and said; O Mary, Allah (the Lord) hath chosen thee and made thee pure, and hath preferred thee above all the women of creation. Therefore, O Mary, be obedient to the Lord, prostrate thyself and bow down in worship. Behold, this is of the tidings of things hidden, which We reveal unto thee, O Mohammed. Thou wast not present with them when they threw their pens as to which of them should be the guardian of Mary, nor wast thou present with them when they quarrelled thereupon. And, when the angel said; O Mary! Lo! Allah (the Lord) giveth thee glad tidings of a word from Him, whose name is the Messiah (meaning the Christ, the Anointed One, the Savior). Thou shalt bring forth a Son in this world, and his name shall be Jesus, son of Mary, illustrious in the world and the Hereafter, One of those brought near unto Allah. He will speak unto mankind in his cradle, and in his manhood he is of the righteous. She said: My Lord! How can I have a child when no mortal hath touched me? He said, So it will be; Allah createth what He will. If He decreeth a thing, He saith: Be! and it is. And He will teach him the Scriptures and wisdom, the Torah and the Gospel (of Jesus Christ). And will make him a messenger (apostle) unto the children of Israel, saying: Lo! I come unto you with a sign from Allah (the Eternal God). Lo, I fashion for you out of clay the likeness of a bird, and I breathe into it, and it is a bird, by Allah's leave. And I come confirming that which was before me of the Torah, and to make lawful some of that which was forbidden unto you. I come unto you with a sign from your Lord, so keep your duty to Allah and obey me. Lo! Allah is my Lord and your Lord, so worship Him; that is a straight path.

But when Jesus became conscious of their disbelief, he cried: Who will be my helpers (ansars), the disciples said, We will be Allah's helpers; we believe in Allah, and have surrendered unto Him. And we believe in thee O Lord, in all that which thou hast revealed unto us; and we are willing to follow thee. Therefore enroll us among those who are Witness to thy truths. And the disbelievers schemed, and Allah schemed against them; behold, Allah is the best of schemers. And Allah said unto Jesus, O Jesus! Lo! I am gathering thee and causing thee to ascend unto Me; behold, I am cleansing thee of those who disbelieve and am setting those who follow thee above those who disbelieve until the Day of Resurrection. Then unto Me ye will all return; and I shall judge between you as to that wherein ye used to differ. As for those who disbelieve I shall chastise them with a heavy chastisement in the world and the Hereafter, and they will have no helpers. And as for those who believe and do good works, He will pay them their wages in full, Allah loveth not wrongdoers. Lo! the likeness of Jesus with Allah, the Eternal God, is as the likeness of Adam; he created man from dust, and said, Be! and it was.

There is no God save Allah, the Eternal God, the Mighty, the Wise. O people of the Scripture (Jews and Christians)! Why do ye argue about Abraham, when the Torah and the Gospel were not revealed till after him? Lo! Ye are those who argue about that whereof ye have some knowledge; why then argue concerning that which ye have no knowledge? Abraham was not a Jew, nor yet a Christian; but he was an upright man who had surrendered (to the will of the Lord); and he was not of the idolators. Those of mankind who have the best claim to Abraham are those who followed him, and this prophet (Mohammed) and his followers. Lo! the Lord is the Protecting Friend of the believers.

The Jews of Al-Medina, to bring disputations among the followers of the Prophet, say: Believe in that which hath been revealed at the opening of the day, and at the end they disbelieve. For these merely feign an interest in Al-Islam, save only a few who truly believe. Lo! the bounty is in Allah's hand, He bestoweth it on whomsoever He will. He is All-Embracing, All-Knowing. Allah is of Infinite bounty, and selecteth for His compassion and mercy whomsoever He willeth. Among the people of the Scripture there is he who, if thou trust him with a weight of treasure, will return it to thee. And among them there is he who, if thou trust him with a piece of gold, will not return it, unless thou keep standing over him. The chosen of the Lord is he who fulfilleth his pledge, and wardeth off evil. Allah loveth those who ward off evil.

Lo! those who purchase a small gain at the cost of God's covenant and their oaths, and repent not, have no portion in the Hereafter. They will be void of Allah's grace and mercy on the Day of Resurrection; their's will be a painful doom. And lo! there is a party of them who distort the Scripture with their worldly cunning and deceptive ways; and say, this is from the Lord, when it is not from Him; and they speak lies knowingly, mocking at the things of Spirit.

It is not possible for any man unto whom Allah (the Lord) had given the Scriptures, the Prophethood, and a portion of His Wisdom, that he should when exalted, say unto mankind: Worship me, instead of the Lord (Allah); but, Be ye faithful servants of the Lord by virtue of your constant studying and pondering upon the Scripture. And the Lord commanded the believers that they should not take angels and the prophets for lords,lest they die in the Spirit and be taken captive at the will of the adversary, the Devil. Would He then command you to disobey His command after ye have surrendered to the will of the Lord? Therefore whosoever turns away after making a covenant will be called a miscreant, an heretic. These are they who hold to a heresy; and after having made a profession of true faith in Christ, deliberately uphold a doctrine at variance with the Church. To their own folly and shame they seek other than the religion of the Lord, when in truth unto Him submitteth whosoever is in the heavens and the earth, willingly or unwillingly; and unto Him they will be returned.

The religion of Surrender to the will of the Lord, namely Al-Islam, is this: To believe in the Eternal God Allah, and all that which was revealed unto Abraham, Ishmael and Isaac, Jacob and the tribes of Israel; and that which was revealed unto Moses and Jesus and all the Prophets of the Lord. We make no distinction between any of them. And whoso seeketh as religion other than the Surrender to God's will, will be a loser in the Hereafter. How shall the Lord guide a people who disbelieved after their belief and confession of faith, after having received clear proofs and testimony of His sovereignty? As for such, their recompense is the combined curse of the Lord, the angels and men. And unless they repent and begin anew in righteousness, they will abide in their cursed condition forever. Lo, the Lord is Forgiving and Merciful.

And it shall come to pass that from you a righteous nation may spring forth, a nation which invites people to good thoughts, good words, and good deeds; to promote and establish right conduct and forbid indecency. Be ye therefore mindful of those who after obtaining clear proofs of the Lord's sovereignty, return to their fallen existence, and bring disputations and strife; for such, an awful doom awaits them. Know ye also that on the appointed Day, some faces will be whitened and some faces will be darkened. And those whose faces have been blackened, it will be said unto them: Disbelieved ye after the profession of your faith? Then taste the punishment for your disbelief. As for those whose faces have been whitened, behold, under the grace and mercy of the Lord they shall dwell for ever. These are the revelations of the Lord which We recite unto thee in truth. The Lord willeth no injustice to His creatures; unto Him belongeth whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth, and unto Him all things are returned.

Ye are the best of the nations that hath been raised up for mankind; for ye believe in Allah (the Lord), and enjoin right conduct and forbid indecency. The unbelievers and the hypocrites will not have the power to hurt you, save a trifling hurt; but they would tempt, mock and deceive, to prove you. And if they fight against you, they will turn and flee; and afterward they will find no helpers. Disgrace and dishonor shall be the portion of those who disbelieve the revelations of the Lord, wretchedness is laid upon them. But those who believe in the Lord and the Last Day, enjoin right conduct and forbid indecency, and do good works, and ward off evil, verily, such are of the righteous. Lo! the riches and progeny of the disbelievers will not avail them aught against the Lord; and such are rightful owners of the Fire; they will abide therein.

O ye who believe! Take not for intimates others than your own kind, lest they spare no pains to ruin you, and hamper you. The hatred is seen by the words of their mouth, but that which is hidden in their breasts is greater. We have made these revelations plain unto you, that ye may understand.

Unto the Lord belongeth whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth; He forgiveth whom He will, and punisheth whom He will. Therefore, obey the Lord and His prophet, that ye may find mercy. And vie one with another for forgiveness from the Lord. Behold, a Paradise as wide as are the heavens and the earth is prepared for those who ward off evil. Those who spend of that which the Lord hath given them in ease and in adversity, and who control their anger, greed and lusts, and are forgiving toward mankind; such shall inherit the Paradise. And those who have become guilty due to sins and transgressions, and suffer the torment of the consequence thereof, may repent in sincerity and implore the Lord's forgiveness for their sins, transgressions, iniquities, and ways of error. Lo! the Lord is Compassionate and Forgiving.

Behold, Mohammed is but a messenger (apostle) of the Lord, the like of whom have passed away before him. Will it be that, when he dieth or is slain, ye will turn back on your heels? He who turneth back doth no hurt to Allah (the Lord), and Allah will reward the thankful. No soul can die except by Allah's leave and a term appointed. And whoso desireth the reward of the world, We bestow on him thereof; and whoso desireth the reward of the Hereafter, We bestow upon him accordingly. The Lord shall reward the thankful and the steadfast.

Unto the Lord belongeth the Sovereignty of the heavens and the earth; He is able to do all things. Lo! in the creation of heavens and earth, and in the difference of night and day are tokens of His sovereignty, for men of understanding. Such as remember the Lord, standing, sitting, and reclining, and ponder upon His Might, Majesty, and Wisdom, sing hymns of praise to His name, and say: Glory be to Thee, O Lord! Preserve us from the doom of Fire; forgive us our sins, and remit from us our evil deeds, and make us die the death of the righteous.

Let not the vicissitude of material success of the unbelievers deceive thee. It is but a brief comfort; and afterward their habitation becomes hell, an ill abode. But those who keep their duty to the Lord, for them are Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they abide in safety forever, a gift of the Lord to the righteous. O ye who believe! Endure, outdo all others in endurance; be ready, observe your duty to the Lord, in order that ye may succeed.

Now by the fifth year of the Prophet's reign at Al-Medina (circa 626 A.D.) Christianity had become a fully telestial religion in Arabia and also in Rome. They became the worshippers of angels, carnal, sensual, and devilish. The true Spirit of Christianity was replaced by shallow mediocrity. And Prophet Mohammed defended the ancient Mosaic truth of One God, but argued against the symbolic meaning of the ancient Holy Trinity of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost as One God. For he taught that it is better that Allah be known to the converts as One God, and not as the Trinity of the Christians. And these are Mohammed's own words concerning this matter; which were partially revealed in the Revelation entitled Suratun Nisa, or Women:

> O people of the Scripture (referring to Christians and Jews)! Do not exaggerate in your religion nor utter aught concerning Allah (the Eternal God) save the truth. The Messiah, Jesus son of Mary, was only a messenger (apostle) of Allah,* and was the fulfillment of His Word, which was conveyed unto Mary, and was blessed with the Holy Spirit. So believe in Allah and His messengers (apostles). And call it not Trinity (of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost), albeit it is better for you. Allah is reckoned to us only as One God. Far is it removed from His transcendant majesty that He should have a mortal son (who died upon the Cross). Behold, the crucifixion of Jesus was in the similitude of death and resurrection. For Allah slew him not nor crucified, but through His power He made it to appear so unto them. Lo! those who disagree concerning it, have no knowledge of God and His Kingdom, save pursuit of conjecture. For certain it was done so according to the will of God; and Allah took him up unto Himself. And thus the meaning of atonement, death, burial, resurrection, were conveyed to mankind.

The remainder of Mohammed's revelations consist of rudimentary social and moral laws; and the Prophet's own interpretation of the Torah, the Prophets, and the Gospel; which he conveyed mostly to pagan Arabs and those of Israel who had no scripture or were fully gone astray from their fold. Following is a chronological listing of noteworthy secular and historical events during the course of the Islamic Empire, from the time of the birth of Mohammed in 570 A.D., along with a genealogy of the Abrahamites and Apostle Mohammed, and Chronology of the Islamic Empire; until 1922 A.D., when Mustapha Kemal Ataturk began his Turkish reforms, which led to the creation of the Republic of Turkey:

* It is true that Jesus was sent forth of the Eternal Father as His apostle, messenger, or prophet; but after He had ascended to Heaven, He became the Eternal God of the heavens and the earth.

(Although the Seljuk Turks seized Baghdad in 1055, the Abbasid Caliphs continued, until 1258, when Mongols under Hulaku Khan took Baghdad. There was no Caliph in 1259 and 1260, then Abbasid Caliphate moved to Cairo. Thus, in the mid-sixteenth century the Ottoman Empire extended from the gates of Vienna to Yemen and Aden, from Persia to Oran. And Sultan Suleiman I (1520-1566) ruled over six of the seven wonders in the world. No place in the world was more magnificent in its oriental splendor than the secluded world that lay behind the arch of the Imperial Gate in Constantinople, called the Grand Seraglio of the Sultan.

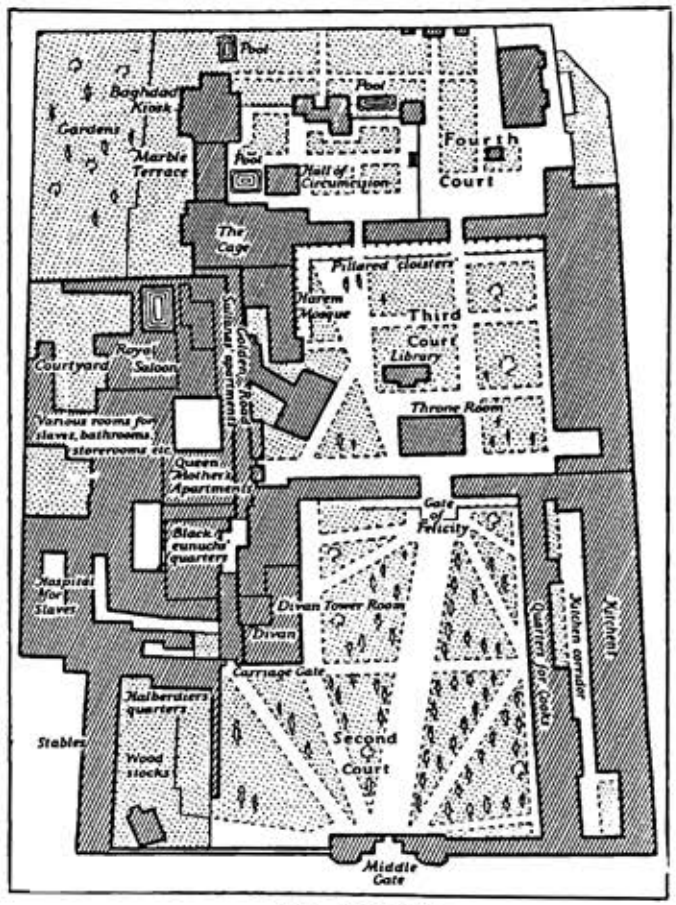
Constantinople



The Seraglio

The sea walls of this impregnable fortress were lapped by the Sea of Marmora and the Golden Horn. A town of some five thousand people was within the city; beyond the inner Gate of Felicity was the harem with its hundreds of slave girls zealously guarded by castrated, pot-bellied black eunuchs. At this time Constantinople was the world's most beautiful city; it stood on seven hills, wrapped in the Bosporus, the Sea of Marmora and the Golden Horn. It was a cosmopolitan city with gently sloping forests of cypress, and its bustling suburb of Pera, across the Horn, with its tile-roofed houses. The Patriarch of the Orthodox Church prayed, not too far from the stables where Sultan Suleiman kept his four thousand horses. In the great covered markets Jews and Islamites (Moors), most of them refugees from Spain, who were expelled by Ferdinand and Isabella, worked side by side, in peace and harmony with one another.

The silk market at Brusa

The Serbians lived in a quarter they called Belgrade, behind the market. The Berbers and Arabs from Africa and the Red Sea toiled in the warehouses which lined the shore, and protected the spices, ivory, silk, pearls, and other items imported by their masters. Although it was a bustling city of many people, it was at peace. It was a hidden world of golden domes and pointed minarets; of dark cypress groves, villas, marble palaces, glittering mosaics or fancy tiles; of artificial lakes and pleasure gardens; of intrigues, lusts and corruptions of the nobility. In the latter half of the sixteenth century, when the Ottoman Empire was at its zenith, no court in Europe was its equal, although Europe was enjoying a golden age of the spirit of Renaissance; in India Akbar became the Emperor, to expand the Moghul Empire; Visili Ivanovitch, the grand prince of Moscow laid the foundation of Russia's political greatness; Pope Leo X had turned Rome into an "heretic garden." And Columbus had stepped onto the shores of the new world, little over three score years before.

About this time Europe had built up its first naval squadrons and its first permanent armies. Yet Suleiman was superior to all the European powers in battle; and in conjunction with his chief architect Sinan, Suleiman built mosques, schools and hospitals, which rivaled the works of the master builders of Europe. Michelangelo was at this time commissioned to work on the dome of St. Peter's; and Francois I had started to rebuild the Louvre. Although Suleiman is credited with having led his soldiers personally into battle in thirteen wars, he also produced an improved code of justice, and imposed severe penalties for theft, bribery, and other corruptions. His standing army of fifty thousand was well paid and content. Suleiman's wisdom, as of all other rulers and warriors, was of the world; and he was a disciple of Aristotle, and he emulated Alexander the Great. Suleiman kept a daily diary when at war, and wrote poetry when at peace.

Suleiman is described as a man of overbearing personality, tall, thin, with a prominent brow, beaming black eyes; and an aquiline nose above long thin moustaches and a thin beard, which partly softened the thin mouth with its trace of hereditary cruelty. His complexion was "as if smoked." He was relentless and proud, and a stickler for protocol, especially for the Friday prayers when the streets were lined with people. Friday was the Islamic Sabbath; and Sultan Suleiman usually prepared to go to prayer in St. Sophia. The Master of the Wardrobe usually laid out all his clothes and gear, scenting them with perfumes. On this day he wore a gown of heavy silk and over it a sleeveless robe, trimmed with ermine. A wide oval turban with an aigrette of peacock feathers, held in place by a clasp of diamonds, was placed upon his head; his white horse was ready, its heavy leather saddle studded with precious gems. And as he left the first court of the Seraglio surrounded by a wall three miles long; here demon-like characters awaited the moment when their lord and master would pass by them in his splendor, set off for the Friday prayer.

The Kislar Aga, Chief Black Eunuch (castrated and pot-bellied).

The Chief Black Eunuch, the Kislar Aga was known as the Master of the Girls; who was the head of the government harem. Immense power and wealth were bestowed upon this man, and he had his own retinue of slaves. He was the only link between the harem and the outside world. The Kislar Aga waited by the Gate of Felicity, dressed in his ceremonial robe (as shown on the left). As all harem eunuchs, he was castrated in Africa, and sold as a slave for a few piastres. Despite the power he wielded, he was crude, ignorant, corrupt, and dangerously capricious.

A thousand menials, or parasites, such as soothsayers and dervishes crowded the first court: the Chief Cook wore a pointed cap, resembling a champagne bottle, with a gigantic spoon on his shoulder; the Chief Armourer carrying the Sultan's sabre in its velvet case; the Chief Huntsman in his horn-shaped cap of gold; the Chief Keeper of the Nightingales; the Custodian of the Heron's Plume; the Overseer of Perfumes; and many other crowded the first courts. On most Fridays guests were bidden to eat with the Sultan. It is said that the groaning tables of Henry VIII, who was three years older than Sultan Suleiman (who was called the Magnificent by the Europeans, and the Legislator within the Empire), could not match the splendor of the gigantic fifty courses served by two hundred attendants in red silk and gold-embroidered hats who formed a file from the enormous domed kitchens; standing close to each other, just as if they had been painted figures. As the guests entered the room, with carpets and cloth of gold hanging from the walls, these attendants, all youths, saluted them, placing their hands on their right thighs and bowing as low as they could; then the guests were seated at a silver table, each dish protected by a cover of black felt lined with white, was passed from man to man until it reached the Sultan and his guests. Only meat killed in the name of the Lord (Allah) was allowed to be eaten. Once each course was finished, the empty dish was borne away with black and white cover reversed.

From every quarter of the Empire, food and other commodities reached Constantinople. Dates, plums and prunes from Egypt; honey from Candia; butter from Moldavia, packed in oxhides and shipped across the Black Sea; oil from Greece; beef preserved in barrels was from cows in calf, called Pastromani -- to Suleiman it was a more savory dish. A hundred and fifty cooks sweated in ten enormous domed kitchens; cooking up to two hundred sheep for the main course of a dinner, which would end with fruit and the favorite sweet of the Empire, called Rahat Lokum. An abundance of sherbets was iced with snow, carried in felt sacks on mules from Mount Olympus to Mudania via the Black Sea, then shipped a distance of some seventy miles to Constantinople, and stored in special pits. The same storage technique had been used by Nero in Rome.

Every whim of the Sultan was pandered by thousands of underlings. The Chief Gardener headed a staff of a thousand undergardeners, all in tall cylindrical red felt hats (the fez). A hundred court calligraphers worked in the tower of the Commissioner of Stationery. Every craft and trade was organized into a proper niche; such as, sixty carpet-layers, two-hundred falconers; fifty confectioners; two-hundred bakers, and so on. Bread was a treasured commodity, and the bakers had their own mosque and received an annual gift of a robe in addition to their fixed salary. The Sultan's bread was pure white loaves made of goat's milk and grain specially imported from the city of Bursa in Anatolia. Each man received a ration according to his rank: a pasha was given ten loaves a day. Bread for the middle classes was not white, but Bursa flour mixed with Greek grain; the court pages ate black Greek bread.

The Divan, or Turkish parliament, sat four days a week, from Saturday to Tuesday. There were five gates leading into the harem, but the main entrances were in the second court behind the Divan, or from the third court. In the third court, beyond the Gate of Felicity, the dusty outside courtyards and milling crowds of officials, gave way to an extensive garden, in the center of which blazed Suleiman's pavilion with cloth-of-gold hangings and shining marble walls. In one corner of the third court a door opened onto the Golden Road, a long, cobbled corridor which separated male and female worlds; leading past the suites of the Queen Mother, the rooms of those female slaves that were elevated to the status of "wives," to the harem mosque.

The harem was not a single building, but an enclosure of pavilions, kiosks, villas; some with terraced gardens or courtyards with pergolas, built on ground sloping from the crest of the hill to the water's edge. And it centered around the most important woman in the Ottoman Empire, the Queen Mother. She ruled the harem, and often the fortune of the Empire also. And Prophet Mohammed's words were obeyed to the letter, for he had said: Paradise is under the feet of thy mother. When her son became Sultan, the new Queen Mother exacted an oath of obedience from every member of the harem.

The necessity of an organized imperial harem came into being, when it had first started as a convenience for a nation's warriors too busy fighting to be burdened with the cankers of doubt and jealousy. Away from their homes for long periods, they found it easier to lock their women up when they were absent, and guard them with hired castrated eunuchs. Out of this practical arrangement, a court with orders to precedence had evolved. Its members ranged from the lowliest slaves sleeping ten in one room, to whom a glance of the sultan's eye sufficed; to those who had the pleasure of the sultan's company, but bore him no offspring; to those who had borne him a son. These became semi-official wives, sultanas or kadins; they were elevated to the position of being directly under the supervision of the Queen Mother, the mother of the Sultan. From this moment onward the sultanas dwelt in their own suites with their own retinues. They were usually limited to the first four who produced boys; after that the court abortionist was called in. The unnatural life of the harem was full of abominations, sorrows, and sufferings; in fact it was and is nothing more than a boarding-house for the confounded females. The Turks called the harem, The Place of Tears. Occasionally a favorite would be married off to someone, but for the most part the women passed their declining years in hopeless living death. The harem of Suleiman the Magnificent contained 300 chambermaids (Odahliqs, concubines or female slaves of the sultan), living in a bewildering assortment of rooms, each one carefully trained to please her lord, each one a pleasure to be bedded. Yet Suleiman the Magnificent, soon after one slave had borne him an heir, was presented with a Russian slave girl Roxelana. And he remained faithful to her until she died.

Thus Suleiman was the tenth sultan of the Ottoman Empire of Islam, beginning his reign in 1520 and ending on the night of 5 September, 1566, when he died in his tent in the midst of a fierce battle. His death was kept a secret for three weeks, his physician having been strangled to make sure there would be no leak until Roxelana's son Selim, who was at this time in Asia Minor, had time to reach Constantinople. For days the corpse, with eyes opened, cheeks reddened, hair tinted black, was propped up on the throne in his tent. The Grand Vizier and a few servants alone knew the secret. And they kept this up through intrigue, by insisting that daily routine should not be broken. And even when the battle ended and the royal tent was struck, Suleiman was seated in the royal carriage so that his stern, unsmiling features could be clearly seen, and cheered by his troops, as he headed for Constantinople.

The news of Suleiman's death was released to them when the cortege reached the forest of Belgrade, near the capital. There Selim his son was proclaimed Sultan. And the priests of the Order of Aaron announced Suleiman's death; great wailings of lamentations re-echoed among the giant trees, so much so that the leaves seemed to tremble in sympathy with the grief of the Empire. Suleiman's corpse was washed, and in accordance with the tradition his hands were laid across his breast, his nose, mouth and ears were stuffed with cotton wool; and finally, just before the corpse was wrapped in a shroud made from a single piece of heavy silk, a priest whispered to the corpse the answers to two questions which the examining angels in Paradise would ask him. Then he was buried, lying on his right side, his head turned towards Mecca, near the great mosque which he and Sinan his architect had built; and the priests were commanded to recite the Revelations of Mohammed (the Koran) forty times a day for forty days.

Thus Selim II, son of Suleiman I, began his reign in 1566, followed by twenty-five other sultans; some were murdered or strangled, yet others were deposed. Their dates of accession are shown below, in parentheses:

In this manner, the Islamic Empire, which began with Mohammed to fulfill the prophecy of Daniel, and to destroy idolatry, and to pervade the earth, had now fulfilled its purpose, every whit. Islam by now became a fully telestial religion; Christianity a terrestrial religion of the double-minded or the hypocrites. And Spiritual Israel, which always believed in all the revelations of the prophets and apostles of the Lord, remains unto this day, the religion of the elect of God, the Saints, priests and kings of His Eternal Kingdom. It is truly the continuation of the religion of Abraham, which is built upon the Righteousness and the Holy Spirit of God, from one generation to the next; its roots going back to the ancient Holy Order of Zarathustra (or the Son of God).

Now, this is a summary of the Islamic dynasties and lines, with their approximate year of origin:

Approximate year of origin		Name of Dynasty or Line

1492 - Jews and Islamites of Spain expelled by Ferdinand and Isabella; and they arrive in mass migrations to the New World, America.

1502 - The Safavid dynasty of Persia is founded by Ismail the Safavid; who takes the title of Shah, and sanctions Shiaism as a state religion of Persia.

CHAPTER SIX

The Sixth Epoch: from Pope Sibinianus to Pope Pius VIII (c. 604 A.D. – c. 1829 A.D.)

We now enter into the Sixth Epoch, an epoch of the popes. By now, one may discern the link between pope Gregory the Great and the Church of Rome and prophet Mohammed of the Arabs. The conditions in Rome continued to deteriorate, both Spiritually and temporally; and as the Church of Rome remained basically a temporal arm of the Kingdom, the Spiritual arm was to continue the work of the Kingdom in the East, through the Commonwealth of Islam; whose power and influence pervaded the world, all its nations, kingdoms, and dominions; even the Church of Rome and all the churches of the world eventually came under the sway of the zeal and power of the Commonwealth of Islam.

In India, Akbar and Shah Jehan of the Moghul empire had embraced Christianity in their private lives, as did many sultans of the Ottoman Empire of Turkey. Also many Jews and Moors (Islamites of Spain), when they reached America after their expulsion, adopted Christianity. As we now begin this Epoch, let us return to Rome, the center of the Christian Empire, and continue the succession of popes, from where we left off; which was after pope Gregory the Great (590 - 604 A.D.), whose reign began when prophet Mohammed was about twenty years old.

65. Sibinianus (Sabinianus, Sabinian)
(September 13, 604 - February 22, 606 A.D.)

Sibinianus was born in Volterra (Blera) of Tuscia; his father's name was Bonus. Gregory sent him on a mission to Constantinople in 593, concerning the title of "universal patriarch" claimed by the bishop of the city. He had no success and was recalled in 597.

During his brief pontificate the harvest of both vines and wheat failed. The populace came to the pope for help. Sibinianus falsely claimed that Gregory had fed the people out of self glory; but Sibinianus himself refused to help them. He conserved the granaries until peace was secure with the Lombard kingdom, and then sold the grain at increased prices.

When Sibinianus died, the procession from the papal residence in the Lateran made a wide detour around the city, to avoid disturbances.

(February 19, 607 - November 12, 607 A.D.)

Boniface served also as Gregory's representative in Constantinople. After his accession, the fruit of his labors in the East was a declaration by the emperor that the Church of Rome was the head of all churches, which was a direct blow to the pretensions of the patriarch of Constantinople. Boniface also held a council at Rome which decreed that three days must elapse after the interment of the last pope before the election of a new one, and that the interval should be spent in prayer and fasting.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant nine months)

67. St. Boniface IV

(August 25, 608 - May 8, 615 A.D.)

Gregory speaks of this Boniface, in his letters, as his right-hand man. He was the son of a physician, and from the area of Pescina. Pope Boniface received the gift of the Pantheon from emperor Phocas and consecrated it to St. Mary.

The first bishop of London, Mellitus, attended a Roman synod at this time to legislate on the life and peace of the monks.

Like Gregory the Great (and Mohammed), this pope turned his own house into a monastery, and a place of worship.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant five months)

68. St. Deusdedit (Adeodatus I)

(October 19, 615 - November 8, 618 A.D.)

Deusdedit was a native Roman, son of a subdeacon. Emperor Phocas had let the empire fall into internal divisions. The principal imperial officer in Italy, the exarch of Ravenna, was murdered as a result of a conspiracy, and the new emperor Heraclius sent a force to Italy and put the rebellion down. As was the custom, the pope was completely loyal to Constantinople and received the imperial general with great favor.

Rome was shaken by an earthquake during this time, followed by an epidemic; and the powers and authorities of the Roman Church were now beginning to shift toward the East, where a prophet of the Lord (Mohammed) was to be glorified.

Deusdedit reversed his predecessor's policy favoring the monks.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year)

(December 23, 619 - October 25, 625 A.D.)

Boniface was a Neopolitan. During his pontificate took place the hegira or flight of Mohammed. Pope Boniface V ordered that the persecuted could find asylum in the churches -- which decree was commonly ignored. He wrote letters to the archbishop of Canterbury. He also wrote a letter to the first Christian king of Northumbria, king Edwin, on his conversion by St. Paulinus. By the time the letter arrived, the king was dead and the infant church almost extinct.

70. Honorius I

(October 27, 625 - October 12, 638 A.D.)

Honorius was a disciple of Gregory the Great. He fostered the mission to the Anglo-Saxon church according to the ideas of its founder. He collected funds for St. Peter's treasury, and tried to administer them correctly. He was an active builder, paying particular attention to the Apostle's Church and the aqueduct Aqua Trajani (now Aqua Paoli), making some attempt to stop the steady decay of the Roman buildings.

In contrast with previous popes of this era, there was no long delay before his election and he was consecrated within a few days of the death of his predecessor.

The decay in Byzantine power in the West continued, resulting in more and more of the administration of Rome falling onto the shoulders of the pope. Honorius added control of the water supplies to that already exercised over its supply of corn. It was from such conditions as these that the temporal power of the papacy was to continue.

During the reign of Honorius, also, the city of Antioch, the rival of Constantinople, the capital of the Roman east, was invaded by the Arabs; and after a small battle outside the city, it was surrendered. Similarly, the greater part of Northern Syria, Jerusalem, Gaza, and Ramleh were taken by the Islamites; and at the battle of Yermuk the Roman army was entirely destroyed.

There was a theological controversy during this time, called monothelitism, which involved the belief that though Christ had two natures, divine and human, he had one will. Some intrigue by the bishop of Constantinople resulted in Honorius approving a doctrinal formula which favored monothelitism and repudiated the decrees of the church council of Chalcedon. The pope was complacent, and not alert to a dangerous formula which was open to misunderstanding in a heretical sense. The progress of the heresy, the clear revelation of its character after Honorius' death, and the use made by the heretics of his approving decrees, later compelled the general council of 680 to condemn Honorius along with the patriarch Sergius. It later raised problems for the doctrine of papal infallibility and was much discussed at the time of the Vatican Council of 1870.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year, seven months)

71. Severinus

(May 28, 640 - August 2, 640 A.D.)

Emperor Heraclius delayed approval of Severinus, a Roman; and used his authority to force through the promulgation of the formulary drawn up by patriarch Sergius, which was unacceptable to orthodox Catholics. The emperor's representative in Italy, exarch Isaac, encouraged a forcible attempt to seize the resources amassed in the Lateran Palace by Honorius I. Imperial troops attacked the Lateran. Severinus resisted for three days, then gave in; and had to look on helplessly as the Church's treasury was confiscated to pay the troops and meet the personal requirements of the emperor's officials. However, the pope also gained confirmation from the emperor and was consecrated a year and seven months after his election. He died a few weeks later, having managed at least to avoid accepting the heretical formulary.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant about five months)

(December 24, 640 - October 12, 642 A.D.)

John IV was a Dalmatian, born in Salonae. He sent abbot Martin to his native country, which was then ravaged by pagan Slavs, to redeem captives and collect relics of martyrs. John had been archdeacon of Rome before his election. He built an oratory connected with St. John Lateran, where he deposited the relics of the martyrs from Dalmatia.

He held a council in Rome immediately after his election and condemned the new heresy and formulary of emperor Heraclius without equivocation. The emperor made no resistance, but admitted the errors. Monotheletism did not disappear at once, but after this time there was no doubt as to the attitude of the Roman Church toward it.

73. Theodore I (Theodorus)

(November 24, 642 - May 14, 649 A.D.)

Theodore I was a Greek born in Jerusalem, whose father had been a bishop and was a native of Jerusalem. By now the rise of Islam was threatening the Byzantine Empire's Near Eastern dominions. The new emperor, Constans II, resisted the condemnation of monotheletism, which would further alienate these provinces. Theodore maintained a firm opposition to the heresy. The deposition of the Constantinople patriarch, Pyrrhus, coincided with Theodore's accession, but was for political reasons, and his successor, Paul, was also heretical. The West remained solidly orthodox, the East took an opposing view, and in Africa ensued a battle between the two parties. The orthodox party was led by a monk, St. Maximus the Confessor, and he converted the condemned patriarch of Constantinople, Pyrrhus, who returned to orthodoxy and was kindly received by Theodore.

The pope summoned patriarch Paul to give an account of his beliefs to prove his orthodoxy. Paul made an evasive reply, relying on the letter sent to his predecessor by pope Honorius I. Theodore excommunicated him. The emperor, trying to stand well with both sides, disavowed the offending formulary of Heraclius, replacing it in 648 by a rule of faith, which was a compromise that avoided the disputed points. However, the pope died before knowledge of this action reached him. Shortly before his death, the reformed patriarch Pyrrhus renounced his conversion and returned to heresy. Not only was he excommunicated, but the pope went down to the tomb of St. Peter, dipped his pen into a consecrated chalice and signed the act of anathema (anatama, soullessness).

74. St. Martin I, Martyr

Martin I was an Italian priest born in Todi (Tuscany), a man of noble birth with a reputation for learning. He had been a papal representative in Constantinople under his predecessor and had first-hand knowledge of the characters of both the emperor and the patriarch. He considered emperor Constans an heretic, and was consecrated without his confirmation. In 649 he summoned a council at the Lateran palace for the purpose of condemning monotheletism with the utmost authority. He presided at every session, but the principal figure was the African, Maximus the Confessor. The council explicitly rejected the rule of Constans, but without condemning the emperor himself. This decision was received well in the West, but rejected in the East. Constans, as soon as he had heard of the pope's decision to hold a council, had ordered the exarch of Ravenna to march to Rome and force the council to accept his rule of faith. However, the exarch made an excuse and marched off to fight in southern Italy instead. By 653, Constans had a reliable man in office at Ravenna, who arrested the pope at the altar in the Lateran basilica, where he had taken up residence.

In the night of 18-19 June, 653, the pope, under military custody, started on the journey from Rome to Constantinople. He endured three months of strict solitary confinement before his trial. The first hearing began on the 20th of December. The judge addressed the pope as "Thou wretch." The pope attempted to defend himself and was rudely interrupted. He was sentenced to death for treason, publicly degraded and stripped of his papal robes. Then he was returned to prison to await death, but was in fact reprieved. Again and again the pope resisted attempts to extract papal consent to monotheletism, and was at last banished to Kherson (Cherson) on the Black Sea. He spent the rest of his life there, often in want of the barest necessities, none coming to his aid. He died after a few months there, and was revered as a saint by both Greeks and Latins, with evidence of his cult found soon after his death.

75. St. Eugene I (Eugenius)

(August 10, 654 - June 2, 657 A.D.)

Eugene, a Roman archpriest, was elected before the death of Martin, but was not considered an anti-pope, being approved even by pope Martin. He was acknowledged as rightful pope on Martin's death on September 16, 655. The emperor approved of Eugene, however Eugene immediately took a strong orthodox stand. He was threatened with persecution from Constantinople, but died before he could be questioned.

76. St. Vitalian

(July 30, 657 - January 27, 672 A.D.)

Vitalian was born in Segni, near Rome. Emperor Constans was now very unpopular, being widely blamed for his treatment of Martin, and Maximus (whom he also imprisoned), as well as for the murder of his brother. He readily confirmed Vitalian, and sent presents. He visited Rome in 663, distributing gifts to the principal churches in Rome, but then allowed the historic treasures of the ancient capital to be plundered, his troops even stripping the bronze tiles off the roof of the pantheon. Constans took up residence in Syracuse. By imperial edict on March 1, 666, the national church of Ravenna was separated from the Church of Rome.

In 664, the conflict between the Celtic and Roman parties over the date of Easter was resolved, and the Church of England now united with the Roman See. The See of Canterbury being vacant, Vitalian chose the aged Greek monk, Theodore of Tarsus, who effectively organized the infant and now united church.

77. Adeodatus II

(April 11, 672 - June 17, 676 A.D.)

A Roman Benedictine monk, Adeodatus was recorded as a kindly and generous man, whose rule was popular in Rome. He restored one of the lesser Roman churches dedicated to St. Peter, and gave some privileges to monasteries.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

78. Donus

(November 2, 676 - April 11, 678 A.D.)

Donus was a Roman, known to have restored a number of famous Roman churches. The emperor, Constantine IV, called a council to Constantinople to discuss the remaining vestiges of the monothelete controversy. Donus died around the time of the beginning of the negotiations.

79. St. Agatho

(June 27, 678 - January 10, 681 A.D.)

Agatho was a Sicilian from Palermo, and a Benedictine monk. He himself ran the treasury of the Roman Church until ill health forced him to appoint the usual treasurer.

During this time, Wilfred, bishop of York, appeared in Rome to plead his case. He had been deprived of his great See, which had been divided into more manageable units by archbishop Theodore of Canterbury. Agatho, like his successors, supported Wilfred to a point, but refused to upset archbishop Theodore's arrangements for the English Church.

In this pontificate the Sixth General Council was held at Constantinople, in 680, it falling on Agatho to answer the letter sent by emperor Constantine to his predecessor, Donus. Agatho received the idea of a new council with enthusiasm; he instructed the churches of the West to hold provincial councils to consider the question of the monotheletist heresy. Most of these professions of faith had been received in Rome by Easter, 680, and Agatho then held a meeting of Italian bishops who drew up an agreed profession of faith for the whole Latin West. Three bishops representing the pope and bearing this uncompromising condemnation of the monotheletist doctrines were sent to Constantinople. The emperor then ordered the patriarch to hold a council, which assembled in November, 680, and accepted the Roman position in its entirety, condemning the principal adherents of the heresy, including with them pope Honorius. Agatho died before the acts of the council could reach him, but it was nonetheless a personal triumph.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year seven months)

80. St. Leo II

(August 17, 682 - July 3, 683 A.D.)

Leo II was a Sicilian doctor, born in Messina, and a Benedictine monk. He is praised as being charitable, a lover of poverty, a fine singer, learned and able to speak Greek. His pontificate was concerned mainly with the reception and dissemination of the decrees of the Sixth General Council. He implied that he did not think Honorius actually heretical, writing about him that "He did not extinguish at once the incipient flame of heretical error, as befitted Apostolic authority, but by his negligence nourished the same."

He restored a number of Roman churches and built a new one, St. George in Velabro, which centuries later was to be the titular church of Cardinal Newman.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year)

81. St. Benedict II

(June 26, 684 - May 8, 685 A.D.)

St. Benedict was a Roman Benedictine who had served the Roman Church from his youth. His excellent character was praised by contemporaries.

He obtained a concession from the emperor; a newly elected pope now no longer had to wait for imperial confirmation before he could be consecrated. This duty was transferred to the governor at Ravenna, which would save months of delay. This was an instance of the improved relations between Rome and Constantinople which followed the Sixth General Council.

82. John V

(July 23, 685 - August 2, 686 A.D.)

A Syrian, born in Antioch, John had been present at the council of Constantinople and was on excellent terms with the imperial court. He was the first of a series of popes of Syrian or Greek origin. He was consecrated immediately upon election on the authority of the privilege given his predecessor. He enforced the decree of St. Martin I bringing the Church of Sardinia directly under the authority of the Roman See.

83. Conon

(October 21, 686 - September 21, 687 A.D.)

Conon was from Thrace. With the relaxation of the imperial control over papal elections came greater danger from the intervention of laymen, usually members of the principal aristocratic families of Rome. On the death of John V, the clergy wanted one candidate, the laymen another. Conon, son of a soldier, educated in Sicily, was elected as a compromise candidate.

Conon's relations with the new emperor, Justinian II, were excellent. The emperor remitted some of the taxes due from papal patrimony in southern Italy.

A deacon, Constantine, who was appointed by Conon to an important official post in Sicily, proved unworthy, and Conon was censured by contemporaries for this appointment.

The pope sent Kilian to work as a missionary in Germany.

Theodore was anti-pope to Conon during the latter part of his term.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant three months)

84. St. Sergius I

(December 15, 687 - September 8, 701 A.D.)

While pope Conon lay dying, Pascal (Paschal), the archdeacon of Rome, secretly offered the exarch of Ravenna money to secure his election to the Holy See. The exarch agreed, and a substantial following was created for Pascal when Conon died. Both Pascal and Theodore, who had been a candidate at the death of John V, claimed to have been validly elected, and their partisans each held a part of the Lateran Palace. A third man was proposed, Sergius, a Syrian by descent, but native of Palermo; a Benedictine. Theodore gave way and acknowledged Sergius as pope. Pascal refused and was deposed; all this occurred in 687. Pascal appealed to the exarch, who would only recognize Sergius on promise of payment of the bribe originally offered by Pascal.

Justinian II called a general council, known as the Quinisext; it was concerned with the new situation in the East where the old church order had been overturned by Islamite invasions. Even though no Western bishops were present, and the pope was represented only by his resident envoys, Justinian expected the results to be binding on all the Church. Sergius' envoys signed the document, but Sergius repudiated the signature and refused to receive a copy of the document. Justinian decided to arrest the pope and bring him to Constantinople; however, Sergius had no trouble defying the emperor, using the military. Justinian was later deposed and exiled.

Sergius commissioned and blessed the disciple of Wilfred (bishop of York), Willibrord, to begin the Anglo-Saxon mission to the Rhineland. Willibrord worked in the Frisian area, founding both the monastery of Echternach in Luxembourg, and the See of Utrecht.

Sergius also reconciled a long-standing conflict in north-west Italy, which led to temporarily improved relations with the Lombard kingdom.

85. John VI

(October 30, 701 - January 11, 705 A.D.)

John VI was a Greek, and a Benedictine. During his time the exarch of Ravenna passed through Rome on his way from Sicily, and the Roman populace rose against him. Only the loyal efforts of the pope saved him from insult and injury. Freed from fear of imperial reprisals, the Lombards began to press against central Italy, and the Lombard duke of Benevento seized one of the important Roman granary towns.

86. John VII

(March 1, 705 - October 18, 707 A.D.)

John VII was a Greek, born in Rossano. In the same year he was elected, Justinian II recovered the throne, and deposed the patriarch of Constantinople, cutting his eyes out and sending him to the pope. Justinian sent the acts of the Quinisext to the pope, inviting him to hold a council of Western bishops to consider it. John VII returned the acts to Constantinople without comment. John VII was an indifferent, solemn and pious man; and is one of the few popes depicted with a square halo around his head.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant three months)

87. Sisinnius

(January 15, 708 - February 4, 708 A.D.)

A Syrian, Sisinnius reigned only 21 days. He was an old man, crippled with gout. He ordered the reconstruction and strengthening of the walls of Rome.

88. Constantine

(March 25, 708 - April 9, 715 A.D.)

Justinian II, having sacked the city of Ravenna and blinded its archbishop, summoned the new pope, the Syrian Constantine, to meet him in Constantinople to settle the matter of the acts of the Quinisext council. Courageously, Constantine went in 710, and was well received. Constantine was accompanied, among others, by deacon Gregory, who was to be his successor. Negotiations were held, and Justinian gave way on some points.

Soon after Constantine's return to Rome, Justinian was murdered, and the new emperor was a declared monothelete, who replaced bishops with heretical ones where he could, and sent the pope a copy of an edict rehabilitating those condemned by the Sixth General Council, accompanied by the severed head of Justinian II. Constantine refused to recognize the new emperor in any way; and the new emperor was replaced in 713 by Anastasius II.

89. St. Gregory II

(May 19, 715 - February 11, 731 A.D.)

Gregory II was a Roman, a Benedictine, and had been papal librarian. He had served the papal See since youth, and had accompanied Constantine on his delicate negotiations with Justinian II.

In the winter of 718 - 719, Gregory received an English Benedictine named Winfrid, a man of forty-six, who had decided to "wander for Christ." He had already done missionary work among the Frisians and Danes, without authority from Rome. He wanted to start a large band of missionaries and set up houses of Benedictine nuns. The Word of God would be the principal tool. The newly converted would not be left alone, for Winfrid intended to leave behind him in each district a few fellow-monks and priests. They would live at first in simple log huts, which would later grow into monasteries. Each community should be economically self-supporting, and in accordance with the Benedictine motto of "prayer and work," the missionaries would become peasants with ploughed fields, vineyards, market gardens and farms. In this way they would share the life of the local population from one year's end to another.

Gregory agreed to Winfrid's proposals, and gave him a new name, Boniface, after the Roman martyr. His schemes were carried out to the last detail, and in his own generation achieved a great and lasting success.

He continually consulted Rome to be fully certain if he were acting correctly, asking questions such as whether one might eat bacon or horse-flesh, crows or storks; and whether nuns as well as monks were to wash their feet. On St. Andrew's Day in November, 722, the pope appointed the tireless missionary a bishop, calling him Episcopus Regionarius, as the See and boundaries of his diocese were not fixed. Charles Martel, ruler of the Frankish empire, recommended him so strongly that Boniface was able not only to lead the people to Christianity without hindrance, but also to stop sacrifices to heathen cult-objects and idols.

In 717 a new and able emperor, Leo, an Isaurian (from an ancient district in east Pisidia, south Asia Minor, on the north slope of the west Taurus mountains) from southern Turkey, took over the Byzantine empire. He drove the Arab Islamites from the walls of Constantinople. The persistently heretical provinces of the empire had passed to Islamic rule, and religious peace prevailed in those that remained.

Emperor Leo now began a powerful campaign against the cult of icons, against the worship of pictures and images. In 727, he ordered the destruction of a famous icon of Our Lord set in the principal door of the imperial palace. This was his first overt act of iconoclasm, or destruction of images, and it inaugurated a movement of great violence, and helped to create a deep estrangement between Latin and Greek.

Gregory wrote to Leo, "You say that we worship stones, walls and beams. It is only ignorance that makes you say such things, for we fashion images only as a reminder of those whose names they bear, whose features they represent, so that our dull and brutish spirits may thereby be uplifted!" "All the peoples of the West regard with faithful veneration him whose image you so boastfully propose to throw down and destroy -- the holy Peter, whom all the kingdoms of the West look upon as God on earth . . . Send your people; we are innocent of the blood that they will shed; it is on your head it will fall."

Emperor Leo formally forbade the cult of images by imperial edict and deposed the orthodox patriarch, replacing him by an iconoclast, Anastasius. Anastasius sought papal recognition, but Gregory refused even to receive his envoy. The emperor ordered the deposition of Gregory II, and Gregory retorted with a sentence of excommunication. Troops under the command of exarch Paul marched to arrest the pope. Help arrived from the Lombards, who drove off the exarch. The Lombards were now orthodox Catholics, and their king, Luitprand, knelt before Gregory and dedicated his sword and crown at the altar of St. Peter's. But Gregory, reasoning that a distant tyrant was better than a local one, entered into negotiations with the exarch.

Gregory died at this point, and the negotiations were left to his successor.

90. St. Gregory III

(March 18, 731 - November, 741 A.D.)

Gregory III was a Syrian, and a Benedictine; and one of the senior Roman clergy. He was the last pope to have his election confirmed by the exarch of Ravenna in the name of the emperor. Boniface (Wilfrid) at this time was still building the Church in Germany. In 737 he visited

Rome and delivered a report of his great success. The missionary now wanted to leave these activities to those he had trained and go on in newer and less pleasant fields; but the pope, gently refusing this request, conferred upon him the honors of increased authority, and sent him back as legate to deal with the episcopacy he had created.

The pope continued with the struggle against emperor Leo, the iconoclast. A council was held in Rome in November, 731, which was attended by 93 Italian bishops; the council condemned the image-breakers. Leo assembled an armada for an attack on Rome, and seized properties of the Roman Church in Illyria, Sicily, and southern Italy. He withdrew the Balkan provinces from their customary direct subordination to the bishop of Rome, and put them under the patriarchate of Constantinople, furthering the development of the controversial and conflicting Greek church.

In spite of Leo's heresy, Gregory maintained the Byzantine position against the Lombard invaders, and succeeded in saving Ravenna. He appealed for aid to Charles Martel, the ruler of the Franks, by sending a symbolic gift, a part of Peter's chains, and the key of the Apostle's tomb. Charles accepted the gift, assured the bearers of his friendliness to the donor, and sent an ambassador to Rome. However Charles died shortly after this, and Gregory III died a month later.

91. St. Zachary (Zacharius)
(December 10, 741 - March 22, 752 A.D.)

Zachary, a Greek and a Benedictine, was the first of the popes since the early popes, to be elected without any reference to imperial authority. However he did everything he could to preserve Byzantine authority in Italy. The new emperor also was against sacred images, but did not take any action nor press the issue.

King Luitprand of the Lombards made ready to invade the Roman provinces. Zachary went out to meet him; the troops were halted and four cities which had been in the past taken from the Romans were now returned to their jurisdiction. Again a year later, the Lombards were determined to give battle at Ravenna, and Zachary brought peace. Soon after this incident Luitprand died, and his successor, Ratchis, eventually renounced his rank, and entered the Benedictine abbey of Monte Cassino as a monk, his wife and daughter founding a Benedictine nunnery in the vicinity.

Pepin, son of Charles Martel, was now leader of the Franks and from him an embassy, consisting of bishop Burkard of Wurzburg, and his chaplain, came to Rome with an unprecedented and historic request. Pepin wanted the pope's approval to be crowned king of the Franks. For three generations his family had successfully led the Frankish people and had virtually exercised all the prerogatives of kingship except for the royal title, which was still vested in the remaining few descendants of Clovis. The last of this once noble, but now debased, family was Childeric III, an unhappy weakling whom Pepin could have disposed of in any manner he wished. But instead of violence he preferred to seek the sanction of a higher authority. "Whosoever has the power is king," was the pope's decision. The unprotesting Childeric was then admitted to the clerical state by shaving of a portion of the head, and ushered from a turbulent world to the peace of a monastery where he at least found honorable seclusion. Pepin, kneeling in solemn ceremony before Boniface was, by authority of the pope, consecrated king of the Franks.

92. Stephen II

(March 23, 752 - March 25, 752 A.D.)

Stephen II was a native Roman priest, and was elected immediately on the death of Zachary. He died three days later, without being consecrated.

93. Stephen III (II)

(March 26, 752 - April 26, 757 A.D.)

A deacon who had been brought up from childhood in the Lateran Palace, Stephen III faced a desperate situation in Rome. Ravenna had been taken over by king Aistulf of the Lombards, who demanded a yearly poll tax of one gold solidus (the golden coin of the ancient Romans) for every Roman citizen. Stephen sent an embassy of abbots, including his brother, to Aistulf, and also sent for help to Constantinople, neither of which availed. A pilgrim was sent with a secret letter to Pepin, king of the Franks, and after initial agreement, conveyed by the king's ambassadors, the pope left Rome in October, 753, to cross the Alps. The Lombards protested, but the pope was protected by Pepin's honor guard, and passed through successfully. On January 6, 754, the two men met at the royal palace of Ponthion, south of Chalons-sur-Marne. Pepin rode out to meet the pope, dismounted and knelt, and led the palfry of Stephen III to the palace. The next day the pope, in the garb of a penitent, with ashes on his head, begged for support.

Pepin gave orders for the pope to be escorted to winter quarters at the abbey of Saint-Denis, near Paris. There the pope fell ill, but gradually recovered, and on April 14, 754, the Franco-Roman pact, and the "Donation of Pepin" were signed at the chateau of Quierzy near Laon. The pope named Pepin as Defender, Protector and advocate of the Church.

Ravenna was cleared of the Lombards, and a treaty signed; shortly after, the Lombards broke the treaty and advanced on Rome from three sides. Rome was besieged for three months, and attack after attack was made on the city. In the spring of 756, Pepin crossed the Alps and slowly but steadily drove back the Lombards. Pepin's Donation laid down the boundaries of the sovereign possessions of the Church. The emperor in Constantinople laid down counter claims, but without any enforcement. The papal emissaries travelled from one to another of the cities re-assigned to the Church and received their keys, to be laid on Peter's tomb, together with the deed of gift. The event marks the historic inauguration of the States of the Church. Stephen III had become the founder of the Papal States.

Stephen was known for his great charity, and he restored four hospitals. During his pontificate the aged Boniface (Winfrid) was martyred.

94. St. Paul I

(May 29, 757 - June 28, 767 A.D.)

The brother of Stephen III was chosen as his successor. Paul announced his election and sought permission for consecration from king Pepin of the Franks.

Desiderius was now king of the Lombards, and he proposed to the Byzantine emperor an alliance to combat the power of the Franks; but this never came about.

Abuse of privilege and rank was now common in both civil and ecclesiastical circles, and intrigue abounded. Paul made efforts to curb this.

95. Stephen IV (III)

(August 1 [7], 768 - January 24 or February 3, 772 A.D.)

(Anti-pope Constantine II usurped the See on 5 July, 767, and was murdered in 769; also, Philip the priest, the vassal of the Lombards, was also anti-pope with him in 768.)

A Benedictine, and a Sicilian, born in Syracuse, Stephen IV was the papal choice of Christopher, chief of the priestly college of Rome, after the papacy had been seized by Constantine II, and also claimed by the Lombard tool, Philip. Christopher rallied the majority of the Romans, both lay and clerical, to elect Stephen. Constantine II's eyes were put out by the Lombards; and under Stephen he was sentenced to life imprisonment in a monastery cell.

Stephen's election was followed by a massacre among the supporters of the anti-popes. Stephen sent to king Pepin inviting him to send some bishops to Rome to regularize his position; when the letter arrived, Pepin was dead, and had been succeeded by his two sons Charlemagne (Charles) and Carloman. The two brothers recognized Stephen as pope and sent a number of bishops to a council held in the Lateran Palace in 769. Here the election of Stephen III was confirmed; and it was decreed that in the future only the clergy might elect a pope.

The Lombard king Desiderius now arranged a match between his daughter and Charlemagne. This aroused doubt and suspicion in Rome. There was another march on Rome by the Lombards and at the conclusion of the episode, Christopher was seized by the Lombards and put to death. Christopher's crime was advocacy of the traditional resistence to the Lombards. Stephen sought to excuse himself for allowing this by claiming that Christopher had plotted against his life and he had been "rescued" by the pious king of the Lombards. Stephen meekly submitted to the protection of Desiderius from whom death liberated him on February 3, 772.

96. Adrian I (Ad)

(February 1 [9], 772 - December 25, 795 A.D.)

Adrian was a Roman and a patrician. He had made his career in the papal service and his uncle was one of the principal aristocratic warriors of Rome. On his accession, he rejected Lombardian intrigues, expelled their agents; and in preparation for their certain revenge, formed a militia of his own. He began his reign, not with a massacre of political opponents, but with a general amnesty and reconciliation.

In 773, Lombard king Desiderius headed toward Rome. Ordered to withdraw by Adrian, he heard also from Charlemagne that the Franks would support the pope. Charlemagne, however, was faced with many difficulties and wished to avoid a war with the Lombards. He sought to persuade Desiderius to make peace with the pope and leave his domains alone. Desiderius refused. Charlemagne marched his troops across the Alps with surprising swiftness and after attacking and defeating the Lombards at Verma, surrounded their ruler in his own capital. Leaving his generals to continue the siege, he pressed on to Rome, arriving in time to celebrate the festival of Easter. Acclamations and imperial honors greeted his entrance to the city, but he preferred to enter as a pilgrim. On his knees, kissing each step, he made his way up the steps of St. Peter's while a huge choir of monks chanted "Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini." Adrian raised him to his feet and embraced him. In a few days Rome was elated to learn that Charlemagne had renewed the donation of Pepin. He also guaranteed the rights of the papacy to extensive domains in central Italy.

In 787, Charlemagne returned to Italy, decisively defeated Desiderius, and took for himself kingship of the Lombard people. The Lombard kingdom had vanished forever.

Charlemagne was also a zealous Christian and earnestly wished to carry on the work of Boniface in reforming and perfecting the Frankish Church. He felt strongly that the law of the Church, the sacred canons (dogmatic Church regulations), ought to be consistent; he asked pope Adrian to help him achieve this. While he was in Rome in 774, Adrian gave him the first authoritative papal collection of canon law. It was based on a sixth century compilation enriched and brought up to date by Adrian. Its circulation throughout the West on Charlemagne's command made Catholics accustomed to see the pope as the ultimate source of the Church's law in lesser, as well as essential, matters. Charlemagne also wished to provide a more uniform liturgy (body of rites prescribed for public worship) and in about 785 asked Adrian to provide him with a text. No complete missal (book containing all that is said or sung at Mass in an entire year) then existed, even in Rome, and Adrian sent only a text used for certain papal occasions. This was supplemented by the addition of many liturgical customs from Gaul. The final compilation was the work of Charlemagne's English advisor, Alcuin. The effect of his work was to standardize the canon of the Mass in roughly its present form.

Adrian also played his part in the ending of the image-destroying heresy. The new government in Constantinople was favorable to the restoration of orthodoxy and the images, but the army was now ardently heretical and nothing much was done until 784. The patriarch of Constantinople, until this time an iconoclast, repented, abdicated, and advised the empress Irene to hold a council to restore orthodoxy. Pope Adrian was accordingly contacted and invited to attend or send a strong delegation. The council began its sessions at Constantinople but had to be moved to Nicea owing to the opposition of the imperial guard where it met in 787. The council remains the authoritative source for the rules governing the proper use of holy pictures. A text of the council's acts reached the West and Charlemagne rejected them; and Adrian did not criticize this.

Adrian I died on Christmas Day, 795.

97. St. Leo III

(December 26 (27), 795 - June 12, 816 A.D.)

Leo III was elected on the day after Adrian's death. He was a Roman, but did not belong to the aristocracy. He had made a career of ecclesiastical service and was a cardinal priest on his election. He did not ask Charlemagne's permission before consecration, but notified him immediately after.

The Roman aristocracy was hostile to Leo from the start. A band of the previous pope's supporters staged a meeting, on April 25, 799, as pope Leo III was leading a procession for the blessing of fields and crops. Armed and masked men rushed at the pope, drove off his attendants, pulled him off his horse and stabbed him in the face; then he was taken to the Greek monastery, whose abbot was in league with the conspirators. During the night, Leo's supporters managed to overcome the guards and bring Leo back home to St. Peter's. The two parties were still fighting each other in the streets and the city was in an uproar. The pope was rescued and removed from Rome by the Frankish duke Urnigus of Spoleto. From Spoleto the pope left with a large retinue to journey to Paderborn in Central Germany. This was the first visit made by a pope to Germany. Leo was received with full honors by the 57-year old Charlemagne. Three times the army knelt before the pope and vowed to protect the Church.

Shortly afterward, an embassy of Leo's adversaries arrived from Rome. They charged Leo with adultery and perjury. However, according to established custom, no secular power could sit in judgement on the pope. Charlemagne returned Leo to Rome after a six months absence, and after another half year, the final investigations were held. They lasted for seven days. On December 1st, 800, there was a great Church assembly in St. Peter's. All the archbishops and more important bishops were present, as well as the clergy and nobility of Rome, Frankish nobles, diplomats, the household of the Frankish sovereign, and the members of the commission which had been interrogating the pope and the rebels for many weeks. Charlemagne, king of the Franks, presided over the council proceedings. The result of the trial was arranged before it started. Charlemagne opened the proceedings. The synod began with the prelates declaring, "We do not presume to judge the Apostolic See, which is the head of all the Churches, for we ourselves are judged by it, and it, according to ancient custom, can be judged by none. In this case too we shall canonically concur with what the pope himself decides." Leo said, "I follow in the footsteps of those that have gone before and am ready to cleanse myself from the false accusations."

In the main session of December 23rd, the pope ascended the ambo (the raised platform of an early Christian church. It was oblong in shape, with two spaces, one on the north side for the reading of the Gospels, and one on the south for reading the Epistles. The two were later replaced by the pulpit.) Leo held the Gospel in his ringed hand when he took the oath of compurgation -- of his own free will, he emphasized, in no way binding on his successors.

The first imperial coronation, 800 A.D.; pope Leo III crowned Charlemagne at the Apostle's tomb.

On Christmas day, 800, Charlemagne came to St. Peter's with a large retinue for Christmas Mass. As he prayed on his knees in front of the confessio (crypt) of Apostle Peter, the pope approached and placed the golden crown on his head. Three times the congregation cried, "To Charles, the most pious, crowned Augustus by God, to the great peace-making emperor, long life and victory. The pope bent the knee to Charlemagne, in homage to the new emperor. The title of emperor implied that the man who bore it was the leader of the lay section of Christendom. In the future it was taken for granted that it was the emperor's job to intervene at Rome when scandalous elections occurred and if necessary he might even depose popes. Charlemagne's views of the alliance between the Church and State were expounded by him on one occasion in the following terms: "Our task is externally, with God's help, to defend with our arms the holy Church of Christ against attacks by the heathen from any side and against devastation by the infidels, and internally to strengthen the Church by recognition of the Catholic faith. Your share, Most Holy Father, is to support our army with hands upraised to God, as did Moses in ancient days, so that the Christian people, thanks to the blessing of God that your intercession will bring us, may always and everywhere gain the victory over the enemies of His Holy Name, and that the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified throughout the world." The emperor even issued precise instructions concerning baptism. There was to be an end of total immersion; the neophyte was to be merely sprinkled. The sacrament should be dispensed only on the great feast days.

In 814, Charlemagne died and was succeeded by his son, Louis the Pious. Trouble immediately broke out in Rome, and was put down by pope Leo, with much bloodshed. Complaints reached Louis in France. Leo once again justified himself, this time by letter. Shortly afterward, on June 12, 816, he died.

Pope Leo III adopted the golden crown which was donated by Constantine to bishop Sylvester I and his successors in the fourth century, which had not been used up to this time.

(June 22, 816 - January 24, 817 A.D.)

Stephen V was a Roman aristocrat, a protege of Adrian I, and one of his few recorded acts was to obtain the repeal of the exile of the leaders of the opposition to Leo III. He did not seek imperial permission before his consecration, but once consecrated, travelled to Rheims, France, to visit king Louis. There he crowned the emperor and his wife, using a special crown provided for the occasion to crown the emperor, which had been worn by emperor Constantine nearly five hundred years before. Stephen returned to Rome, where he died almost immediately on January 24, 817.

99. St. Paschal I (Pascal)

(January 25, 817 - February 11, 824 A.D.)

Paschal was a native Roman and a Benedictine monk. Emperor Louis, like Charlemagne, took an active part in reform of the Church. He sent some of the clerics off to monasteries, and he banned swords and spurs from being worn by the clerics.

Paschal formulated a written pact, which Louis agreed to through his ambassadors, which guaranteed the Italian possessions secured for the Holy See by Charlemagne, while removing from the emperor all but nominal suzerainty over the domain. Supporters of Louis' son Lothair, whom Louis had made co-emperor in 817, tried to destroy the treaty. They failed, and supporters of the pope captured, blinded and killed their leaders. Once again Louis was shocked, and sent an embassy to make investigation. Paschal, under a solemn and voluntary oath, swore that he had nothing to do with the deed, but refused to allow imperial envoys to apprehend the perpetrators, stating that the murdered officials had been guilty of treason and deserved their end.

Paschal was magnificently hospitable to orthodox Catholics who were fleeing from the persecution of the Byzantine tyrant Leo the Armenian. Paschal erected hospices and monasteries, and opened the gates wide to the needy. He also founded and restored many important buildings throughout Rome.

When Paschal died, the Roman nobility refused to allow his burial in St. Peter's until they had secured the election of their nominee as his successor.

100. Eugene II (Eugenius)

(February [May], 824 - August, 827 A.D.)

The pro-Frankish party caused the election of Eugene II, a Roman who supported the imperial power. He openly rewarded those who had suffered for their part in the rebellion against the late pope.

Emperor Louis sent his son Lothair to Rome and he and the new pope worked out the Constitutio Lothari, which allowed the laity some say in the election of a pope; it was also decreed that an imperial representative must be present at a pope's coronation.

Eugene held a Roman council in 826 which passed excellent reforming measures. Illiterate clerics were to be suspended, new schools established, and doctors of learning were to dwell with bishops.

101. Valentine

(August, 827 - September, 827 A.D.)

Valentine, a Roman archdeacon, was elected by the Roman nobility as well as the clergy. However he died a month after his election.

102. Gregory IV

(October, 827 - January 25, 844 A.D.)

Gregory IV was a Benedictine monk. He was elected by the same group which had elected Valentine. Several months elapsed before the official consecration, since the pope now had to await imperial sanction before taking office. In 833, emperor Louis' eldest son, Lothair, led a revolt against the emperor and his youngest son Charles. The pope thought it his duty to mediate and accompanied Lothair's army into Francia. Since he had crossed the Alps with Lothair's army, Louis considered him partisan. The Frankish bishops were shocked and dismayed by what they regarded as papal backing for a rebellion against legitimate authority. There was even talk of deposing the pope. By now Lothair was losing ground and asked the pope to mediate. This the pope did gladly and in good faith, and found that Lothair had no intention of negotiating, but was playing for time. The pope, realizing that he had been a pawn in the game, retired to Rome and abandoned his attempts to intervene in the quarrels of the imperial family.

The Islamites began the conflict with Sicily in 825, seizing it in 831, and began to raid the Italian coast, threatening Rome itself. To combat them Gregory had built a fortress at the mouth of the Tiber (present day Ostia).

In 840 king Louis died, and his empire was divided among his three sons, Charles the Bald, who took France, Louis the German, who took everything east of Lothair's portion, which was Italy and a few provinces of Gaul. The empire was at an end and the papacy without a protector.

In the east, the heresy of image-breaking broke out again, but in 842 the last heretical Byzantine emperor died and orthodoxy was reestablished. Such distance existed between Greek and Latin that the pope was neither consulted nor notified.

During Gregory's reign the faith was taken to Scandinavia, and St. Anscar, apostle of the north, was sent the pallium (an episcopal vestment) and authority of legate to the Swedes, Danes, and Slavs. Across the seas to the archbishop of Canterbury and to Salzburg went the Catholic religion, along with lengthy letters of advice and guidance.

103. Sergius II

Sergius II, a Roman, was elected by the Roman nobility against the wishes of the papal clerics. The clerical party wished to elect John, the archdeacon of Rome, but the aristocratic party rushed through the election of Sergius, a noble himself and a relative of pope Stephen V.

Sergius ignored the custom of obtaining imperial sanction, an oversight quickly resented by Lothair, who sent an army headed by his son, the future emperor Louis, to demand explanation. In Rome, long discussions were held, the pope proclaiming amity. A ceremony was held in which the pope placed the golden circlet of kingship upon Louis. Bishop Drogo of Metz was appointed papal legate and vicar of the Holy See for Christendom north of the Alps, which subjected all the archbishops of Francia to him.

The real power behind this and other acts of the pope was his brother Benedict, who inaugurated a reign of unrestrained simony. Benefices, sees, honors of any kind, were put on sale at the Lateran and the pope made no protest. While his brother plundered, Sergius exercised his gluttonous appetite at the delights of the table.

In August, 846, a fleet of Islamites seized Ostia and besieged Rome. St. Peter's and St. Paul's were both sacked before the invaders retired with their booty. Louis, who ruled Italy in the name of his father the emperor, came south with an army and was defeated by the Islamites at Gaeta.

Sergius died shortly after.

104. St. Leo IV

(April 1 [10], 847 - July 17, 855 A.D.)

Leo IV miraculously quells a fire in Borgo.

Leo was a Roman with strong sympathies toward the monastic orders. He was unanimously elected, and had a reputation for being holy and devout. He was not immediately consecrated, but after some hesitation had himself consecrated without imperial permission, though taking care to assure emperor Lothair of his loyalty after the event.

Leo began in 848 to repair and extend the Aurelian wall, and rebuilt fifteen of the towers which served as strong points. He improved the defenses of St. Peter's by surrounding Vatican Hill with a new wall. This was called the Leonine Wall in his honor and inauguration of the the wall took place on June 27, 852. It enclosed the Vatican quarter, which had the Castel Sant' Angelo as its citadel; this quarter was afterward known as the Leonine City.

In 850, Leo crowned Louis, son of Lothair, emperor (co-emperor with Lothair).

Pilgrims came to Rome to pay tribute, and for pontifical blessings, and among them was the young Anglo-Saxon, Alfred, afterwards called the Great, and his father Ethelwulf. Leo adopted Alfred as his godson, and placed the circlet of consecrated gold on his head, making him the first and only English king crowned in Rome.

There was a disputed succession to the See of Rheims at this time, and Leo confirmed Hincman (Hinkman), who was a compromise candidate between the Franks and the Germans.

Somewhat alarmed by Leo's vigorous and independent policies, Lothair began to prepare for the next papal election by giving his favor to priest Anastasius. Leo ordered Anastasius to leave Lothair's court, and return to Rome. Anastasius refused to return, and Leo pronounced a sentence of excommunication on him, and on any who would support him in a papal election. Leo died shortly after this pronouncement.

105. Benedict III

(July [September 29], 855 - April 17, 858 A.D.)

On Leo's death, the Romans elected Benedict, a Roman cardinal priest. There is a legend of a female pope, Joan, whose sex is said to have been discovered only when she gave birth to a child, and died shortly after. Among the papal busts in the Siena Cathedral in the sixteenth century was one of "John VIII, a woman from England," but Clement VIII (1758-1769) converted it into a bust of pope Zachary. From the ninth to the sixteenth century there was a tradition of an examination which the successors of pope Joan had to undergo in order to prove their sex. At the enthronement ceremony a chair with an open seat, called the sella stercoraria was said to have been used. A deacon gave the desired information by shouting "Habet!" whereupon the people replied with "Deo gratis."

On the election of Benedict, emperor Lothair sent Anastasius to Rome, and announced that he would not sanction the appointment of Benedict. The large military escort which accompanied Anastasius arrested Benedict, and installed Anastasius by means of force of arms. The clergy refused to accept this, and when the populace supported the churchmen, the emperor's envoys escorted the legitimate pope back to his honors, and Anastasius was made abbot of St. Maria in Trastavere.

Benedict expressed himself strongly on the distressed state of Gaul and rebuked the Gaulish bishops for decadence. He did not hesitate to depose bishops he believed unworthy.

Emperor Louis II visited Rome in 858, and shortly after his departure, Benedict died, at which event Louis returned to Rome.

106. St. Nicholas the Great

(April 24, 858 - November 13, 867 A.D.)

Louis' presence in Rome secured the election of Roman deacon Nicholas, a priest with a reputation for piety, eloquence and learning. Emperor Lothair died late the same year.

During this time, the Carolingian empire (Charlemagne's empire) was divided between various younger members of the house of Charlemagne, in a shifting disorder of territories ranging in size from kingdoms to fortified villages. By virtue of ownership of property and the formation of the feudal system, various bishops also assumed sovereign status as temporal rulers. Allegiance to Rome was difficult for prelates of this type, but Nicholas demanded observance of the rights due to the Holy See. When Hincman, the powerful archbishop of Rheims, deposed a bishop, then imprisoned him for appealing to Rome, the pope annulled the sentence and reinstated the victim. Even more drastic was his treatment of another important prelate, the archbishop of Ravenna whom the pope excommunicated for misgovernment, despite protests from the emperor.

The papal representatives in the Frankish kingdom were reminded by Nicholas of the difference between secular laws and the laws of Christian morals: "Observe whether they rule rightly, otherwise they must be looked upon as tyrants rather than as kings, whom we must resist and oppose, rather than subject ourselves to them. For we should have to countenance their failings if we were subjected to them instead of being placed in authority over them."

Nicholas was also involved in a dispute which occurred in the royal family of Lothair II, nephew of emperor Louis, and son of Charles the Bald, who ruled between the Rhine and the Meuse. In 857, for state reasons, a marriage between Theutberga, a Burgundian countess, was effected, though Lothair had been living for years with a noblewoman of Lorraine and had three children by her. Theutberga being childless, Lothair wished to divorce her, and marry his mistress. The king found several bishops who were willing to oblige him, and in 862 he married the mistress and had himself crowned with her, by the same bishops who had dissolved his marriage. The pope declared the original marriage still in effect. For the first time, pope Nicholas opposed imperial and royal policy. He abandoned the Frankish sphere of influence without consulting the protector to whom he owed his election. All the pope's opponents, emperor Louis, king Lothair II, the reprimanded bishops and their followers, banded together for a punitive expedition against the pope. Imperial troops marched on Rome, while Nicholas organized processions. The mercenaries forced their way into St. Peter's, scattered the faithful, and destroyed the altars and sacred ornaments. Nicholas himself had to hide for two days, until negotiations between himself and the emperor were started. Nicholas refused to yield even now, and he won. Lothair had to dethrone his mistress. The pope proclaimed the right of ecclesiastical dignitaries, bishops, priests, and monks to resist tyrants and unjust rulers.

After the attack on Rome by the Frankish emperor, Nicholas spoke in conciliatory terms: "The Church knows only one sword, the sword of the Spirit; and it does not kill, it gives life!"

Nicholas made use of certain documents to confirm and increase the power of the papacy, in view of the crumbling power of the Franks. This collection of documents in three volumes was proved in 1559 to consist of forgeries. The great pope's unquestioning use of them cast somewhat of a shadow over his reputation.

The separation between West and East was deepened when the eastern emperor, Caesar Bardas, deposed and exiled the patriarch of Constantinople, Ignatius, and installed his own candidate, the learned and intellectual Photius, whose transference from lay state through all the degrees of priesthood was accomplished in six days. Also involved in the dispute was the allegiance of the newly converted Bulgarian state. The Franks wanted Bulgaria as an extension of the German church; the Greeks had the best claim, as their missionaries had been first in the field. The Bulgars turned to Rome, in fear of being swallowed up by Constantinople. Nicholas won the Bulgars, but lost the East. With great insolence, Photius claimed to excommunicate the pope and all orthodox Catholics, saying they were forerunners of apostasy, servants of Antichrist. Shortly after this, a change of emperors in Constantinople deprived Photius of support, and he was removed from the patriarchate about the time of the death of pope Nicholas.

107. Adrian II (Ad)

(December 14, 867 - December 14, 872 A.D.)

Adrian II was a member of the Roman aristocracy, related to Stephen IV and Sergius II. He had twice before refused the high station. Before taking orders, he had been married, and to this union had been born a daughter, and he installed wife and daughter in an apartment in the Lateran. That the daughter of a pope was a matrimonial prize of high value tempted Anastasius, the same who had been anti-pope to Benedict III. Together with his father Ursenius (who also possessed episcopal rank), he plotted to make his brother, Eleutherius, the husband of Adrian's daughter. This Adrian refused, saying that marriage with another suitor had been previously arranged. Eleutherius abducted both daughter and mother, and married the daughter by compulsion. Adrian called on emperor Louis II for help. A punitive expedition was arranged but the abductors heard of it, and killed the pope's wife and daughter. Eleutherius was apprehended and put to death. Ursenius fled from Rome and shortly after died; but Anastasius managed to convince all those involved of his innocence.

Theutberga, the wife of king Lothair, was now petitioning for divorce of her own accord. Again, the pope refused to dissolve the marriage. He met with Lothair at Monte Cassino in July, 869, and the king took an oath that since his excommunication he had had no intercourse with his mistress; Adrian granted him communion. During his stay in Rome the king and some of his retinue died of fever, and it was commonly viewed as retribution for perjury. The two women survivors, the queen and the king's mistress, entered a monastery.

In 869, archbishop Hincman of Rheims crowned Charles the Bald at Metz as successor to the kingdom of Lothair II. The pope threatened a punitive expedition, but backed down at the persistence of Hincman. Adrian II also backed down on the issue of the Christian Bulgars, who were now assigned to the Eastern Church in Constantinople. The papal assembly to the eighth general council of Constantinople, the last to be attended by the Church of Rome, avoided all disputed questions, in accordance with the pope's policy.

The remains of Clement, surnamed Romanus, Peter's third successor, were found on the banks of the Dneiper, and were brought to Rome during this pontificate by the famous apostles of the Slavs, Cyril and Methodius.

(December 14, 872 - December 16, 882 A.D.)

John was a Roman by birth and had served the Curia for forty years. At his election, Rome was isolated, and at the mercy of the Islamites, who were attacking central Italy. The pope wrote, "Our coasts have been plundered, and the Saracens (Islamites) are as much at home in Fundi and Terracina as in Africa . . . If all the trees in the forest were turned into tongues they could not describe the ravages of these impious pagans. The devout people of God are destroyed by a continual slaughter; he who escapes the fire and sword, is carried captive into exile. Cities, castles, and villages are utterly wasted and without inhabitant. The bishops are wandering about in beggary, or fly to Rome as the only place of refuge."

Pope John built a strong wall to protect the basilica of St. Paul and the land around it, where it stood outside the city gates, on the Ostia road; this papal fortification was known as Johannipolis. He assembled a small papal fleet and patrolled the coast, engaging and dispersing the Islamites off the promontory of Circe.

Lambert, duke of Spoleto, invaded Rome and made the pope prisoner for a month, in an attempt to get pontifical allegiance to the cause of Carloman of Bavaria, an aspirant to the imperial title. Pope John refused, and managed to flee to France, where he requested aid of Louis the Stammerer (the title of this prince and his contemporaries Charles the Fat and Charles the Simple describe the level to which the House of Charlemagne had fallen).

John endorsed Charles the Bald as successor to Louis II, but no help was forthcoming. Romans of the highest circles, including members of the papal bureaucracy, sought their own gain, and some had secret relations with the Islamites. Embezzlement, amorous intrigue, and murder are among the crimes listed in the papal registers.

In 881, Charles the Fat (Charles III), great-grandson of Charlemagne, was crowned and proclaimed emperor. Immediately afterward Rome was attacked from all quarters at the same time. The pope cried, "We have sought the light and see nothing around us but dark night. We call for help, for we dare not even leave the walls of our city, so fearful is the devastation. We are left unaided by the emperor, our spiritual son, or from any other man in the land . . ."

The Islamites occupied a part of the Papal States, and settled around Vesuvius. Incessant attacks were made by the Normans. There was no one to drive off invaders, and there was treason everywhere, among the dukes, the cities, the provinces, and even among some of the bishops. In desperation, John appealed to Byzantium; a temporary peace was restored between him and the reinstated Photius.

The Pope's energies had also been turned to other areas; in Spain the intricate business of creating a metropolitan (head of an ecclesiastical province) was accomplished, and laws against sacrilege accomplished. The distant archbishop of Canterbury received encouragement and consolation and the English king Alfred was given advice. The bishop of Porto, Formosus, leader of a discontented group of clergy, was expelled from Rome under oath never again to venture within sight of the city (though he occupied the papal throne thirteen years later). Over three hundred letters of anathema were produced by pope John VIII.

Finally, John was poisoned by household members, and as the poison did not act fast enough, his impatient murderers smashed his skull with a hammer. He was the first pope to be assassinated, though many had been martyred.

109. Marinus I

(December 16, 882 - May 15 (5) 884 A.D.)

Marinus, an archdeacon of Rome, born in Montefiascone, reinstated Formosus, who had been banished from Rome by his predecessor.

Marinus was bishop of Caere (Cervetri), and the first of episcopal rank to be elected pope. His election was apparently unanimous, but irregular; never before had a bishop of another See been translated to Rome. The canon law of the time forbade translations of this kind. This irregularity was noted and disapproved of by many.

Marinus had bitterly opposed papal recognition for Constantinople patriarch Photius, having acted as John VIII's legate in the affair; Photius and the emperor responded in kind by refusing to recognize him as pope.

110. St. Adrian III

(May 17, 884 - September 17, 885 A.D.)

Adrian, a Roman, recognized Photius. He had John VIII's bitter enemy, George of the Aventine, tried, condemned, and blinded. The widow of one of the intriguing nobility was whipped naked through the streets of Rome.

Charles the Fat invited Adrian III to Germany for the purpose of settling the question of succession to the imperial throne, as he had no sons. Adrian accepted, but died suddenly in the early stages of his journey.

111. Stephen VI (V)

(September, 885 - September 14, 891 A.D.)

A Roman, Stephen VI was elected with the help of Formosus. He was an old man, who had first entered papal service in the days of Adrian II. He was representative of the Roman nobility and was opposed by emperor Charles the Fat, who sought to have him deposed.

Stephen refused to recognize Photius, and wrote to Byzantine emperor Basil inviting him to depose the patriarch. In 886, Basil died and his successor deposed and banished Photius for good.

Stephen interfered successfully on several occasions in preventing irregular episcopal elections in France and Germany, and he made definitive decisions on such matters as the law of marriage, which passed into canon law. In Rome he reformed the papal civil service.

With the death of Charles, three princes rose to claim the title: Arnulf, king of Germany, Berengar, ruler of Italy, and Guido (Wido), duke of Spoleto. Berengar and Guido met in battle, and when the latter was victorious he marched on Rome and without any gestures of obeisance or council demanded the pope, as his vassal, to proclaim him emperor, which was done. Soon after, Stephen died.

(October 6, 891 - April 4, 896 A.D.)

Formosus, bishop of Porto, had been condemned by John VIII, and restored by Marinus. His translation from the bishopric of Porto was in contradiction to the existing canon law. He was 75 when elected. Formosus promised obedience to emperor Guido, while secretly sending entreaties to the northern prince Arnulf. Arnulf brought his troops to Rome, during which time Guido died and his son Lambert took over his part.

Pope Formosus crowned Lambert as Arnulf neared Rome; Lambert retired hastily to Spoleto and Arnulf drove opposers off the walls without losing a man. Formosus now with jubilation held a second coronation and hailed Arnulf as emperor and deliverer of Rome.

Arnulf turned his attention to Spoleto, but was suddenly stricken with paralysis. His soldiers, carrying the prostrate monarch on a litter, returned across the Alps, leaving Rome at the mercy of the angry Lambert. Formosus at this point died.

113. Boniface VI

(April, 896 - April, 896 A.D.)

Although the new emperor had left his representatives in the city, they were unable to prevent the Romans from electing the next pope, Boniface VI. He died a few days later from an attack of gout. His condemnation as an intruder by the Roman council of 898 casts doubt on his status as pope, and he is sometimes accounted an anti-pope.

114. Stephen VII (VI)

(May, 896 - August, 897 A.D.)

Stephen was a Roman and his election was again uncanonical, since he was the bishop of Agnani. Lambert, duke of Spoleto, now marched on Rome. The remnant of the imperial forces withdrew. Lambert had hated Formosus because of his crowning of Arnulf. Now that he was free to do as he pleased in Rome, and at the promptings of his mother, Agiltrude, and with the consent of the new pope, the decaying body of Formosus was disinterred and dressed in the gorgeous robes of presiding pontiff. In the presence of Agiltrude, the corpse was propped upon a throne around which an assemblage of clergy took their places and went through the motions of a trial. A defender and a prosecutor played their parts and a judgement was pronounced which declared the pontificate of Formosus to have been invalid. All his acts were annulled and all ordinations performed by him were announced to be false and illegal. The proceedings were concluded by the tearing of vestments from the rotting flesh, and the chopping off of the fingers of the right hand, which had been used for consecration. The remains were then cast, unblessed and dishonored, into the Tiber, where secretly a monk, with the assistance of some fishermen, rescued them and interred them decently in a burial ground.

The annulment of Formosus' ordinations had deprived many of their offices, and there was a faction in the clergy deeply opposed to Stephen. He was seized, and strangled to death.

115. Romanus

(August, 897 - November, 897 A.D.)

Romanus, a Roman born in Montefiascono, was the brother of Marinus I. He was elected by the party attached to the memory of Formosus, however, he did not take any measures to rehabilitate Formosus' memory.

116. Theodore II

(December, 897 - December, 897 A.D.)

In his brief reign, Roman Theodore II exhumed the abused body of Formosus and removed it with suitable ceremony to an appropriate and honored resting place in St. Peter's.

A decree was then issued that the ordinations of Formosus were to be considered valid.

Pope Theodore II died after a pontificate of only a few weeks.

117. John IX

(January, 898 - January, 900 A.D.)

John IX was an Italian born in Tivoli, and a Benedictine monk.

Two militant factions were now struggling for supremacy in Rome, the Formosans, and the anti-Formosans. The Formosans chose John IX, while their antagonists chose Sergius. Sergius seized the Lateran palace and acted as pope for a few weeks. Emperor Lambert intervened and chose John, who reciprocated by assembling a council which declared against the pretensions of the emperor's rival, Arnulf, and formulated a law requiring consecration to be held only in the presence of imperial envoys.

Those responsible for the trial of the dead pope were condemned, but most were forgiven.

In 898, Lambert died, and Berengar, a powerful ruler in Italy, wished to claim the title of emperor, as did Louis, a Carolingian and king of Burgundy (Provence). John did not commit himself in this dispute, but was on good terms with Berengar and recognized him as king of Italy in 899.

118. Benedict IV

(January, 900 - July, 903 A.D.)

Benedict was a Roman priest who had been ordained by Formosus.

In 899, northern Italy was laid waste by the Avars; Berengar was unable to prevent their raids and lost prestige. Many Italian nobles now turned to Louis of Burgundy and in 900 he was proclaimed king of Italy at the old Lombard capital of Pavia, and Benedict crowned him emperor when he presented himself in Rome in 901. The golden circlet had become a trophy of temporary martial skill rather than a consecrated symbol of a vast and solemn responsibility.

In June, 902, Berengar made a comeback and forced Louis to promise not to set foot in Italy again. Louis broke his promise and was captured and blinded by Berengar in 905.

119. Leo V

(July, 903 - September, 903 A.D.)

Leo V was an Italian born in Ardea. He was a supporter of Formosus. After only a one month term he was thrown into prison by one of his priests, Christophorus (Christopher) and tortured. Christophorus enthroned himself and lasted four months, at which time he was imprisoned, by the next pope, Sergius, who had both Leo and Christophorus put to death.

120. Sergius III

(January 29, 904 - April 14, 911 A.D.)

Sergius was a Roman, and bishop of Cere. After murdering his predecessors he again execrated Formosus, and also declared invalid the ordinations of John IX and Benedict IV. A council was convened and there were the usual anathemas, degradations, and re-ordinations.

The real ruler of Rome was Theodora, the wife of Theophylact, who from the spoils of public office had accumulated the greatest wealth possessed by an individual in the Papal States. They had two daughters, Theodora the Younger, and Marozia (Marouzia), the latter being mistress of Sergius III. A son was born of this union, who later became pope John XI.

Sergius established the monastery of Cluny, and restored the Lateran Basilica.

121. Anastasius III

(April, 911 - June, 913 A.D.)

Anastasius III was a Roman, put into office by Theophylact and Theodora. He obliged king Berengar by granting privileges to the Lombard bishops.

122. Lando

(July, 913 - February, 914 A.D.)

An Italian, native of Sabina, Lando was the son of a Lombardic noble, and put into power by the house of Theophylact.

123. John X

(March, 914 - May, 928 A.D.)

John X was archbishop of Ravenna. He was put in power by Theodora.

John revived the question of Formosus, embittering the atmosphere of his pontificate. In Rome, the Islamites had renewed their attacks. In the third year of his pontificate, John gathered the armies of neighboring princes and repelled an Islamite invasion; then with sword in hand, led the final victorious charge, utterly destroying them.

John invited king Berengar to Rome and crowned him emperor in 915, but no help was forthcoming. Marozia, daughter of Theophylact and Theodora, married Alberic, duke of Spoleto. By 916, her parents had died, and Marozia inherited their power. In 924, Berengar was assassinated; John encouraged Hugh of Provence to claim the Italian crown and hoped to keep independent of Marozia.

Marozia married Guy, Marquis of Tuscany, and together they plotted against John and his brother Peter, who defended him; they slaughtered Peter in front of the pope. The pope was declared deposed in May, 928, and was imprisoned in Castle Sant' Angelo and some time later murdered.

John restored communication between East and West churches, sending a legation to Constantinople in 923. One of his acts was to appoint a five-year old child as archbishop of Rheims.

124. Leo VI

(May, 928 - December, 928 A.D.)

Selected by Marozia and her husband, Leo was an Italian, born at Ardea, a Benedictine. He was responsible for settling the ecclesiastical organization of Dalmatia; and was murdered in December, 928.

125. Stephen VIII (VII)

(December, 928 - February, 931 A.D.)

Another choice of Marozia, Stephen VIII was a Roman, and left behind him no record of any actions taken during his pontificate. He was murdered in 931.

126. John XI

(March, 931 - December, 935 A.D.)

The son of Sergius III and Marozia, John XI was elected to be an agent for his mother's wishes. He gave privileges to St. Odo, abbot of Cluny, which marks the beginning of a monastic reform movement which was one day to purify the papacy itself.

Marozia was now a widow; Hugh, king of Italy, had just lost his wife. He was her brother-in-law, and so they were related within the prohibited degrees of kinship for the purposes of marriage. But since her son was pope, she anticipated no difficulty in arranging the marriage, which was the case, the pope presiding at her wedding. By her first marriage, Marozia had a son called Alberic, now in his early 20's. At the wedding at Castle Sant' Angelo, Alberic was acting as page to his stepfather. Insulted by Hugh, Alberic roused the Romans. Before anyone was aware of what was happening, the castle was sieged, and the militia approached, led by Roman nobles. The royal groom, with the aid of a rope, escaped over the city wall, but Marozia and John XI were arrested. Marozia was imprisoned and never heard of again; the pope lived out his pontificate under close supervision. Alberic was hailed as prince and senator of all the Romans.

A Roman and a Benedictine, Leo VII was Alberic's choice for pope. Alberic and Leo were enthusiastic supporters of the new monastic movement associated with Cluny. This abbey, founded in 910, was by 936 under its second and most famous abbot, St. Odo, and was revered as the greatest center of Benedictine life in Europe. The Cluny reformers were above all against the interference of laymen in the things of God; also they desired to eliminate all lay influence over monasteries, and break the custom of allowing monasteries to be family concerns, where the head of the family appointed whom he would as abbot, whether the person was a monk, or only a secular cleric. The monks also looked to a reform of the episcopate, and Cluny sought authority from Rome from the earliest days of the movement.

Alberic invited St. Odo to Rome and gave him his palace on the Aventine to make into a monastery. It was in connection with this abbey a century later that a great reforming pope, Gregory VII, began his remarkable career. On Odo's arrival, Rome was besieged by king Hugh. Odo undertook the task of mediation and by his efforts a treaty was made between Hugh and Alberic which spared Rome the horrors of a siege.

Leo never conflicted with the policies of his sponsor, who treated him with good will.

128. Stephen IX (VIII)

(July 14, 939 - October, 942 A.D.)

Stephen, like his predecessor, was a pious Roman of unblemished character. He was placed in office by Alberic.

Stephen intervened in France to some effect; he decided that the rightful king was young Louis d'Outremer, and gave him important moral support against his most dangerous rival, Hugh the Great.

Stephen also supported the new monastic reforms.

129. Marinus II

(October 30, 942 - between May 1 and May 9, 946 A.D.)

Marinus II, a Roman, was known as a restorer of churches, and as having been generous to the poor. In Germany he made the archbishop of Mainz vicar apostolic for journey, a position once held by St. Boniface. He did not do anything, however, without the agreement of Alberic.

130. Agapitus II (Agapetus)

(May 10, 946 - December, 955 A.D.)

Roman pope Agapitus II was appealed to by king Louis of France, and Germany's ruler Otto I, when the principal French See was contested. The pope sent a legate with wide powers. The legate held a council at Ingelheim in 948, in the presence of king Louis and king Otto, as well as some Frankish bishops. The cause of the church of Rheims was dealt with justly and precisely. Hugh the Great was threatened with excommunication for his support of the usurping archbishop, and he decided to submit.

In 951, Otto I intervened in Italy, and all opposition gave way before him. He sent to the pope requesting the imperial crown. Alberic was not prepared to make himself subordinate to any one and had the pope refuse.

Alberic died in 954, but he had made the Romans swear to make his son, Octavian, pope after Agapitus' death.

131. John XII or Octavian

(December 16, 955 - May 14, 964 A.D.)

On Agapitus' death, Octavian succeeded to the pontificate, as well as having been temporal ruler since the death of Alberic. He was not yet twenty. He began the practise of assuming a new name upon entering the papacy.

John XII conducted himself in the manner of a layman, preferring hunting to church ceremonies, and indifferent to religious matters. Pleasures of the flesh prevailed, bishoprics were sold to whomever would buy; an ordination was held at the stable, and the pope was heard to drink a gay toast to the devil.

The former Byzantine possessions in central Italy which the Carolingian rulers had given to the Holy See, had long since slipped from its grasp. John decided to get these back, and was soon involved with men more powerful than himself. Either he, or high Roman churchmen appealed to Otto I to intervene. Otto promised to respect the pope's authority and John promised to support Otto's position in Italy. Otto was crowned emperor in 962. Before the ceremony he told his sword bearer Anfried, "When I am praying today in St. Peter's church, hold your sword over my head all the time, for I know well that my forebears were often mistrustful of the Romans' loyalty. It is wise to take thought in advance and forestall hostilities even though they may be far away, lest they overwhelm us by surprise."

Relations were worked out between the new German empire and the Holy See. Otto promised to restore the Carolingian donations to the papacy, making the pope the lord of a large part of central Italy, as well as large areas in other parts of Italy. The emperor was to have permanent representatives in Rome; and the pope-elect must swear an oath of fealty to the emperor and receive his approval before consecration could occur. The document was called the Privilegum Ottianum.

When Otto left Italy, John began to use intrigue against him. Otto remarked about John, "The pope is still almost a child, and easily led astray. The example of honest men will make him better." But John was not to be improved, and Otto soon came back, and found John wearing helmet and armor and carrying sword and shield. John threatened the man he had crowned nine months before, then rapidly retreated with his confederates, carrying off Church treasure with him. Otto entered Rome in November, 963, and a Roman council was held in St. Peter's, to which John was invited to answer charges of sacrilege, simony, perjury, murder, adultery, and incest. He replied from Tivoli in an ungrammatical Latin message: "We hear that you mean to elect a new pope. If you do, in the name of Almighty God, I excommunicate you, and forbid you to ordain or say Mass."

John was deposed, and a successor elected. Both proceedings were canonically impossible, but took place nonetheless. The successor, a layman, superintendent of the papal secretariat, was ordained priest and consecrated bishop and pope in a single day. He took the name of Leo VIII. As soon as Otto left Rome, John returned and ousted Leo, calling a new council to undo the condemnations of the last one. On hearing the news, Otto turned back to Rome, but before he reached there, John had been killed while visiting his mistress. He died without confession or receiving the sacraments.

(November 4, 963 - January 3, 965 A.D.)

The election of a layman was frowned on in the West, and caused grave scandal. Leo had ruled as pope for only a few weeks when John returned and resumed the papacy. Very soon John died, and the Romans refused to accept Leo and elected a subdeacon named Benedict to the post. Otto exclaimed, "Only when I drop my sword will I drop the restoration of pope Leo." Otto returned to Rome and replaced Leo VIII in June, 964, and he reigned until his death in January, 965.

133. Benedict V

(May 22, 964 - deposed June 23, 964 - died July 4, 966 A.D.)

Benedict V had a reputation for piety and learning. He had little opportunity to exercise his ability, for emperor Otto I marched back to Rome and blockaded the walls until the starved inhabitants made a dishonorable surrender. Thereupon Otto sent Benedict to Hamburg, where he remained in the kindly custody of the local archbishop until his death a year later.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant nine months)

(October 1, 965 - September 5(6), 972 A.D.)

Preparations were made for the election, the Romans waiting for imperial representatives, who encouraged them to elect John, bishop of Narni, who was a Roman noble, being grandson of Theodora and Theophylact, son of Theodora the Younger, and cousin of Alberic.

The anti-German party in Rome imprisoned John, but he escaped and fled to refuge at Capua. In Christmas of 966, both emperor and pope were back in Rome. The twelve tribunes were hanged, the corpse of the Prefectus Urbanus was dragged from the tomb and quartered, and Petrus, the city prefect, had his beard cut off, was hanged from a tall statue by his hair, and then flogged to unconsciousness.

On Christmas, 967, Otto I had his 13-year old son crowned Otto II by pope John, thus naming him as successor to the emperor, and a few years later the pope married him to the Byzantine princess Theophano in St. Peter's. The support of the emperor enabled John to devote time to ecclesiastical affairs; he convened councils, settled disputes, and granted privileges to churches and convents throughout Europe. He died in 972.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

135. Benedict VI

(January 19(18), 973 - June, 974 A.D.)

After the death of John XIII, more than four months passed before the next pope was consecrated. The new pope called himself Benedict VI. He was brother of the last pope, son of Theodora the Younger.

In May, 973, Otto I died suddenly and was succeeded by the 19-year old Otto II. The Roman nobility, led by Crescentius, sent the pope to a dungeon in the Castel' Sant' Angelo where anti-pope Boniface VII had him strangled. On the approach of imperial troops, Boniface VII fled to Constantinople with the church treasury.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

136. Benedict VII

(October, 974 - July 10, 983 A.D.)

Formerly the bishop of Sutri, Benedict VII was now elected to the papacy. He was a keen partisan of the new reforming movement, and most of his official documents are concerned with reformed monasteries. The reformation was also making itself felt in the papacy and even in the emperor. Both tried to prevent the abuses arising from lay control of ecclesiastical benefices. A number of councils were held, but Benedict died before the abuses were curbed.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant five months)

137. John XIV or Peter

(December 10, 983 - August 20, 984 A.D.)

Otto II came quickly to Rome on the death of Benedict VII. He created his chancellor, the Italian Petrus of Pavia, pope John XIV. He was still not enthroned when Otto II died at the age of 28, of a fever. He is the only German emperor to be buried in Rome. He left his son who had been proclaimed Otto III at the age of three. John, in the spring of 984, was faced with the return of the anti-pope of the anti-imperial party, Boniface VII, who had previously fled to Constantinople. Furnished with Greek money and Greek arms, he threw John into a dungeon in the Castel' Sant' Angelo where he was either starved to death or poisoned. Boniface held Rome for a year, but then was poisoned in July, 985.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant one year)

(August, 985 - March, 996 A.D.)

The son of Crescentius, also named Crescentius, swayed the next election to John XV. John was the first pope to preside at a formal canonization, for up to this time the solemn process had been accomplished by bishops or synods. The saint so announced, in a Bull dated February 5, 993, was former bishop Ulrich (Ulric) of Augsburg.

Many monasteries and convents were the recipients of John XV's kindness. His influence brought peace between king Aethelred (Ethelred II) of England and duke Richard of Normandy. Peace between all was his aim.

Otto III was now of age, being sixteen, and he started to Rome to receive the symbol of his inherited rank. However, John XV died before Otto reached the city.

139. Gregory V or Bruno
(May 3, 996 - February 18, 999 A.D.)

When 16-year old Otto III reached Rome, after the death of John XV, he appointed his 23-year old cousin, Bruno, to be the next pope. Otto had the dream of a revived Roman Empire, and his cousin shared it with him. The first act of the new pope, who took the name Gregory V, was to place the crown on his cousin's head.

Otto wished to exile Crescentius for his conduct during the term of John XV, but Gregory asked that he be pardoned. Then, when Otto had left Rome, Crescentius rose up and took over; pope Gregory escaped to Lombardy. In exile he held a council at Pavia at which the succession of the Sees of Rheims, Magdeburg, and Naples was settled. He took a strong line with the king of France, who wished to marry a woman related within the prohibited degrees. Crescentius, in Rome, elected an anti-pope, a greek, John XVI, bishop of Piacenza, who had the support of the Byzantine court. Otto restored Gregory in March, 998, and took terrible revenge on Crescentius, killing him and twelve of his friends, and mutilating and imprisoning John XVI.

Pope Gregory had served for only a short time after this when he died of malaria, or poisoning. He was the first German pope.

140. Sylvester II (Silvester) or Gerbert
(April 2, 999 - May 12, 1003 A.D.)

Gerbert was French, and the tutor of Otto III. Gregory V had appointed him archbishop of Ravenna, and now as pope, he took the name of Sylvester II.

He had been educated at the reformed monastery of Aurillac, and was all his life a protagonist of the new reforming conscience of the church. He became archbishop of Rheims during the pontificate of John XV, but because his predecessor, Arnoul, had been deposed without the pope's knowledge or permission, John was ordered to restore the archbishopric to him. He then went and joined the imperial court in Italy, where Gregory V made him archbishop of Ravenna.

When pope, Sylvester allowed Arnoul to keep the archbishopric of Rheims. He took a lead in the campaign against lay control over church appointments. He took a stand against simony, though his intentions were unable to be carried out at that time.

Otto III, disillusioned and talking of entering a monastery, died in 1002. At that time, Crescentius came to power in Rome, the son of the one who was beheaded. Sylvester died a few months later, in May of 1003.

141. John XVII or John Sicco
(June, 1003 - November 6 or December, 1003 A.D.)

Otto III had been the last of the Ottonian line, and the new king of Germany was Henry II, duke of Bavaria. He was too occupied in Germany to deal with Italy, so John Crescentius chose the next three popes. The first of these was John Sicco, who became John XVII. He died less than five months later.

142. John XVIII or John Fasano
(January, 1004 - July, 1009 A.D.)

John Fasano was also put into office by Crescentius. He favored the monastic reform party and granted a new charter of privileges to the abbey of Fleury, and this was opposed by the archbishop of Sens and the bishop of Orleans. The pope summoned the two to Rome and threatened king Robert of France if he did not make them obey. He also renewed relations with Constantinople. In 1009, he retired to St. Paul's monastery near Rome, and died shortly after.

143. Sergius IV or Peter
(July 31, 1009 - May 12, 1012 A.D.)

The last pope chosen by John Crescentius was Peter, a Benedictine, who became Sergius IV. He was bishop of Albano at the time of his election, and was the son of a Roman cobbler. He gained a reputation for charity and generosity to the poor.

On election, he sent the customary announcement to Constantinople containing his profession of faith. This included the filioque, which was a disputed portion of the Creed which the Greeks omitted. Because of this, the patriarch of Constantinople refused to recognize him and excommunicated him. Many date the separation between the two churches from this time, though it was not finalized until 1054.

144. Benedict VIII or Theophylact of Tusculum
(May 18, 1012 - April 9, 1024 A.D.)

John Crescentius died shortly before Sergius IV, and no member of his family inherited his authority, though the Crescentii family chose a candidate, Gregory, who was installed in the Lateran Palace, but never consecrated.

The counts of Tusculum gained more support for their candidate, a younger son of the count of Tusculum. Gregory went off to Germany, and Benedict VIII was elected.

Benedict took from the Crescentii family their offices, and also their property. In 1013, Henry II came to Rome and in 1014 was crowned emperor, and received as a gift from pope Benedict a jewelled orb upon which was attached a cross. Benedict visited Henry in Germany in 1020, and in 1022, the two held a reforming council at Pavia. Simony was condemned; the right of churches to the full use of their property was affirmed; clerical immorality and marriage of priests was forbidden.

Within two years after the meeting in Pavia both Benedict VIII and Henry II had died.

145. John XIX or Romanus of Tusculum
(April, 1024 - 1032 A.D.)

John XIX was the brother of Benedict VIII. He was a layman and senator of Rome. He gave generous gifts, held lavish court, entertained kings and ambassadors. Simony flourished. At one time he was about to grant permission to the patriarch of Constantinople to use the title of Universal Patriarch, but objection was so strong that he abandoned the idea. The new emperor, Conrad II, was crowned by John in 1027, accompanied by king Canute of England and king Rudolph of Burgundy.

146. Benedict IX or Theophylact of Tusculum

Benedict IX was a nephew of John XIX. He was quite young at his election, and had little interest in the office; was immoral, cruel, and indifferent to Spiritual matters. In 1044, riots broke out in Rome and Benedict took refuge at Trastavere, near Rome. The Romans then elected the bishop of Sabena pope Sylvester III. Benedict's brothers restored him in 1045, but he was tired of being pope, and being offered money to retire, he resigned to marry and settle down, and sold his office to his godfather, John Gratian. He came back for a short time in 1047 and 1048, but was deposed.

147. Sylvester III
(January 20, 1045 - February 10, 1045 A.D.)

Benedict IX, though worthless, was pope at this time; Sylvester is counted as an intruder, and though appearing on some lists of popes, actually is an anti-pope.

148. Gregory VI or John Gratianus Pierleoni
(May 5, 1045 - December 20, 1046 A.D.)

Gregory was godfather of Benedict IX, and for between 1,000 and 2,000 pounds of silver bought the papacy from his godson. Henry III met with Gregory in October, 1046, and treated Gregory as pope, but a council was held in December, 1046. The council condemned Sylvester III, but they were not sure what to do with Benedict, since he had resigned; and they feared he might withdraw his resignation. Gregory was tainted with simony, and admitted his own consecration to have been a shameful and demoniacal heresy; he signed a decree of his invalidity, and was taken to Germany as a state prisoner, accompanied by his faithful secretary Hildebrand.

Benedict was now called to answer for his crimes. When he refused to recognize the authority of the council, he was ordered deposed, in a ceremonial at St. Peter's.

149. Clement II or Suitger (Suidger), Count of Norsleben (December 25, 1046 - October 9, 1047 A.D.)

Henry III now chose the next pope, Suitger, bishop of Bamberg, a respected member of the German episcopate, who took the name Clement II. He was poisoned less than a year later.

Benedict IX drove the small German garrison out of Rome and put himself into the Lateran. Nine months later, Henry sent an army to dislodge him.

150. Damasus II or Count Boppo of Brixen (July 17, 1048 - August 9, 1048 A.D.)

The bishop of Brixen, or count Boppo, was selected by Henry to be pope, and he chose the name Damasus II. He did not want to be pope and delayed his journey to Rome until ordered to go there by Henry. Benedict IX left the papacy, and died shortly after.

Damasus II had served only three weeks when he died.

151. St. Leo IX or Bruno, Count of Egisheim-Dagsburg (February 12, 1049 - April 19, 1054 A.D.)

Henry III called a council of churchmen at Worms to help choose the next pope. They chose a Lorrainer, related to the imperial family; Bruno, bishop of Toul. Forty-six years of age, he had held the see of Toul since age twenty-four. He asked to be relieved of the honor, but the council would not give in. After three days of prayer and fasting, Bruno returned to his cousin, Henry, and the council and insisted on his unworthiness. Finally he agreed to serve if the clergy and people of Rome elected him.

He started for Rome accompanied by advisors. At Besancon he met abbot Hugo from the Benedictine abbey of Cluny, and the monk Hildebrand, who had accompanied Gregory VI (John Gratian) into exile; and invited them to join him in going to Rome. Hildebrand refused, and when asked why, the 28-year old monk replied, "Because you are going to Rome to seize hold of the Roman Church, not in accordance with ecclesiastical statute, but by royal and secular force." Bruno put aside his papal robes, and set out for Rome as a pilgrim, and Hildebrand accompanied him. He was grandly greeted in Rome by the citizens, clergy, and civic authorities. In St. Peter's he told them that he would only keep his appointment if the vote was unanimous; and it was.

Leo IX brought into effect a tithe of all reserves to go for the upkeep of St. Peter's. On Easter Sunday, 1049, he appointed Hildebrand treasurer and cardinal-subdeacon of the Roman Church, and at the same time chose a number of men to be his close counsellors. A council was held with representatives attending from Italy and from many lands. Leo issued stricter orders concerning illict intercourse, known as Nicolaism from the mention in the Apocalypse of Nicolaites, for the Gentile members of the Church disregarded the prohibition of fornication. The concubines of the Roman clerics were to lose their civil rights and become serving-maids in the Lateran Palace. Married clerics were to remain celibate. Simony, the purchase or bartering of ecclesiastical offices, was condemned.

Leo was a great follower of the reform movement of which the abbey of Cluny was the head. He now began a pontificate of nearly constant travel, crossing the Alps six times, and residing in Rome for only six months of his papacy. In the early months of his term, he set up an institution which was to grow into the papal Curia. He called it the Senate of the pope of Rome, and it was made up of churchmen, mostly noblemen from the monasteries of Lorraine and Burgundy, supplemented by a few bishops, and the monk Hildebrand. Among the advisors was Pietro Damiani (Peter Damian), who sent the pope his work On the Sins of Gomorrha, which delineated the hidden sins of the secular clergy of Italy. Leo attached to the book a cover letter in the form of a bull in which he confirmed the truth of the allegations.

The pope went to Germany, and issued invitations for a great council at Rheims. The obvious purpose was to consecrate the new church of the Virgin at Rheims, which was to be dedicated to Remigius the Apostle of France (died 532), who had once been bishop of Rheims. Many of the French bishops were absent as a result of the displeasure of the king of France with the council. Those bishops who were hostile to reform had taken the king's side. Hildebrand made the opening speech outlining the points of reform to be discussed. Under threat of anathema, Leo summoned the bishops to confess immediately if any of them had committed simony in receiving their holy orders or in conferring them on others. There was a prolonged silence, then one by one the bishops protested their innocence, with four exceptions, who held their peace.

In the territory of the king of France, surrounded by political powers, Leo IX demanded an unequivocal acknowledgement of papal supremacy. The council voted yes, and the king of France abandoned his efforts to form a French national church. On the second day of the conference, Guido, bishop of Rheims, admitted his guilt. The pope insisted on an oath of purgation, but Guido asked for a postponement, which was granted. Some bishops admitted unwitting simony and resigned, were proclaimed innocent and reinstated by the pope. On the same day the absent and unexcused bishops were excommunicated, as were those who left without permission, among them bishop Hugh of Langres, who fled when accusations were brought against him from all sides.

Leo reminded the council of ancient laws which had fallen into disuse. They were the following:

1. Without election by the clergy and people, nobody may assume office as bishop or abbot.
2. No one may buy or sell holy orders, offices or altars. Any cleric who has done such a thing for the sake of money must do penance and give back to the bishop what he has bought.
3. No layman may be in possession of an ecclesiastical office or a public altar, nor may a bishop allow its possession.
4. Except for the bishop or his deputy, no one may collect taxes or tithes in the forecourt of a church.
5. No fees may be demanded for burials, baptisms, Holy Communion, or visiting the sick.
6. No cleric may carry arms or perform military service.
7. No cleric or layman may be a usurer.
8. No monk or cleric may resign his holy orders.
9. No one may ill treat wandering clergy.
10. No one may oppress the poor by robbery or imprisonment.
11. No one may contract a marriage with a blood relation.
12. No one may desert his legal wife and marry another.

The visitation of the pope proceeded to Verdun, Metz, Toul (once his own See), then to Mainz, where the great German national council was held. Attending were Henry III, secular princes from Germany, Burgundy, and Italy, forty archbishops and bishops, including one from Denmark, many abbots and clerics, and emissaries of the Greek emperor. The pope wanted the decisions of the Rheims council confirmed, and once again measures were taken against simony, and Nicolaism, and prohibitions were issued against carrying on secular businesses, usury, and hunting with dogs and hawks.

A charge of adultery was brought against bishop Sibico of Spires. When he denied it, the Council agreed that he should purge himself of the accusation by taking communion. As he received the sacrament he suffered a stroke, which paralyzed him. He was taken out and remained a cripple the rest of his life. This was taken as a divine retribution for perjury, and impressed by this event, the council condemned concubinage and voted for the celibacy of priests. Leo took strong measures when the clerical laws were disobeyed; as in the case of the archbishop of Bremen who merely instructed married priests to live outside the city.

Leo deposed lax bishops and replaced them with obedient ones. He made surprise visits, and attended daily church services. He paid frequent visits to Monte Cassino, the mother house of the Benedictines, went on pilgrimage to holy places, and canonized Saints. He forbade the marriage of William (the Conqueror) to Matilda of Flanders; and sent friendly letters to Edward the Confessor of England (whose piety and generosity resulted in the building of Westminster Abbey). Looking for absolution came Macbeth, king of Scotland, whom Shakespeare the playwright made famous.

Pope Leo was lenient in the matter of forgiveness of penitents, saying, "In the whole of the Gospel you will find no case of our Lord Jesus punishing anyone with fasting or lashes. To the penitent he said only, 'Go in peace and sin no more.'"

Previous to this time the Normans had taken control of southern Italy, and now they were taking over more territory; forgetting his own admonitions against carrying arms, and military service, Leo himself led an attack on the Normans, encouraged by Hildebrand. He called this a Holy War, and it was a precursor to the Crusades. He refused to listen to Norman proposals for peace. On June 18, 1053, the papal army took the field for the first time, and was thoroughly defeated. Leo was surrendered to the Normans, who bowed before him and treated him with due respect. In 1054, when he had fallen ill, the captors allowed him to go to Capua to regain his strength. While in exile, he applied himself to the differences between Rome and Constantinople. Cardinals Frederick and Humbert were entrusted with a mission to convince Constantinople to join forces with Rome against the Normans. But insurmountable difficulties arose, and widened, and the division between the Western and Eastern Churches is officially dated from this time. And four hundred years later (in 1453), the Russian Orthodox Church seceded from the Greek Orthodox Church.

In March, 1054, Leo, grievously sick, was carried in a litter to Rome. He died at the age of 52 in the crypt of St. Peter's where he was taken at his request from the Lateran. He uttered his last prayer in his mother tongue.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant eleven months)

152. Victor II or Gebhard, Count of Hirschberg
(April 16, 1055 - July 28, 1057 A.D.)

Victor, a German, was the choice of Henry III. He was the bishop of Eichstatt at the time of his election.

While the See was vacant, Hildebrand calmed down the hasty Romans, and kept them from holding elections before the emperor had a chance to nominate a German candidate, and he set out to win the goodwill of the Romans for Gebhard, who, though reluctant, agreed to serve as pope.

Godfrey, duke of Lorraine, was warlike and hostile, and had consolidated his power by marrying the widow of the marquis of Tuscany. In 1056, Henry III died and left a small boy as heir, the regent being the boy's mother, the empress Agnes, an unambitious woman. The pope crowned and enthroned him Henry IV, then went to deal with Godfrey, and decided to use the power and prestige of Godfrey, now ruler of Tuscany, as a counterpoise. Godfrey's brother Frederick had just returned from Constantinople with cardinal Humbert, to become a monk at Monte Cassino. When the abbot died soon after, Victor and Humbert saw that the monks elected Frederick abbot, making him cardinal at the same time.

Victor II died suddenly while settling a dispute between the bishops of Arenno and Siena.

153. Stephen X (IX) or Frederick of Lorraine
(August 3, 1057 - March 29, 1058 A.D.)

Frederick never reached his abbey, for he heard the news of the death of the pope. The emperor was a child, and Godfrey of Lorraine was feared, and secured the election of his brother, who took the name of Stephen. A member of the inner circle of reformers whom Leo had brought to Rome, Frederick was also a dedicated reformer. He brought to Rome Peter Damian as cardinal bishop of Ostia. Damian had not had the approval of Leo IX because of his views on heretical re-ordinations.

Pope Stephen X had to crush a popular uprising in Northern Italy to save the simoniac clergy from destruction.

Hildebrand was sent to the imperial court, and Stephen died before he returned. The Roman nobility, led by representatives of the Busculani, elected John (Mincius), cardinal bishop of Velletro, as pope Benedict X. The reforming party would not accept him and withdrew to Florence, where the power of duke Godfrey could secure an election. With the aid of Godfrey, a reforming council was held at which Benedict was deposed and degraded on December 16, 1058.

154. Nicholas II or Gerhard (Gerard) of Burgundy
(January 24, 1059 - July 27, 1061 A.D.)

Under the influence of Godfrey of Lorraine, Gerhard, bishop of Florence, a canon (clergyman belonging to the staff of a cathedral or collegiate church) of Liege, was chosen and took the name of Nicholas II. Humbert and Peter Damian had withdrawn to Florence on the death of Stephen and Hildebrand joined them. They all agreed on Gerhard. He was a reformer from Lorraine; with the aid of Godfrey Rome was taken, the Tusculan faction dispersed, and Nicholas II was consecrated in St. Peter's. He issued a papal election decree in 1059 which stated, "The bishop of Rome, whose Church alone was founded by God, is alone rightly named the Universal Bishop."

A great council was held in the Lateran Palace in April, 1059, with 113 bishops attending. A new election decree was issued which gave cardinal bishops alone the right to nominate the pope. The rest of the cardinals, the lesser Roman clergy, and the emperor, had rights of confirmation. In this the reformers wished to perpetuate their hold on the papacy. By 1100 the cardinal priests and cardinal deacons joined with the cardinal bishops in forming a college of cardinals who had the sole right to choose a pope. They have held this right ever since.

Nicholas II reversed Leo's policy and made an alliance with the Norman princes. With their help he was finally able to overthrow the Tusculum faction and overthrow their anti-pope, Benedict X.

Nicholas died in Florence.

155. Alexander II or Anselmo (Anselm) da Baggio
(September 30 [October 1], 1061 - April 21, 1073 A.D.)

While Hildebrand assembled the cardinal bishops to elect Nicholas' successor, the Romans sent a deputation to Germany, where they had no trouble stirring up indignation on the part of the German court toward the new electoral law. Meanwhile, the cardinal-bishops had elected the bishop of Lucca, who became Alexander II, being consecrated on October 1. In Germany, the royal widow assembled a group of churchmen who obediently declared a new pontiff, Cadalus, the bishop of Palma, who also was the candidate advanced by the Roman nobility. He took the name of Honorius II, and was ratified by boy emperor Henry IV. Honorius was sent to Rome accompanied by an army and actually took possession of St. Peter's, but he was ousted with the aid of the Normans. From this time on the Roman nobility were without much influence in Rome and the popes and their curial officials dominated the city without much trouble.

Pope Alexander II was the end of the line of German popes.

The reform party in Lombardy now created openings in the clergy by ousting those who had obtained their offices by simony, which was a large number, and filling the vacancies with their own choice.

In 1066, Alexander II supported William the Conqueror's invasion of England, by which means he was able to send legates to thoroughly reform the English Church. The pope also took further strong stands against simony.

The young Henry IV was thoroughly secular-minded and had tried to divorce his wife. The pope sent Peter Damian on his last great mission, and Henry was convinced to obey the pope and give up his divorce. In Milan, Henry's intervention had been sought by the conservative party, and he had nominated a conservative archbishop as rival to the reformer's candidate, who was backed by Alexander II, though his election had been irregular and had been secured in part by gifts of money. Henry refused to give way and Alexander died with this matter unsettled.

156. St. Gregory VII or Hildebrand of Soana
(April 22 [June 30], 1073 - May 25, 1085 A.D.)

For twenty years, the Italian Benedictine Hildebrand had been the outstanding figure in the ecclesiastical world, serving six popes. When Alexander II died, there was agreement between public and clergy that Hildebrand was the only candidate and the cardinals voted accordingly. He took the name of Gregory VII, and following the electoral regulations, informed Henry IV of his elevation. He was consecrated on June 30. In the same communication he warned the young emperor, whose court was becoming infamous as a market for simony, that his policy would be even more stern than that of his predecessors. Henry answered as a dutiful son, admitting error and swearing repentance. He wrote, "We have not only laid hands on the Church's property, we have even sold the Church to unworthy persons . . . we are not worthy to be called your son."

Later the pope warned the king against five royal councillors who had been trading in religious offices and selling benefices, which had formerly been a royal privilege, and which the pope wanted to abolish. This was done in the form of a papal ultimatum delivered to Henry by papal legates, who had the secret instructions to threaten him with excommunication if he would not dismiss the five councillors in question. Henry sent the legates away.

At the midnight Mass of Christmas, 1075, Gregory was seized by armed men while kneeling before the altar in the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome. He was imprisoned in one of the towers in Rome. On Christmas morning he was rescued by the Roman populace, and the leader of the conspiracy, Cencius, the city prefect, begged for mercy. Gregory forgave him, with the penance of a pilgrimage to Jerusalem; but he did not go to Jerusalem, but to king Henry IV in Germany. That Christmas morning after the attack, Gregory, with a slightly bleeding head, went back to Christmas Mass as if nothing had happened.

The pope continued the strong stand against simony, and made many enemies. He wrote, "Wherever I turn my eyes -- to the west, to the north, or to the south -- I find everywhere bishops who have obtained their office in an irregular way, whose lives and conversations are strangely at variance with their sacred calling; who go through their duties not for the love of Christ, but for motives of worldly gain. There are no longer princes who set God's honor before their own selfish ends, or who allow justice to stand in the way of their ambitions. . ." At a Roman council in 1075, he stated, "Whoever in the future receives a bishopric or an abbacy from the hands of a layman, shall not be regarded as a bishop or an abbot. Similarly, if an emperor, a duke, a marquis, or a court dares to confer an investiture in connection with a bishopric or any other ecclesiastical office, he shall be cut off from the communion of Blessed Peter."

Henry regarded this pronouncement as a direct insult to his Imperial Majesty. To counter the threat of excommunication he invoked at Worms a convention of German bishops, most of whom were married. The churchmen brought out a series of outrageous charges against the pope, and then proceeded to depose him. To Gregory went this message:

> Henry, king, not by presumption but by God's gracious command, to Hildebrand, not pope but a false monk. This greeting hast thou earned, for thou hast spared no order in the Church's hierarchy, bestowing not blessings but curses. Thou hast trodden underfoot like serfs the rulers of the Holy Church, bishops and priests, anointed of the Lord, and thereby won for thyself the favours of the common mob. We have endured all this because we desired to uphold the honour of the See of Rome, but thou hast taken Our humility to be fear and hast behaved with insolence even towards the royal dignity conferred upon Us by God, as though kingship and emperorship were in thy hands, not in God's. Christ our Lord has raised Us to the kingship, but He has not raised thee to the pontificate. Thou hast climbed by steps of cunning and violence -- thou hast mounted the chair of peace and from it thou hast destroyed peace by arming subjects against their superiors, teaching them to despise their God-appointed bishops and giving the laity power over priests. Me, too, although I have been anointed as emperor, unworthy amongst the Lord's anointed, thou hast attacked, although the Holy Fathers teach that only God can judge me and that I cannot be deposed on any other charge than that of forsaking the Faith.

The sainted Leo, a true pope, said; "Fear God, honour the king." Because thou dost not fear God, thou dost not honour his anointed. Do thou therefore, attainted by the curse of thy bishops and condemned by Our court, climb down and abandon the Apostolic See that thou hast usurped. Another shall ascend the chair of St. Peter -- one who does not veil his violent deeds with religion. I, Henry, king by the grace of God, and all the bishops, say to thee: "Climb down!"

The next day Gregory VII received the homage of the Lateran Council, one hundred and ten bishops and clerics, mostly Italian, who pledged their support. Then Gregory addressed the matter of the bishops who had signed the royal decree of deposition. Among them were German, French, and Italian names. They were excommunicated.

On the same day, the day after the king's attack, Gregory VII delivered his reply, in the presence of the king's mother, empress Agnes, who had taken the veil in Rome. He read out to her and to the assembled cardinals and bishops certain canons, concerning the disobedient and their punishment. Then the pope stood up and prayed:

Holy Peter, Prince of the Apostles, lend thy ear and hearken to me thy servant, whom thou hast nourished since childhood and protected against the Godless until the present day. Thou and my Lady, the mother of God, and thy brother the sainted Paul, are my witnesses that thy Holy Roman Church has called me to the helm against my will, and that it is not as a thief that I have ascended thy chair. I would rather have ended my days in a foreign land than seize thy chair for the sake of temporal glory and worldly aims. And therefore, as I believe, it is the result of thy > favour and not of my efforts if it pleased and pleases thee that the Christian people entrusted to thee should obey me in virtue of the deputyship transmitted to me, and that, through thy intercession, God has conferred on me the power to bind and loose on earth and in heaven. In reliance thereon, for the honour and defense of the Church, in the name of Almighty God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, I interdict him, king Henry, son of the emperor Henry, from governing any part of the German and Italian Empire, because with outrageous pride he has rebelled against thy Church. I release all Christians from the bond of the oath of loyalty they have sworn or may swear and I forbid him from now onwards to serve as king. For it is fitting that he who will assail the dignity of the Church should lose his own dignity. And because he has disdained to obey me as a Christian should, and has not returned to the God whom he has abandoned, but on the contrary has resorted with the excommunicated persons, has done much evil, has despised my warnings and by his efforts to divide the Church has separated himself from her, therefore in thy stead I bind him with the bond of anathema, so that all peoples may know and learn that thou art pope and that on this rock the Son of the living God has built his Church, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

This prayer was delivered in the Lateran Church, followed by the formal anathema, and when it had been pronounced, Gregory's chair collapsed.

After this, twice in the spring and early summer of 1076, the king called imperial diets (formal deliberative assemblies) at Worms and Mainz. Nobody came. The imperial estates deserted him. A temporary solution was agreed to by king and pope -- an imperial diet to be held in Augsburg at Candlemas in the following year, under the presidency of Gregory. Meanwhile, Henry was to live in Spires as a private individual. Henry feared that the diet at Augsburg might deprive him of crown and empire. So he began his famous journey to Canossa.

In the winter of 1076-77, the coldest of the century, Henry set out to cross the Alps. He took with him his wife, his three year old son, a few knights, and a few servants. They chose the route over Mont Cenis, the West Alpine pass nearly 7,000 feet above sea level. The descent through deep gorges and over precipitous cliffs covered with snow and ice was very difficult. The queen, the child and the horses were wrapped in ox hides and led down the mountain, and the men clambered down on hands and knees. Noblemen and bishops paid Henry homage as he passed through Lombardy and he learned that the pope was at Canossa at the ancestral castle of the 31-year old countess Matilda of Tuscany. The little band halted at the foot of the steep rock on which lay the fortress with its three encircling walls.

During the next three days messengers passed to and fro. The penitent Henry appeared each morning at the gates, clad in grey woolen shirt over his armour, barefooted in snow and ice. Gregory would not admit him. Finally, on the fourth day he was taken in and informed of the conditions for absolution. Absolution was given on condition that Henry would, on his return to Germany, perform no act of government until he had appeared before and appeased a Diet of those princes who had charges against him.

On return to Germany, Henry broke his pledges and avoided the Diet, and the princes elected Rudolph of Rheinfelden, duke of Swabia, and Henry IV's brother-in-law, who was crowned by the archbishop of Mainz. Civil war ensued.

The pope proposed an armistice to the two kings, which neither of them accepted. Gregory was pressed from both sides for a decision.

So he renewed his decree, and announced that Henry was deprived of his kingdom in Germany and Italy. It was in this connection that the fateful words of the papacy were uttered, "If you are judge in Spiritual matters, how much more are you entitled to be judge, one must assume, in earthly ones."

Gregory also sent demands for tribute to Corsica, Sardinia, the realms of the Norman princes in Southern Italy, France, Hungary, Dalmatia, Denmark, Russia, and England. In Gregory's view, the Church took precedence over State and throne in every country. He expressed his views so strongly that many courts were shocked. But he became so deeply involved in worldly affairs that he sometimes asked his friends to intercede for him with heaven, as he could no longer concentrate his mind on prayer.

On Easter Monday, April 13, 1080, while celebrating divine service, from the slight body of the pope, in solemn and moving utterance, came a prophecy: By the next feast of St. Peter, Henry IV would be either deposed or dead, if he did not repent. If that did not come true, then let them no longer believe in Gregory.

Opposition to Gregory grew. Without an election, but with the consent of high dignitaries of the Church, archbishop Guibert of Ravenna became anti-pope as Clement III. As a chronicler lamented, "Now the popes are doubled, the bishops are doubled, the kings are doubled, the dukes are doubled." Anti-king Rudolph was mortally wounded in October, 1080. Henry assaulted Rome, unsuccessfully.

On 21st April, 1083, the 33-year old Henry (untouched by the prediction of three years previous) marched into Rome. Three days later he was crowned emperor by Clement III in St. Peter's, after Gregory had been declared guilty of high treason by a council. But the pope continued to hold Castel'Sant'Angelo. He had pawned Church property to gain money for defense, he was deserted even by his closest friends, thirteen cardinals deserted his cause, together with prelates, officials, and many of the leaders of Roman troops.

Immediately after king Henry's festivities, he received news of the approach of Robert Guiscard of the Normans, advancing with an army from the south, with Arab Islamite forces in some of the formations. Henry and the anti-pope left the city, and the army occupied Rome, and brought Gregory from Castel'Sant' Angelo to the Lateran, where the liberators on their knees paid homage to the pope. This was Gregory's last great hour in Rome.

On the third day, the Romans rose against their liberators. Rome was put on fire and three-quarters of the city burned. Churches and private houses were sacked. The Normans put the nobles of Rome to the sword, or held them as hostages. Citizens were dragged off to slavery. The pope fled. By January, 1085, his strength was gone. His last words were, "I have loved justice and hated iniquity; therefore I die in exile." A bishop replied, "Lord, you cannot die in exile, for as viceroy of Christ and the Apostles you have by divine disposition received the nations as your inheritance and the boundaries of the earth as your possession."

157. Victor III or Desiderius, Prince of Benevento
(May 24, 1086 - September 16, 1087 A.D.)

Victor III was one of the three recommended by Gregory VII as possibilities to succeed him. He was a native of southern Italy, born in Benevento in 1026, of a noble family. Against his family's wishes, he became a monk and entered Monte Cassino. There he succeeded abbot Frederick when the latter was elected pope. He had always stood for friendly relations between the Holy See and the Norman princes.

It was not until a year after his election that Victor III was able to enter Rome, and was consecrated pope. The Gregorian party had joined him, but the partisans of the anti-pope, Clement III, had not shown any signs of reconciliation. In June, 1087, Victor was able to say Mass in St. Peter's. By the end of the month the anti-pope had seized the basilica which, however, returned to Victor in early July.

In August, the excommunication of Henry IV was renewed at a council in Benevento. Victor III died shortly after the close of the council, on September 16.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant five months)

158. Urban II or Odo of Chatillan
(March 12, 1088 - July 29, 1099 A.D.)

Urban II was another of the three recommended by Gregory VII as possible successors. He was French, born in Rheims around 1040. He was archdeacon of Rheims at one time, then left that post to enter the Cluny monastery. Hugh was at that time abbot of Cluny, and one of Gregory VII's most trusted advisors. When the pope asked Hugh in 1078 to recommend monks for senior positions in the Curia, Odo was one of those named, and he was made cardinal bishop of Ostia, the bishop whose duty it was to crown the pope.

Urban II renewed the sentence of excommunication against emperor Henry IV; German troops attacked Italy and Urban was forced south to Norman protection. He granted the new Norman ruler of Sicily, Roger, privileges amounting to a permanent papal legation, allowing Roger to alter the boundaries of dioceses and translate bishops at will.

Urban excommunicated Philip, king of France, who had conceived a passion for the countess of Anjou, whose husband was still living, and after a divorce, he had married her. His excommunication occurred two years after this event, when Urban had gained victory over Henry IV.

Henry's favorite son Conrad rebelled, and joined forces with his cousin, the countess Matilda and her new husband Guelf of Bavaria. With their support and Urban's approval Conrad was crowned Henry V, king of Italy, at Milan. The anti-pope fled from Rome.

In France, at Clermont, before a council of several hundred prelates and thousands of clergy and laymen, Urban delivered a plea for a united Christendom, which would unite to liberate the Shrine of the Holy Sepulchre. He delivered an impassioned and magnificent speech; the moment was propitious. Lately travelling through Europe had been a returned pilgrim, Peter of Amiens, who told of Christian disgraces and Turkish profanities. The First Crusade was born. Three years after Urban's speech at Clermont, Godfrey de Bouillon set up his scarlet and white standard at Jerusalem. The outcome of the four year crusade of 1095-99, led by large numbers of princely group leaders, was that Jerusalem was besieged and taken; almost all the inhabitants, Islamites and Jews, were slaughtered. Many were drawn by the legendary riches of the East. There was death, flight, robbery and outrage.

159. Paschal II (Pascal II) or Ranieri de Bieda
(August 13 [14], 1099 - January 21, 1118 A.D.)

Paschal II, an Italian and monk of Cluny, was elected by the cardinals two weeks after the death of Urban II. He had been made a cardinal by Gregory VII and served as a papal legate in France. He was a temperate man and ardent reformer.

Anti-pope Clement died in 1100, and was succeeded by Theodoric. Also anti-pope later to Paschal were Albert, who was captured in 1102 and banished to St. Laurentius monastery at Averse; and Sylvester IV, whose first public appearance in Rome was in 1105 and who died in 1111. Philip of France, who had been excommunicated ten years earlier, submitted and was reconciled to the Church. In England the long exile of Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, ended, and a satisfactory agreement with England's Henry I was made in 1107.

In the early years, Paschal II several times renewed the decrees forbidding investiture of bishops by the king. Henry V came to Italy surrounded by lawyers as well as soldiers. Bishops were temporal lords and as such the power of selection must rest in his hands or how could the holders of the huge land-owning abbeys be controlled? Two-thirds of his kingly inheritance in Germany was owned by clerics, Henry claimed.

The pope made a startling proposal. If the emperor would abandon his claims of investiture he in turn would give up all temporal possessions of the Church. The immensity of the proposition was staggering. The wealth of the Church, accumulated over centuries, was almost beyond reckoning. And how would the clergy live? On alms, was the pope's simple answer.

When Henry V arrived at Rome to seal the agreement by a great coronation ceremony there was a sudden revolt of the Romans. Henry and his soldiers were forced to retreat and took Paschal and some of his court as prisoners.

After two months of captivity, Paschal II submitted, and confirmed the German king's traditional right of investiture. The pope's surrender to the emperor was repudiated by the bishops of France and Italy, and the next year it was withdrawn by the pope. Nevertheless, Henry resumed the practise of investiture.

The pope accepted abuse that was poured upon him with humility and shame. "I confess I failed," he said, "and I ask you to pray God to forgive me." He was continually explaining and apologizing. "I am dust and ashes," he wept, "Anathema, anathema to the unrighteous decree."

In 1116, Henry again entered Italy to establish his claim to the lands of his lately deceased cousin, Matilda, countess of Tuscany, and to crown his wife, Matilda, daughter of Henry I of England. As the German forces approached Rome, Paschal II left for Benevento. Henry persuaded Maurice Burdin, archbishop of Braga in Portugal, who was in Rome at that time, to perform the coronation ceremony. Paschal returned to Rome after Henry's departure, and died there in 1118.

160. Gelasius II or John Coniula of Gaeta

(January 24 or 30 [March 10], 1118 - January 2, 28, or 29, 1119 A.D.)

John Coniula was an Italian born in Gaeta. He was a Benedictine monk from Monte Cassino and had been chancellor of the Roman Church since the time of Urban. The election was held the day after the death of Paschal II in a Roman monastery, and the consecration took place on March 10.

A party in the city led by Cencius (Cenzio) Frangipani broke into the monastery where the election was being held and seized and imprisoned the pope-elect in an attempt to prevent his accession; on news of this the Romans, led by the nobleman Pierleone, rose up and forced the pope's release.

Henry V set out for Rome immediately upon hearing of the election. As he approached the city, Gelasius II fled to his own city of Gaeta. Here, on March 9, since he was as yet only a deacon, he was ordained to the priesthood and the following day consecrated bishop and crowned as pope Gelasius II. Henry saw that he would get no concessions from Gelasius, and so he set up an anti-pope, Maurice Burdin, archbishop of Braga, who had crowned Henry emperor in 1107, and who for this offense had been excommunicated by Paschal II. He was given the name of Gregory VIII.

In June, 1118, after the departure of Henry and the anti-pope, Gelasius II entered Rome with the help of the Normans of southern Italy. On July 21, as the pope was on his way to vespers in the church of S. Prassede, he was again attacked by the Frangipani. Unable to defend himself in Rome, he left on September 2 by sea for Pisa, by way of Genoa to Marseilles. But feeling that the end was near, he had himself taken to Cluny monastery, where he died on January 2, 1119.

161. Calixtus II (Callistus) or Guy, Archbishop of Vienne (February 2 [9], 1119 - December 13, 1124 A.D.)

Four days after the death of Gelasius II, the six cardinals who were at Cluny nominated Guy, archbishop of Vienne, a scholar who was related to the emperor and to the king of France. Messengers were sent to Rome to seek the approval of the papal vicar and the clergy. The pope-elect was proclaimed in Rome on March 1; he had been crowned in France on February 9, taking the name of Calixtus II. He was a younger son of the count of Burgundy.

A great council was held at Rheims in October, 1119, and Calixtus met with envoys of the emperor in Mouzon. He offered to guarantee the fidelity of the German bishops if Henry would renounce investiture. The emperor accepted the terms, but suspicions on both sides caused a withdrawal of Calixtus, who returned to Rheims and formally excommunicated Henry.

In January, 1121, Callixtus had returned to Rome, and in April anti-pope Gregory VIII was captured by John of Crema and the Normans, and after trial was shut up in the monastery of La Cava where he remained until his death.

Early in 1122, German envoys appeared in Rome to negotiate an agreement which was completed the following September. By the terms of the Concordat of Worms, the emperor renounced investiture and promised freedom of episcopal elections. The pope permitted the elections of bishops to take place in the emperor's presence, and granted him the right to confirm disputed elections in favor of the more worthy candidate on the advice of the metropolitan and the bishops of the provinces. The bishop-elect was then to receive the regalia, or temporalities of his office, by the monarch ceremoniously touching the bishop-elect with his sceptre. A period of peaceful relations between pope and emperor ensued for some thirty years.

In 1123, Calixtus called the first general council of the Church in the West. More than three hundred bishops were present. The twenty-five canons of the council reaffirmed the general principles of the reforming party. The progress made by the Church in the preceding centuries was confirmed, defined and sanctioned.

The appointment to chancellor of the Roman Church by Calixtus of Aimeric, a native of Burgundy and regular canon of S. Maria in Rheno in Bologna, marked the beginnings of a new development in papal policy, a move to the younger generation who were patrons of the new religious orders, and were mostly of French or northern Italian origin.

162. Honorius II or Lambert Scannabecchi of Bologna (December 15 [22], 1124 - February 13, 1130 A.D.)

Lambert was born in humble circumstances at Fiagnano (Faguano) near Imola in Italy. He entered the papal service as a secretary in the time of Urban II. Paschal made him a cardinal in 1117, and under Calixtus II he had excelled in a number of diplomatic missions, having an important part in the negotiations which led to the Concordat of Worms in 1122.

On the death of Calixtus II, there were two rivals for the position, Lambert the cardinal bishop of Ostia, who was put forward by the Frangipani, and Saxo cardinal priest of S. Stefano. When the electors met on December 16, a third candidate was unexpectedly proposed, Theobald Buccaporci (Tommaso Buccapecci), who took the name of Celestine II. But as he was being ceremoniously robed the Frangipani burst into the chapel of S. Pancretio in the Lateran and proclaimed Lambert pope. In the struggle which ensued, Theobald suffered injuries, and resigned his office. He died a few days later. The electors accepted Lambert of Ostia as pope Honorius II. Lambert offered to resign and submit to a new election; but he was confirmed in office on December 21.

Henry V died in 1125, and was succeeded by Lothar of Supplinburg. Honorius II exchanged embassies with the Byzantine emperor, and approved the sovereignty of Baldwin II, third monarch of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem.

William, the Norman duke of Apulia, died without heirs, and Honorius claimed his rights; and was contested by Roger, duke of Sicily-Calabria. Honorius led a coalition of southern Italian barons against Roger, but deserted by his allies, the pope had to confirm Roger as duke of Apulia.

Aimeric (Haimeric) directed much of the papal policy in these years. Most of the cardinals appointed at this time were non-Romans and either members of, or sympathetic to, the new religious orders.

The rival factions in the city were so anxious as pope Honorius' death approached, that they believed that he had already died; so Aimeric carried him to a window where, supported in an upright position, he blessed the people. He died the following night of February 13-14.

163. Innocent II or Gregory Papareschi
(February 14 [23], 1130 - September 24, 1143 A.D.)

On the death of Honorius in the early hours of February 14, his body was carried secretly to the Lateran, where it was buried. The electoral proceedings followed immediately afterward, and by nine o'clock they had been concluded. The candidate nominated by the late pope, cardinal deacon Gregory of Sant' Angelo, a member of the Roman nobility, became pope Innocent II.

Gregory Papareschi had been cardinal deacon of S. Angelo since 1116. He had taken part in the negotiations which led up to the Concordat of Worms, and had twice served as legate in France. However, three hours after his election, cardinal Peter Pierleoni was elected pope by two cardinal bishops and twenty-two other persons who were present; he took the name of Anacletus II. The following day, after distribution of money by the Pierleoni family, a number of soldiers which had been enlisted stormed the Lateran and St. Peter's. Innocent II fled to the Palladium monastery, which was also attacked. He succeeded in having himself consecrated in S. Maria Nuova, then fled from Rome, leaving Anacletus in command. The split was followed by an open cleavage in the Church.

Innocent II went to France, and his cause was taken up by Bernard. The 39-year old Bernard had fearlessly made it his vocation not only to serve God himself, but also to bring reform to those who had professed the same solemn vow. He preached so convincingly of the virtues of the monastic life that many men came to the cloisters. In 1112, Bernard had joined the reformed Benedictine monastery at Citeaux. In 1115, with twelve of his brethren, Bernard left the original Cistercian mother-house of Citeaux to found the schola caritatis, his monastic paradise, in the wild valley of the Vermut; converting the gloomy place into the bright valley of lights, namely Clairvaux. "You will find more in forests than in books," Bernard said. The black Benedictine habit was changed to white, as a symbol of joy. He was abbot of Clairvaux at age twenty-five, and abbot he remained all his life, though with a wide sphere of influence, both Spiritual and temporal.

Bernard was called from the monastery by Aimeric, to meet with the highest dignitaries, archbishops, bishops and abbots. King Louis VI of France was also there, all for the purpose of discussing who should be considered the rightful pope. Bernard gave his decision quite simply: Innocent was worthy, saintly and legitimate. He had been appointed as the pope at the first election in Rome. Bernard convinced everyone present. Even the nobles voted for Innocent, and for France the threat of division vanished.

Bernard visited king Henry I of England, and brought him strongly to Innocent's side, and German king Lothair (Lothar) III came to his side, also. For four years Bernard travelled in the cause of Innocent II. At age 43, he was able to retire again to his monastery.

In May, 1133, German troops entered Rome and freed the Lateran and its basilica for pope Innocent II, and there on June 4, king Lothair III was crowned emperor. For the first time the coronation was of a simple, sober character, in accord with Bernard's attitude.

The pope again had to flee from Rome in the face of Anacletus' mercenaries.

In 1138, on January 25, Anacletus died suddenly in Rome; and in mid-March another anti-pope was elected, cardinal priest Gregory, who took the name of Victor IV. Victor went privately to Bernard, and told him he had no desire to be a false pope.

Innocent II summoned a council which met at the Lateran in 1139, and was attended by more than 500 bishops. Roger of Sicily was excommunicated and supporters of the anti-pope were deprived of the ecclesiastical privileges and compelled to surrender the symbols of their office. A law was signed that condemned those who rejected infant baptism, the Eucharist (communion), and the sacraments of marriage and orders.

Also in 1139, Innocent took to the field of battle against Roger. The expedition ended in disaster. The pope, taken prisoner, was compelled to come to terms, and Roger was formally invested with the kingdom of Sicily and his son with the Duchy of Apulia and the principality of Capua. Roger recognized the pope as his feudal suzerain and undertook to pay an annual tribute.

Back in Rome, the pope faced more problems, the Romans revolting, proclaiming a republic, and abolishing the his authority in the city. In the midst of this, Innocent II died, and was buried in the Lateran Basilica in a sarcophagus which had once held the remains of Roman emperor Hadrian (117-138).

164. Celestine II or Guido di Castelli
(September 26 [October 3], 1143 - March 8, 1144 A.D.)

Guido di Castelli was of noble birth, a native of Macerata in the Marches (Citta di Castello) and a former pupil of Abelard in Paris. He began his career as a clerk in the chancery of Calixtus II; Honorius II made him cardinal deacon of S. Maria in Via Lata in 1127; he served as governor of Benevento and legate in France under Celestine II, who made him cardinal priest of S. Marco in 1134.

His election was the first in half a century to be undisputed. He favored the claims of the empress Matilda to the throne of England; and raised the interdict from France, which had been the result of the disputed election of the archbishop of Bourges.

165. Lucius II or Gerard Caccianemici (Gerardo Cacciarimici)
(March 12, 1144 - February 15, 1145 A.D.)

Lucius II was an Italian, born in Bologna. He was made a cardinal by Calixtus in 1123, a friend of Bernard and a supporter of chancellor Aimeric and Innocent II. After serving as papal legate in Germany and papal rector of Benevento, he succeeded Aimeric as chancellor in 1141.

Rome at this time was in crisis, with the revolt of the Pierleoni family. Lucius II led his forces in attack, but was wounded and died after a pontificate of eleven months.

166. Eugenius III or Bernard Paganelli
(February 15 [18], 1145 - July 8, 1153 A.D.)

Eugenius III was the first Cistercian in St. Peter's chair, and a pupil of Bernard. His enthronement was held at the old imperial abbey of Farfa, due to the terror that reigned over Rome. Bernard wrote to him, "I hardly dare to call you my son, since the son has turned into a father. And yet, through the Gospel, I have, as it were, begotten you. Who is my hope, my joy, the crown of my glory? Are you not so before God? Everyone is looking to you to root out the weeds of avarice from the Father's field."

Eugenius was the son of the lord of Montemagno in the territory of Lucca. He had been for some time the vicar-general of the bishop of Pisa before becoming a monk at Clairvaux under St. Bernard. Under Innocent II he had been sent by Bernard to Rome as abbot of the monastery of St. Anastasius.

Aroused by Bernard's eloquence, Louis of France and Conrad of Germany led the second crusade, in 1146. Left defenseless, Eugenius crossed Mount Cenis into France, from where he returned to Viterbo in the autumn of 1148. In the following year Louis and Conrad returned from what had been a disastrous crusade, the armies suffering from lack of unified command, and so undisciplined that they plundered in the territories of their allies. Furthermore, Louis and Conrad returned as enemies.

At the end of 1149, Eugenius was able to enter Rome; he called upon Conrad for support, who in 1151, promised to come to receive the imperial crown and route the enemy. However, Conrad died on February 15, 1152. His successor was his nephew, Frederick of Hohenstaufen, duke of Swabia, known as Barbarossa. At Constance in March, 1153, an agreement was made with Eugenius III: Frederick would come to Rome for coronation, to deliver the pope from his enemies, and to recover the regalia Sancti Petri, and he would not make peace with the Romans or Normans without the pope's consent, and would not cede any Italian territory to the Greeks. The pope pledged to crown Frederick emperor and help him restore the honor of the empire.

In a great testament sent to the pope, Bernard set forth the right way to be followed by the papacy in imitating Christ. Toward the end, he said, "And now, my Eugene, direct your gaze on the present condition of the Church and the Curia. I have tapped the walls but not made a single spade-thrust. It belongs to you alone to dig and investigate."

With another uprising in Rome, the pope again was forced to leave, and died in Tivoli; Bernard died soon after.

167. Anastasius IV or Conrad
(July 12, 1153 - December 3, 1154 A.D.)

Conrad was a nephew of Honorius II, a Roman by birth, a canon regular and late abbot of St. Ruf (Rufus) near Avignon. Paschal II had made him cardinal priest of S. Pudentiana in 1110, and since 1120 he had been cardinal bishop of Sabina. He was 80 at the time of his election; and had been papal vicar of Rome during the absence of Eugenius III.

Frederick won against the pope when he sent disputed bishop Winchmann to Rome to be confirmed. In May, 1154, Anastasius IV confirmed Winchmann's election and granted the pallium (vestment of episcopal authority).

In October, Frederick began to journey to Rome for coronation, but resistance by northern Italian cities delayed his progress, and before he reached Rome, Anastasius IV had died.

168. Adrian IV or Nicholas Breakspear
(December 4 [5], 1154 - September 1, 1159 A.D.)

Nicholas Breakspear was the first English pope, born about 1115 near St. Albans. He studied in Paris, and like Anastasius IV, became canon regular and later abbot of St. Ruf (Rufus). In 1149, Eugenius III made him a cardinal. Adrian was sent, in 1152, as a papal legate to Scandinavia, where he had considerable success; and his return to Rome coinciding with the death of Anastasius, he was elected pope.

He met with Frederick at Nepi, and refused to deal with him until the traditional act of homage had been done -- the holding of the pope's stirrup while he dismounted. After a few days, Frederick agreed to this. The rebel Arnold of Brescia attempted to negotiate with Frederick on behalf of the unfaithful Romans, but was handed over to the pope, tried, and executed. Frederick received his coronation at St. Peter's on June 18, but the coronation was followed by street fighting and the next day the pope and emperor left the city.

According to the treaty of Constance, Frederick was obliged to protect the city, but being unable to do so, he returned to Germany.

As a result of the threat from Sicily, Adrian attempted to compel Norman leader William's submission, but was defeated, and in 1156, he confirmed William as king of Sicily and the conquered territories, and allowed the king a considerable measure of control over the Church in his dominions. This was greatly resented by Frederick.

In 1157, papal legates visited Frederick at Besancon in Burgundy, one of the legates being Roland Bandinelli, who was later to be pope Alexander III. A letter from the pope was delivered, and in translation the intent appeared to be to establish the emperor as a vassal to the pope, and the legates were forced to leave the country. In Augsburg the next year relations were improved with Adrian IV's explanations. However, Frederick in 1158 and 1159 made claims on Lombardy and some parts of papal territory. The pope protested this and was met with counter argument against his agreement with the Normans. A complete rupture now seemed inevitable. Frederick said about his position regarding Rome, "If I, emperor of the Roman empire, have no rights in Rome, then I have no rights anywhere." The reply to his claim was a sentence of excommunication from the pope in Anagni.

In August, 1159, Adrian IV was suddenly taken ill and he died on September 1 in Anagni, where he had been since leaving Rome early in June.

"I wish I had never left England," Adrian had confided to one prelate, "or had lived out my life quietly in in the cloisters of St. Rufus; but I dared not refuse this difficult path, for it was the Lord's bidding . . . He has put me between the hammer and the anvil."

169. Alexander III or Roland Bandinelli

(September 7 [20], 1159 - August 30, 1181 A.D.)

Roland Bandinelli was Italian, born in Sienna (Siena). In 1140, he taught in a school in Bologna where he wrote a commentary on the Decretum of the great master of canon law, Gratian, and a Summa of theology. Around 1149, he entered the service of the Curia, becoming cardinal deacon of SS. Cosmas and Damian in 1150, and cardinal priest of S. Marco in 1151. In May, 1153, he was chosen chancellor of the Roman Church and played a very important part in papal government under Adrian IV.

On September 4, the election began, and on September 7, the electors of Roland, claiming he had been duly elected, began to invest him. Octavian, the candidate of Frederick Barbarossa, seized the papal robes. The Romans appeared and Roland and his party sought refuge in Castel'

Sant' Angelo from where they were rescued some days later and escorted to Ninfa. There, on September 15, Roland was crowned as pope with the name Alexander III. Octavian and his supporters, unable to remain in Rome either, were at Farfa where on October 4, Octavian was crowned as Victor IV.

Frederick called a council to decide between the two popes, Alexander refusing to appear or acknowledge the authority of an imperial council to judge his case. The council, attended mainly by imperial bishops, decided in favor of Victor IV. France, England, and Sicily soon declared for Alexander III, as did Milan and many other Italian cities, but his position in Italy was insecure, and in spring of 1162, he sought refuge in France.

When Victor IV died, Frederick appointed Paschal (Pascal) III his successor; when Paschal died, he appointed Calixtus (Callistus) III; when Calixtus died, he appointed Innocent III. Meanwhile, Alexander carried on the duties of his office. In fact, during his pontificate papal control of the Church, and the flow of appeals to the Roman See, showed much development. Alexander III was the first of the lawyer-popes. More than five hundred of his decisions were later incorporated into canon law. From the twelfth century there have been preserved more than a thousand papal judgements in the form of decretal letters (letters of decree) in which popes in replying to a particular question gave a decision which then had the force of law. Of these letters, nearly three-quarters were issued by Alexander III, and of these more than half were addressed to England.

In 1164, there was a conflict between Henry II of England and Thomas Becket, the archbishop of Canterbury, and this situation threatened for a time to withdraw the English church from allegiance to Alexander. Becket refused to confirm the Norman customs of the Crown since they seemed to him to curtail the liberty of the Church and to limit the authority of the pope unlawfully. In 1164, he fled the country and took refuge in France, where Louis VII, who had reason to fear the ambitions of Henry II, espoused Becket's cause. Henry threatened to ally with Frederick Barbarossa. The pope wanted to support Becket, but did not want to push Henry toward Germany. The dilemma was resolved with the murder of Becket; Alexander pronounced punishment against Henry, and presided at the canonization of the murdered archbishop two years later.

In 1176, at Legnano, Frederick's forces were defeated, and after eighteen years, emperor and pope finally reached agreement, and Alexander III was the undisputed ruler of the Church.

In 1179, the pope called a general council to meet at the Lateran. Its chief business was the solemn confirmation of the agreement between pope and emperor, the settlement of a number of problems arising from the division (particularly the fate of those who were ordained or consecrated by anti-popes), and the consolidation of the work of reform, which in spite of the long crisis, had made steady progress. More than three hundred bishops were present and many abbots. Of the twenty-seven canons of the council, the most important was that which ruled that henceforth a majority of two-thirds of the electors would be necessary and sufficient to elect a pope. This canon is still in force to this day. All orders and honors conferred by anti-popes and their followers were annulled. Every bishop was commanded to set up in his cathedral city a school to provide instruction for poor students, free of charge.

Three months after the council a new revolt broke out in Rome and the pope had to leave the city. He died at Velletri on August 30, 1181, after a pontificate of almost twenty-two years.

170. Lucius III or Ubaldo Allucingoli
(September 1 [6], 1181 - November 25, 1185 A.D.)

Lucius III was a disciple of St. Bernard and a rigorous ascetic. He was born in Lucca, Italy, and was cardinal bishop of Ostia at the time of his election. He had been one of the most trusted counsellors of Alexander III, and had played an important part in the making of the Treaty of Benevento in 1156, and at the Peace of Venice.

He began negotiations with Frederick, who agreed to begin preparations for a new crusade. The pope published the famous constitution Ad abolendam which ordered all heretics condemned in ecclesiastical courts to be handed over to the secular arm for punishment. Under Lucius a form of episcopal inquisition was established, levelled at all heresies, and particularly at the followers of Peter Waldo, an ex-banker of Lyons. Waldo urged a discarding of worldly possessions, and living by alms, fasting, and prayer.

At Venice, Frederick had asked the pope to crown his son Henry to assure his succession. Lucius III refused on the grounds that there could not be two emperors at the same time. However, included in his decision was the knowledge of the betrothal of Henry to Constance, daughter of Roger II of Sicily (the ruling king of Sicily, William II, was childless). The uniting of these two kingdoms would leave the papacy virtually unprotected.

Before his death, Lucius III urged that his successor not crown Henry during Frederick's lifetime.

171. Urban III or Umberto Crivelli

(November 25 [December 1], 1185 - October 20, 1187 A.D.)

Urban III was a native of Milan, a cardinal deacon of S. Damaso in Lorenzo and archbishop of Milan. He was elected the same day that Lucius III died.

Urban's family had long suffered under Frederick Barbarossa. On January 27, 1186, prince Henry was married to Constance of Sicily in Milan, by the patriarch of Aquilea. Urban III had not surrendered his See on becoming pope and regarded the marriage as a direct affront to his authority. Six months later, he consecrated Folmar archbishop of Trier in spite of the claims of imperial candidate, Rudolph.

In November, 1186, Frederick assembled the German bishops at Gelsenhausen and publicly protested the pope's hostility; the German bishops supported the imperial protest, and the archbishop of Magdeburg was sent to Urban III in Verona to make a formal representation on the emperor's behalf.

An imperial mission with the same object was to follow, and on news of this, the pope left Verona for the greater security of Venice, from which place he intended to issue the excommunication of Frederick. However, on the journey Urban III was stricken with dysentery, and he died at Ferrara.

172. Gregory VIII or Alberto di Mora

(October 21 [25], 1187 - December 17, 1187 A.D.)

Gregory, or Alberto di Mora, was a man famous for his learning and holiness. He was a native of Benevento, a former canon regular of St. Martin of Laon, and later professor of law at Bologna. He had served as papal legate in England, Portugal, and Dalmatia under Alexander III, and for ten years before his election was chancellor of the Roman Church.

On October 2, 1187, Jerusalem had fallen to the Islamites, led by Kurdish warrior Saladin. When the news reached Gregory, he at once began negotiations with the emperor for a new crusade. The pope set out for Pisa to reconcile that city with Genoa, since their combined fleets were necessary for the crusade. Shortly after reaching Pisa, Gregory VIII died, after a pontificate of only eight weeks. Like his predecessor, he was never in Rome as pope.

173. Clement III or Paolo Scolari
(December 19 [20], 1187 - March, 1191 A.D.)

Paolo Scolari was a Roman, cardinal bishop of Palestrina. His first act was to complete the reconciliation of Pisa and Genoa begun by his predecessor. He negotiated a treaty with the Roman senate and was able to take up residence in Rome, though the Senate kept control of much of the administrative machinery of the city.

In April, 1189, an agreement about the crusade was reached with the emperor, and in May, Frederick set out. Rulers Philip Augustus of France, and Richard the Lionhearted of England also set out on the crusade. In November, 1189, William of Sicily died childless, and Henry at once claimed the throne, in right of his wife Constance. The Sicilians rejected Henry's claim, and gave the title to Tancred of Lecce, an illegitimate grandson of Roger II. In January of 1190, the pope as suzerain of Sicily confirmed Tancred's title.

Frederick, on crusade, died suddenly in June, 1190, by drowning, or after bathing in the waters of the river Salef in Asia Minor. Henry was at the time on his way to Rome to seek coronation, but before he reached the city, Clement III had died, on an unknown date in March, 1191.

174. Celestine III or Hyacinth Bobo (Gracinto Boris)
(March 30 [April 14], 1191 - January 8, 1198 A.D.

Celestine was cardinal deacon of S. Maria in Cosmedin, and was a Roman of noble birth, learned, educated, and pious. At the time of his election, he was eighty-five years old.

One of his first acts was to crown Henry VI emperor, and Henry then went to conquer Sicily, but failure of a siege at Naples and his own illness necessitated his retreat.

In May, 1192, Celestine III formally recognized Tancred Lecce as king of Sicily. A new concordat severely limited the privileges of the Sicilian crown. The new emperor, Henry VI, retaliated by severing the church in Germany from the papal court.

In February, 1194, Tancred died and was succeeded by a young child. Henry made use of this opportunity and defeated the Sicilian forces; on December 25, he was crowned king of Sicily in Palermo. The next day his wife, Constance, gave birth to a son, future emperor Frederick II.

For two years, Henry tried to convince the pope to secure the succession of his infant son to the dual throne of Germany and Sicily. Celestine III was saved from these attempts by the unexpected death of Henry in September, 1197. When he was dying, Henry commended his son to the protection of the pope, restored the territories he had taken from the papal states, asked the pope to confirm his son's succession to Sicily, and promised that, if Frederick died without an heir, the kingdom would be returned to the papacy.

After the death of Henry VI and the succession of an infant, the position of the pope became quite perfunctory; and Celestine III died about four months later.

175. Innocent III or Lothar (Lothari) Conti of Segni
(January 8 [February 22], 1198 - July 16, 1216 A.D.)

Lothar was Italian, born in Anagni in 1161. He was cardinal deacon of SS. Sergius and Bacchus, the son of the count of Segni, and related through his mother to a distinguished Roman family, the Scotti. Pope Clement III was his uncle. After an early education in the monastery of St. Andrew at Rome, he had studied theology at Paris under the greatest masters of the day. In 1187, he made a pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Thomas Becket in Canterbury, and the same year left Paris to continue his studies at Bologna, the greatest school of canon law. In 1189, he was made cardinal by Gregory VII. Under Celestine III he was chiefly employed as auditor, or judge, in the papal court. At the age of 37, he was unanimously elected to the Holy See, with the name Innocent III, and crowned on February 22.

In his coronation address, he described himself: Verily the representative of Christ, the successor of Peter, the anointed of the Lord, the god of Pharaoh set midway between God and man, below God but above man, less than God but more than man, judging all other men, but himself judged by none.

The crown of Germany was contested, between Henry VI's brother, Philip duke of Swabia, and Otto of Brunswick, Frederick II still being an infant. In January, 1201, pope Innocent declared for Otto. The pope's rejection of Philip led to civil war, and Otto's cause being the weaker in Germany, in 1206 he was defeated and fled to England. In 1208, Philip was murdered, and the princes received Otto; the pope in 1209 crowned him emperor. When in October, 1210, Otto invaded Sicily, a papal fief and kingdom of the pope's ward, Frederick II, Innocent excommunicated Otto and persuaded Frederick to make a bid for the throne of Germany. Frederick was successful, and Otto was defeated.

Innocent's first thought after his election was the launching of a new crusade, the fourth. The crusade which set out in 1202 was largely financed by Venice, which supplied the shipping. In return for this help, the crusaders were persuaded to take part in the recapture of Zara, a trading station on the Adriatic which had been lost to the Hungarians. Zara was taken in November, 1202. The crusade was now further diverted to restore Byzantine emperor Isaac Angelos, who had been dethroned, blinded and imprisoned by his brother Alexis in 1195. The pope protested, but to no avail, and Constantinople fell to the crusading army on July 17, 1203, and Isaac was restored. But the emperor failed to keep the promises of money and men made to the crusaders and in February, 1204, the city revolted, the emperor was deposed and imprisoned, his son strangled, and a usurper, Alexis Dukas, raised to the throne. In April, 1204, the crusaders launched a second attack on the city; the fall of Constantinople was followed by a sack in which no one was spared. Churches and monasteries were looted and profaned, the usurper was deposed and the city divided among the conquerors. Baldwin of Flanders was chosen as the ruler of a new Latin empire of the East. The Greek patriarch was expelled and a Latin patriarchate was established; the reunion of the church was accomplished by force of arms.

Dominic also received permission from pope Innocent III to found his Dominican Order and began missionary work among heretics. Painting by Titian, Galleria Borghese.

A heresy had arisen in southern France, the main center of which was the city of Albi, whence they were called Albigensians. They rejected the priesthood, the hierarchy, oath-taking, war, capital punishment, and even secular government. Pope Innocent III pronounced a crusade against heresy, and in July, 1209, an army, estimated at a hundred thousand strong, laid siege to the city of Beziers. At the approach of the army, Raymond II, count of Toulouse, submitted to the papal legate and promised to do penance and devote himself to rooting out heresy. In spite of his submission, Beziers was attacked and taken with immense slaughter. More than seven thousand people who had taken refuge in the Church of the Madeleine were slaughtered. With this terrible example before them, the other cities surrendered. From this point, with the contrivance of the papal legates, who grossly deceived the pope, the crusade developed into a military conquest for the benefit of the barons, chief among them Simon de Montfort, who became count of Toulouse.

During the whole of his pontificate, Innocent III was constantly in conflict with the rulers of England and France. He also had conflict within Rome; he began reform with his own household, exchanging gold and silver vessels for glass and wood. He took his attendants from the monastic orders, instead of from noble families. He purged the city, caused the prefect to resign as representative of the citizens and appointed in his place a city commandant responsible to the pope. The city's officials on the land were replaced by papal officials. Both nobility and commoner were required to swear a personal oath of loyalty to the pope. There was considerable opposition to the pope's reforms, and during the Easter procession of 1203, an attempt was made on his life. However, resistance gradually subsided and by 1205, Innocent had the city firmly under control. He then consolidated his position by buying up towns and villages, and whole districts. Year by year he increased his sovereignty.

In 1210, cardinal Johannes of the house of Colonna brought Francis of Assisi before the pope. Francis wanted to found an order and to submit its rules for the approval of the Holy Father. Innocent III at first rejected the petition, but after Christ appeared to him in a dream, he decided to discuss the application with his cardinals. Francis and his followers had voluntarily embraced poverty, and wanted to live without money, without bread, without shoes, without possessions; as enjoined in the Bible, anyone who wished to join them must sell all he had and give the proceeds to the poor. Most of all, Francis wanted to show how poverty brought dignity, happiness, and peace. Simplicity, humility, self-improvement, the avoidance of sin, the practise of virtue; these were the principles he espoused. "When there glows within us the longing for a heavenly home, we do not feel the cold outside," said Francis. He went away with a preliminary consent. The Franciscans were granted the right to preach, and also received the tonsure, or shaving of a part of the head to signify admission to the clerical state.

Thirty-four year old Francis of Assisi was among the crowd of dignitaries who attended the Fourth Lateran Council called by pope Innocent III in 1215. There was another among the monastic fathers at the Council who was asking for recognition for his Order. Barefoot also, and a man of simple character, he had kept his integrity among the storms of the period. It was forty-five year old Spaniard Dominic Guzman, who had been living in obscurity in France. He had formed a plan for an Order of Preachers. He was a priest by calling, not a layman like Francis. Dominic wanted to establish an Order for priests, the first of its kind in the Catholic Church. After initial hesitation, and against the vote of the Council, Innocent granted Dominic permission to set up his Order for the defense and revival of the Faith, with the provision that its constitution should be similar to that of the Augustinians. From the Preaching Friars, as the Dominicans were called, have emerged four popes, over sixty cardinals, 1,000 archbishops, 4,000 scholars of international reputation, and countless bearers of the Dominican spirit in learning and art, secluded after their founder's example -- including Thomas Aquinas.

The Fourth Lateran Council was attended by more than four hundred bishops, eight hundred abbots, and by representatives of the kings of Germany, France, England, Aragon, Hungary, and the crusading states. Three public sessions were held. The Council confirmed the election of Frederick II as emperor-elect, and the transfer of the county of Toulouse to Simon de Montfort. Seventy canons were passed by the Council. The creation of new religious orders was forbidden; the laity were commanded to go to confession at least once a year, and receive Holy Communion at Easter; the freedom of the Jews was limited, and they were commanded to wear a distinctive dress.

Innocent III's lasting preoccupation was with the crusade, in spite of the earlier disastrous consequences. In the context of preparation for crusade, he travelled to northern Italy in 1216, in hopes of reconciling the warring cities of Pisa and Genoa. He died at Perugia of fever on July 16, at the age of fifty-six.

Near the end of his work he wrote, Peace be to you, were the first words with which he (Jesus) greeted his Apostles after his resurrection. Peace is the expression of Charity and neighborly love. Is there anything more contrary to neighborly love than war, human slaughter? Born in hatred, it is the source of every crime; it breaks the bonds of goodwill and affection. And who can love God who does not love his neighbor? To bring men to charity and peace is the first duty of the unworthy representative of Jesus on earth.

176. Honorius III or Cencius (Cencio) Savelli
(July 18 [24], 1216 - March 18, 1227 A.D.)

The election of Honorius III in Perugia may be deemed the first conclave, as the people of Perugia locked the cardinals in until they had made their choice. They chose cardinal priest of SS. John and Paul, who was more then eighty years old. He had served as vice-chancellor of the Holy See, then as papal chamberlain or treasurer. In 1198, he had compiled for Celestine III the liber censum, a list of all those who owed taxes to the Roman Church. Honorius was former tutor of Frederick II.

The Lateran Council had decided that the crusading army was to assemble in July, 1217. Frederick excused himself, and the crusade proceeded under the kings of Hungary, Cyprus and Jerusalem. The crusade was joined by Francis of Assisi. The shameless camp life was for Francis a desecration of the Holy cause. When the crusading army was threatened with defeat, he uttered words of warning, but the leaders were scornful. Thirty-eight at this time, Francis foresaw all that would come from this crusade: defeat, flight, hunger, disease and dissolution. On August 26, 1219, six thousand of the Crusader's army were slain or taken prisoner. Francis visited the battlefield, without arms, without baggage, and with no political or military mission. He prayed with the dying and helped the wounded. Then he went over to the other side, where he insisted on being taken to Sultan Malik el-Kemal, nephew of Saladin. There he told him of his monastery, of his search for peace, and his devotion to his overlord, Jesus Christ. He asked to be allowed to visit Jerusalem, through Galilee to Nazareth. The Sultan gave him permission, and to provide for all eventualities, had him discreetly protected. Nothing must happen to the little man, no matter what came of his enterprise. The only condition was that he must return to the Sultan's camp.

On his return, Francis was granted a second and third audience with the Sultan. The audience turned into an intellectual duel, and the Sultan eventually invited Francis to remain in his court. Francis agreed, on the condition that the Sultan adopt Christianity. The Sultan wanted to give him a parting present, but Francis replied that he had no need of any presents but the ones he had, not to be bought, but attainable and blissful, joy of the heart, the anointing of the Spirit, and the oil of happiness. After a week's stay in the Sultan's camp, Francis was sent back under escort to the front line of the Crusaders. The Sultan was successful; in August, 1221, he compelled the Crusaders to call off the invasion and make peace. He asked only for the evacuation of Egypt and the unimpeded withdrawal of the invading army.

Frederick wanted to secure his son's succession, and in April, 1220, the German princes elected Frederick's son as king. Frederick continued to rule the two kingdoms of Germany and Sicily; in November, 1220, he was crowned emperor in Rome by Honorius III, and received the pope's permission to continue to govern the two kingdoms. The emperor applied himself to reorganization of the kingdom of Sicily, which was now to serve as the base for his future conquests in the Mediterranean. Honorius reminded him time and again of his obligation to begin a new crusade, but the pope died before this occurred.

Honorius III confirmed the new Dominican Order in 1216, and the rule of St. Francis in 1223. On the occasion of the emperor's coronation in 1220, the pope published an imperial constitution, which imposed the death penalty on stubbornly resistant heretics, and which marked an important stage in the creation of the Inquisition.

177. Gregory IX or Ugolini Conti
(March 19 [21], 1227 - August 22, 1241 A.D.)

Gregory IX was born in Anagni, Italy, in 1147. He was cardinal bishop of Ostia, and had been a cardinal since 1198.

Upon his election, he proceeded to press Frederick II to honor his promise to abandon the crown of Sicily. The long-planned crusade was to set out in August, 1227. In September, Frederick embarked, but a few days later disembarked at Otranto on the plea of sickness. Gregory IX, appealing to the agreement made at San Germano in 1225, at once excommunicated him. The emperor had stated, "That the world has been deceived by three imposters: Jesus Christ, Moses, and Mahomet (Mohammed); that two of these died in honor; the third, Jesus Christ, was hanged on a tree; that those are fools who claim that God, the omnipotent Creator of the world, was born of a virgin; and that man ought to believe nothing but what he can understand and prove by reason!"

Intrigues of Frederick II's agents in Rome compelled the pope to leave the city in April, 1228. The following June, the emperor travelled to Palestine, where he negotiated a treaty with the sultan Malek el-Kemal. This resulted in the peaceful yielding of Jerusalem and the surrounding district, Bethlehem, Nazareth and the land between these towns, and a strip of coast between Jaffa and Acre and the pilgrims' road to Jerusalem and Nazareth. The Islamites were not allowed to enter these places under arms, but they could attend their own places of worship in them. The Mosque of Omar and the Temple area in Jerusalem were reserved to them.

When Frederick II returned, he made proposals of peace to Gregory, but he would not hearken. So Frederick marched against the pope, who was forced to retreat. Finally, on August 28, 1230, the Peace of San Germano was concluded, Frederick II was welcomed back into the Church, and the emperor and the pope remained at peace for ten years.

The emperor in letters maintained that Peter was only the spokesman of the Apostles, not the head. Peter's successor, the pope, was only the administrator for the bishops, whose rights were equal to his. Frederick proposed to friendly members of the Curia that they should elect a new pope at a general council, in order to rid themselves of the unworthiness of Gregory IX's rule. And Frederick II fought and defeated the Lombards in Corte Nuova in November, 1237. The result of this was the pronouncement by the pope of another sentence of excommunication on Frederick.

Gregory IX now summoned a General Council at which he planned to present his case against the emperor. Frederick warned that he would not permit this, and in May, 1241, he captured three papal legates and a hundred bishops who were en route to the Council. The emperor marched on Rome, but the pope died before he arrived. Among Gregory IX's last words were those of concern for the imprisoned prelates: True, Peter's little ship is sometimes caught in a hurricane and driven on the rocks, but it soon bobs up again among the foaming waves.

As a cardinal, Gregory IX had been the first patron of Francis of Assisi. He was also the pope of the Inquisition; in 1232, a papal inquisition directed by Conrad of Marburg was established in Germany, and in 1233, Gregory commissioned a convert from heresy, Dominican Robert le Bougre, as his inquisitor in France. These two commissions may be regarded as the acts by which the Inquisition, as a special tribunal acting independently of the diocesan bishop and directly controlled by the pope, was established.

178. Celestine IV or Godfrey di Castiglione
(October 25 [28], 1241 - November 10, 1241 A.D.)

On the death of Gregory IX, the cardinals in the Curia numbered twelve, two of whom were still imprisoned by Frederick II. The ten cardinals were unwilling to proceed with election until Frederick released his prisoners. But senator of Rome Matteo Rosso Orsini, a relative of Celestine III and the father of future pope Nicholas III, compelled the cardinals into conclave in the Septizonium, an ancient building part palace, part fortress, on the Palatine. Guards were mounted on the roof, and as the days and weeks passed without a decision, the cardinals were subjected to a number of distressing circumstances.

On October 25, Godfrey di Castiglione was elected, and three days later consecrated as pope Celestine IV. He was a native of Milan, where he had been archpriest and chancellor before being made cardinal in 1227.

He had contracted an infection while in the Septizonium and died just two weeks after his consecration.

179. Innocent IV or Sinisbaldo Fieschi (Sinibaldo Freschi) (June 25 [28], 1243 - December 7, 1254 A.D.)

Innocent IV deposes Frederick II at the Council of Lyons. Miniature from the Chronicle of Matthew Paris (13th century), in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

Because of the cardinals' refusal to elect a pope while some of their number were still imprisoned by Frederick II, the See was vacant for almost two years. Finally cardinal Sinisbaldo Fieschi was elected, who had been favorable to Frederick II as a cardinal. He was born around 1207 in Genoa, and was a former professor of canon law at the University of Bologna. In 1227, he became cardinal priest of S. Lorenzo in Lucina and vice-chancellor of the Roman Church.

The conflict continued between pope and emperor. In 1244, Frederick II offered to submit, and a meeting was arranged at Sutri. However, the pope fled secretly, going with a few trusted men to Civita Vecchia where he was met by a squadron of ships from Genoa. Frederick II's words when informed of this were, "When I was playing chess with the pope and my pieces were disposed that I could mate him or at least win a castle from him, the Genoese came, swept their hands over the board and upset the whole game."

The Council of Lyons was held at the pope's instigation, opening on June 28, 1245. The main business was the emperor's persecution of the Church. The result was the excommunication of Frederick II. When Frederick heard of this he lined up his crowns, the imperial crown of Rome, and the royal crowns of Aix-la-Chapelle, Palermo, and Jerusalem; and put them on one after the other. I still have my crowns, he said, and no pope, no church assembly shall rob me of them without a bloody struggle.

Innocent IV had inherited a debt of a hundred and fifty thousand pounds from his predecessor, and now, calling for another crusade, he levied more fees, and more taxes, and the money was diverted to the campaign against the emperor. King Haakon of Norway paid about 1500 pounds for his coronation, and the regional churches there diverted about a third of their income to the Church of Rome.

The only point of agreement between emperor and pope was in their treatment of heretics. Frederick II passed a law that heretics should be put to death by fire in the sight of the people. Innocent IV published a directive for the Inquisition courts: Moreover it shall be obligatory of the ruler (of a city) to force all heretics that he has arrested -- without striking off a limb or bringing them nearer to death -- expressly to confess their errors as robbers and murderers of souls and thieves of God's sacraments and the Christian faith, and to give the names of other heretics known to them.

In 1250, Frederick II died, and in 1251 the pope returned to Italy, which was rapidly falling into a state of near anarchy. The pope offered the kingdom of Sicily in turn to French king Charles of Anjou, and to Richard of Cornwall, brother of Henry III of England, in order to combat Conrad, Frederick II's son. Both refused. In 1254, Henry III accepted the kingdom on behalf of his eight-year old son, Edmund. When Conrad died in the same year, the pope abandoned his English alliance and gave the kingdom to Manfred, illegitimate son of Frederick II. Manfred gathered an army of Islamites and rose against the pope's men, this also occurring in 1254.

Innocent died at Naples in the same year.

180. Alexander IV or Rinaldo Conti

Alexander IV approves the writings of Thomas Aquinas at Anagni. "The Triumph of St. Thomas" by Benozzo Gozzoli, in the Louvre, Paris.

The cardinals at Naples elected the cardinal bishop of Ostia to succeed pope Innocent IV. He was a Roman, related to Innocent III and Gregory IX, and personally was pious and irreproachable.

Upon succession he renewed the offer of the throne of Sicily to Henry III and in October, 1255, young Edmund was invested with the kingdom. But Henry III was unable to pay the sum he had offered, and the crown was revoked.

Manfred prospered, ignoring the anathema pronounced by the pope. Brancaleone, a new champion of the people, was summoned from Bologna to Rome by the citizens. He expelled the pope, and established a virtual dictatorship in Rome. In addition, in spring of 1261, the Romans elected Manfred to the senate.

The pope died in Viterbo, with the temporal power of the papacy reduced to almost nothing.

181. Urban IV or Pantaleon Ancher (Jacques Pantaleon)
(August 29 [September 4], 1261 - October 2, 1264 A.D.)

Thomas Aquinas, prince of scholasticism and classical philosopher.

After a vacancy of three months, the cardinals elected the patriarch of Jerusalem, who was French, the son of a cobbler, born in Troyes. He was never in Rome as pope.

Urban IV promptly named fourteen new cardinals, most of whom were French.

Pope Urban IV initiated the feast of Corpus Christi in 1264. Many years before, when he was archdeacon in Liege, a nun from the Augustinian convent informed him and other churchmen of a vision she had received. From her twentieth year on, she had repeatedly seen in the sky a crescent moon from which a piece was missing. It was clear to her that the moon signified the Church year, and she explained the gap as the lack of a feast in honor of the Blessed Sacrament.

The pope commissioned the greatest scholar of his time, Thomas Aquinas, to compose a Mass and office. While pope and emperor fought for supremacy, Thomas Aquinas was writing. Thomas was concerned with the truths of God. He knew that all things were ordered to a higher end. Theology, which for him was wisdom, rested on an immediate inspiration and revelation of God. As in the case of Bernard of Clairvaux, the highest in office and dignity constantly invoked his help, though he himself held no office. The popes, the generals of the orders, kings, all had recourse to him. His effect on the world is well depicted in a terra cotta relief at Viterbo which shows him with a book in his left hand and a church raised aloft in his right and irradiated by the sun on his breast. The frankness, penetration, and mildness of his writings were based on a life of mystical insight.

As a youth, Thomas studied in the Benedictine abbey of Monte Cassino. Through his father he had imperial blood; through his mother, Norman. Frederick II and the abbot of Monte Cassino were his uncles, pope Honorius III his godfather. At the age of nineteen he became a Dominican novice. He was horrified by the superficiality, avarice, jealousy, and malice of men towards one another. When he was shut up by his family to cure him of his craze for the life of a mendicant friar, he continued to wear the Dominican habit and live according to Dominican rule; studied diligently, and drew near to God. He drove off a girl his brother sent to seduce him, with a flaming piece of wood in his hand, with which he drew a cross on the door. Innocent IV protested to Frederick II in the name of the Dominicans against Thomas' imprisonment, and the emperor ordered his nephew to be released and allowed to exercise his chosen calling.

Thomas wanted only to teach and to be on the move, like Christ and the Apostles. At the age of twenty-two he studied at Cologne in the school of Albertus Magnus, who is known as the father of experimental science and who organized the preaching friars into an order of philosophers. Thomas' fellow students called him a great Sicilian ox, because he was so silent. Albertus knew what was growing in the heart of his pupil; he prophesied that he would one day bellow so loudly that the whole world would hear him. From Cologne, Thomas accompanied Albertus to Paris, and lectured there. Seventy works are ascribed to him, published in seventeen folio volumes in the Venetian edition of 1593.

Thomas Aquinas moved from place to place with pope Urban IV. From 1261 onward, Thomas was Magister Sacri Palatii, theological advisor to the Holy Father. From the court, he travelled regularly through the country among the faithful.

On September 8, 1264, Urban IV initiated the Corpus Christi feast throughout the Church, and he died four weeks later.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

182. Clement IV or Guy Foulques (Guy de Gros)
(February 5 [15], 1265 - November 29, 1268 A.D.)

After a four month delay, the cardinals finally agreed to leave the choice of pope to two of their members, who chose the cardinal bishop of Sabina. He was French, a native of Languedoc, and a lawyer by profession. He had been married and had two daughters, entering the clergy after the death of his wife. He was in turn bishop of Le Puy, archbishop of Narbonne, and in 1261 was made cardinal. He served as papal legate in England 1262-1264. He cultivated the friendship of Thomas Aquinas, and took steps to have him appointed archbishop of Naples, but Thomas begged to be released from the honor.

During Clement IV's pontificate, Charles of Anjou was invested with the kingdom of Sicily, and conquered Manfred, who was killed in the battle. When Conradin, 17-year old grandson of Frederick II, asserted his claim on Sicily, he was captured by Charles of Anjou's forces and, against the pleadings of the pope, executed, putting an end to the Hohenstaufen line.

Four weeks later Clement IV died at Viterbo.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant two years nine months)

183. Gregory X or Tebaldo (Theobald) Visconti
(September 1, 1271 [March 27, 1272] - January 10, 1276 A.D.)

After a long delay, the Conclave met in Viterbo in the summer of 1271. After several weeks of indecision, the people of the city stripped the roof off the palace where the cardinals were sitting; at that point they agreed to leave the decision to a commission of six of their members. On the same day, the six cardinals elected Tebaldo Visconti, who was serving as papal legate with the Crusaders in Palestine.

The new pope was Italian, born in Piacenza and archdeacon of the church of Liege. In January, 1272, he arrived in Italy, and on March 27 was consecrated and crowned as pope Gregory X.

One of his first acts was to announce a council, scheduled for two years hence at Lyons, to consider reform of the Church, relief of the Holy Land, and the reunion of the Greek church.

When the princes in Germany delayed choosing a king after the death of Richard of Cornwall, the pope in 1273 wrote to the electors and warned them that if they did not proceed to election at once he would himself provide an emperor. The princes quickly chose Rudolph of Habsburg as king of Germany and emperor-elect. Charles of Anjou, in the meantime, in spite of the desire to conquer Constantinople, found himself occupied in conflict with the city of Genoa.

In Constantinople, a council of Greek bishops was persuaded to sign a declaration accepting the primacy of the Holy See, after the imprisonment of dissenting patriarch Joseph I in a secluded monastery.

The second Council of Lyons, the fourteenth ecumenical council, was opened by Gregory X on May 7, 1274. It was attended by more than two hundred bishops and several hundred other prelates. Thomas Aquinas was unable to attend because of his illness; he died on the opening day of the Council, at the age of forty-nine. Constantinople was represented by Germanus, a former patriarch of Constantinople, by the archbishop of Nicea, and by the chancellor of the emperor. With elaborate ceremony they professed submission, and the schism between East and West was pronounced to be at an end. The union lasted just a little more than seven years.

One of the acts of the Council was to set down new rules for the election of a pope: after the death of the pope, an interval of only ten days was to be allowed for travelling cardinals to arrive. Each cardinal should then enter the palace of the deceased accompanied by only one servant, and they should all assemble in a single chamber, which could later be walled up, leaving a serving hatch for meals. If the cardinals did not come to a decision in the first three days, in the next five they would have only one bowl of food, served mornings and evenings. After that they would get only wine, bread and water. All communication with the outside world was forbidden under pain of excommunication. During the Conclave no cardinal was to receive any part of his revenues. With some modifications, the decree on the Conclave is still in force.

A delegation appeared at the conference from the Great Khan of the Mongols who sought an alliance with the Western kings and the pope against the Islamites of Egypt. One of the members of the delegation asked for baptism.

In October, 1275, the pope met with new king Rudolph of Habsburg, at Lausanne. The pope was already sick, and his last months were spent trying to stir up enthusiasm for another crusade, without much success. He died at Arezzo, in the midst of his journeying.

184. Innocent V or Peter of Tarentaise
(January 21 [February 22], 1276 - June 22, 1276 A.D.)

Ten days after the death of Gregory X, the Conclave proceeded according to the rules laid down at the Council at Lyons, and on the second day of the Conclave they elected Peter of Tarentaise, who was cardinal of Ostia. He was French, born at Champagny in Savoy in 1225, the same year as Thomas Aquinas. He was a Dominican friar, a master of the University of Paris, and a famous theologian, and author of a number of works.

Innocent V was well disposed toward Charles of Anjou, and confirmed his offices of senator of Rome, and imperial vicar in Tuscany. He helped make peace between Charles and the city of Genoa. Rudolph of Habsburg now laid claims for Romagna, which he had earlier agreed to surrender to Gregory X. Innocent V forbade Rudolph to come to Italy for coronation until he withdrew these claims. Negotiations were still in progress when the pope died.

185. Adrian V or Ottobuono Fieschi
(July 11, 1276 - August 18, 1276 A.D.)

Adrian V attributed his ill-health to hardships suffered while in Conclave, and he suspended some of those regulations which had been made at Lyons to prevent deadlock. He was a native of Genoa and a nephew of pope Innocent IV, who had made him a cardinal in 1252. He had served as papal legate in England during the conflict between Henry III and the barons, 1265-1268.

Adrian was never consecrated or crowned pope, but died at Viterbo, only a month after his election.

186. John XXI or John Peter Juliani

(September 8 [20], 1276 - May 20, 1277 A.D.)

The Conclave this time elected Portuguese John Peter Juliani, archbishop of Braga. He was crowned as John XXI, though he was the twentieth pope of that name. He was a native of Lisbon, studied medicine at Salerno, and was the physician of Gregory X, accompanying him to the Council at Lyons.

Pope John XXI renewed discussions with the Greek church, requesting and receiving the personal submission of emperor Michael and his son Andronicus. The patriarch and the clergy also reaffirmed their acceptance of the primacy of the Roman See. But before the papal envoys returned to Rome, the pope had died. He was adding a new wing to the papal palace at Viterbo, and as he lay sleeping, part of the building collapsed on him, seriously injuring him, and he died eight days later, after a pontificate of eight months.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant six months)

187. Nicholas III or John Gaetano Orsini

(November 25 [December 26], 1277 - August 22, 1280 A.D.)

After a delay of six months, a Conclave was held, and elected a Roman, born in 1217, the son of senator Matteo Rosso Orsini, who had in 1241 locked the cardinal electors in the Septizonium. He had been a cardinal since 1244, and had served as papal legate in England and in France.

Nicholas III refused to renew the appointment of Charles of Anjou as senator of Rome and imperial vicar in Tuscany. The first office was given to the pope's brother, Matteo, and the second to a nephew, cardinal Malabranca. Rudolph of Habsburg was persuaded to relinquish his claims in Romagna, and another papal nephew was installed there as rector.

Tomb of Nicholas III

The pope demanded further evidence of the submission of the Greek church to Rome; but the legates brought back a profession of faith containing complicated theology, but no explicit acceptance of those points of difference. The other demands of Nicholas III were disregarded, and it became evident that the union of the churches did not really exist. While the pope ruled that the testament of St. Francis of Assisi was not binding, there arose a group called the Spirituals, who still held out for the strict observance of his testament and of the ideal of absolute poverty.

Nicholas III died suddenly of a heart attack at Viterbo, after two years and nine months as pope.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant six months)

188. Martin IV or Simon de Brie (de Brion)
(February 22 [March 23], 1281 - March 28, 1285 A.D.)

Martin IV was elected after another six month delay. He was actually the second Martin, but took the name of Martin IV to avoid confusion with Marinus I and II.

He was born in Brion, France, was the cardinal of St. Cecelia at the time of his election, and 51 years of age. He was a graduate of the University of Paris, and had served Louis IX of France before Urban IV called him to the Curia.

Martin IV was a devoted servant of Charles of Anjou, who was now made Roman senator for life. Seven new cardinals were created, four of them French. Those appointed to offices in the Papal States by the previous pope were now displaced in favor of Frenchmen. Charles resumed his ambition to conquer Constantinople. The pope dismissed the Greek envoy with a demand that unless he surrendered his empire to the pope by May, 1282, the Eastern emperor would be deposed. A Sicilian uprising began in March, 1282, in rebellion against Charles, and this turned his attention and that of the pope away from the East. The war was to last twenty years. The Sicilians claimed as king Peter, who had married Constance, daughter of Manfred.

When Martin IV died on March 28, 1285, three months after the death of Charles of Anjou, Sicily was still held by Peter.

189. Honorius IV or James (Giacomo) Savelli
(April 2 [May 20], 1285 - April 3, 1287 A.D.)

Within a week the cardinals gathered at Perugia and named as pope James Savelli, who took up residence in Rome as Honorius IV. He was a Roman, seventy-five years old, and the great-nephew of pope Honorius III. He was an invalid, and could only hold the Host on the altar by means of a mechanical contrivance, and was daily treated by a physician from Bologna. He handed over the senatorial power in Rome to his brother Pandolfo.

Honorius IV was a notable patron of the mendicant Orders, and of the universities, especially his alma mater, the University of Paris, where he caused the teaching of Oriental languages to be established.

Most of his reign was dominated by the problems in Sicily. When Peter died, the Sicilians crowned his brother, James, who offered his homage to the pope. Honorius IV replied by excommunicating James, his mother Constance, and the people of Sicily. With the pope's blessing, a new attack against Sicily was launched in April, 1287, but he died before learning of its failure.

190. Nicholas IV or Jerome Maschi (Masci)
(February 15 [22], 1288 - April 4, 1292 A.D.)

Nicholas IV had been cardinal bishop of Palestrina. He was Italian, native of Ascoli, and had served Gregory X as legate at Constantinople in 1272, and at the Council of Lyons in 1274. In 1274, he had succeeded Bonaventure as minister-general of the Franciscans.

The universities of Montpelier, Lisbon and Gratz were founded in his reign.

The pope was closely associated with the Colonna family; two of them he made cardinals, another was made count of the Romagna, and a fourth became Roman senator.

In May, 1291, the town of Acre, the last Christian outpost in the Holy Land, fell to the sultan of Egypt, a final and complete Islamic victory.

Though the pope tried to outfit a fleet and muster an army, there was little response to his entreaties, and Palestine remained Mohammedan property until six centuries later.

Nicholas IV died on April 4, 1292.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant two years three months)

191. St. Celestine V or Peter Morrone (Morone, Murrone)
(July 5 [August 29], 1294 - December 13, 1294 A.D.)

A long delay occurred in the election of the next pope. The cardinals assembled in Rome, but adjourned, and reopened in Perugia in 1293. On July 5, 1294, the cardinal bishop of Ostia, Latino Malabranca, received a letter warning him that God would surely punish the cardinals if they did not at once elect a pope. So they elected the writer of the letter, Peter Morrone, a holy monk living as a hermit in the Abruzzi mountains; and he was consecrated on August 29, as Celestine V.

Peter Morrone, the eleventh son of a peasant, had taken the Benedictine vow at an early age and later, with the approval of pope Gregory X, had organized his many followers into an order, the Hermits of the Holy Spirit (Sanctus Spiritus). At the time of his election, the congregation was made up of twenty communities, though not directed by Peter himself. In 1293, he retired to a small cell near his old cave on Monte Morrone. An ascetic of limited learning, and completely lacking in experience of the world, he refused to join the cardinals at Perugia and spent the whole of his pontificate in the vicinity of Naples. He fell under the influence of king Charles, and without informing the Curia, appointed twelve new cardinals, seven of them French, one the king's chancellor, all the king's nominees. Celestine V released a group of Franciscans from their Rule, and set them up under a new order, the Hermits of Celestine.

As Christmas approached, the pope demanded a wooden cell in the palace, so as to no longer endanger the good of his soul through the business complications of Church leadership. What do I understand of the world's squabbles, he said, I wish I were back in my poor cell! They put before him documents that he did not understand, and asked for gifts and titles which he considered worthless, and in Christian humility he distributed them. Through false documents, the whole of the Church tithes were assigned to the king of France. Louis, Charles' second son, was made archbishop of Lyons at the age of twenty-one. Celestine V longed to give up his burdensome office.

Celestine V; an allegory of the coronation (Louvre, Paris)

Finally, after fasting and prayer, the pope made up his mind to abdicate. On December 13, he came before a secret session of the consistory, clad in the papal vestments, and read a bull. With all his heart and of his own free will Celestine V declared himself divested of his pontificate for conscience sake and out of regard for his bodily infirmities, his lack of knowledge, and the evil state of the Christian people. He gave the cardinals full authority to proceed with the election of a new pope. Then he took off the papal vestments, put on his hermit's gown, and sank to his knees. The whole assembly wept.

192. Boniface VIII or Benedict (Benedetto) Gaetani
(December 24, 1294 [January 23, 1295] - October 11, 1303 A.D.)

On Christmas eve, after the abdication of Celestine V, Benedict Gaetani was elected pope. He was born about 1235 in Anagni and was related through his mother to two earlier popes, Alexander IV and Gregory IX. In 1260, his uncle, bishop of Todi, made him canon of his cathedral, and he began there the study of canon law. He was sent to France in 1264 with papal legate Simon de Brie, and in the following year accompanied cardinal Ottobuoni Fieschi to England, where he spent three years. When Simon de Brie became pope Martin IV in 1281, Benedict was made cardinal deacon of St. Nicholas in Cacere Tulliano, and was employed in papal business from this time on. He was papal legate to France in 1290-1291, and in 1291 was ordained priest and became cardinal of St. Martin in Montibus.

After his election, before leaving Naples, Benedict revoked all the privileges made by his predecessor, with Celestine V's consent. On January 23, 1295, he was crowned in Rome as Boniface VIII.

Peter Morrone was to be brought to Rome, but on the way escaped his guards and went into the mountains. He then sailed for Greece, but his ship was driven back by a storm to the Italian coast, and he was handed over to Boniface VIII, who had him installed in a mountain castle in the Campagna, with two brothers of his Order to keep him company. I wished for nothing in the world but a cell, he said, and a cell they have given me. He expired there on May 19, 1296. In 1313, pope Clement V canonized him, as hermit Peter Morrone, not as Celestine V.

Boniface VIII faced many challenging temporal matters. He brought about a temporary reconciliation between Frederick of Aragon and Charles of Anjou. He twice filled the role of peacemaker in the war between the French and the English, although the two parties, in invoking him as arbitrator, addressed him disrespectfully as plain Benedict Gaetani.

Boniface VIII's communications tended to be autocratic and lordly, conscious of the high dignity of his office and the role the papacy had played in the past in confirming kings and directing temporal affairs. He was opposed in France by king Philip the Fair, who was supported by his chancellor Pierre Flotte; and Guillaume Nogaret, whose grandfather had been burned at the stake as a heretic by the Church.

Boniface VIII had accumulated a great fortune during his career, and had used it to establish his family, and in his favoritism offended the family of Colonna, including two cardinals who had been appointed by Nicholas IV. They were deprived of their privileges for their rebellion, and they joined with Philip of France against Boniface VIII, after being punished by a military crusade organized by the pope, the result of which was the utter destruction of the city of Palestrina, and the confiscation of Colonna estates.

On February 22, 1300, the pope resolved to proclaim a Jubilee Year, and following an ancient Roman custom, he welcomed the new century with games and celebrations. For the first time in its history, the Church announced a plenary indulgence for the remission of punishment due to sin. Every foreign pilgrim who came to Rome and visited thirteen times the basilicas of the Apostles, could share in this grace after confession and Communion. Romans could obtain the indulgence after the thirtieth visit. Those who could not undertake the pilgrimage in person could gain the same heavenly reward by payment of the travelling expenses. The response was immense. Thirty thousand pilgrims went in and out daily. Two hundred thousand crowded the inns and lodgings. The peace of God reigned in the streets, and pilgrims carried children, the sick, and aged parents on their shoulders to the tombs of the Apostles. Even in ordinary pilgrimage years, contributions in St. Peter's amounted to some 30,400 gold florins. In the jubilee year, this was greatly increased.

In spite of the grandeur of the pope, Philip of France remained utterly opposed to the exercise of temporal power of the papacy. There were many conflicts. In February, 1296, the pope had pronounced the ban of excommunication and prohibition against all clerics who paid taxes without the consent of the Holy See, and against all lay persons who demanded them. Philip responded by forbidding gold, jewels, and articles of value to be exported, and not allowing foreigners to stay in his kingdom. This made it impossible for the papal treasury to get its money out of France, and the Curial officials could not live in France to collect tithes. Boniface VIII summoned to Rome the French episcopate, and the doctors of law of the University of Paris. His summons was falsified, printed and distributed in France as more negative than its actual tone, and all France turned against the pope. Philip in his reply stated, "Philip, by God's grace king of the French, to Boniface, who pretends to be pope, little or no greetings! . . . Your highest foolishness must know that We are subject to no one in the affairs of this world . . . Whoever believes the contrary We declare to be a fool and a madman."

The Council in Rome began on October 30, 1302, and on November 18 the Unam sanctam was issued, declaring that every human creature was subject to the Roman pontiff. On March 12, 1303, Nogaret, now French chancellor, brought an indictment before the Council of State, stating that a General Council must be held to condemn Boniface VIII and elect a new pope.

Under pretext of seeking a reconciliation, Nogaret went to Rome, where he assembled an army. The pope had retreated to Anagni. On September 7, 1303, the rebels marched through the gates of Anagni, and forced their way, with bloodshed and fire, to the cathedral, where they found Boniface VIII in front of the altar, clad in his papal vestments, wearing his crown, and holding the Cross and the Gospels in his upraised hands. "Here is my head," he said, "I, a Catholic, lawful Pontiff and Vicar of Christ desire to die for the faith of Christ and His Church." Momentarily dismayed, the assailants hesitated for a day, during which time the people of Anagni rose and rescued the pope. However, now the Orsini took control, and escorting Boniface VIII back to Rome, kept him confined. He protested by refusing to eat, and died on October 11, at the age of eighty-six.

193. Benedict XI or Nicholas Boccasini (Bocrasini)

Benedict XI was elected on October 22, shortly after the death of Boniface VIII. This pope was a Dominican friar, notable theologian, and a former Master General of his Order. He was a native of Venetia and had served for the two years before his election as papal legate at the court of emperor Albert of Habsburg.

Most of his short pontificate was spent dealing with the problems of the enemies of Boniface VIII. Philip was pardoned and certain modifications were made in his favor. On June 8, 1304, the bull Flagitiosum scelus was issued, accusing seventeen persons of the attack on his predecessor, including Nogaret and Sciarra Colonna, and summoning them to appear for judgment and sentencing. To this the accused paid no attention and the pope died suddenly on July 7, at Perugia.

194. Clement V or Bertrand de Got

(June 5 [November 14], 1305 - April 14 or 20, 1314 A.D.)

Born in 1264, Bertrand de Got was a native of Villaudraut in the Gironde, Gascony, France; a subject of the king of England and not of France, therefore somewhat of a compromise. He had supported Philip's claims at the council in Rome summoned by Boniface VIII in 1302. He had been employed by Boniface VIII on diplomatic business in England in 1294, and in 1295 had become bishop of Comminges, and in 1299 archbishop of Bordeaux. He never went to Rome as pope; in 1308, he announced that the papal court would be established at Avignon, and this began the seventy years of Avignon popes. Of the 133 cardinals created by the Avignon popes during the fourteenth century, all but ten were French.

Clement V (right), behind him a figure representing the Canon Law; emperor Justinian (left), to the right of the pope, before the figure representing the Civil Law. Detail from The Triumph of St. Thomas by Andrea da Firenze.

Clement V was crowned at Lyons, in the presence of the French king. During the ceremony, a wall fell in, slightly injuring the pope and knocking the crown off his head. Clement V was the first to use the triple crown.

King Philip of France demanded an investigation into the Knights Templar, a military order founded in the early twelfth century for the defense of the Holy Places and the pilgrims. After the fall of Acre in 1291, their usefulness ended, but they continued on as possessors of great wealth. Through secret combinations and by their wide dispersal throughout Europe they were able to transact all kinds of business with complete security. They acquired a reputation of covetousness, pride of their aristocratic connections and military prowess; and the secrecy which surrounded all their activities, especially the rite of initiation, gave rise to other suspicions of their morality.

Whenever Clement V attempted to protect the order, Philip began to press for charges against Boniface VIII. Clement consented to inquiry, and by administrative act disbanded the order. In France more than a hundred members of the order were burned at the stake, and all their possessions confiscated.

After the time of pope Clement V and Avignon, the popes officially wore the triple crown or tiara. Before this time they wore the turban and diadem of the Aaronic high priest of Jerusalem; and only occasionally the tiara.

In Rome, in 1308, the Lateran Basilica went up in flames. The imperial throne was vacant, and the pope supported Henry VII of Luxembourg. Henry marched to Rome, where he was crowned under very unfavorable conditions by unwilling cardinals, in 1310. Henry died in 1313.

Clement V died at Roquemaure in Languedoc on April 14 or 20, 1314. Napoleone Orsini, dean of the College of Cardinals, immediately sent a letter to the king of France, describing Clement V as one of the worst popes, through whose guilt Rome, the Papal States and Italy were sunk in ruins.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant two years three months)

195. John XXII or Jacques Duese (James d'Euse)
(August 7 [September 5], 1316 - December 4, 1334 A.D.)

Jacques Duese was the son of a well-to-do middle class family of Cahors, shoemakers; he was elected after a long stalemate. A bishop since 1300, he had served Charles II of Anjou as his chancellor before becoming bishop of Avignon in 1310, cardinal priest of S. Vitale in 1312, and cardinal bishop of Porto in 1313. During the early months of his pontificate two attempts were made on his life, one by poison and the other by witchcraft. The bishop of Cahors was implicated in the second attempt and perished at the stake for his crime.

John XXII was one of the chief creators of the centralized papal system of administration and taxation. His chief governmental media was one of dispatches; he issued in his eighteen years sixty thousand official documents.

John XXII receiving the answer of the Greek Church to his demand for submission: miniature from The Travels of Sir John Mandeville, in the British Museum, London.

There were many wars and contentions during this time, Lewis the Bavarian and Frederick of Austria both claiming the empire. The Italian lords besieged one another, massacred one another, according to their situations and feelings of the moment. In 1328, Lewis the Bavarian had himself crowned emperor in Rome by Sciarra Colonna, who had drawn his sword against pope Boniface VIII twenty-five years before. A mock trial was held against the pope, and an anti-pope, a Minorite friar, was elected, Pietro Rainalducci of Corbara, crowned as Nicholas V. Two years later he appeared before John XXII with a rope around his neck and begged for absolution. The pope, now nearly ninety-three years old, raised the friar to his feet and gave him absolution, a place at his table, and a mild form of detention.

During John XXII's pontificate, a division of the Franciscans, the Spirituals, advocated a return to absolute poverty. John replied that, Voluntary poverty is a great thing, and greater still is chastity, but obedience is a virtue to be rated higher than either.

The day before he died, the pope officially endorsed the doctrine he had previously denied before the College of Cardinals at Avignon --that the purified soul would see God face to face immediately after death.

196. Benedict XII or Jacques (James) Fournier
(December 20, 1334 [January 8, 1335] - April 25, 1342 A.D.)

Benedict XII: monument by Paolo da Siena, in the crypt of St. Peter's.

Benedict XII was the son of a miller, a native of France, born in 1285. He was a Cistercian monk, and kept the Cistercian habit as his dress even as pope. He was a master of the University of Paris, and a distinguished theologian. He renounced war, and set about on a reform of the orders, which was not successful as he did not back up his regulation with authority.

Benedict XII had palaces built at Avignon to house the bureaucracy.

The pope especially despised nepotism and said, A pope should be like Melchizedek, without father, or mother or genealogy; albeit Shem the son of Noah had father and mother and a high priestly line of descent.

197. Clement VI or Pierre Roger
(May 7 [19], 1342 - December 6, 1352 A.D.)

Clement VI was born in 1291 in France, the second son of a noble family. He entered the Benedictine monastery of Chaise Dieu at the age of ten. A master of theology in the University of Paris, he became bishop of Arras in 1328, archbishop of Sens in the following year, and archbishop of Rouen in 1330. He was a gifted orator and preacher, an experienced diplomat and the favored candidate of the French king.

Lavish and extravagant, Clement VI told his critics that his predecessors had not known how to be popes. He was also, however, generous in charity, and took energetic measures to abate the miseries that followed in the wake of the Black Plague that devastated Europe during his reign. There was also a wave of anti-semitism at this time, which the pope fought with vigor and announced the Jews were under his protection.

Detail from The Triumph of St. Thomas by Andrea da Firenze, in S. Maria Novella, Florence.

Clement VI entertained numerous papal relatives and guests with banquets and balls and tournaments. In 1348, he bought the city of Avignon from the queen of Naples. He made generous loans to the king of France, and daily distributed enough flour for 32,000 loaves of bread.

198. Innocent VI or Etienne (Stephen) Aubert
(December 18 [30], 1352 - September 12, 1362 A.D.)

A Frenchman, native of Limousin (Limoges), Innocent VI was seventy upon his accession. He had a long and distinguished career as professor of law at the University of Toulouse, as a high official in the service of the king of France. He was made bishop of Noye in 1338, and of Clermont from 1340. At his election, he was cardinal bishop of Ostia.

During the Conclave, the cardinals had agreed that in the future the pope would rely on the cardinals for such matters as the disposal of higher revenues, the appointment of new cardinals, and similar important affairs. The first act of the new pope was to nullify this pact.

In April, 1335, the pope allowed Charles IV, emperor-elect, to enter Italy and be crowned at Rome. Once secure in this title, Charles proclaimed that henceforth the empire would be a German one only. This marked the end of imperial intervention in Italy and the end of the long struggle between pope and emperor that had lasted four hundred years.

In 1353, Innocent VI commissioned as his legate in Italy the archbishop of Toledo, Gil (Giles) Albornoz. Within a year he had established peace and order in Rome. When the pope died on September 12, 1362, most of the papal territories in Italy were pacified and under firm control. Albornoz has truly been called the second founder of the Papal States. His achievement was to make possible the ending of the long exile at Avignon and the return of the popes to Rome.

199. Urban V or Guillaume (William) de Grimoard
(Sept. 28 or Oct. 10 [Nov. 6 or Dec. 6], 1362 - December 19, 1370 A.D.)

Urban V was a Benedictine monk, born in 1310 in France of a noble family. At an early age he joined the abbey of St. Victor at Marseilles and later became abbot. He was long a professor at the Universities of Toulouse and Paris. He served on four occasions, papal missions in Italy.

After his election, at which time he was serving as papal legate in Naples, he continued to wear the monastic habit, and confessed each day before celebrating Mass. He was a scholar and patron of the arts.

On April 30, 1367, Urban V left Avignon for Rome. On October 16, 1367, he entered Rome. There he received the emperor of the West; and the emperor of the East, who wanted to win the pope for a crusade against the Turks. But a another revolt was again starting in the Papal States. In spring of 1370, Perugia expelled the papal rector. The Romans supported the uprising and called in English mercenaries under Sir John Hawkwood to attack Viterbo where the pope was staying. On September 5, Urban V sailed for France and entered Avignon before the end of the month. He died there less than three months later.

200. Gregory XI or Pierre (Peter) Roger
(December 30, 1370 [January 5, 1371] - March 26/27, 1378 A.D.)

Pierre Roger was a canon of Paris at the age of eleven and a cardinal of his uncle's creation at the age of nineteen; he was the nephew of pope Clement VI. He had studied law at the University of Perugia, and was pious, upright and generous. He was unanimously elected on the second day of the conclave and became Gregory XI.

Gregory XI had the intention to take the papal court back to Rome. He was encouraged in this by two saintly women of his day, Bridgit in Rome and Catherine (Caterina) of Siena. By the spring of 1375, preparations were well underway, and in that year the city of Florence formed an anti-papal league which soon came to number eighty cities. Finally in January, 1377, the pope arrived in Rome. There had been storms all along the coast of Italy and the bishop of Luni had been washed overboard and drowned. Rome had been reduced to a population of 30,000 people. The procession crossed the Tiber quarter, which had been almost entirely destroyed by fire and fighting, and reached the Capitol, which was just as deserted. The processional route was flanked by swamp. When St. Peter's was reached in the late afternoon of January 17, the pope was welcomed by 18,000 lighted lamps.

From this time on the rightful popes resided in the Vatican Palace, even if compelled in certain cases to leave Rome for short periods. Gregory XI wrote in a letter, "I have left a beautiful fatherland, a grateful and pious people and many other delights, turning a deaf ear to the entreaties and protests of kings, princes and cardinals . . . with the firm determination to make good everything in which the leaders of the Church have been found wanting."

Two weeks after the festivities of the pope's return to Rome, the inhabitants of Cesena rose against the Breton garrison that cardinal Robert of Geneva had sent there. Three hundred Bretons were killed, and the papal legate called in English troops, which killed 4,000 citizens and drove out 8,000 more. Cardinal Robert of Geneva, afterwards known as the Butcher of Cesena, was later elected anti-pope Clement VII.

Negotiations were begun with Florence, but Gregory XI died before their conclusion.

201. Urban VI or Bartolomeo Prignano
(April 8 or 9 [18], 1378 - October 15, 1389 A.D.)

When Gregory XI died, there were sixteen cardinals in Rome, eleven French, four Italian, and one Spanish; they could not come to an agreement. Someone proposed Bartolomeo Prignano, archbishop of Bari and vice-chancellor of the Church, as a possibility to please both sides, as he was a Neapolitan (inhabitant of Naples), and related to the house of Anjou. While they were in the process of electing him, the Romans were becoming rowdy outside, and while someone was sent to inform the new pope of his election and bring him back, the crowd became so violent that the cardinals decided to dress up aged cardinal Tibaldeschi in the papal vestments in order to appease them. As the cardinals came in with the real pope, the old man said in a loud voice, "I am not the pope. They have chosen the archbishop of Bari!" In the uproar, the name Bari was mistaken for Bar, which was the name of a highly unpopular French prelate, and the cardinals had to flee.

Order was restored and Prignano was crowned on Easter Sunday, as Urban VI. He had been a faithful and capable administrator; when he became pope, his reign was disastrous.

In seeking to reform the Curia, Urban VI came down heavily on the cardinals who had elected him, in an arbitrary, tactless and violent manner, even attempting to strike a distinguished prelate. Many cardinals withdrew, and published a letter in which they stated that they had elected Urban VI under compulsion, declaring his election invalid. On September 21, 1378, fifteen cardinals assembled at Forli and elected Robert of Geneva, the Butcher of Cesena, as anti-pope Clement VII. There had been anti-popes before, but none had been elected by the same electors as the original pope. There was great confusion, and also great violence, as Clement VII dispatched troops to Rome which were countered by the Italians. Queen Joana of Naples, whose fleet had brought Gregory XI to Rome, was defeated by the military commissioner of pope Urban VI, and thoroughly alienated from his side.

Urban VI left Rome for Nocera, where he set up headquarters. He was informed of a conspiracy among the cardinals who had accompanied him, and he had six of them thrown into a cistern. Forced to flee from Nocera, the pope took the six cardinals with him; only one, Englishman Adam Easton, arrived with the pope in Genoa on September 23, 1385. The others were never seen again. Urban VI himself died on October 15, 1389, with Christendom divided.

202. Boniface IX or Pietro Tomacelli
(November 2 [9], 1389 - October 1, 1404 A.D.)

Pietro Tomacelli was born in 1356 and was in his early thirties when elected, being Neapolitan cardinal at that time. The papacy remained split; and now a movement at the University of Paris brought the suggestion to the king of France that there were three possible solutions: (1)both popes should freely abdicate, or (2) each should submit his claims to the judgement of a commission of theologians drawn impartially from both sides, or (3) as a last resort, the matter should be left to the judgement of a general council. Clement VII, the anti-pope, persuaded the king to stop the movement.

On September 16, 1394, anti-pope Clement VII died of apoplexy. The cardinals at once elected Spanish cardinal Pedro de Luna, who became anti-pope Benedict XIII.

In desperate need of money, Boniface IX increased the taxation of the Church and sold indulgences (remission of punishment for sins) for cash, with little regard to the essential Spiritual conditions. He was also guilty of simony on a massive scale.

Envoys arrived from anti-pope Benedict XIII at Rome to discuss ways of reaching a settlement; they had an unpleasant interview with the pope, with a mutual exchange of insults, and no agreement. Two days later, Boniface IX died suddenly at age forty-eight.

203. Innocent VII or Cosmo Megliorati (Cosimode Migliorati)
(October 17 [November 11], 1404 - November 6, 1406 A.D.)

When Boniface died, the cardinals solemnly swore that whosoever of them was chosen, he would devote himself to bringing an end to the separation, even to the point of resigning the papacy if necessary. The bishop of Bologna was selected, another Neapolitan, and took office as Innocent VII.

Faithful to his pledge, the new pope called a general council for November, 1405. But anti-pope Benedict XIII was not agreeable, and was prepared to defend his title at all costs. Because of this and other reasons, including the anti-pope's heavy taxation of the clergy of France and Spain, more support fell to Innocent VII; but he died after a pontificate of two years.

204. Gregory XII or Angelo Corrarrio
(November 30 [December 19], 1406 - July 4, 1415 A.D.)

Again the cardinals each agreed that if he were elected, he would abdicate if his rival would do the same, providing the cardinals of both sides joined together to elect a new pope. After Gregory XII's election, Benedict XIII was unwilling to resign, and so was Gregory. The pope had promised the cardinals that he would not add to the number of his cardinals for at least fifteen months. Now, he announced four that he intended to nominate, two of them his own nephews.

In Pisa, four cardinals from each side met and decided to issue a common appeal to the Universal Church for a general council to settle the issue. This council met at Pisa beginning on March 25, 1409, for four months, and elected a third pope, after finding the other two popes guilty of heresy and perjury. The council's choice was a Neapolitan Peter Philargi, archbishop of Milan, who was crowned as Alexander V in July, 1409. When Alexander died in 1410, he was succeeded by John XXIII. John was deposed by the Sixteenth Oecumenical Council at Constance for his scandalous life, in May, 1415, and at that time Gregory XII decided to resign. Two papal legates attended the Council of Constance, which had been in session since the previous year; they presented Gregory XII's resignation. All his acts as pope were confirmed by the Council and his cardinals were continued in their offices.

During Gregory XII's reign, John Huss was imprisoned. He held, as Wycliffe had earlier, that Christ was the head of the Church, not the pope, that in saying , "On this Rock I will build my Church," Christ spoke of himself, not of Peter. Huss's claim that a pope or prelate who was evil should not be called a shepherd or sanctissimus, but a thief and a robber, was deemed to be blasphemous. He was burned at the stake as heretic, crying, "Christ, Son of the Living God, have mercy on us," three times before he died.

Gregory XII died two years after his resignation.

205. Martin V or Odo Colonna

(November 11 [21], 1417 - February 20, 1431 A.D.)

In 1417, the conclave was held in Constance in Germany, and included, besides the cardinals, thirty prelates and doctors who represented the five nations gathered together. Odo Colonna, who took the name Martin V, was a member of a leading Roman family which had given the Church twenty-four cardinals. His election brought to an end the great separation, and held great implications as the Council had assumed the authority to judge between rival claimants to the papacy. The Council ended on April 22, 1418, and the pope returned to Italy. He ordered a new tiara from famous goldsmith Ghiberto, since Benedict XIII had the old one. He faced two main problems: the condition of Rome and the Papal States, and the next general council.

Martin V. Monument by Simone Ghini, in St. John Lateran.

Martin restored papal authority in the cities of the papal states, securing an alliance with queen Joana of Naples, whose troops withdrew from Rome, allowing him to enter in September, 1420. He also strengthened the position of his family in Italy which gave him more power.

There was a strong desire for reform among the clergy and laity of Europe. The pope appointed two cardinals to gather evidence, and issued in May, 1425, a constitution which required stricter regulation of the lives of the cardinals and higher clergy, and closer attention to their duties; however this was not enforced.

Martin V embarked on large projects to bring beauty, cleanliness, discipline and prosperity back to the streets of Rome. It was written about him, that in the time of Martin V a man might travel by day or night, though miles from Rome, with gold in his open hand.

At the time of Martin V's death, the Council of Basle was about to open, which had been called at his order.

206. Eugenius IV or Gabriel Condulmaro (Condolmieri)

(March 3 [11], 1431 - February 23, 1447 A.D.)

Eugenius IV was a Venetian, son of wealthy parents, born in 1383. Early in life he distributed his wealth among the poor and entered the monastery of S. Giorgio d'Alga in Venice. Gregory XII (his maternal uncle) made him bishop of Siena.

Eugenius IV's reign was marked by conflicts with the Colonna family, which had gained control over considerable portions of the Papal States due to the nepotism of Martin V.

Eugenius IV ordered a new papal crown from the same Florentine goldsmith from whom Martin V had obtained his crown, Ghiberti. The new crown weighed twenty pounds and was valued at two million francs.

Due to siege of Rome by the duke of Milan, the pope was forced to flee from the city disguised as a monk. He remained away from Rome almost ten years, finding refuge in Florence.

The Council of Basle, which had been called by Martin V, opened July 23, 1431. The Council was against the pope and the papacy in many respects, refusing to disband when the pope issued a bull of dissolution of the Council, and finally, in January, 1438, the Council deposed Eugenius IV and declared all his acts null and void, electing an anti-pope, Amadeus VIII, duke of Savoy, who took the name of Felix V. However, the anti-pope received very little recognition, and was the last anti-pope to be elected.

When the pope returned to Rome, he ordered buildings renewed, and paintings, sculptures, and frescoes completed. Peace was made with Sigismund of Germany, and his ambassadors were welcomed by Eugenius IV from his deathbed.

207. Nicholas V or Tommaso (Thomas) Parentucelli
(March 6 [19], 1447 - March 24, 1455 A.D.)

The new pope was born in 1397 in Sarzana, Italy, son of a poor physician. He was educated at the University of Bologna where he entered the service of bishop Niccolo Albergata; later he was under the service of cardinal Candriani. Under both of these men he gained considerable experience of papal diplomacy. In 1444, he was made bishop of Bologna by Eugenius IV. In December, 1446, he was made a cardinal. The name Nicholas was taken in memory of his first patron. Anti-pope Felix V was forgiven by Nicholas V, and given an honored place among the cardinals.

In 1450, the pope proclaimed a year of Jubilee, and pilgrims flocked to Rome, which was now considerably restored. In 1452, he crowned Frederick III as emperor, the last occasion when an emperor was crowned in Rome. Nicholas V rebuilt the walls of Rome, strengthened Castel' Sant' Angelo, restored several churches, rebuilt a large part of the Capitol, and reorganized the water supplies of the city. He started the rebuilding of St. Peter's Basilica, began construction of the Vatican Palace and completed the chapel of San Lorenzo.

Before becoming pope, Nicholas V was a collector of manuscripts. As pope, he founded and developed the Vatican Library, and collected, catalogued and preserved every manuscript of any value, ancient or contemporary, that he could find.

On May 29, 1453, Constantinople fell to the Turks. There was general lack of enthusiasm from Europe for a crusade.

The pope died on March 24, 1455.

208. Calixtus III (Callistus III) or Alfonso Borgia
(April 8 [20], 1455 - August 6, 1458 A.D.)

Alfonso Borgia was born in 1375 and was eighty at the time of his succession. He was a native of Xativa, Valencia, Spain. Benedict XIII had made him a canon. After serving as secretary to Alfonso of Aragon, he was made bishop of Valencia, under Martin V, and was made a cardinal in 1444.

Calixtus III's main occupation during his pontificate was the crusade against the Turks. He received no support from the secular interests of Europe, but succeeded in collecting a fleet of sixteen vessels to which he appointed cardinal Scarampo as admiral. The fleet managed to win back a few islands in the Aegean and give some help to the Knights of Rhodes.

The pope made two nephews cardinals, each just over twenty years of age, and a third nephew was made prefect of Rome. Dependents of the Borgia family, called Catalans by the Romans, flocked to Rome. At the time of his death, Calixtus III was attempting to secure Naples as a fief of the Holy See, hoping to confer it on his nephew Pedro Luis de Borgia, who was prefect of Rome.

209. Pius II or Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini

(August 19 [September 3], 1458 - August 15, 1464 A.D.)

Born at Corsignano in 1405 of a noble family which had once occupied a leading position in Siena, Aeneas Piccolomini entered the University of Siena at the age of eighteen. He became secretary to Capranica, bishop of Fermo, and at the Council of Basle served two other bishops also. In 1435, he entered the service of cardinal Albergata, one of Eugenius IV's legates at the council, whom he accompanied on missions to England and Scotland. He was an opponent of Eugenius IV, and was secretary to anti-pope Felix V. In 1442, he left Felix for the court of Frederick III of Germany, under whom he was poet laureate. In 1445, he was sent on a peace-making mission from Frederick III to Eugenius IV, and he made peace himself with Eugenius at this time.

Pius II. Bust attributed to Paolo Romano (15th century), in the Borgia Apartments, Vatican.

In his youth, Aeneas had written a treatise which questioned papal authority, and his opponents brought this up to him. He repudiated the document as pope, asking them to reject Aeneas, and accept Pius. He had at least two illegitimate children.

In 1446, he became a deacon, in 1447 bishop of Trieste, in 1450 he was made bishop of Siena, and in 1456 became a cardinal.

Pius II took measures to increase the authority of the Holy See. Crusade against the Turks was another of his interests. But again, as previous popes, he was unable to interest Europe in the matter. In March, 1464, he announced to the cardinals that, since a congress and diplomacy had failed to secure a crusade, he would set out in person. However his health was deteriorating and he died at Ancona two days after the arrival of the Venetian fleet.

Pius II canonized Catherine of Siena, a mark of affection for the city of his family's origin, and his own youth. He wrote a considerable amount, particularly about the Council of Basle, and in his Commentaries, a full and interesting account of his career and pontificate; he was the only pope to write his memoirs.

210. Paul II or Pietro Barbo

(August 30 [September 16], 1464 - July 26, 1471 A.D.)

Pietro Barbo was an Italian born in Venice in 1417, who had been made a cardinal by his uncle, pope Eugenius IV. During the Conclave he had promised, along with the other cardinals, that if elected he would impose restraints on the powers of the pope. But once elected, he reversed his position, and drew up an agreement of his own. He summoned the cardinals one by one into his chamber and by threats and reproaches caused them to sign; when cardinal Bessarion tried to escape, the pope dragged him back, locked the door, and threatened him with excommunication.

Paul II. Bust by Bartolomeo Bellano, in the Palazzo di Venezia.

Paul II added greatly to the splendor and magnificence of the papal court. He had another triple crown made, which cost four times the amount of the tiara purchased by Eugenius IV. He gave one prelate the sole task of purchasing precious stones, the value of which was estimated at eight to ten million francs. He was a devoted patron of the arts, and called together banquets, carnivals, horse races, and public games. The new art of printing received his encouragement, and artists, sculptors and goldsmiths were familiar in his court.

He took an interest in the government of Rome; the government was reorganized, duties of officials and courts carefully defined, and a special court established to deal with the crime of murder.

The action for which Paul II is best known is his dissolution of the Roman Academy in 1468, which he did in fear that the activities of the humanists would lead to a republican movement in Rome.

211. Sixtus IV or Francesco (Francis) della Rovere

(August 9 [25], 1471 - August 12, 1484 A.D.)

Sixtus IV was the son of a fisherman, born in 1414, in a little village near Savona, Italy. He was handed over to the Franciscans at the age of nine for his education and later studied philosophy and theology at the Universities of Padua and Bologna. He adopted the name of the family della Rovere after serving as tutor to the family.

In 1464, he became General of the Franciscan Order, and three years later was made cardinal. He was a great friend of the monastic orders as pope, and he encouraged and protected them with statutes and gifts.

At the Conclave of his election, Sixtus was attended by his nephew, Piero Riario, who, when he saw the cardinals were undecided, made bargains with the most influential of them who were rewarded with preferments after his uncle's election. Sixtus IV's dominating interest was the desire to advance his family. Within four months of his election he made cardinals of two nephews, Piero Riario, aged twenty-five, and Guiliano della Rovere, later pope Julius II, aged twenty-eight.

Sixtus IV's revenues exceeded 60,000 gold ducats a year, and he lived a life of luxury. In February, 1472, he made another nephew prefect of Rome -- Leonardo della Rovere, brother of Guiliano -- and had him married to the illegitimate daughter of Ferrante of Naples.

In 1474, cardinal Riario died, after spending 200,000 ducats in his two years as cardinal, and leaving debts of an additional 160,100 ducats.

For Piero's brother Girolamo, the pope purchased from the duke of Milan the district of Imola, and the hand of the duke's illegitimate daughter. Giovanni della Rovere received the districts of Sinigaglia and Mondovi and in 1475, on the death of Leonardo, the prefectship of Rome.

The purchase of Imola involved the pope in conflict with Lorenzo de Medici, the ruler of Florence, who had been about to acquire Imola himself. Girolamo Riario, therefore, plotted for the overthrow of the Medici, which was supported by the pope, and which led to the murder of Giuliano de Medici, brother of Lorenzo. The plot, however, only succeeded in strengthening the hold of the Medici in Florence. A war followed between Florence and the papacy, which ended when the Turks occupied Otranto on the mainland of Italy in December, 1480, and the pope was forced to declare a truce throughout Italy. The Turkish menace subsided, however, with the death of ruler Mohammed II, when civil war commenced over the succession between his two sons.

Under Sixtus IV, Italian interests for the first time dominated papal policy completely. The pope behaved like many other Italian rulers, seeking to advance his family interests.

In 1480, pope Sixtus IV began to rearrange the chief streets of Rome, straightening out their turns, and paving them with tiles. Across the Tiber he built the Ponte Sisto, and within the Vatican built the Sistine Chapel, which bears his name. Churches were restored, and painters of the time, among them Boticelli, received considerable employment from the pope, who united them in 1478 into a confraternity under the patronage of St. Luke.

Careful attention was given to the removal of abuses in the Holy Inquisition, which was set up in Spain in 1478, and in 1483 Torquemada was appointed Grand Inquisitor. Ferdinand and Isabella were given papal support for their efforts to stamp out heresy in Spain.

Sixtus IV opened the Vatican Library to the public, and also ordered the stables on the ground floor of the palace to be converted into a library.

212. Innocent VIII or Giovanni Battista (John-Baptist) Cibo (August 29 [September 12], 1484 - July 25, 1492 A.D.)

Innocent VIII was born in Genoa in 1432. Paul II made him bishop of Savona, and Sixtus IV translated him to the See of Molfetta and made him a cardinal in 1473. He had illegitimate children, which he openly accepted.

Innocent VIII continued the policy of intervening in the politics of Italy to obtain secular advantages. One of the offshoots of this was the appointment as cardinal of Giovanni Medici, the son of Lorenzo Medici, and later pope Leo X.

Turkish prince Djem, who claimed the throne occupied by his brother Bayazid II, had been detained by the Knights of Rhodes with whom he had taken refuge, and was eventually handed over by them to the pope, in return for the grant of a cardinalate to their Grand Master. Pope Innocent VIII treated him as a princely guest, even receiving him in consistory (council of cardinals). The pope received an annual subsidy from the Sultan in return for detaining Djem.

Rome in the time of Innocent VIII was notorious for its riots and murders. The cardinals were allowed to seize the chief offices of the city, and the feuds of the Orsini and Colonna were out of control. Many criminals escaped justice through the bribery of papal officials. When cardinal Borgia, the vice-chancellor, was asked why justice was not done, he replied, "The Lord requires not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may pay and live." The pope lacked any conception of the dignity of the papal office, and even entertained women at his table.

Before Sixtus IV's time there were 650 purchasable offices in Rome; Innocent VIII added 300 new posts, each priced at 200 gold ducats. The number of papal secretaries was increased to twenty-six, and the new posts sold for 62,400 ducats, while fifty-two Plumbatores were appointed to seal bulls, each of whom paid 2,500 ducats for his appointment.

213. Alexander VI or Roderigo Borgia
(August 11 [26], 1492 - August 18, 1503 A.D.)

Born in Xativa, Spain, in the diocese of Valencia, in 1431, Roderigo Borgia's fortunes were made by the election of his uncle, Alfonso, as Calixtus III. At the age of twenty-five he was made a cardinal and then received the office of vice-chancellor which he retained until he became pope. At the time of his election he had spent thirty-six years in the Curia and had served under five popes.

The details of Alexander VI's policies show that they were conceived primarily in the interests of his family. He had four acknowledged children by a Roman woman, Vanozza de Cataneis, who had been married three times, and he was syphilitic. Rodrigo Borgia was a morisco, a contemptuous term for a Moor or Jew Christianized in Spain by force. His son Cesare Borgia was made a cardinal at age eighteen, and later resigned as cardinal to marry a French princess and advance himself politically. Every move of the pope was a political one for advantage, not even of the papacy, but of his family. His daughter, Lucrezia, served as his deputy in Rome when he was absent in July, 1501. In 1499, she had gone as regent to Spoleto. She was married three times to serve the family interests, one of the marriages annulled for the reason of impotence of the husband, and one of the husbands being murdered by her brother Cesare.

Girolamo Savonarola, Dominican prior, preached during this time against the excesses and abuses of the papacy, and was executed after extended torture.

Alexander VI, however, paid little attention to most of his opponents. "Rome is a free city," he said, "and here everyone has a right to write and say what he likes." He arbitrated between Spain and Portugal over their colonial spheres of sovereignty in the New World, citing his authority to dispose of lands occupied by the heathen. During the early years of his reign, the pope permitted the unhindered transit of French soldiers through papal territory and in return for this, Charles V acknowledged Alexander VI as true pontiff. The pope issued a Censorial Edict that stipulated that ecclesiastical opinion should be sought before the publication of any book.

On his death, Cesare Borgia's military troops entered the Castel' Sant' Angelo and removed all treasure, money and everything of value.

214. Pius III or Francesco Todeschini de Piccolomini
(September 22 [October 1 or 8], 1503 - October 18,1503 A.D.)

Pius III owed his career to his maternal uncle Pius II, who allowed him to assume the name and arms of the Piccolomini and made him archbishop of Siena in 1460, and two months later, a cardinal. At the time of his election, he was sixty-four years old, and a hopeless invalid. He was well-liked and had kept aloof from political intrigues in the Curia, all of which made him a good compromise candidate. He was the father of a large family. He died within a month of his election.

215. Julius II or Guiliano della Rovere
(October 31 [November 26], 1503 - February 21, 1513 A.D.)

Julius had been made a cardinal at the age of twenty-eight by his uncle Sixtus IV, and two or three times had been a candidate for the papacy, but for twenty years had been unsuccessful. For over ten years he had been an exile as a cardinal in the retinue of the French king, Charles VIII. He had three children.

By the third year of his pontificate, Julius II had his own papal guard, consisting of Swiss soldiers, in a uniform designed by Michael Angelo and led by a Swiss peasant's son, Matthaus Schiner, who had been made bishop of Sitten (Sion) at the age of twenty-five, and who served three successive popes.

This was the beginning of the Swiss papal guard, which continues to this day.

Julius II's strategy included changing of allies. He allied with France to defeat Venice, then with Venice defeated, he allied with Venice to drive the French out of Italy. He led the armies himself and stayed out on the field with the troops, with considerable personal danger. His attitude toward his responsibilities is summed up by his words to Michael Angelo when the question arose of what to put in the left hand of the pope's statue. To the sculptor's suggestion that it might hold a book, he replied, "Nay, give me a sword, for I am no scholar."

This pontificate is of great importance in the history of art and architecture at Rome. Julius II made Bramante his architect-in-chief and planned a great extension of the Vatican by means of covered porticoes and arcades. Bramante's chief employment, however, was the construction of a new basilica of St. Peter's. The foundations of the new St. Peter's were laid on April 18, 1506. The two artistic achievements that were completed in Julius II's pontificate were Michael Angelo's painting of the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel and Raphael's frescoes in the pope's own apartments. The pope at one time climbed up onto the scaffolding where Michael Angelo was working on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, and asked when the work would be finished. The answer from the painter was "As quick as I can." This reply lacked the respect the pope expected, and he hit Michael Angelo with his stick, saying at each stroke, "As quick as I can! As quick as I can!" On All Saints Day, 1512, the ceiling was unveiled, after four years of work.

Julius II amassed a great fortune during his pontificate. In nine years, he brought under the Church's sway Perugia, Bologna, Rimini, Faenza, Imola, and Forli; later Ravenna and Cervia, then Modena and Reggio, part of the duchy of Ferrara, Parma, and Piacenza, part of the duchy of Milan -- a great territory reaching from northern Italy to Naples, the foundation of which went back to the Donation of Pepin and the Matilda Bequest.

There were demands for reform of the Church at the Lateran Council which met in May, 1512, and which was the first Church Council in eighty years. The Council consisted of sixteen cardinals, seventy bishops, twelve patriarchs and three generals of monastic orders. To these prelates, who were mostly Italians, were added the Roman Senate, representatives of the noble families of Rome, and the ambassadors of Spain, Venice, and Florence. A guard of honor was provided by the Knights of Rhodes in gold and silk.

While the Council was still in session, Julius II fell ill with stomach trouble. From his deathbed he wrote, in a letter to his brother, cardinal Sixtus Gasa della Rovere, "My dear brother, you do not understand why in the evening of my life I am undertaking such strenuous tasks. I would give to all Italy, our common mother, a single ruler -- the pope. But I toil in vain; an inner voice tells me that age will prevent my bringing my plan to fruition. No, it will not be granted me to do for Italy all that my heart prompts. Oh, if I were twenty years younger, if I could yet live beyond the usual span of years, only to realize my plan. But I fear that all my efforts will be in vain."

In his last hours he called himself a sinner who had not ruled the Church as he should have done. He died at the age of seventy, and the papal Master of Ceremonies wrote in his diary, "This pope has saved us all, Italy and Christendom, from the yoke of the French and the barbarians . . . Forty years have I lived in this city, and never before have I seen such an enormous crowd at the funeral of a pope."

216. Leo X or Giovanni de Medici

(March 9 [19], 1513 - December 1, 1521 A.D.)

Giovanni de Medici was a member of one of the most powerful families of Italy, the son of the greatest Medici, Lorenzo the Magnificent. The family were bankers and merchants, centered in Florence. Giovanni was born in 1475, and was thirty-eight at the time of his election. He had been made a cardinal at the age of thirteen because of his father's influence.

Pope Leo X gave great attention to the enhancement of his family. He named four new cardinals, two of them his relatives, one only twenty-one, and the other illegitimate and therefore canonically ineligible. But most of the pope's time was taken up by foreign policy, which was characterized by self-seeking and double-dealing. He changed sides so many times that it was remarked that it was the custom for the pope to be always on the winning side. Leo's court was thronged by artists, writers, and frivolous noblemen, and the pope spent much of his time in entertainments, banqueting, and hunting. Religious processions degenerated into stage shows. Leo X encouraged many shows, balls, and farces. Popular court plays alternated with ballets. The papal household consisted of 683 persons, four times as large as that of Pius II, and owing to chronic lack of funds, the pope raised the number of saleable Curial offices to more than 2,000. However, also, he sent the most important Vatican biblical manuscripts to cardinal Jimenez, archbishop of Toledo, one of the leading Church dignitaries, so he could publish the Old and New Testaments in several languages (this was called the Complutension Polyglott). Leo X was frequently served and advised by the Florentine statesman, Niccolo Machiavelli, whose name came to be a synonym for the basest subterfuge and intrigue.

The practise of granting indulgences for money was common at this time, and with the decision to rebuild St. Peter's came a campaign of indulgences to finance the building. It was easy to interpret this campaign and the doctrine behind it as an attempt to buy and sell salvation.

In May, 1517, an attempt was made to poison Leo X. The conspirators were apprehended; they were members of the cardinalate, the highest senate of the Church. Cardinals Adrian and Soderini were each fined, but the ringleader, Petruccio, and his secretary were tortured with red hot irons and then executed. From then on Leo X kept a military guard present when he said Mass. On July 1, he appointed thirty-one new cardinals, among them benefice-hunters, and bad administrators of Church property; one of them was seven-year old Alphonso of Portugal. Only a few of the number could live up to apostolic tradition.

On October 31, 1517, the eve of All Saints Day, Dr. Martin Luther, Augustinian friar and professor at the German University of Wittenberg, posted his ninety-five theses in Latin against the practise of indulgences. In the confessional, Luther had been handed an indulgence ticket. Not penitence, but forgiveness of sin for money. To Luther that was a caricature of penitential discipline. No one came forward to take part in the disputation, but in a fortnight the theses were circulating through Germany; and in a month, all over Europe. Luther was a supporter of the pope and his office, but could not tolerate the corrupt practises.

Leo X told the legal procurist of the See of Rome, who had proposed to punish Luther for heresy, to forego any further steps. Luther had been summoned to Rome, but instead met with papal legate Thomas di Vio of Gaeta, known as Cajetan, cardinal of Sisto, who was attending the imperial diet at Augsburg. Luther wanted to defend his position, but Cajetan asked only for a retraction, and would listen to nothing else. Luther refused, and appealed by letter to the pope, expressing his highest regard for the pope, but calling the Church of Rome a den of thieves, a scandalous whore-house, a realm of sin, death and hell; even the anti-Christ, if he came, could go no further. His letter stated:

> Meanwhile nobody need nurse a hope of hearing a recantation from me. That would only provoke an even greater storm. For I will not let anyone take from me the freedom to expound the Word of God. The Word of God, which brings freedom to all, must itself remain free. With the exception of this one point, I am ready to submit in everything. I hate all quarrels and will challenge no one. But when I am challenged, I shall not remain silent, so long as Christ is with me.

After reading this letter, pope Leo X said to a small circle of friends that Brother Martin has a very fine talent, but all this is mere monkish squabbling.

The Council at Worms opened on January 27, 1521. On January 3, a bull of excommunication had been issued depriving Luther and all of his followers of their religious and civil rights, and referring to them as Lutherans. There was great controversy over the case at the Council. On April 17, 1521, at six o'clock in the evening, Martin Luther appeared before the group in full assembly, presided over by emperor Charles V and his government, twenty-eight dukes, many counts and knights, thirty prelates, burgomasters and delegates of the cities, and representatives of estates. Only the papal nuncio was absent; he could not appear opposite an excommunicate heretic. Clerics and papal-minded politicians acted as observers. Luther was asked to retract. He hesitated, and did not speak out. In a very low voice, he asked for time to reflect. Many thought he was already retreating. A vote was passed in favor of postponement, until six o'clock of the following day.

The next day, after a night of prayer and reflection, Luther explained and testified in a carefully prepared address. After presenting the address, he turned to the exalted assembly and stated, "Since Your Imperial Majesty and Your Princely Graces demand a plain answer, I will give it without subterfuge or evasion. Provided I am not convicted of error by the witness of Scripture or irrefutable reasoning -- for I believe neither in the pope nor the Church councils by themselves alone, seeing that it is manifestly certain that they often err and contradict each other -- I am overcome by the Scriptures that I have quoted, and my conscience is held captive in the words of God. I cannot and will not retract in a single point. For to act against one's conscience is neither safe nor salutary." This he said in Latin, then added in German, "God help me. Amen."

The emperor rose, the session was closed. The same night, Charles V composed a written judgement, one of the first documents composed and written by the young emperor's own hand. He regretted having delayed so long before acting against Luther, and from henceforth regarded him as a notorious heretic. Nevertheless, negotiations went on. Luther still had safe conduct promised him, and he left and went to the Wartburg, outside Eisenach. Fired by nationalism and rebellion against the corruption of the Roman Church, the people followed Luther, and he became the turning point of a break in Church tradition which was to lead to the separation of much of the West from the Catholic Church.

Charles V instructed his cabinet on May 8, 1521, to draft the edict against Luther. It only came into force after the closure of the Council on May 25th. The time when Luther was outlawed coincided with the conclusion of an offensive alliance between Charles V and Leo X. The pope dropped Francis I of France and joined his more powerful adversary. In return for his defence of the Catholic faith and the Papal States, the German emperor received the crown in Rome and definitive acknowledgement as king of Naples. The French were to be driven from Milan and Genoa, and papal troops were to occupy Parma, Piacenza and Ferrara. A few months later, Charles took the field against the French in Italy.

The pope was stricken at the end of November by a sudden illness of which he died four days later, at the age of forty-six, without receiving the last sacraments.

217. Adrian VI or Adrian Dedel of Utrecht

(January 9 [August 31], 1522 - September 14, 1523 A.D.)

Adrian VI was a compromise candidate. He was the son of poor parents, his father a shipwright, and he was born in 1459 in Utrecht, Netherlands. He had made his way by scholastic brilliance and good character, and had taught philosophy in Louvain. In 1507, emperor Maximilian chose him to be tutor to his grandson, Charles V. The prince was devoted to him, and promoted his career; he was made bishop of Tortosa in Spain, and created cardinal in 1517.

He was in Spain when he received news of his election. The choice was unpopular in Rome and some of the cardinals plundered the Vatican before the new pope could take office. Adrian VI refused to maintain the splendor of the papal court, cutting down the cardinals' incomes and their privileges. He lived austerely and simply. The whole court of the previous pope was banished, including the artists, aristocrats, singers, musicians, and women. One of the artists, Marius of Piacenza, attacked Adrian VI with a dagger. The pope told the cardinals: To such an extent has vice become a matter of course that those infected with it no longer notice the stench of sin.

Leo X's debts amounted to 850,000 ducats, plus 300,000 unofficial debt. Many sacred objects had been pawned to raise cash. Adrian VI lived simply, not allowing his midday and evening meals to cost more than a ducat apiece, which he paid for day by day.

of Florence, and cardinal, and held the English diocese of Worcester for a while.

The new pope was an educated man. He saw Charles V as possessing great power and formed alliance with France in order to counteract the power of Charles. However, Charles overcame the French, and Francis I came to terms, but broke his treaty and formed an alliance against Charles V, known as the League of Cognac. The pope joined this league against Charles; the emperor retaliated, and the pope was forced to confinement in the Castel' Sant' Angelo.

In 1527, allegedly without the support or knowledge of Charles V, Spanish troops, with German and Italian mercenaries, stormed Rome and murder and plundering went on from May to October. About 12,000 persons lost their lives, a quarter of the Roman population, and two-thirds of the houses were destroyed.

The forty-five year old pope had to raise 400,000 ducats to receive imperial permission to leave Rome. In 1528, he returned to Rome, which was in a deplorable condition with pestilence and famine which had followed the destruction. In 1530, on February 24, Charles V's birthday, Clement VII crowned him in a splendorous ceremony in Bologna. This was the last papal crowning of an emperor, and the last but one imperial coronation at which the pope presided, the last being that of Napoleon, 274 years later in Paris, where Napoleon was anointed by the pope, but placed the crown on his head himself.

Clement VII, in old age. By Sebastiano del Piombo, in the Pinacoteca, Parma.

While Clement VII stood by taking no action, apostasy spread ever more widely. Germany was followed by Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Iceland, Poland, Switzerland; even Holland and France, which for centuries had been leaders in attempts to purify the Church. The Turks had become masters of Hungary and the Mohammedan army possessed Vienna. In England, Henry VIII, married to Charles V's aunt, Catherine of Aragon, sought dispensation from pope Clement VII to marry lady-in-waiting Anne Boleyn. Catherine had borne Henry several children, only one, Mary, surviving. Negotiations were carried on for about six years, after which time, with Anne Boleyn pregnant, Henry married her in opposition to the Church of Rome. With the aid of his chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, Henry VIII declared himself to be the supreme head of the English Church. Dissenters were put to death without respect of person, including chancellor of England, Thomas More.

Clement VII commissioned Michelangelo's fresco of the Last Judgment in the Sistine Chapel, and encouraged attempts to reform the religious orders. The Franciscans were reformed, which led to the establishment of the Capuchins; the Ursuline order of nuns was begun. In Paris, Ignatius Loyola was beginning the work which led to the establishment of his Society of Jesus (the Jesuits).

The pope had an illegitimate son, Alexander, born in his youth of a serving maid, for whom he attempted to obtain the duchy of Florence.

Clement VII died leaving his spiritual and temporal domains in chaos.

219. Paul III or Alexander Farnese
(October 13 [November 3], 1534 - November 10, 1549 A.D.)

Alexander Farnese was chosen by Clement VII on his deathbed as his successor, and the cardinals agreed, electing him quickly, as a neutral choice. He was born in 1468 of the Roman nobility. His sister had been the consort of Alexander VI, which secured ecclesiastical concessions for him, and he prospered under succeeding popes. He was very rich, and built the Farnese palace in Rome. As a cardinal, he had a mistress, and by her had three sons and a daughter; in 1513 he reformed his private life, and from that time on was also interested in seeing the reform of the Church.

Nevertheless, he sought the furtherance of his family interests, appointing two grandsons, aged fourteen and sixteen, as cardinals. His great grandchildren were christened with great pomp in the Vatican. Paul III also kept a showy court, holding a carnival and a masked ball in the papal palace for his nephews and their wives. Actors, singers, jesters, and musicians again were employed in large numbers. Three quarters of Michelangelo's Last Judgment was completed on the east wall of the Sistine Chapel. Over 300 figures appeared in the painting, including portraits of several popes, also Francis of Assisi, Dante, and Savonarola. The master of ceremonies, Blasius de Martinelli, disapproved of the nude figures, and heretic Michelangelo responded by portraying him as Minos in hell. When Martinelli complained to pope Paul III, the deluded pope replied: Had the painter put you in purgatory, I should have done all I could for you. But as he has consigned you to hell, there is nothing to be done about it!

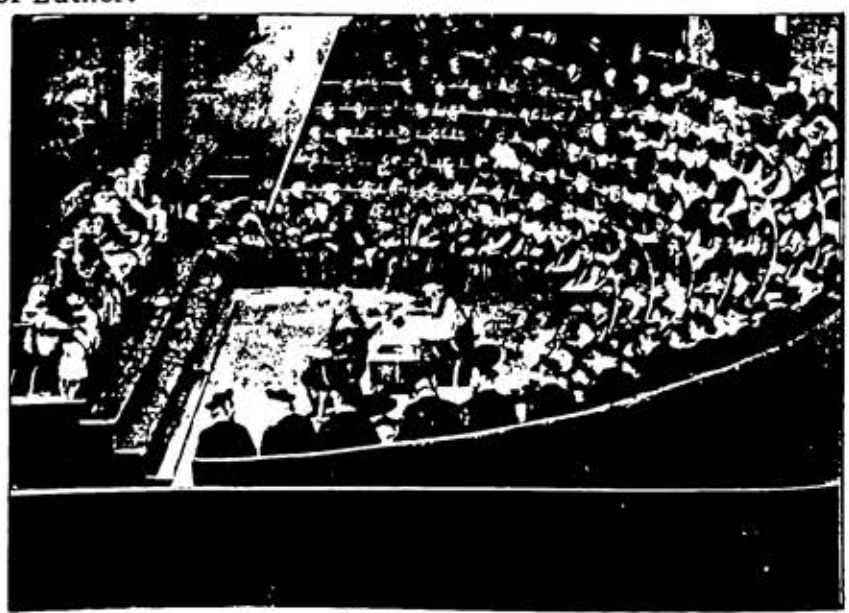
The need for a General Council was pressing. Previous popes had avoided the issue because of fear of the council taking precedence on issues over the pope himself, and taking over the pope's power. After many postponements, the Council was opened on December 13, 1545. A few weeks after the opening, Luther died. The Council was scantily attended, the pope himself not being present but sending representatives. Only four cardinals were present, three of them legates representing the pope; four archbishops, and twenty-one bishops, including only two French and one German. The theologians present had not any knowledge of the doctrines of Luther.



The Council of Trent (1545) strengthened the authority of the Papacy and finally acknowledged its supremacy over the Council. (Fresco in S. Maria in Trastevere)

The emperor, Charles V, still hoped to reclaim the Protestants, and wanted no points of doctrine discussed, but only a reform of disciplinary matters. Paul III pointed out that the disciplinary issue rightly belonged to himself, and that councils traditionally had been concerned mainly with points of doctrine. The Council proceeded slowly, and without focus. In 1547, with conflict between the pope and emperor Charles, Paul III removed the Council to Bologna; as a protest, the Spanish and German bishops remained in Trent.

In 1542, the Roman Inquisition was inaugurated. A papal bull authorized it to inflict punishments such as imprisonment and execution, and to confiscate the goods of those condemned to death. A year later, in July, 1543, the Grand Inquisitor issued a decree against the circulation of heretical books in Rome, Ferrara, and Bologna.

The Jesuits, a new order begun by Ignatius of Loyola, took part in the Council of Trent. They were an elite order, limited by papal bull in 1540 to a membership of sixty. The Jesuits left the cell for the world. They wore no distinguishing clothing, and favored an active life. They acknowledged two supreme authorities, the head of their Order, and the pope, and to both they offered their lives in absolute obedience. They became a Spiritual elite to the pope. Every Order has its special features, and that of the Jesuits was devotion to the Church. Ignatius said: What appears white to my eyes, I take for black if the hierarchic church so decides. His instruction to the Jesuit delegation to Trent was that they should seek to learn while listening and should preserve an inner calm in order to grasp the thoughts, feelings, and intentions of the speakers, and to answer them the better afterwards, or keep silence better, as the case may be. Every opinion was to be expressed with the greatest calm and modesty. Every evening the two companions were to meet for fraternal discussion and self-criticism, so as to confirm their impressions.

Missionary work was carried during Paul III's pontificate to the Spanish dominions of South America and Mexico.

With the work of the Council of Trent incomplete, Paul III died, at the age of eighty-two. He had benefited Rome in many ways, building streets, restoring churches, and fortifying the city; but in the sight of God he was a deluded heretic.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant three months)

220. Julius III or Gian Maria (Giovanni Ciocchi) del Monte
(February 7 [22], 1550 - March 23, 1555 A.D.)

It took ten weeks for the Conclave to decide on Julius III, passing over Englishman Reginald Pole, who appeared most qualified for the position. Julius III later sent Pole to England as the archbishop of Canterbury, the last to hold that title.

Julius III was born in 1487 in Rome. He had succeeded his uncle as archbishop of Siponto, and Paul III made him a cardinal in 1536. He was a learned canonist and had been the principal papal legate at the Council of Trent.

Julius III spent most of his time as pope enjoying carnivals, bullfights, hunting, games and banquets. He gave a cardinalate to seventeen-year old Innocent del Monte, the keeper of his ape, whom his brother had adopted. The young man died in prison in 1560 under suspicion of murder.

The pope came to an agreement with Charles V and the Council of Trent reopened, at Trent, in 1551. However, with the outbreak of war in Germany in 1552, it was again suspended.

The work of the Jesuits was furthered during this pontificate, with Francis Xavier doing missionary work in the Far East. Julius III encouraged the Jesuits to open their Roman college and employed Jesuit theologians to assist him at the renewed Council of Trent.

Julius III died in March, 1555, with the Council suspended and fighting going on between French and imperial troops.

221. Marcellus II or Marcellus Cervini (Marcello Pervino)
(April 9 [10], 1555 - April 30/May 1, 1555 A.D.)

Marcellus II was born in 1501 in Montepulciano, Italy. He was noted for his virtue and learning and had been secretary to cardinal Farnese who made him cardinal when he became pope. He had been Vatican librarian, and Council president at Trent.

Marcellus II prohibited any member of his family from coming to Rome. Luxury was banned and there were no elaborate coronation ceremonies.

The pope suffered a stroke on the 30th of April, twenty-two days after his election, and died a few hours later.

222. Paul IV or Gian Pietro Carafa (Giovanni Pietro Caraffa)
(May 23 [26], 1555 - August 18, 1559 A.D.)

Paul IV had been archbishop of Naples and was elevated to cardinal by Paul III. He had founded an order, the Theatines, which provided a recruiting ground for bishops.

One of Paul IV's first acts was to appoint his nephew, Carlo Carafa, a cardinal, and the new cardinal became his chief adviser in political matters, with disastrous results. Cardinal Carafa accepted a pension from the French, and committed the pope to much more than he let him know. Emperor Charles V abdicated in 1555 and his domains were split, his son Philip becoming king of Spain. Philip was soon at war with the French and the pope, therefore, found himself at war with Spain. In August, 1557, the duke of Alba with a Spanish army surrounded Rome. In September, a peace treaty was signed and Italy and the Church fell under the dominion of Spain.

Paul IV turned to reform, and on hearing of the immoral conduct of his nephew and his nephew's brothers, he swore he had known nothing about it and denounced his nephews, banishing them from Rome. He came down on absentee bishops, who resided outside their diocese, and required them to return and take care of their responsibilities. From 113 bishops residing in Rome in 1556, he reduced them to less than a dozen by 1559.

Paul IV receives the Venetian ambassador. By Palma il Giovine, in the Oratorio dei Crociferi, Venice.

The launching of the Inquisition was for Paul IV his most important duty. Among the decrees of the Roman Inquisition was that of silence; anyone who betrayed the secrecy of the Inquisition was liable to excommunication in the widest sense. The judgements and death sentences were not subject to any appeal or censorship. The Jews in Rome and other Italian cities were required to live in a particular quarter and wear a special yellow headcovering. The Jesuits were required to remain in Rome; even as cardinal, Paul had conflicted with Ignatius of Loyola, who later said that on hearing of Paul IV's election, he trembled in every bone of his body.

Art and books were censored. The battle against heresy was accompanied by denunciation and intrigue. Seldom was a pope so feared, in the Vatican, the College of Cardinals, among the Romans, in the Papal States. The pope explained to the French ambassador that heresy was so serious a crime that if a man were only a little tainted with it, there was no remedy but to consign him to the flames, regardless of his being of the highest rank. Paul IV had a coin struck depicting Christ cleansing the temple with a whip.

On the death of Paul IV there was rioting; his statues were torn down and prisoners were set free.

223. Pius IV or Giovanni Angelo de Medici

(December 12 or 25, 1559 [January 6, 1560] - December 9, 1565 A.D.)

Pius IV was a compromise candidate. He was born in Milan in 1499. His family was not close to the famous Florentine Medici. He had been a law student, and as a youth had three illegitimate children. He gained the favor of Paul III and in 1545, was appointed archbishop of Ragusa, although he didn't reside there. Paul III made him cardinal in 1549. He also wanted to look after his family, and called to Rome his twenty-one year old nephew, who became his principal advisor. This nephew was Charles Borromeo, and he proved to be an able diplomat and theologian. In 1560, he was made cardinal and given the office later known as Secretary of State.

The new pope was a stout and good-natured man, afflicted with gout. He took long walks for his health, and took no interest in the Inquisition nor showed ill-will toward anyone; although he had to prepare charges against the Caraffa family because of a brutal murder by the duke of Paliano, brother of cardinal Carlo Caraffa, of his wife's lover; and the murder of the duke's wife by her brother. Cardinal Carlo Caraffa, the duke and the brother-in-law were all sentenced to death.

Tournament in the courtyard of Belvedere in the Vatican, to celebrate its opening. Built under Pius IV.

The Council of Trent was reopened on January 18, 1562. Express couriers travelled almost daily between the Vatican and the Council, with secret dispatches. The Council took action to stop the trafficking in benefices; bishops were instructed to be more careful in their choice of candidates for the priesthood, provisions were made for setting up diocesan seminaries. Charles Borromeo was spoken of at Trent as the living embodiment of the Council. He knew by heart all the resolutions passed in the first two periods of the Council, years before, his mediations were considered skillful and effective, and his reports to Rome discreet. Laws were laid down at the Council as well as dogmas: every marriage had to be before the parish priest in the presence of two witnesses. The clergy were promised a catechism from which to draw their teaching. There were plans for a revised edition of the Bible. The Council became more and more united and effective. As the result of a gradual change of opinion, all the resolutions, doctrines, and decrees of reform that had been decided on at Trent were referred to Pius IV for confirmation. Thus the pope came into control of the Council.

Pope Pius IV approved the decrees of the Council without alteration on January 26, 1564, and henceforth took the new title given him by the Council, catholice ecclesie episcopus, the bishop of the Catholic (Universal) Church. Work of reform continued, the pope himself setting an example to the cardinals and bishops by greatly reducing the state he lived in and dismissing many members of his household. He encouraged St. Teresa's reform of the Carmelites.

Pius IV died in December, 1565.

224. St. Pius V or Michael (Michele) Ghislieri
(January 7 [17], 1566 - May 1, 1572 A.D.)

Michael Ghislieri was born at Bosco, Italy, in 1504, of a noble Roman family. He studied with the Dominicans, entering the Order at the age of fifteen. He continued his studies at Bologna, where he taught philosophy and theology for sixteen years. He became inquisitor for Como, and pope Paul IV made him bishop of Sutri. In 1557, he was made a cardinal, and then Inquisitor General. Under Pius IV he was exiled to Piedmont but recalled to Rome to prosecute eight French bishops for heresy.

Pius V took action against corruption in Roman civil officials. He took actions to put into effect the results of the Council of Trent. Regulations were issued and enforced for the conduct of the clergy, who could no longer attend theatres or drink in taverns. Bishops must reside in their Sees. He prevented several unethical episcopal elections, one the attempted election of a six-year old as the bishop of Halberstadt, Germany.

St. Pius V. By Francisco Zuccarelli, at Stonyhurst College, Lancashire.

The pope was devoted to St. Thomas Aquinas; he ordered the printing of an edition of Aquinas' works, which was published in seventeen volumes.

Pius V encouraged Philip of Spain to invade England and depose queen Elizabeth. He issued the bull Regnans in excelsis, which deposed Elizabeth and released the English subjects from allegiance to her. The English executed Mary and increased the persecution of Catholics.

The Turks during this time threatened to take over the whole of central Europe. The pope formed an alliance against them with Spain and Venice. A combined fleet commanded by Don John of Austria (illegitimate son of Charles V and half-brother of Philip II) and papal fleet commander Marcantonio Colonna, won against the Turkish fleet at Lepanto on October 7, 1571. In honor of the victory, Pius V instituted the Feast of Our Lady of Victory (renamed the Feast of the Rosary by his successor, Gregory XIII).

Pius V died after a painful illness; when the Turkish sultan heard of his death, he ordered three days of public rejoicing in celebration.

225. Gregory XIII or Hugo (Ugo) Buoncompagni (May 13 [25], 1572 - April 10, 1585 A.D.)

This pope was born in Bologna in 1502, where he studied law and later became professor of law at the University of Bologna. He was not virtuous in his youth and had an illegitimate son, whom he made governor of St. Angelo after his accession. Gregory XIII was made a cardinal by Pius IV, and sent to the Council of Trent.

Gregory XIII gave particular attention to the creation of diocesan seminaries for the proper education of the clergy, founding or substantially contributing to the foundation of twenty-three such colleges. He gave generously to the Roman College founded by Ignatius of Loyola, and it was now called the Gregorian University. Considerable assistance was given to worthy, but needy, students. The Jesuit and Theatine Orders were supported.

In 1581, the pope was associated with plans for rebellion in Ireland, combined with a conspiracy among Catholic noblemen in England to assassinate queen Elizabeth. In 1582, the Corpus Iuris Canonici was completed, a collection of the established laws of the Church.

The reform of the calendar was carried out in 1582; the calendar initiated by Julius Caesar was slightly inaccurate, and by this time was ten days behind the sun. Under Gregory VIII's orders an accurate calendar was constructed, and in a feat of international cooperation the fourth of October, 1582, was followed by the fifteenth of October, and the Gregorian calendar was in force. The non-Catholic countries resisted this reform, the English adopting it in 1751, and the Russians at the time of the Russian revolution, with the result that the famous October Revolution actually took place in November.

At the time of Gregory XIII's death in 1585, there was disorder in Rome, bands of bandits in the countryside, and the papal treasury was empty.

226. Sixtus V or Felice Peretti (Montalto)
(April 24 [May 1], 1585 - August 27, 1590 A.D.)

Sixtus V. Bust, in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

Felice Peretti was born in Montalto (Grottamare) in 1521 into a Dalmatian family, who had fled to Italy from the Turks. His father was a gardener, and Felice had been a swineherd in his youth. At the age of twelve, he entered the Franciscan Order at Montalto, where his uncle was a friar. The Order sent him to Ferrara and Bologna for his education. He was ordained in 1547 and became a famous preacher. In 1552, he was invited to preach the Lenten sermon at St. Peter's; in 1556, he became prior of the Frari church in Venice, and was appointed counselor to the Venetian Inquisition, from which post he was recalled to Rome in 1560. In 1565, he was made Vicar Apostolic of the Franciscan Order and was sent to Spain with cardinal Buoncampagni (later Gregory XIII) to investigate a charge of heresy against the bishop of Toledo. In 1566, he became the confessor to Pius V; in 1570, a cardinal; and in 1571, bishop of Ferno.

Once elected, Sixtus V had a heavy hand; five days after his enthronement, four young men from Civi were executed after conviction for carrying firearms in spite of a recent ordinance against them. In two years he had rid the countryside of the lawless bands. In March, 1587, the pope lamented to the French ambassador that of 20,000 bandits, only 7,000 had been killed.

Sixtus V brought revenue into Rome, and built up the papal treasury. He sent Gregory XIII's treasurer to the Castel' Sant' Angelo for misappropriation and extortion, then let him buy himself out for 45,000 scudi (about 40,000 dollars). The proceeds from the sale of offices were around 300,000 scudi per year. Taxes were raised and money accumulated in the treasury.

In the Church at large, he carried out organizational reforms which remain to this day. He arranged for bishops to meet with him in regular official visits. He fixed the number of cardinals at seventy. The cardinals were organized into fifteen committees or congregations, including the Congregation to supervise the carrying out of the Tridentine decrees; the Congregation of the Holy Office dealing with questions of faith and unbelief, and the inquisition; the Congregation of Rites; the Congregation for Petitions of Grace and Indulgence; the Congregation of the Consulta for business transacted in the consistory of cardinals; the Congregation for examination of disputes between bishops and monastics or among members of monastic orders; the Congregation for censorship of books; the Congregations for the building of churches and for consistorial accounts; two Congregations for public welfare, to be supervised by the University of Rome; the Congregation for budgetary affairs of the States of the Church; the Congregation of roads, streets, bridges, and aqueducts; the Congregation for the Vatican State printing office; and the Congregation for the navy. The cardinals are still divided into congregations, though the original fifteen have been combined, changed, and added to.

Sixtus V called his nephew to Rome, sixteen-year old Aleander Peretti-Montalto. They worked together in close liaison, and the boy was instructed by the pope, as noted in the pope's diary: He advised mental exercises and reflections, so as to keep his eyes on essentials. He wrote him an instruction manual based on his experience which included the following: Very important persons must be kept informed of the motives for one's decisions; others need only be given instructions. It is expedient to listen with patience to long discourses; it gives one time to think out one's reply, and it pleases the talker, for everybody likes to be listened to. During the audience, even when you are excited, you must control your feelings and keep your normal demeanor. This helps you to disguise your real thoughts. He who never stops reflecting will never start to act. Princes are proud men, greedy for glory, jealous of each other's power. They love to be feared and cannot endure censure or candid speech. Any favor granted to one of them in the way of privileges, titles, or subsidies attracts similar claims from other princes. Meetings between them seldom produce kindly feelings, but more often discord and hatred. They love excess in everything. To do business with the pope, you must know how to choose the right moment. Do not be troublesomely urgent. Start with easy and pleasant subjects, then turn to the more difficult ones and those which require a quick decision.

The nephew was made a cardinal while still a teenager, and head of the Congregation of the Consulta; and he carried out his duties with energy and skill.

Sixtus V rebuilt much of Rome, and gave it many of the characteristics which it still retains; he rebuilt the Lateran Palace, completed the nals, under pain of excommunication; and he attempted to halt the cruel treatment of the natives in the Phillipines by their Spanish masters.

He died after a ten month pontificate.

229. Innocent IX or Gianntonio (Giovanni) Facchinetti
(October 29 [November 3], 1591 - December 30,1591 A.D.)

Innocent IX was born in 1519, in Bologna, where he was also educated. In 1544, he entered the service of cardinal Farnese, later Paul III. He attended the Council of Trent, and was appointed nuncio to Venice in 1566. In 1575, he was made titular patriarch of Jerusalem, and in 1583, a cardinal. He wrote works of theology, and under the ailing Gregory XIV, Innocent IX was responsible for most of the papal business.

He died two months after his election.

230. Clement VIII or Ippolyto Aldobrandini
(January 30 [February 8], 1592 - March 3, 1605 A.D.)

Clement VIII. Monument from the school of Bernini, in S. Maria Maggiore.

This pope was born near Rome in 1536. His family were from Florence, and had fled from the Medici. He was made cardinal by Sixtus V in 1585, and in 1586, went to Poland as papal legate. As pope, Clement did much for Rome, and the poor, reducing papal finances in the process.

Clement VIII was friendly to Spain, but the alliance of the papacy with Spain had the result of making any country against Spain also automatically against the papacy. This connection was broken by Clement VIII when he accepted the conversion to Catholicism by Henry IV in France. He also allowed English Catholics to support king James of England, and sanctioned the establishment of English colleges for the clergy at Valladolid and Seville.

Clement VIII tried to persuade Boris Godunov, the ruler of Russia, to join with the Poles and Germans against the Turks, but Godunov was more against the papacy than against the Turks.

Large parts of Germany and Poland returned to Catholicism. Clement's tactics were of patience and prudence, and he waited, and took action at the most advantageous time.

During his pontificate Clement VIII had the bust in Siena Cathedral, which was labelled, John VIII, a woman from England, changed into a bust of pope Zachary. He published a revised edition of the Vulgate, called the Clementine Vulgate. Relying on the decrees of the Council of Trent, he issued a Tridentine Index with supplements, or lists of forbidden books.

The pope offered to arbitrate in a doctrinal dispute between the Jesuits and the Dominicans, but after sixty-eight sessions with no compromise on either side, he retired from the issue, and died without having made a decision.

231. Leo XI or Alessandro (Alessandra Ottaviona) de Medici (April 1 [10], 1605 - April 27, 1605 A.D.)

Leo XI. Monument by Alessandro Algardi, in St. Peter's.

Alessandro de Medici was kinsman of the queen of France, and was born in 1535, in Florence. He was great nephew of Leo X. Under Pius V, he served as Tuscan ambassador. He went as papal legate to France, was cardinal bishop of Albano, and of Palestrina in 1602. He refused to make a cardinal of his great-nephew, whom he had brought up and educated.

Leo XI was ill at the time of his election, and died ten days after his coronation.

232. Paul V or Camillo Borghese (May 16 [29], 1605 - January 28, 1621 A.D.)

Paul V was a Roman, born in 1550, bishop of Jesi. His career had been spent in the study and application of canon law.

This pope enforced the regulations of the Council of Trent about the residence of bishops in their Sees, and he paid particular attention to religious orders; among those obtaining papal approval during his reign were the Capuchins, the Piarists of St. Joseph Calasanctius, de Berulle's French Oratory, and the Spanish Cistercians.

Many political problems plagued his reign. Because of the breaking of Church laws by a Venetian bishop and abbot, Paul V imprisoned them and put the republic of Venice under interdict (a censure withdrawing most sacraments and Christian burial from a district or person), even threatening armed intervention, and nearly causing a war with the English, French and Dutch. A French intermediary from Henry IV helped to resolve the problem and the interdict was lifted.

In England, France and Spain, difficulties continued, Catholics being under persecution in England, and extreme theories being proposed in France. In Spain, on May 23, 1618, the Bohemian Protestant rebels broke into a meeting of the imperial commissioners in the Hradschin Palace at Prague, and threw out of the window two Catholic councillors and their secretary, which was the immediate cause of the Thirty Years' War.

In Russia, the pope was associated with a rebel, Dimitri, who seized the throne from Fedor. Dimitri was killed and the pope and Jesuits reproached by the Russians for their part in the affair.

In Rome, pope Paul saw to the final embellishment of the new St. Peter's, and the canonization of St. Charles Borromeo and St. Francis. The debt of the Church was increased by the raising of arms, alms to the poor, and gifts bestowed on the pope's brothers and nephews. Public debt in 1618 was around 18 million, with an annual revenue of only two million.

Galileo was summoned to Rome where a court of theologians pronounced the opinion that the Copernican heliocentric planetary theory (that the planets revolve about the sun) was in error. Galileo was forbidden to spread his beliefs any further, and was tried in Rome for the breaking of his promise.

Pope Paul died in 1621, a week after suffering an apoplectic stroke.

233. Gregory XV or Alessandro Ludovisi
(February 9 [14], 1621 - July 8, 1623 A.D.)

Pope Gregory XV was born in Bologna in 1554. He was a pupil of the Jesuits at the Roman College, was a canonist, and at the time of his election, archbishop of Bologna.

Gregory XV. Monument by Pierre Le Gros, in S. Ignazio.

In a bull Aeterni Patris Filius, he laid down three methods of election of a pope: the method of scrutiny, which is by secret ballot, the way most commonly used; by compromise, in which delegates by general consent give the elective power to a small committee of cardinals; and by acclamation, when by unanimous agreement the cardinals unite to elect an unopposed candidate. Pope Gregory XV was the last pope to be elected by acclamation.

The Congregation, or Office, of Propaganda was created to meet the needs of the great missionary activities which were now being carried out in the Americas, India, and Africa. New saints were proclaimed, including Ignatius of Loyola, Francis Xavier, Philip Neri, and Teresa of Avila.

Pope Gregory XV helped to avert war between Spain and France by sending papal troops to occupy Tirano (Valtilline) until negotiations could be completed.

One of Gregory's last acts was his constitution Omnipotentis Dei against magicians and witches. This was the last papal pronouncement of any importance on this subject, and reserved the death penalty to those who had entered into compact with the devil and committed murder with his assistance.

On his death on July 8, 1623, Gregory's tomb was installed in the church of St. Ignatius, built by his nephew, cardinal Ludovisi.

234. Urban VIII or Maffeo Barberini

(August 6 [September 29], 1623 - July 29, 1644 A.D.)

Pope Urban VIII, born in Florence in 1568, was also a pupil of the Jesuits. He had served as nuncio to France.

This pope spent considerable sums of money on rearmament, and fortification of Rome. He raised a papal army of 80,000 men. Against the protest of many, he united with cardinal Richelieu, who was also minister of France, against Catholic Austria. Urban's policy was aimed at forming a league of Catholic rulers against the Turks, but this was never realized.

Urban VIII. By Andrea Sacchi, in the Barberini Gallery.

Jansenism arose during this time, with the posthumous publication of Augustinus, written by Cornelius Jansenius, bishop of Ypres. Jansenism denied freedom of will, and taught that Christ did not die for all men, but only for some. Pope Urban VIII condemned the teaching of Jansenius; he also condemned Galileo, continuing the attack begun in earlier pontificates. However, Urban VIII was a friend of Galileo, and the scientist was treated carefully and kindly at a time when heretics were still being maimed and killed by the Inquisition. Galileo was required to renounce his theories, and was kept under house arrest for a short time, with his servant to tend to his needs, and then released to private life.

Pope Urban VIII revised the rules for canonization, and beatification, and his rules are still observed at the present time.

In addition to the fortification of Rome, Urban VIII also restored and rebuilt many churches. His many building projects and increasing of the papal debt caused it to be said, when lead was stripped from the roof of the Pantheon to be used for other projects, That what the barbarians have spared, the Barberini have taken. This was also in conjunction with a great nepotism and favoritism toward his family; it was said that the Barberini gained one hundred and five million scudi during the twenty-one year pontificate.

In October, 1641, the pope was involved in an offensive war against the duke of Parma, Odoardo Farnese. Urban had long cherished the idea of restoring Parma and Piacenza to the Papal States and he sent an army to seize the city of Castro. Odoardo, upon resisting the pope, was deprived of his fiefs and excommunicated, but succeeded in raising a defensive league with the result that the pope's forces were routed and Urban was obliged to evacuate Castro and lift the sentence of excommunication.

He died a few years later at the age of 67.

235. Innocent X or Giambattista (Giovanni Battista) Pamfilo

(September 15 [October 4], 1644 - January 7, 1655 A.D.)

Innocent X, a canon lawyer born in 1574, succeeded to the papacy after a lengthy conclave. He attempted to make the Barberini return some of the wealth they had gained under the last pope, but they fled to France and were protected there by cardinal Mazarin, who had succeeded Richelieu.

Pope Innocent X's household and also much of the business of his papacy were influenced by his widowed sister-in-law, Olimpia Maidalchini, who spent her time in intrigue and in accumulating wealth.

The end of the Thirty Years' war officially took place on October 24, 1648, with the Peace of Westphalia. The pope protested against some of the provisions; the subjects of a monarch were compelled to follow his religion, and secularized ecclesiastical property would remain in secular hands permanently. Netherlands and the Swiss confederation left the Holy Roman Empire. The pope's protest had no effect.

A nuncio was sent to Ireland to convince the Irish to support Charles I of England against the Parliamentarians, but the nuncio returned in four years without result.

Pope Innocent X passed a measure whereby common criminals could buy their freedom from prison after sentence. He continued the ornamentation of Rome, improving the cathedral of St. John Lateran and building the church of St. Agnes.

When the pope died in 1655 at the age of eighty-two, his household was in such disorder that his corpse lay unattended for three days.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant three months)

236. Alexander VII or Fabio Chigi
(April 7 [18], 1655 - May 22, 1667 A.D.)

Pope Alexander VII was born in 1599 in Siena. He was a grandnephew of Paul V, and had spent most of his ecclesiastical life as a diplomat, and after 1651, was Secretary of State. He began his reign by refusing all help to his relations and forbidding them to come to Rome, and then reversed this policy and brought a number of them from Siena, made his nephew Flavio a cardinal, and gave lucrative offices to his brother and another nephew.

This pope left not only routine matters, but also important ones, to the handling of the Congregations (committees of cardinals) and to his Secretary of State, cardinal Giulio Rospigliosi.

The Jansenist controversy continued and Alexander took his turn in condemning the teaching of Jansenius.

There was conflict with France, with Louis XIV occupying Avignon and Venaissin and threatening invasion of the Papal States. Alexander VII was obliged to sign the Treaty of Pisa, agreeing to the disbanding of the Corsican guard and to the erection of a monument in Rome commemorating his reconciliation with the king of France.

The Turks in 1664 were penetrating steadily further into Hungary, and Alexander VII formed the Holy Alliance against them. Louis XIV refused to join, in order to please Mohammed IV, but finally intervened as a member of the Rhenish League.

Pope Alexander VII, who was himself a scholar, encouraged the arts; he aided father van Bolland, and his collaborators, who were then beginning a historically accurate and fully documented lives of the Saints (a work which is still in progress after three centuries).

237. Clement IX or Giulio Rospigliosi
(June 20 [26], 1667 - December 9, 1669 A.D.)

Clement IX. By Carlo Maratta (c.1668), in the Vatican.

On the death of pope Alexander VII, his hard-working Secretary of State Giulio Rospigliosi was chosen as pope, who was born in 1600 in Pistoia, Italy. He had been nuncio in Spain for eleven years and was known for his piety and retiring nature. He also had the unusual occupation of writing opera librettos. Twice a week he could be found in St. Peter's with attendants dismissed, assuming the duties of humble confessor. He brought no relatives to Rome; he reduced taxes, abolished grain monopolies, and called a halt to the beginnings of abuses in foreign missions, forbidding missionaries to engage in commerce.

During Clement IX's pontificate, the Jansenist controversy was pacified. The pope also acted as arbitrator between France and Spain at the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Papal finances were again on firm basis, and the pope came to the aid of Venice in the defense of Crete under siege by the Turks; however, the island fell to the Islamites, and the pope fell ill and died soon after.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant four months)

238. Clement X or Emiliero (Emilio) Altieri
(April 29 [May 11], 1670 - July 22, 1676 A.D.)

Clement X. Bust (1676), in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

Clement X was a compromise candidate, the most recently promoted cardinal and the oldest, a Roman, born in 1590.

A conflict which continued for some time after this pontificate originated at this time. This was the right of regale claimed by the kings of France, and conferred on the king the temporalities and incomes of vacant Sees and abbeys until the newly elected bishop or abbot had been consecrated and taken the oath of fealty.

The governmental duties of the pontificate were transacted mostly by the pope's adopted nephew, cardinal Paoluzzi-Altieri; who tried to create a league of Christian nations to counteract the Turkish advance. The French remained allied with the Islamites and blocked many of these efforts.

Pope Clement X took an interest in the missions and promoted them by various decrees. St. Rose of Lima was canonized, who had been beatified under Clement IX; she was the first Saint of the American continent.

Rules for the authentification of relics from the catacombs were drawn up in 1672; they were to be kept only in churches or chapels, and those who bought, sold, or traded relics were liable to excommunication.

Pope Clement died in his eighty-sixth year.

(Papal Court or Roman See vacant two months)

239. Innocent XI or Benedetto Odescalchi

(September 21 [October 4], 1676 - August 11/12, 1689 A.D.)

Innocent XI was born in Como in 1611, and was a former law student and bishop of Novare. His election had been prevented by Louis XIV in the conclave of 1669. Innocent XI was called the pope of the Holy Ghost from a remark made by cardinal Sforza to a colleague at the election: If the French make the pope, it will be Farnese; if the Spaniards, Rospigliosi; if the people, Barberini; if the Holy Ghost, Odescalchi; if the devil makes him, it will be either Your Eminence or I.

When a papal delegate at Ferrara, the plate outside Innocent XI's house read, Benedetto Odescalchi, father of the poor. Though he was a cardinal at age thirty-four, he lived unostentatiously in Rome, devoting himself to charitable works. When pope, he allowed none of his relatives to accept presents or decorations. He did away with the debt, and even accumulated a surplus.

Innocent XI. Monument by Etienne Monot from a design by Carlo Maratta, in St. Peter's.

In a royal edict of March 22, 1682, king Louis XIV made a demand and an offer of an exchange: the king would eliminate French Protestantism, if the pope would tolerate the four articles of the Catholic Church of France (the Gallican Church). The articles were (1) The pope possesses no power in secular and civil matters. Kings and reigning princes are not subject to the authority of the Church in secular matters, they cannot be deposed by the Church, and their subjects cannot be released from their allegiance by the Church. (2) The Spiritual powers of the pope are subject to the higher authority of the general councils of the Church. (3) For France in particular, the pope's authority is limited by the old French Church laws. (4) Even in matters of faith, the pope's decision, when made without the agreement of the Church, is not unalterable.

The holy father declined the offer. He praised the king for wanting to abolish heresy, but he called it a cruel thing to persecute the Huguenots (French Protestants). The pope would have nothing to do with cruelty; nor would he submit to despotism whereby royalty would enrich itself at the expense of the Church. People must be led, not dragged, to the temple, he said.

Upon abolition by the pope of the right of asylum of embassies in Rome, the French ambassador took forcible possession of his palace at the head of an armed force, thereby incurring excommunication and an interdict for the French church. At the election of the archbishop of Cologne, neither of the two candidates received the necessary number of votes, so the pope cast the deciding vote. Louis XIV in retaliation seized Avignon, which was papal territory, imprisoned the nuncio and appealed to a general council.

Pope Innocent XI contributed large sums toward the expedition against the Turks which ended in victory at Vienna by the Christian troops under John Sobieski. But the pope's plans for a holy league of all the Christian princes againts the Turks came to nothing.

The pope had attended, before his accession, the Jesuit school at Como. In the time of his pontificate, ex-queen Christina, daughter of Gustavus Adolphus, who had been converted to Catholicism through her friendship with a Portuguese Jesuit, had taken up her residence in Rome. During a thrifty period, Innocent XI had cancelled her 22,000 thaler pension, though later, when territorial losses deprived her of most of her revenues, he allowed her 12,000 thaler a year. The pope sought to improve the morals of the Roman citizens, making gambling illegal and forbidding women to wear immodest clothing.

In one of the last audiences of the pope, an ambassador promised that his master would look after the Odescalchi family. The pope replied, I have neither house nor family. God conferred the papal office on me, not for the profit of my relatives, but for the government of the Church and her people.

Alexander VIII. Bust, in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

Pope Alexander VIII was born in Venice in 1610. He had had wide administrative experience and was bishop of Brescia. Louis XIV gave back Avignon, and renounced the right of asylum claimed for the French embassy in Rome. In 1690, the pope issued a further condemnation of the four Gallican articles. He renewed various sinecures (offices or positions of temporal value which involve little or no responsibility or active service) for the benefit of his family.

He died after a pontificate of sixteen months.

241. Innocent XII or Antonio Pignatelli
(July 12 [15], 1691 - September 27, 1700 A.D.)

Innocent XII. By Lodovico Antonio David, in the Villa Albani.

Born in 1615 in Bari, Italy, Innocent XII became a nuncio and archbishop of Naples. One of his first acts as pope was to abolish nepotism, allowing a pope to make only one relative a cardinal, and limiting appointments to other offices.

The pope refused to accept the bishops who had taken part in the assembly of 1682, and finally king Louis gave way, and required the four bishops who had signed the Gallican "Four Articles" to send a declaration to the pope that they regretted sincerely the acts of the assembly which had displeased the pope and his predecessors.

Pope Innocent XII had to deal with a matter that had been condemned by Innocent XI, a school of thought called Quietism, which taught complete indifference, even to eternal salvation, and proposed that in contemplation all distinct ideas should be repulsed, including the attributes of God and the mysteries of the life of Christ. The propagators of this theory were condemned by theological commission and censured by the pope, for their view included only the facts, not the truths behind the facts.

This pope was the one depicted in Robert Browning's The Ring and the Book.

242. Clement XI or Giovani Francesco Albani

(November 23, 30 [December 8], 1700 - March 19, 1721 A.D.)

Cardinal Albani had had a long career in papal service. He was made a cardinal in 1690, and as advisor to Innocent XII, he drew up the constitution against nepotism. He was not ordained a priest until 1700, and celebrated his first Mass only two days before the Conclave which elected him pope. He was in his early 50's when elected, and the fact that he wore no beard was unusual at that time.

There were many political conflicts during this pontificate, although Rome itself appeared untouched by disorder or panic, and even grew richer by the addition of new academies and works of art. At the negotiations for the Peace of Utrecht in 1713, part of the papal dominions were shared out among the participants; Sicily went to Victor Amadeus II of Savoy; Parma and Piacenza were granted to a Spanish child without reference to papal overlordship. In 1715, three thousand churchmen were expelled from Sicily, and at the Treaty of London in 1720, Victor Amadeus exchanged Sicily for Sardinia, without consulting the pope.

Clement XI. By Carlo Maratta, in the Villa Albani.

King Louis XIV of France died in 1715, and regent Philip of Orleans governed during the minority of Louis XV. Also the question of Spanish succession became increasingly complex.

Pope Clement XI attempted to negotiate with queen Anne of England, but her early death brought this to an end.

War was declared on the Turks at Venice on December 1, 1715; the pope managed to secure Spain's non-aggression during these hostilities. Clement promised 100,000 gold florins to Venice and Charles VI and the Austro-Venetian alliance began, which led to the victory over the Turks at Temesvar in 1716.

Pope Clement XI was active in missionary endeavor and was concerned with the controversy over Chinese rites. The question was whether the honor paid to ancestors and to Confucius by the Chinese converts could be reconciled with Christianity or was a form of idolatry. The matter was taken to Rome several times in the seventeenth century. During Clement XI's reign, the Inquisition prohibited all ceremonies in honor of Confucius or ancestors; however the decrees were not fully obeyed.

The Jansenists were condemned and excommunicated in 1718, and the movement soon died out except for a handful of adherents in the Netherlands. The pope died on March 19, 1721.

243. Innocent XIII or Michelangelo dei Conti (May 8 [18], 1721 - March 7, 1724 A.D.)

Innocent XIII. Bust by Joseph Claus, in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.

Pope Innocent XIII was born in 1655 in Bologna, and was related to pope Innocent III. He had a reputation of good intentions and ill-health, and was of a conciliatory and peace-loving nature.

The pope invested Charles VI of Spain with Naples. He was not successful in obtaining the restitution of the city of Comacchio, which for a long time had been occupied by German troops; nor in obtaining sovereignty over Parma and Piacenza. He yielded to French influence and made the unprincipled French prime minister, Dubois, a cardinal.

244. Benedict XIII or Pietro Francesco Orsini (May 29 [June 4], 1724 - February 21, 1730 A.D.)

Benedict XIII was Roman, born in 1649. He was a Dominican friar (or Benedictine), known for living according to the Rule of his Order, serving as archbishop of Benevento at the time of his election. He continued the same humble life style as pope. He heard confessions in St. Peter's, visited and comforted the sick, meditated in the chapel, and enforced somberness in clerical attire. The important problems and decisions of the papacy were left to his friend and advisor, Niccolo Coscia, whom he made a cardinal. During the Roman Provincial Council of 1725, the Secretary of State, cardinal Paolucci, was unable to see the pope for over a fortnight, and a satirical poem was popularized which spoke of the vacancy of the Holy See.

Cardinal Coscia created monopolies, took bribes and payments for offices in the papal court and the government, and generally made a shambles of the policy, domestic and foreign, of the papacy.

Benedict XIII died during the hard winter of 1729-30. Cardinal Coscia was imprisoned after the death of the pope.

245. Clement XII or Lorenzo Corsini
(July 12 [16], 1730 - February 6, 1740 A.D.)

Lorenzo Corsini, born in Florence in 1652, took the name of Clement in memory of Clement XI, who had made him cardinal. He was a member of an old and affluent family of Florence, and a friend of the Medici. He had a great deal of diplomatic and administrative experience. He was no scholar and chiefly dealt with financial rather than ecclesiastical matters. He was in his 79th year on election, had gout, and by 1732 was completely blind. But he retained his mental alertness to the end.

The pope established four commissions to deal with the chaos left in the administration of the papacy. Many officers appointed by Benedict XIII had privileges and favors withdrawn, monopolies were abolished, and cardinal Coscia was brought to judgement and sentenced to ten years imprisonment, a fine of 100,000 scudi, restoration of his illicit gains, and forfeiture of all his ecclesiastical benefices.

The pope replenished the papal treasury from his own fortune, which was considerable, and restored the lottery, which Benedict XIII had abolished. He was willing to impose economies, but not to practise them in his patronage of arts and learning. He said, "I was wealthy as a mere priest, as a bishop I was comfortably off, as a cardinal I was poor, but now as pope I am ruined."

In 1731, Spain seized Parma and Piacenza. In the same year, the Genoese republic rejected Clement XII's offer of mediation in the dispute with Corsica. Foreign affairs became extremely complicated with bestowing of titles, and possessions of cities and territories, giving up of thrones and territories, all with the pope and his interests utterly disregarded; the pope was obliged to agree, the papacy having lost its temporal powers. The queen of Spain, Elizabeth Farnese, obtained from Philip V (her husband), the nomination of Luis, their third son, to the archepiscopal See of Toledo, though he was only eight years old. Clement XII agreed to this, along with the granting of the revenues of the See. He then agreed that the boy be made cardinal, in spite of the canons drawn up at Trent.

Pope Clement XII supported missionary activities in the Near East. He founded a seminary at Ullano in Calabria, a college in Naples, and saw the return of 10,000 Copts to the unity of the Church.

In 1738, the papacy condemned Freemasonry as a secret society whose purpose was to associate together men of every sect or religion who were satisfied with a natural morality. The Inquisitors were instructed to diligently root it out. Excommunication was the penalty for adherence to the Order; in Florence, the lodge was dissolved and its secretary banished to Poppi.

Clement XII demonstrated great liberality toward those in distress, especially during the famine of 1735; and he tried to improve social conditions and improve morality in Rome.

246. Benedict XIV or Prospero Lambertini
(August 17 [22], 1740 - May 3, 1758 A.D.)

When the conclave had difficulty choosing the next pope, Prospero Lambertini remarked, "If you want a saint, choose Gotti; a statesman, Aldobrandini, if you want a plain, honest man, elect me." He was elected, and took the name Benedict XIV.

Pope Benedict XIV had much experience in government and church business and had acquired a great deal of historical, theological, and legal learning. He was known for his wit, which he retained through his pontificate to the end, despite many difficulties. He was born in Venice in 1675, and had been bishop of Ancona, and archbishop of Bologna. By the time he became pope, he had written many works which are still quoted to this day. He was friend or correspondent with many scientists and men of letters. He had been a book collector all his life, and bequeathed to the University of Bologna his private library containing 450 manuscripts including rare and costly books and fine prints. He set up a chair of surgery in Bologna, and chairs of higher mathematics and chemistry in Rome. He caused much comment by appointing two women professors of mathematics and philosophy at the University in Venice. At the Roman University, he required the number of lectures to be increased and founded institutes for the study of anatomy, physics, and botany. He established the organizational basis for the academic study of Church history, and the science of history. He fostered centers of learning, and filled them with outstanding scholars. Voltaire dedicated his tragedy Mahomet to pope Benedict XIV.

The pope went against tradition by going for walks in Rome unattended, using a rattan cane to indicate that he was just an ordinary man going for a walk, not an official showing himself to the public. He conversed with all classes, and went to outlying districts where no one would expect to see the pope.

At this time the prestige of the Holy See was in full decline. Benedict XIV's policy was that it was better to give way than to break off relations; and, provided essentials were safeguarded, it was wiser to concede than to remain stubborn and achieve nothing at all. He granted extensive rights at the beginning of his pontificate to Sardinia, Portugal, Naples, and Spain, allowing nomination to ecclesiastical benefices, and consenting to the suppression of rights of ecclesiastical immunity. Frederick II (the Great) was officially recognized as king of Prussia, and corresponded with the pope. Benedict XIV mediated successfully between the king of Sicily and the Knights of Malta, and between Venice and Austria. The Sultan of Turkey expressed great admiration for the pope.

Within the Church, Benedict XIV ruled that children of Jews or pagans could be baptized if they were in extreme danger of death and had been abandoned by their parents. He also legislated that when children of such parents had been baptized without parental consent, they should be taken away from their parents to be raised in a devout religious manner. The use of violence to make Jews receive baptism was entirely forbidden. The pope pronounced that it was sinful to claim interest on a loan more than the sum lent. His rulings on the subject of marriages between Catholics and non-Catholics stand nearly the same today. He enforced previous decrees on the question of Chinese rites; and not until 1939, and much martyrdom among the Chinese, were they finally allowed acts of veneration of ancestors, provided they held no religious significance.

The Malabar rites had previously raised the question of whether missionaries must visit and administer last sacraments to untouchables. Pope Benedict XIV adopted the policy that certain priests should be set apart for work among the untouchables, while striving at all times to inculcate the idea of equality of all men before God.

Many changes that Benedict XIV had planned of liturgical reform, particularly of the Breviary (book containing prayers, hymns, songs, and readings for the canonical hour of devotion), have only since 1956 begun to be carried into effect. He recommended that books not be condemned because of an isolated part, but should be considered as a whole, and Catholic authors especially were to be given the benefit of the doubt. His broadmindedness did not prevent him, though, from condemning several of Voltaire's works, and clearly agreeing with the condemnation of Freemasonry.

The question of the activities of the Jesuits was brought into attention toward the end of Benedict XIV's reign, and he appointed cardinal Saldanha to visit the Jesuits in Portugal, to inquire thoroughly and send a detailed report to the pope.

Pope Benedict XIV was faced with an immense papal debt. He disbanded the Roman militia, and the troops in the Papal States. With this move, he renounced papal military ambitions.

He died on May 3, 1758, after a long and painful illness.

247. Clement XIII or Carlo della Torre Rezzonico
(July 6 [16], 1758 - February 2, 1769 A.D.)

Clement XIII was short of stature, and corpulent, born in Venice in 1698. He was a cardinal, bishop of Padua, a theologian and canonist. Pope Benedict XIV had written of him, "Cardinal Rezzonico is certainly the worthiest that we have in Italy. He lives on his private income, reserving all his ecclesiastical revenues for the poor and the Church. Despite his delicate constitution, he is unwearying in carrying out visitation (of his diocese) and the other episcopal functions and lives in his palace as in a cloister."

The whole pontificate of this pope was dominated by the question of the Jesuits. Much opposition had grown against this Order, some associated with their protection and influence toward the papacy, some associated with jealousy toward their temporal holdings. The complaints against the Jesuits were many. They held nearly a monopoly over one side of education; and their positions as royal confessors and counselors laid them open to a charge of undue influence in political matters. An attempt on the life of Joseph I, king of Portugal, was an excuse for harsh measures; although there was no proof of Jesuit involvement in the plot, three of the fathers were condemned to death and the rest either imprisoned or loaded aboard ships which were sent to the papal states. In France, with an attempt on the life of king Louis XV, the same persecution of the Jesuits resulted; the Society was obliged to pay a very large sum of money, and was made illegal.

Clement XIII. Monument by Antonio Canova, in St. Peter's.

Pope Clement XIII came out strongly in favor of the Jesuits. He praised them, rejected the accusations against them, and confirmed the privileges previously granted them. Meanwhile, Spain also expelled the Order, and Naples and Parma followed suit. The Jesuits were sent to pontifical territory, where they became the charge of the pope. Clement XIII stood firm in his support of the Order. France seized Avignon and Venaissin, Benevento and Ponte Corvo were occupied by Neapolitan and Spanish troops. Still the pope stood firm, and in January, 1769, the ambassadors of France, Spain and Naples presented identical documents to the Holy See calling for the total and irrevocable destruction of the Society of Jesus and the secularization of all those belonging to it. Pope Clement called a consistory (council of cardinals convoked and presided over by the pope) for February 3, to examine the matter, but he died of an apoplectic stroke on the previous night.

Other actions taken by pope Clement XIII were making public the celebration of the feast of the Sacred Heart in 1765, and his canonization of St. Joseph Calasanctius, which emphasized the pope's interest in popular education.

248. Clement XIV or Giovanni Vincenzo Antonio Ganganelli
(May 18, 19, or 28 [June 4], 1769 - September 22, 1774 A.D.)

Clement XIV was born in 1705, in San Angelo of Vado, the son of a surgeon. In 1725, he entered the Conventual branch of the Franciscan Order where he later taught philosophy and theology. He was made a consultant of the Congregation of the Inquisition by Benedict XIV, and became a cardinal in 1759 under Clement XIII.

This pope's whole reign was dominated by the question of the suppression of the Jesuits. It is said that in order to secure his election he had to promise that the Jesuit Order would be suppressed. However, once elected, he tried to avoid action against the Jesuits, while attempting to placate those courts of Europe which were against them. He had a medal struck at the beginning of his pontificate with the motto, Fiat pax in virtute tua. In July, 1769, he issued a brief, encouraging the Jesuit mission in pagan lands; which was followed by a threat from France, Spain, and Naples stating that the pope must suppress the Jesuits within two months. In November, 1769, the pope wrote to Charles III of Spain assuring him that a plan for the entire abolition of the Society of Jesus would be laid before him for consideration. The pope deprived the Jesuits of the Spanish foundation at Loretto, and their direction of the Greek college in Rome, and forbade them to preach in their own churches during the Jubilee. Even more severe measures followed.

Pressure continued on the pope for total suppression, and on July 21, 1773, pope Clement XIV signed the brief Dominus ac Redemptor noster. This stated, among other things, that "Inspired by the Holy Spirit, and urged by our duty to restore concord within the Church, persuaded that the Society of Jesus can no longer render the services for which it was founded, we abolish and suppress the Society of Jesus, its offices, functions, houses and institutions." The pope in the brief emphasized the charges of troubling peace, pride, covetousness, and ambition, without questioning the morals and orthodoxy of the Order. When the pope signed the brief he stated: "It is done. It is necessary for the Church, but it will be the death of me." On the 16th of August, when the brief went into effect, pope Clement was so agitated that he fainted. When he regained consciousness, he exclaimed, "I am damned. My home is hell."

The head of the Society, father Ricci, was taken prisoner and sent to Sant' Angelo, as well as other officials of the Order. A special court deliberated for two years, without ever proclaiming a legal sentence against them. To this day, the Church has not made the full documents of this suppression available to historians.

One of the principal consequences of the decision against the Jesuits was one of public opinion. The Jesuits had always been considered upholders of papal power, and supremacy of Church over State; now it was assumed that the pope was abandoning this position. It was regarded as a victory against the Church.

Frederick II, king of Prussia, and Catherine II, Tsarina of Russia, refused to allow the promulgation of the brief of suppression in their countries; thus the Jesuits there enjoyed the protection of the non-Catholic sovereigns. The sovereigns of Europe in return for the decree returned to the pope Avignon, Benevento, and Ponte Corvo.

A prophecy was made by Bernardino Baruzzi, who foretold the details of the pope's death. The pope was generally in a shattered and debilitated condition after his decree against the Jesuits. He had been afflicted all his life by eruptions on his face and hands. On his death in September, 1774, the prophecied time of his death, the cause of death was debated. He was said to have been poisoned by the Jesuits; he was said to have died of natural causes, with inflamed and cancerous lungs. His successor, Pius VI, once said to cardinal de Bernis that he knew what Clement XIV had died of, and that he was therefore loath to risk a similar death.

249. Pius VI or Giovanni Angelo Braschi
(February 15 [22], 1775 - August 29, 1799 A.D.)

Born in 1717, one of Pius VI's first tasks was to see that the general of the Jesuits, Ricci, who had died while in Castel' Sant' Angelo, had a burial befitting his position; he was laid to rest in the 200-year old church of the Gesu, by the side of the first, canonized, General of the Order.

Pope Pius VI was a pope in the tradition of the Renaissance. He was 58 at the time of his election, and was called the Papa Bello by the Romans, on account of his pleasing appearance. A great palace was erected to house a nephew whom he enriched and married to an heiress, another nephew was made cardinal. The pope fostered such great projects as the draining of the Pontine marshes, but instead of distributing the land, it was given to his nephew to found a principality.

Pope Pius VI visited Austria, where he was received with great pomp and ceremony. Emperor Joseph II had closed several hundred religious institutions and had forbidden that monies or alms of any kind should be conveyed to the Holy See. The pope was treated to splendid processions, majestic receptions, and complicated etiquette of the imperial court. However, the results were meager and the pope returned to Rome, where the populace was more concerned with the scarcity of food than with the pope's travels.

The king of Sweden, Gustav III, visited Rome while travelling incognito, gave his consent to the institution of a Vicariate Apostolic in his country, and authorized the celebration of Mass in Sweden for the first time since the Reformation. In 1776, the North American colonies broke away from Great Britain, and with freedom of worship guaranteed, a former Jesuit, John Carroll, born of Irish parentage in Maryland, was consecrated bishop of Baltimore. Pius VI established another See eighteen years later in New Orleans.

Then came the French revolution. Rulers and priests alike were sent to the scaffold. In 1789, the National Assembly of France had abolished all payments to the Roman Curia and decreed the dissolution of all monastic houses, with the dispersion of their 60,000 inmates.

In mid January, 1798, general Napoleon Bonapart of France gave instructions to general Berthier, who was in command of French forces in Italy: forced marches with 10,000 men to Rome; occupation of the city; disarming of papal troops, surrender of Castel' Sant' Angelo, hostages to be taken, 4,000,000 scudi paid and 3,000 horses supplied. These instructions were carried out to the letter, in rapid succession, without bloodshed. Though his cardinals advised him to leave, pope Pius VI stayed in Rome. He said that God had invested him with sovereignty and he could not renounce it; at his age of eighty years he would accept with equanimity whatever perils and maltreatment might be his lot. Paris demanded the immediate abolition of the papacy.

General Haller demanded the pope's two rings from him. "I can give you one," said the pope, "as it is my property, but the other -- the Fisherman's ring -- must go to my successor." The pope requested to be allowed to die in Rome. "You can die anywhere," was general Berthier's reply, and the pope was driven to the Augustinian convent in Siena. There, and then at Florence, the pope attempted to govern the Church. In 1799, he was moved from place to place by the French. In August, while in Valence, France, he was ordered to be moved to Dijon, but was too ill; with his last remaining strength, he raised his crucifix and gave the triple blessing. Then he clasped it to his breast and died, on the night of August 28/29. Two years later his body was taken to Rome and given a fitting grave in St. Peter's.

250. Pius VII or Barnabo Chiaramonti

The bishop of Imola became Pius VII. He was born in 1742 in Cesena, Italy, of a noble family of the Romagna. At sixteen he entered the Benedictine Order in the monastery of S. Maria del Monte. He taught theology and canon law at Parma and Rome, and was made bishop of Tivoli in 1782, and cardinal and bishop of Imola in 1785.

In 1801, Napoleon Bonaparte sent an ultimatum to pope Pius VII: the Concordat drafted by the French government was to be signed within five days or diplomatic relations between France and the Holy See would be discontinued. The document included that Bonaparte would nominate the French bishops, the pope merely approve and consecrate them. The Sees were to be reduced from 158 to sixty, and all present French bishops were to abdicate, and then a selection to be made. Ecclesiastical conditions were to be supervised by the State police, the clergy to be under the jurisdiction of the Council of State. In return, the pope would be recognized as the supreme head of the Church, and French citizens would be allowed to practise the Catholic religion without restraint.

The Secretary of State Consalvi traveled to the Chateau of Malmaison near Paris in June, 1801, where he was greeted with ceremonial honors, and was met by foreign minister Talleyrand, the bishop who had been excommunicated by Pius VI. After many discussions, a version was agreed upon; then when the document was brought to be signed, Consalvi noticed it was different than the agreed-upon one. After more negotiations the Concordat was finally signed, and remained in force for over a hundred years, until 1905, in spite of such conditions as that no Council could be held without government permission; civil marriage was to have precedence over marriage in the Church; of the sixty bishops to be elected anew, twelve were to be nominated from among those who had been loyal to the Revolution.

In September, 1804, after having had himself proclaimed emperor the previous May by his senate, Napoleon sent a letter to Pius VII, saying, "Most holy Father! The good effect on the morale and character of my people produced by the restoration of the Christian religion induces me to ask Your Holiness to give another proof of the interest you take in my destiny and the destiny of this great nation when one of the most important events in the history of the world is taking place. I am asking you to come and impart the supreme hallowing of religion to the ceremony of anointment and coronation of the first emperor of the French. The ceremony will be given a special brilliance if performed by Your Holiness in person."

The pope went to Paris with two cardinals, a bishop, four prelates and thirteen other attendants, and was treated to a suite of rooms in the Tuileries, with furniture the style of the papal apartments in the Vatican and Quirinal; and was presented with a tiara set with 2,636 stones weighing altogether 358 carats. When the time came for the pope to place the crown on his head, Napoleon took it from the pope's hands, and placed it on his head himself, and then repeated the ceremony with the empress Josephine. This was a gesture of imperial self-exaltation and independence; the event occurred on December 2, 1804.

Pope Pius spent four months in Paris. He walked in the Louvre, and thousands came to kneel before him. He blessed the people, visited the hospitals, and when he left on April 4, 1805, cries of Vive le Saint Pere! (Long live the sainted Father!) followed him.

Napoleon likened himself to Charlemagne, and he annexed the States of the Church, saying, "I am Charlemagne to you. You will therefore obey the laws of the confederate system of the empire and close your territory to my enemies." The pope hid away two documents in a secret drawer. The first, which had been drawn up before he left for Paris, dealt with his abdication in the event of being personally restricted during his stay in France. The other was a sentence of excommunication for whoever violated the freedom of the papacy.

Rome was officially taken over on June 10, 1809. The tricolor flag was taken down; and the pope was taken prisoner and conveyed out of Rome along the road to Tuscany. Pius VII asked his Secretary of State, Cardinal Pacca, if he had brought any money with him. Pacca said he had not; he had been in the pope's room at the time of his arrest. Pope and cardinal took out their purses, and found that they had between them three coppers and a papetto, a third of a Roman florin. The pope showed it to the French general who was escorting them, saying, "See! This is all I have left of my principality!" The whole Curia was transported to Paris by force.

The pope was shut away for three years, only to be seen by those sent by the emperor. The pope's power grew in exile, the French clergy united with the Romans in their support and sympathy for the pope, who had pen, ink and paper taken away from him, the last of his secretaries and servants dismissed. When Napoleon held a council for the purpose of condemning the pope, it instead produced an oath of loyalty to the prisoner, along with an appeal for his release. The pope was moved from Savona to Fontainebleau, and rooms were fitted up for him in his accustomed style. He was allowed to be visited by the cardinals, and greater respect was paid to him.

Pius VII at the coronation of Napoleon. Detail from the painting by Jacques Louis David, in the Louvre, Paris. Napoleon Bonaparte in a gesture of self-exaltation took the crown from the hands of the pope, and placed it on his head himself.

Napoleon visited him there five times, and the Treaty of Fontainebleau was signed which made grave concessions to the emperor. Afterward, Napoleon wrote to Pius VII in his own hand, stating that he had negotiated with him only in his capacity as head of the Church in spiritual matters, and would never try to elicit an act of renunciation of the sovereignty over the Roman States -- as he had no need for it, having already occupied them.

Exiled and captive cardinals were then freed. The pope, meanwhile, wrote a document himself, in secret, little by little, renouncing the Treaty, acknowledging the greater fear of God's courts of justice. In 1814, Napoleon had the pope taken back to Savona. The cardinals were either banished or arrested, unless they agreed to have no relations with the pope, and not to conduct any clerical business or correspondence.

After his great defeat at Leipzig, Napoleon released his Roman prisoners. Pius VII returned to Rome in spring, 1814, after an exile of five and one-half years. Napoleon at this time was a prisoner on the isle of Elba.

On recovering his liberty, one of the pope's first measures was to decree the restoration of the Society of Jesus throughout the world. He died on August 10, 1823, after a reign of twenty-three years, muttering on his deathbed, "Savona . . . Fontainebleau!"

251. Leo XII or Annibale della Genga

(September 28 [October 5], 1823 - February 10, 1829 A.D.)

This pope was born in Genga near Spoleto in 1760, the sixth of ten children of count Ilarino della Genga. He studied at the Accademmia dei Nobili, and was made secretary for pope Pius VI. In 1794, he was made archbishop of Tyre and was frequently employed on the diplomatic business of the Curia. In 1814, he conducted negotiations with the European powers at Paris, but came into conflict with Secretary of State Consalvi, and was replaced. He was bishop of Sinigaglia.

Leo XII was in poor health at the time of his election as a compromise candidate, and a commission of cardinals was appointed to assist him. The pope dismissed the commission, replaced Consalvi as Secretary of State with Somaglia, an 84-year old colleague. On January 14, 1825, Consalvi was appointed Prefect of Propaganda. In their meeting the night before Christmas eve, 1824, Consalvi discussed many matters with the pope and made his recommendations: the family of Napoleon Bonaparte should not be refused hospitable welcome, but should not be unrestrained; that lies proliferate in many courts, but one lie would ruin a pope; a Jubilee should be held, that people might come to see a free pope in his capital; toward Russia the pope should have a wariness that never sleeps for a single day. Many other matters were discussed. "What a talk it was!" the pope exclaimed to cardinal Zurla. "We have never had a conversation of such importance and substance that could have been of greater benefit to the State." Cardinal Consalvi was already ill at the time of the meeting, and he died on January 24, 1825.

The pope closed the wine shops and taverns, banned the waltz at the carnival, and restored the Jewish ghetto, whose occupants were even subjected to the Inquisition. Spies were sent out to report on observance of the new regulations. There was revocation of laws for the promotion of health such as vaccination. Consalvi had warned the pope against isolation, and that was what he succumbed to.

Opposition grew to the stern measures, and was repressed, but went underground in secret associations of the Carbonari. The pope rarely showed himself outside his palace, confining himself to hunting birds in the Vatican gardens.

There was conflict with the government in France, with a series of royal ordinances in 1828 directed mainly against the Jesuits, to subject the many flourishing Catholic colleges to government control. The bishops protested, but the pope ordered them to submit.

There was continued conflict within the Church between the liberal faction and the conservative, the pope belonging to the conservative, and having little sympathy toward the liberals.

Pope Leo XII died on February 10, 1829, after an unsuccessful surgery.

252. Pius VIII or Francis Xavier Castiglione
(March 31 [April 5], 1829 - November 30, 1830 A.D.)

The new pope was born in 1761 in Cingoli, Italy. He was bishop of Monalto, cardinal bishop of Frascati. He was a sick man, suffering from a painful and disfiguring abscess on the neck which prevented him from performing the usual liturgical functions. He was not expected to live long.

In France, during July, 1830, another revolution occurred which led to the overthrow of Charles X and the accession of Louis Philippe. The archbishop's house in Paris was sacked, churches were closed, and there were the beginnings of a new clerical emigration to the New Land, America. In spite of the anticlerical character of the new government, Pius VIII was determined to maintain good relations; and in September, 1830, he ordered the clergy and Catholics of France to support the new regime.

Pius VIII died on November 30, 1830.

Thus from the time of Peter (c.64-67 A.D.) until the end of the reign of Pius VIII (1829-30 A.D.), two hundred and fifty-two popes passed away. Rome, where the Universal or Catholic Church was established, still remains the center of Christian tradition for mostly the telestial world; and includes within its limits the small territory known as the Vatican City. About forty-four hectares in area, with some five hundred inhabitants (as of 1955), it is the seat and residence of its Supreme Pontiff, the Pope. To these Christians, the ground of this territory is sacred; for it is the site of the martyrdom of Peter. Here, under emperor Nero, the Prince of the Apostles was crucified. When the day of his crucifixion drew nigh, Peter out of humility and reverence for his Master, asked to be crucified head downward. He is buried there; and since the time of his death, his tomb has been one of the most venerated objects in the Catholic world. (The Sovereign and Independent State of the Vatican City was officially established by the Lateran Treaty of 1929, between the Italian government and the Holy See.)

The word See refers to the Episcopal seat (or throne) for each bishop in his cathedral of diocese (or ward); it is the charge of a bishop, which in its territorial aspect is called the diocese. The Holy or Apostolic See is the See of Rome, the pope and his court. This See is Holy because it is the See of the vicar of Christ; it is Apostolic because it was the See of St. Peter, the Prince of the Apostles, the predecessor of all officially elected popes. St. Peter's Basilica, in Vatican City, is the largest church building in the world. Its dome dominates the city of Rome. At St. Peter's Square, which the Basilica overlooks, one can view the ancient walls of the Vatican Palaces, the seat of the popes. Founded at divine command and existing from the time of Peter the Apostle of Christ, the papacy remains a living force and an historical monument of the world. It has no armies, yet has outlasted empires, dictators, political turmoils, and also weaknesses of many popes. Though the popes did not always reside in the palaces built on the Vatican Hill, the present Vatican City embodies all the traditions of the papacy, and there the central government of the Catholic Church is said to be conducted.

Arriving from the vicinity of Castel' Sant' Angelo, the visitor to Rome first sees the facade of St. Peter's Basilica. At the piazza he faces the church, and before it two semi-circular structures of gigantic columns, the colonnade of Bernini. In the center of the piazza stands an obelisk brought to Rome by Caligula from Egypt; and on either side of it fountains to cool the air during hot summer days. On the right of the colonnade, closer to the church, there is an entrance leading to the heart of the Vatican Palaces. At the left is another which leads to the Vatican Gardens and is the main entrance for vehicles entering Vatican City. To the right from the center of the piazza one sees a conglomeration of buildings, the Vatican Palaces. Corridors connect St. Peter's Church with these buildings, and they are connected with one another. The oldest palaces date back to the fourth century, and popes have been adding to them ever since. There are now twenty courtyards in this vast complex, and about one thousand rooms, halls and chapels. In one stairway alone there are 127 steps, in another 294. The tallest building, behind the right wing of colonnade, contains the pope's three private rooms; two of his windows face St. Peter's Square. When papal ceremonies are performed within St. Peter's Basilica, the pope and members of his court, without setting foot on the piazza proceed in solemn procession from this building to the church through stairways, halls and corridors. To the rear of the Basilica, on the left, are the administrative buildings and apartment houses of Vatican City. And directly behind the church, on the slopes of the hill, is the palace of the Governor and the Vatican Gardens. On the far right of this tiny state are garages, storage rooms, printing presses and barracks for the papal guards. And atop the hill the antennae of the Vatican radio remind one that old is accommodated into the modern world with harmony and utility.

Although no ceremonies are needed to make the election of the pope valid, when he accepts his election by the Sacred College of Cardinals, the Catholic Church believes in making this event a memorable one for him and for the world. Thus, the event is surrounded with a series of ceremonies equaled in splendor by none honoring any emperor or king. The symbolic act of coronation is the culmination of these ceremonies. For this great occasion, St. Peter's Basilica is filled to its limit with seventy-five to eighty thousand persons from all over the world. Representatives of kings, of Christian and non-Christian governments, wait there in dignified silence. The long red robes of the cardinals, the purple mantles of the bishops, the white, black, brown, blue, and yellow ecclesiastical costumes of monks, nuns and priests, add to the splendor. While everything is arranged to display the magnificence and splendor of the papacy, the new pope is repeatedly warned that all this splendor, admiration and veneration of the multitude, in the end is as perishable as smoke. Seated on his portable throne (sedia gestatoria), borne by twelve bearers (sediari), the pope is carried in procession from the Vatican Palace through halls and connecting corridors directly into the portico of St. Peter's Church, and into the Basilica (the oblong public hall of assembly) itself.

The newly elected pope and attendants celebrate a Solemn Mass on his coronation day (within the circle), at the main altar of St. Peter's Basilica.

Inside St. Peter's, while the pope is approaching the main altar under the dome, in the midst of splendor, the papal procession is stopped. The Master of Ceremonies hands the pope a pan for holding burning coal (brazier) and a handful of flax. At once the silence falls, and all eyes are turned to the pope as he throws the flax upon the burning coal, where it flares up in sudden flame. The blaze dies almost immediately, and leaves nothing in the air but smoke. Then the Master of Ceremonies moves close to the pope and, looking into his eyes, warns him: Holy Father, thus ends the glory of the world (Pater Sancte, sic transit gloria mundi!) The hands of the pope are clasped in prayer and the procession moves a few steps forward. But the Master of Ceremonies orders a second halt. His face is even more solemn, his gestures more contained than before, and he calls out again, after the flax is thrown upon the burning coal, and the flame disappears, saying: Holy Father, thus ends the glory of the world. And as the procession moves forward again, the Master of Ceremonies for the third time halts the pope's approach to the altar; and in a voice now almost a cry repeats the same words. He reminds the vicar of Christ that he will die and become dust and ashes, knowing that it is the most important event of his life. The flames of the flax light up his face; the eyes of the pope are downcast in deepest meditation. And the multitude in silence bow kneeling, their heads almost touching the marble floor. Thus the new pope enters the Basilica.

Now the popes are not reckoned as Saints, unless they are canonized to be elevated to Sainthood. Cardinal Sarto (Giuseppe Melchior Sarto, born 1835), who was elected as Pius X in August, 1903, on the second ballot, lived the simplest of lives. He was the first pope elevated to Sainthood since 1712 A.D. In 1954, thirty-two years after his death, he was canonized as a Saint. The pope, according to his official titles, is the Bishop of Rome, Vicar of Christ, Successor (Caliph) to the Prince of the Apostles, Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church, Patriarch of the West, Primate of Italy, Metropolitan and Archbishop of the Province of Rome, and the Sovereign of the State of the Vatican City. The pope usually signs all papal utterances, letters and declarations with his title: Servant of the Servants of God (servus servorum Dei), which tradition was established by Gregory I the Great (590-604 A.D.); and it is written that Gregory the Great was reborn in Arabia as the Servant of God, meaning the Apostle or Prophet of the Lord. The pope does not use his family name after his election, although in an ancient ceremony, he will be addressed by his first and last names when he dies.

The coronation of the pope, its history, uniforms, hymns, and all the splendor serve as the reminder of the days gone by. And they are symbols whose meaning can be described in the first three words of the hymn that greets the new pope when, in solemn procession, he enters the portico of St. Peter's Church: You are Peter (Tu es Petrus), the Successor (or Caliph) of Peter the fisherman. The new pope takes no elaborate oath. After he is notified of his election, he merely utters one Latin word: "Accepto." All of the cardinals, seventy of them, take part in the election of the new pope; even those cardinals who have been excommunicated, suspended or indicted are to vote or to be voted for.

The uninterrupted succession of the pope is assured by rules which regulate every step from the moment of the death of one pope until the election and coronation of the next. These rules are the results of accretion and imbibement of all the knowledge and experience gained from time immemorial, going back to its origins in Eden (or Aden), Egypt, Arabia, Palestine, Iran, India and China. A great deal is now contained in the Apostolic Constitution, which was issued by Pius XII in 1945. The interval between the death of a pope and election of another is called Vacancy of the Holy See (Sede Vacante). During this Vacancy, the deceased pope's body is transported first to the Sistine Chapel and then to St. Peter's Basilica. Usually he is buried within three days after his death. Funeral ceremonies include nine days of mourning, beginning on the day after the pope dies.

On the first day following the day of the pope's death, his body is transported into the Sistine Chapel, and put on a bier. For twenty-four hours, the Penitentiaries of St. Peter pray at the bier and Noble Guards mount guard. The second day members of the Chapter of St. Peter's Church, accompanied by cardinals and entire papal court, transport the pope's body to St. Peter's Basilica to the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament, on the right side of St. Peter's; here the pope's body is on a catafalque (bier) exposed to the public for at least twenty-four hours. Penitentiaries of St. Peter's pray at the bier, and the Noble Guard mounts guard.

About the third day, the bier with the pope's body is transported from the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament to the Apse of St. Peter's Basilica. Here it is blessed and is put in three coffins, then lowered into the vault. Requiem Masses are held during this period at the Basilica of St. Peter's. They are celebrated at the altar at the end of the apse, not at the main altar, for nine consecutive days by cardinals. These Masses, or Novemdiali, meaning nine days, begin the first day after the death of the pope, and end the ninth day. On the ninth day, a preacher designated by the Assembly of Cardinals eulogizes in Latin the deceased pope, in St. Peter's.

Then, the preparations begin for the Conclave* which will elect his successor. On each day a cardinal celebrates a Requiem Mass for the salvation of the Pontiff's soul. All popes are familiar with the words of St. Augustine: However innocent your life may have been, into the grotto of St. Peter's Basilica (behind the main altar), the remains of the pope are lowered in three coffins.

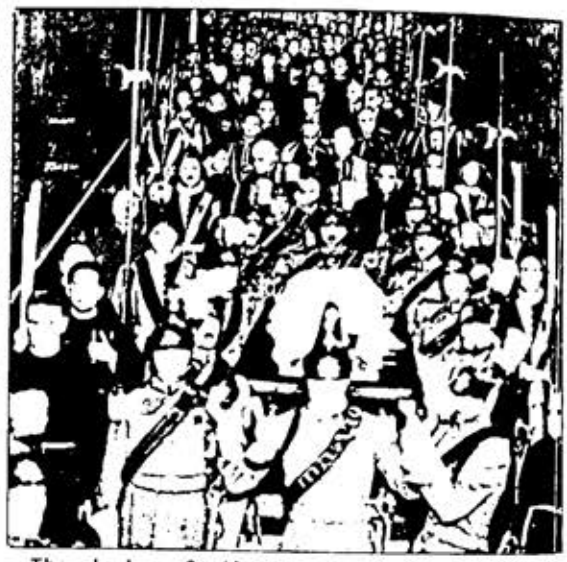
* A Conclave is a set of apartments within which, since 1274, the cardinals are continuously secluded while choosing a pope; it also refers to the meeting of cardinals shut up in the Conclave for the election of the pope, hence, the body of cardinals.

no Christian ought to venture to die in any other state than that of a penitent. Thus the pope receives Extreme Unction as does any other Catholic Christian whose last hour approaches; the only difference being that this Sacrament is usually administered to the pope by the Cardinal Grand Penitentiary (or Cardinal Major Penitentiary).

The deceased pope's body is transported first to the Sistine Chapel and then to St. Peter's Church.



The body of the pope is carried by the Noble Guard to St. Peter's Church. The priests with candles are Penitentiaries; the soldiers with halberds are Swiss Guards.

Among the first to arrive at the deathbed are the Penitentiaries, the black-robed friars, who are members of the Conventual branch of the Franciscans, and who hear confessions in languages in St. Peter's Basilica. They will wash the pope's body; and after embalming, clothe him in papal vestments. The Penitentiaries remain at the side of the deceased pope until his burial. Notified of the death, the Cardinal Chamberlain (Cardinal Camerlengo) enters the room; he will now become the most important person in the Vatican. Until the end of the nineteenth century, accompanied by the Master of Ceremonies and cardinals residing in Rome, the Chamberlain (Camerlengo) approached the bed holding a small silver hammer in his right hand. Gently he lifted the linen that covered the face of the pope; and while all witnesses present kneeled, the Chamberlain or Camerlengo prayed. Then in a clear voice he pronounced the pope's family name and baptismal name. When the cold lips failed to answer, he touched the pope's forehead with the silver hammer. Three times, in the profoundly silent room, he called the pope's name and with the little hammer tapped the cold forehead. Then he turned to those present and solemnly declared: The pope is truly dead. Notaries, the Master of Ceremonies and physicians signed the certificate of death; the Camerlengo also signed it, and put his seal upon it. (Since the end of the nineteenth century the use of the silver hammer has been abandoned; the rest of the ceremony to certify the death is the same.)

Then the Camerlengo takes the fisherman's ring from a church dignitary (prelate) of the Apostolic Chamber, its guardian; and removes its seal bearing the name of the dead pope and image of St. Peter with the fisherman's net. With this ring the pope had authenticated papal documents called Apostolic briefs (breve). After this, the Camerlengo takes possession of another papal seal with which the pope had authenticated more formal documents, or edicts, the bulls. The second seal bears the pope's name, a cross and the images of St. Peter and Paul; and is usually pressed into red ink, wax, or lead. The seals must be made unserviceable so that they cannot be abused after the pope's death.

The sealing machine of the Holy See is prepared so that documents may be sealed after the pope is elected.

The First General Assembly of the cardinals is held a day after the death, and before then the seals will be destroyed. The pieces will be shown to each cardinal at the assembly by one of the officials of the Apostolic Camera. With the seals in his possession, the Camerlengo leaves the papal apartment and walks through ten immense halls separating it from the rest of the Vatican. During normal times these are used as antechambers and are full of people: red-robed lay chamberlains in their Renaissance uniforms, priests of Rome, visitors waiting to see the Vatican officials. Now the Chamberlain (or Camerlengo) walks through the halls alone and only in the tenth hall does he encounter people, the Swiss Guards who in their outer hall, stand watch over the papal apartment. Here two officers of the guard attach themselves to the Camerlengo and, in acknowledgement of his new dignity, accompany him during the entire period that the papal throne is vacant. As the Camerlengo arrives at his office, the cardinal vicar asks that all the bells of all churches of Rome announce the death of the pope, and the majestic, sad tones of the big bell on Rome's ancient City Hall.

The death of the pope generally meant amnesty for all minor criminals within their jurisdiction. A town crier with a drum would arrive before each prison and announce what categories of prisoners should be immediately released. All wishes expressed in the will of the deceased pope must be observed. When the embalming is over, the pope's body is immediately taken into the Sistine Chapel. It is vested in white with closely fitting headgear; white candles are lit at the bier. An honor guard of officers of the Noble Guard stand stiffly at attention. Here the pope lies until the next day, beneath Michelangelo's gigantic frescoes representing the Last Judgement.

On the day following the death, the whole chapter and clergy of St. Peter's Basilica, about fifty priests, appear at the Sistine Chapel to ask Penitentiaries, who until now have only watched the pope's body, to deliver it to them. They deliver it, but remain close. Although there is no formal rule to bury the body three days after his death, usually in the evening of the day following his death, the deceased pope's body is carried in solemn funeral procession from the Sistine Chapel to St. Peter's Basilica, and exposed at the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament. While the pope's body lies in the Sistine Chapel, he is vested in his white cassock with mozzetta and the close-fitted red velvet cap called camauro. Before being taken into St. Peter's Basilica, he is vested in his pontifical robes, with the mitre on his head; he is to be buried in this clothing.

Then in the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament, twenty candles are lit in candelabras, six before the bier, six on the steps on the altar, and eight (four on each side) at the catafalque (coffin without a body). While the body of the pope remains in this chapel, the people of Rome are allowed to pass before it. Twenty-four hours or longer thousands upon thousands pass before it to bid farewell to their bishop, the pope. The funeral masses are said in St. Peter's, the first day by the Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals, on subsequent days by the cardinal bishops and cardinal deacons, during the last three days of the nine-day Requiems (called Novemdiali), by three cardinal priests. The cardinals are vested in purple mozzettas (hooded caps reaching the elbow, closed in front with buttons; rochettos (narrow-sleeved, knee-length garments, made of linen, the lower part laced); and birettas (three-ridged hats). All their clothes are purple, not red, the usual color of dress of cardinals, for purple is a liturgical color of mourning.

The prelates or church dignitaries of the papal court, wear black stockings and purple cappa (a cloak covering the whole person, worn over the other garments); this is their prescribed dress during the Vacancy of the Holy See. On the third day after the death, the cardinals created by the late pope carry the catafalque from the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament to the apse (the projecting part of the Basilica). These last rites for the pope are of somber majesty. St. Peter's Basilica is filled with people in black. During the entire ceremony of the burial, an official of St. Peter's Basilica, standing a few steps from the bier, recites the phrases of the burial ceremony. When the archpriest starts the anthems (antiphons) the reader announces it to the people; and when the pope's body is blessed, he announces it, and reads the names of the cardinals and church dignitaries (prelates) who officiate during the funeral. His voice falls when he informs the congregation that the pope's body is being put into the first coffin. Then he stops, and there is full silence in the Basilica. Before the first coffin is put in the second, the loud voice starts again: And now, the mortal remains of His Holiness. Then the archpriest's voice starts on the anthem (antiphon): Enter not into judgement with Thy servant, O Lord, . . . Deliver me, O Lord, from everlasting death. And for the Catholic Church has the right to bind or absolve, at the funeral service for a pope, absolution is given by one of the cardinals who is an archbishop; during the Novemdiali, nine more absolutions are given. Then three of the cardinals who were created by the late pope put his body into the cypress wood coffin. Into this coffin are also thrown gold, silver and copper medals bearing the image of the pope, corresponding in number to the number of years he ruled as pontiff. The first cardinal created by the pope covers the pontiff's face with a purple veil and the entire body with a red ermine blanket.

Thereupon the cyprus coffin is locked and put in the lead coffin, on which is placed the pope's coat of arms, and a copy of the certificate of death. The lead coffin is sealed and the two coffins holding the body of the pope are placed in a coffin of elmwood. The archpriests' voices rise and the Basilica resounds with the words and music of the Gregorian chant: "The sighs of death and the pains of Hell circle around me, O Lord . . . (Circumderunt me gemitus mortis et doloris inferni . . .). The choir sings: "May the angels lead thee into Paradise;" while the body is lowered into the vault, under the main altar of the Basilica. The Lord's Prayer is said, and the vault and the coffin are blessed. Masons then wall up the vault, and on it fasten a marble cover bearing the pope's name.

The cover of the lead coffin; it will be sealed with the seals of the Camerlengo and the Major-domo.

The pontiff's body is placed in these two coffins. One is of cyprus and elm wood and one of lead.

The burial of the pope is followed by one of the most impressive occasions, namely, the tribute of the Diplomats. Now the tribute is paid to him and his office, by the members of the diplomatic corps, accredited to the Holy See. The chiefs of missions and their aides enter at the St. Marta Gate, on the left of St. Peter's Basilica. Two Swiss Guards present arms and Papal Gendarmes halt the automobiles for identification. They stop on Martyr's Square, where the first Christian martyrs in Rome were executed. Then the road bends and the diplomats are able to view the tiny Vatican States territory, complete with broadcasting center and railway station. The visitors then arrive at the final archway where the intricate Vatican Palace begins. The diplomats are received in the Sala Regia, the Royal Hall, where popes used to receive Catholic princes who expressed special devotion to the pope. There is no furniture in this room; its walls are of marble, with red brocade tapestry, bearing the coats of arms of popes. Swiss guards stand at attention as Monsignori, Masters of Ceremonies in black cassocks, and Vatican ushers lead the diplomats into the room. Large empires and small are represented, states with old traditions and new. The diplomats stand in line, their positions determined by the length of time they have served at the Holy See.

During the Vacancy of the Apostolic See (sedis vacantia) the cardinals become trustees of the papal authority, though they cannot exercise it. The government of the Church in Rome includes twelve sacred congregations, three tribunals or courts, three offices and secretariats; on all of which there are cardinals, prelates and other church officials. After the death of a pope, the Cardinal Camerlengo takes over the administration of the Holy See, while the obligation of choosing the pope's successor falls on the Sacred College of Cardinals. And at the same time, life in the Vatican and Church administration comes almost to a standstill. The Twelve Sacred Congregations (the twelve deparments of the Church's Spiritual and material administration) restrict their activity to routine work until the election of a new pope.

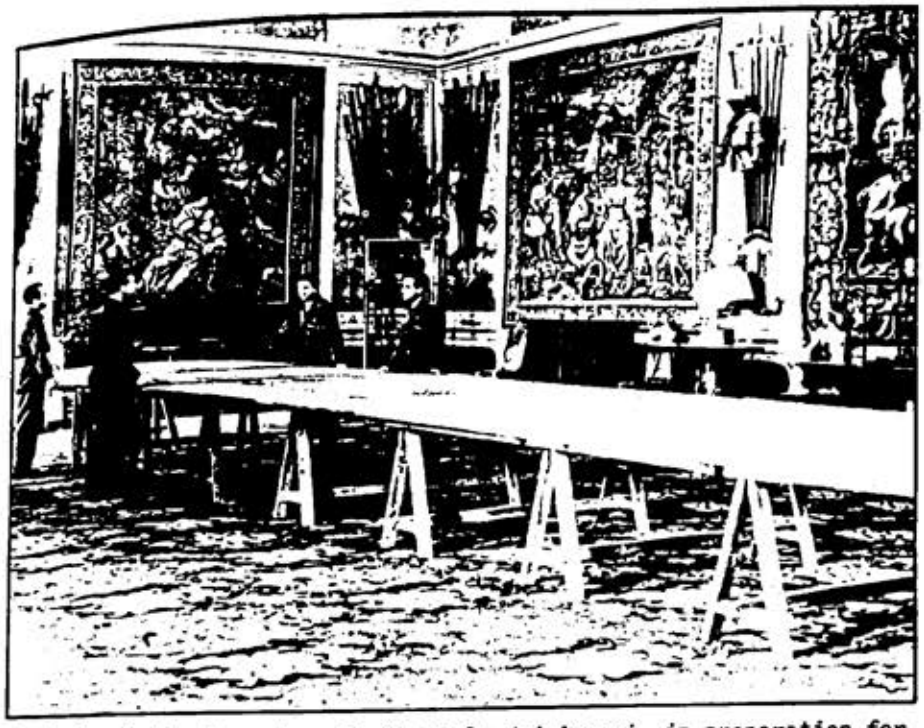
Although the cardinals are advisors to a pope, he need not accept their advice; his own authority comes directly from Christ, and only he can make final decisions. Therefore, during the Vacancy, papal power does not reside in the College of Cardinals but is suspended. The authority is within Christ and reappears in the person of the individual who is to be elected. Also during the Vacancy, no briefs, bulls or other documents are or can be issued; no new agreements with foreign states are signed, nothing is altered at the Vatican Palaces or at St. Peter's Church, nor are any new appointments made. The usual bustle of activity in Vatican City ceases, and the mourning atmosphere prevails, as if death has taken the head of the family.

A portion of the Sacred College of Cardinals which resides in Rome is called the Curia. The cardinals of the Curia are either heads, prefects or secretaries of one of the Twelve Sacred Congregations; four of these headed by the pope. The Sacred Congregations deal with problems arising within special areas of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; such as sacraments, ceremonies, institutions of higher learning and propagation of the faith; and others. The Papal Offices once included: the Chancery (Chancellaria) kept the papal archives, the Datary (Dataria) took charge of expediting papal documents and decisions and put the Date (Datum) upon them; and the Apostolic Chamber (Camera) administered material affairs. Until the Middle Ages it was the actual Chamber in which were stored the vestments, sacred vessels and gems of the pope. Now it is the head of this Apostolic Chamber, the Cardinal Camerlengo, who becomes the head of the administration of the Holy See. And the members of the Apostolic Chamber, who during the pope's life had other functions in the Sacred Congregations and offices, now assume the role of organizing the papal funeral and the papal election. In the Sacred Congregations, tribunals and offices, only the Cardinal Major Penitentiary can make major decisions. For there are sins from which a Catholic Christian cannot be absolved by an ordinary priest, or even by a bishop; such cases are referred to him. Because on the principle that salvation of souls cannot wait, this cardinal is authorized to decide such cases during the Vacancy.

Daily three cardinals assist Cardinal Camerlengo, each day a new group of three. With their help and that of the members of the Apostolic Chamber, he assumes responsibility for the properties of the Holy See, the Vatican Palace, Catholic churches in and outside the Vatican City, and other papal properties in Italy and foreign countries. He will transfer them intact to the new pope. During the Vacancy the cardinals hold a daily General Assembly to prepare the Conclave and deal with unavoidable problems; but they cannot overrule anything done by the late pope, for only the pope may undo that which the pope may do.

It is generally assumed that the cardinals will hold about ten General Assemblies (or Conferences). Each day they deal with a different subject. Although the schedule is no longer in effect, the following schedule had been in use for over two hundred years:

First day: Verification of destroyed papal seals. Appointment of a prelate to deliver the Latin language funeral sermon after the ninth



A dining table is set up in the Sala dei Arazzi, in preparation for the Conclave.

Requiem Mass which will be held for the dead pope. Appointment of another prelate to deliver the Latin sermon after the Mass of the Holy Ghost, which is said just before the cardinals enter the Conclave.

Second day: Selection of the Conclave site.

Third day: Election of a Father Confessor to the Conclave.

Fourth day: Appointment of physicians to the Conclave, as well as pharmacists and their aides.

Fifth day: Appointment of barbers, waiting and service personnel.

Sixth day: Distribution, by lot, of the rooms the cardinals will occupy at the Conclave.

Seventh day: Appointment of cleaning personnel, and the third Conclavist, in case any cardinal requests a third aide.

Eighth day: Discussion of food supply.

Ninth day: Assignment of the inside keys of the Conclave, by majority vote, to the Camerlengo's aides.

Tenth day: Appointment of masons and carpenters, two of each, to be taken into Conclave.

In our day, all these tasks are accomplished in a more efficient manner. The cardinals are bound by the Church law to begin the election of a new pope at the least on the eighteenth day after the late pope's death. When the Cardinal Chamberlain (Camerlengo) takes over the administration of the Holy See, the few documents he has to sign are sealed with a coat of arms. He and other officials who play important parts during the Vacancy coin commemorative medals. On the Camerlengo's appears a big umbrella, or tent, known as ombrellone, the sign of the Vacancy of the Holy See. The symbol is very old, and depicts the Indian/Persian influence.

The ombrellone remains the sign of papal authority during the Vacancy; it signifies that papal jurisdiction is at a standstill, but the papacy as the institution prevails. Crossed with the ombrellone on the Camerlengo's medal are two keys, symbolizing the authority of the pope. Another medal issued at this time belongs to the Governor of the Conclave, which bears his name, his coat of arms, the inscription CONCLAVIS GUBERNATOR, and the date, with a key to symbolize his part in locking the Conclave doors. Also Vatican State issues money in the form of coins. On one side they bear the inscription STATO DELLA CITTA DEL VATICANO, and the image of the Holy Ghost in the form of a dove, and on the other side the Camerlengo's coat of arms. And the Vatican post office issues new stamps bearing the inscription SEDE VACANTE.

Moreover, until a new pope is elected, the Vatican's semi-official daily newspaper, the Osservatore Romano carries the Vacancy sign on its front page and until the burial of the pope is bordered in black. The newspaper describes the arrivals of the cardinals and publishes their biographies, gives detailed accounts of the current ceremonies, prints telegrams and letters sent by foreign governments. In more than twenty languages the Vatican radio carries to the remotest parts of the world news accounts of the events in Rome. The Vatican press office, which during normal times is at Porta Angelia, close to Osservatore Romano, is transferred to larger quarters. All major international news agencies work with enlarged staffs. Broadcasting stations install wires for microphones in the Basilica, as the Camerlengo's office directs. Everything now is done in a most professional and efficient manner, for the procedures have been prescribed in the Apostolic Constitution, which was issued in December, 1945. (The prevailing motto in the mid nineteen-fifties was: "Prudence, charity, and the greatest calm.")

The cardinals begin preparation for the papal election from the moment they reach Rome. Upon their arrival, each cardinal takes his first oath, administered by the Camerlengo. He solemnly swears that he understands the laws which govern the choice of the pope; that he will meticulously observe all rules pertinent to the election procedure; that he will observe the secrecy of the election. And in case he himself is elected, will not surrender any temporal rights of the Holy See which are essential to independence; that he will not become a pawn of any secular power while giving his vote to the man he chooses to become pontiff and vicar of Christ.

Until 1922, the prescribed interval between the death of a pope and the beginning of the Conclave was ten days; on the eleventh day the voting began. In 1914, cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, cardinal O'Connel of Boston, and cardinal Begin of Quebec did not arrive in time for the election of Benedict XV. Then in 1922 cardinal O'Connel arrived after the first cardinal deacon had announced cardinal Ratti, archbishop of Milan, had become the pope under the name of Pius XI. Under Pius XI, the interval was changed to fifteen days -- eighteen, if necessary.

On the day they enter the Conclave, cardinals attend the Mass of the Holy Ghost in St. Peter's Basilica. One by one, each takes his place at the confessional. Their aides, the Conclavists, are seated in side pews in formal costume. Each cardinal is allowed to take two aides into the Conclave, usually one ecclesiastic and one layman. In special cases, after he has obtained permission of the Sacred College, a cardinal is allowed a third Conclavist. A Conclavist cannot be a relative of the cardinal. If he is a member of a religious order, he cannot be of the same order, nor can he be a prelate.

The Dean of the Sacred College appears at the Basilica, vested in red chasuble. He walks to the altar at the end of the apsis and the Mass of the Holy Ghost begins: O come, Holy Ghost, Creator of all Things, help us (veni, Creator Spiritus, veni Creator Omnium). After the Mass, the cardinals remain seated. And when the Dean of the Sacred College who has just officiated at the Mass returns from the Sacristy (vestry), a prelate who has been chosen by the cardinals mounts to the pulpit for an exhortation; usually, though not by rule, this task is given to the best Latinist in the Vatican, to the Secretary of Latin Letters. He delivers his sermon in Latin, reminding the cardinals that the function they are to perform is their greatest privilege, and that they should fix their minds on God; and laying aside personal likes and dislikes, elect a man worthy to become the pastor of the Church. He also warns them to act promptly so as not to prolong the vacancy of the Holy See. At the end of the sermon, the cardinals and their aides in procession begin to move into the Vatican.

At the head of this procession are the Conclavists and the choir; then comes the papal cross, followed by the cardinals, accompanied by three to six Masters of Ceremonies; and the Secretary of the Sacred College, who now becomes Secretary of the Conclave. The cardinals are followed by the officials of the Conclave: by a Capuchin Father, the Confessor of the participants of the Conclave, then two physicians and one surgeon, then the pharmacists with two assistants, the architect of the Conclave, workmen, and other assigned personnel. The highlight of the procession is the entrance of the cardinals. Although any male Catholic can be elected pope, it is assumed that actually the cardinals will choose the new pope from the Sacred College. The red robes of the cardinals signify to the spectators that they are called Princes of the Church, and in the countries under the jurisdiction of the Holy See are received with courtesy and honor, according to protocol, and are treated as princes of royal blood.

When a pope creates a cardinal and places the red hat upon his head, he pronounces these words:

> For the praise of God Almighty, and the ornament of the Holy and Apostolic See, receive the red hat, the special sign of cardinal's dignity; by this is signified that even unto death and unto shedding of blood you should show your courage for the exaltation of the Holy Faith, the peace and tranquility of Christian people, and the maintenance and increase of the Holy Christian Church.

All entrances to the Conclave are walled shut, except one which is securely locked and guarded.

It is said that the cardinals are the hinges on which swing the doors of the Church, and the Latin word cardo does mean hinge. During the first centuries of Christianity the entire Church was under the administration of the clergy of Rome, who acted as helpers and consultants of the bishop of Rome, the pope. In the hierarchy of the Catholic Church a deacon is one with sacred orders, though not a priest; their function was to care for the material needs of the Church; they also participated in Church administration. With the development of the papal states and growth of the Universal Church, the cardinals were called cardinal deacons, cardinal priests, and cardinal bishops, to emphasize the fact that cardinal deacons are descendants of the Roman deacons of the first centuries; the cardinal priests are descendants of the first pastors of the Roman churches; and the cardinal bishops were and are the chiefs of the dioceses (wards) around Rome.

Now this tradition has important implications; for, the primary title of the head of the Catholic Church of Christ is the Bishop of Rome, and he becomes Head of the Church because he is Bishop of Rome. The cardinals gathered in Rome are considered Roman priests electing their bishop. It is for this reason each cardinal has a titular church in Rome. When electing the pope, the cardinals are acting as deacons, priests, or bishops of those churches in Rome which were given to them, when they were created cardinals. According to the rules of the Church, only the cardinals, the representatives of the clergy of Rome, can elect the bishop of Rome. Should all the cardinals become extinct, the duty of choosing a Supreme Pastor for the Universal Church of Christ would fall, not on the bishops of the whole world assembled in council, but upon the remaining clergy of the Lateran Basilica of Rome. (The Lateran Basilica of St. John is the Cathedral Church of the Bishop of Rome, not St. Peter's.) Until the Council of Trent in 1545, whenever the pope appointed a cardinal he either named a Roman or ordered the new cardinal to come to Rome and reside there. In the thirteenth century, when several French bishops were made cardinals, they had to settle in Rome, and the pope nominated new bishops in their dioceses (wards). The Council of Trent, however, permitted cardinals who already were diocesan bishops, and thus charged with caring for the souls of the Faithful, to remain in their own dioceses. But the new practice did not destroy the old rule. For a cardinal appointed by the pope must have the pope's permission to keep his diocesan See, and no cardinal who puts foot in Rome may return home without the pope's authorization. And those cardinals who head the Sacred Congregation and offices, who are cardinals of the Roman Curia, may not leave Rome without the permission of the pontiff.

Now, the final preparation for the election of the pope begins when the procession to the Conclave ends in the Sistine Chapel, and silence falls upon the Vatican. Before the Dean of the Sacred College reads the Apostolic Constitution, which governs the Conclave, he once again invokes help by intoning a part of the Mass to the Holy Ghost: O Lord, who elevated the hearts of the Faithful (Oremus, Deus qui corda fidelium) starts the prayer. Then, the Apostolic Constitution, governing the Conclave and the election, is read by the Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals. Those parts of the Apostolic Constitution which refer to the period between the death of the pope and the entrance of the Conclave are left out, for this has been already read to the cardinals at their arrival in Rome. After having read the Constitution, all cardinals take an oath, that they will observe the rules contained therein. Then the Dean of the Sacred College addresses them in the form of a brief exhortation, admonishing them to conform to the imposed discipline.

After this, the Governor of the Conclave, a high prelate, and the Marshal of the Conclave enter and take oath. The Governors and the Marshals bear greatest responsibility for the independence and integrity of the Conclave, thus they swear alone. Then the rest of the prelates and the Conclavists take oath; and the oath is taken in Latin; the waiters and workers take it in Italian. At this moment, the Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals gives an order to ring the bells, which means that everyone not belonging to the Conclave must leave at once. The Conclave is still open, but now the Conclavists go to receive their rooms; and the Prefect of the Master of Ceremonies with the Architect (the man who designed the small apartments and is responsible for the Conclave's material construction) perform an ancient rite. They go from room to room searching for unauthorized persons, while every ten minutes one of the aides of the Master of Ceremonies calls loudly: Everybody leave (Exeunt omnes!), that is, everybody not belonging to the Conclave. The search continues for more than an hour. Drawers are opened, draperies pulled aside, dark corners searched with light. After having searched the entire Conclave, they remain and wait at the (only) entrance, which has not been walled off. Meanwhile, in the Sistine Chapel, the cardinals proceed to identify the Conclavists. Each of them shows his credentials and is identified as belonging to one or another cardinal, and told which room is assigned to him.

The closing or locking of the Conclave takes place at the entrance of Pius IX Stairway (Scala Pio Nono), which is a wide and large stairway leading from the Bronze Gate of the Vatican (Portone di Bronzo), up to the St. Damasus Courtyard. When everybody who does not belong there has left the restricted territory, the members of the Noble Guard, the bodyguard of the pope, also leave.

The Conclave takes place in more than two hundred rooms; the apartments of the cardinals alone number seventy, and each has at least three rooms; one for the cardinal and two for his Conclavists. Doors and other entrances which serve for the Conclave have been walled up. Windows have been sealed and painted with opaque paint, lest someone perchance signal or smuggle a message. These precautions are the necessary outcome of the events past. For, during the Conclave of 1724 (when Benedict XIII was elected pope), one of the cardinals also held the post of Ambassador of Charles VI to the Holy See. The emperor wished to let the cardinal inside the Conclave know which candidates were not to his liking, and the written message was delivered to him by a young officer, who climbed the walls by using the iron bars of windows as a ladder. When he was unable to reach the window through which he had planned to hand the letter to the waiting cardinal, he impaled the message on his sword. Then in later times, during the election of Pius X, or Giuseppe Sarto, before the result could be announced, an employee of the Conclave appeared at one of the windows facing the piazza. He held a big pair of scissors in his hand and imitated the gesture of a tailor cutting cloth. Everyone knew what he meant; the name of the patriarch of Venice was Giuseppe Sarto, and Sarto in Italian means tailor. Cardinal Sarto was the new pope.

There are three rotating openings through which food can be delivered to the Conclave, but they are not large enough so that anyone could be smuggled in or out; and they are watched day and night by the special guard of the Marshal of the Conclave. Newspapers and magazines can be sent in only through this censorship and under no circumstances may a cardinal or Conclavist send out any book, newspaper or magazine. The cardinals and their aides and servants are permitted to write letters, but the letters must go through one of the rotating openings, and be censored. No cardinal or Conclavist is allowed to use the telephone. If there is urgent need, the text of the message must be submitted for censorship and, if approved, a third person makes the call. The Vatican switchboard is under strict control; few telephone lines are used and those few under the Marshal's supervision. The Marshal is assisted by a group of Church dignitaries, and the police work is done by the Swiss Guard and gendarmes (trained policemen) of the Vatican.

The cardinals and Conclavists are no longer compelled to live in one room, although the accomodations for them are not spacious. Carpenters, masons and electricians, who have been working in the Conclave area since the death of the pope, have subdivided the large rooms, some of which are sixty feet square. Each cardinal receives a bed-sitting room, with bathroom; the apartments are furnished with simple beds, chests of drawers, desks and chairs. And, for there are more than three hundred persons in the Conclave, there are many maintenance-related problems. Workmen have built a large and modern electric kitchen and pantry, with refrigerators, cooking utensils, and all the culinary items; here all the meals are prepared. Until 1878, the cardinals received their meals from the kitchens of their own apartments; and twice a day the people of Rome would watch a parade of food-bearing colorful coaches (dapieri), with coachmen and four servants in different uniforms, according to the nationalities of the cardinals and rank.

Vatican City truly is a self-sufficient entity, and has all the facilities needed to supply the Conclave with necessities. It has its own underground storerooms, its own power plant and emergency plant, its own oil tanks and cellars for hundreds of tons of coal, and modern workshop for all kinds of repairs. And the caves of the Vatican are full of other precious as well as useful goods. It was from these storage caves that pope Pius XII (1939-1958) sent supplies to help sections in Germany, Italy and other countries. Near Rome, at Castel Gandolfo, a modern farm belonging to the Holy See provides milk, vegetables, meats, olive oil and fats. Vatican City has its own emergency wells for drinking water.

Thus all is ready for the Conclave; there is even a small pharmacy, a small hospital and a large modern doctor's office prepared to undertake minor operations. The center of the Conclave, the Sistine Chapel, now comes alive. This chapel was constructed by pope Sixtus IV in 1473. Sixtus IV employed the greatest artists of his time, including Botticelli, Ghirlandaio, Mino da Fiesole, Signorelli, and many others; and his successors, Julius II and Paul III, commissioned Michelangelo to do the gigantic frescoes of the Last Judgement. The chapel, as large as an ordinary church, is transformed for the occasion. The altar is covered with a tapestry representing the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles. Above it hangs a violet baldachino or canopy with a red border edged with gold. Along the walls are the thrones of the cardinals, the electors; and before each throne is a small table bearing the cardinal's name in Latin and his coat of arms. In the center of the chapel are four large tables on which the votes are counted. All the furniture is covered with purple cloth. Before the altar is a large table on which are a paten and a chalice. When a cardinal casts a vote, the ballot is first placed on the paten, then put into the chalice which seves as ballot box. Near this table is the famous stove, its chimney leading out through a window facing St. Peter's Square. When the voting has been inconclusive, the ballots are burned with damp straw, producing the traditional black smoke; indicating that the Church is still without a pope. When the choice is finally made, the ballots are burned without straw, and white smoke informs the outside world that a pope has been elected.

Although the election is secret, the form in which it takes place is outlined in the Apostolic Constitution. It recognizes the validity of three methods of electing a pope, namely: by inspiration, by compromise, and by ballotting. When on the first day the cardinal-electors unanimously proclaim one name without proceeding to a vote, it is election by inspiration. If extraordinary circumstances demand compromise, the cardinals entrust the choice to no less than three and no more than seven of their number. They must be selected unanimously and receive all knowledge concerning the election from the Sacred College of Cardinals. The cardinals bind themselves in advance to accept the choice of the selected group. The method of election, by ballot, is the method usually followed. Pius XII, his predecessor, and all popes of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries were elected by secret ballot. And all popes since Urban VI, elected in 1378, have been cardinals; and all since Adrian VI, chosen in 1522, have been Italians. Election now is by two-third majority, plus one; because the law invalidates any ballot cast by an elector for himself.

On the morning of the first day of Conclave, cardinals and Conclavists participate at Mass. Then the Conclavists leave, and the Master of Ceremonies and the Secretary of the Sacred College of Cardinals present the ballots to the cardinals; who previously have taken their seats on their thrones. The ballot is usually a three-by-three inch slip divided into two equal parts; inside are these words, in Latin: I choose as Sovereign Pontiff _____; His Emminence Cardinal _____.

Now the Master of Ceremonies, having distributed the ballots, leaves the chapel and the last in rank of the cardinal deacons closes the door behind him, leaving only cardinals in the chapel during the balloting. Usually it takes about half an hour to name their choice. Cardinals who are ill and are unable to leave their rooms vote in this manner: Three cardinals take a box with an opening large enough to permit the insertion of a folded ballot, and in the presence of all the cardinals open it, to certify that it is empty, then lock it and leave the key on the altar. Then they proceed to the rooms of the cardinals who are ill, and they mark their ballots and drop them into the box. If a cardinal is too weak to write, he may be assisted by an ecclesiastic, who is bound to secrecy under the penalty of automatic excommunication. The three cardinals then return and, in the presence of all cardinals, open the box, count the ballots and place them first on the paten and then in the chalice.

All the cardinals who vote in the Sistine Chapel, having filled out their ballots, rise in order of seniority. Ballots between thumb and index finger, each cardinal elevates his hand and carries his ballot to the altar. He places the ballot on the paten, then drops it into the chalice and returns to his seat, having first pronounced these words: "I take to witness Christ Our Lord who is Judge to me that I hereby vote for him who, before God, I feel should be elected." The election is secret and guided by the Holy Ghost; and usually a cardinal will vote for the man he considers the most able and worthy in the College of Cardinals. And the rulers of the Conclave specify that an elector should not be influenced by the secular pressures of the political world.

Although a pope should be physically able, at times they were chosen for their precious wisdom which only comes with old age. A year before he was taken up, at ninety-four, pope Leo XIII (1878-1903) after a serious illness received a Spanish nobleman who expressed his good wishes by saying: "May God let you live a hundred years, your Holiness." Leo smiled and answered: "My dear son, why do you want to set limits to God's power and grace?" In the same manner, when Pius XI was elected (in 1922) the postwar world conditions required not a wise pope but one of passion. Cardinal Ratti was such a man, a well-known mountain climber, of strong physique and amiable disposition. He was elected as Pius XI.

The procedure for opening and counting the votes includes: First the number of ballots are counted. The senior cardinal scrutator covers the chalice with the paten and shakes it. If the number of ballots does not correspond with the number of cardinal-electors, the ballots are not opened but immediately burned and a new voting begins. If the number of ballots is the same as the cardinal-electors, the ballots are opened and the votes are tabulated. The first cardinal scrutator opens a ballot, looks at the name on it, and without a word passes it to the second scrutator, who also examines the name and hands it to a third scrutator. The third scrutator then calls the name out loudly, so that each cardinal may hear it and record it on a printed sheet bearing the names of all cardinals present: the announcing scrutator marks the vote on his own sheet also. When the count is over, a scrutator announces the number of votes cast for each cardinal. If no cardinal has received two-thirds plus one, there must be further balloting. At the end of each balloting, the last in rank of the cardinal scrutators passes a needle through the center of each ballot, strings all the ballots on a thread, knots the thread and places the string of ballots on a thread in a special chalice on a special table. After the tallying by the scrutators has been checked to insure accuracy, the ballots are burned before the assembled cardinals with the assistance of the Master of Ceremonies. The cardinals vote twice in the morning, twice in the afternoon; the ballots are burned after the second vote.

The Sistine Chapel's famous stove in which the ballots are burned. The sack (center) contains straw. The white or black smoke issues from this chimney.

When white smoke finally appears in the chimney, the multitude in St. Peter's Square immediately recognize that the pope has been elected; but still they do not know who. After this, all the cardinals in the Sistine Chapel, where the voting has been done, stand up, but remain at their thrones (tables). The cardinal deacon last in rank sounds a bell and opens the chapel door. The Secretary of the Conclave enters with the Master of Ceremonies and the Sacristan of the Vatican. Now the Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals, the Cardinal Camerlengo (Chamberlain), and three prelates who have just entered, proceed to the pope-elect, who has received the requisite majority. The Dean asks loudly in Latin: Do you accept the result of the election? (Acciptasne electionem?) For the chosen cardinal this is the most dramatic moment of his life. The clear and straightforward answer of the elected is extremely important; and the popes are exhorted to accept the honor and not to be frightened. There is only acceptance or rejection; he cannot ask for time; he must decide there at the very moment while the Dean of the Sacred College awaits his answer. Cautiously he utters in Latin: "Accepto." (I accept.) From this moment he has all the rights a pope possesses. The clear and straightforward answer of the cardinal is required; because it not only indicates single-mindedness of purpose and the guidance of the Holy Ghost, but the procedures demand it to be so. When one of the Latter-day popes was asked: Do you accept the result of the election?, he answered that he accepted it because it was the will of God and he thus resigned himself to His will. The Dean of the Sacred College, however, was not content with this answer, for the Constitution of Pius XII exhorts the chosen cardinal to accept the honor and not to be frightened by it; therefore he must either accept or reject.

After this, without delay, each cardinal pulls a string on the side of his throne (table) which lowers the canopy above it; only the canopy on the throne of the new pope remains open, symbolizing the fact that the cardinals are no longer his equals. His reign will date not from the day he was elected, but from the day of his Coronation; although he has supreme jurisdiction and all the rights of a pope.

The Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals will ask the pope-elect this question: Quo modo vis volari? (or, roughly, What name do you choose for yourself?) After a new pope announces his new name, he proceeds to the altar and kneels in brief prayer. Then, followed by the Master of Ceremonies, the Sacristan and the Secretary of the Conclave, he retires into the Sacristy.

Before the pope is clothed in his new vestments, the Secretary of the Conclave approaches him, kneels and offers him the white skull cap called zucchetto. And customarily the pope removes his own red zucchetto, and puts it upon the head of the Secretary of the Conclave; which means that he will become a cardinal. At the election of Leo XIII in 1878, the pope, out of habit, put his own skullcap in his pocket, instead of upon the head of the Secretary of the Conclave, as was the custom; but this was not unlawful. A few weeks later, when he was made aware of the situation, he corrected his negligence and made the forgotten Secretary a cardinal. (At Leo's death, in 1903, the question of the cap came up again. While the pope lay dying, the prospective Secretary of the Conclave died just a few hours before the death of the pope himself. The Sacred College of Cardinals had no power to appoint a new Secretary; but the problem was resolved by the creation of the position of Prosecretary. The new pope, Pius X, Leo's successor, however, did not deviate from the custom, and put his cap upon the young Prosecretary, bishop Merry del Val.

By nine o'clock on the morning of the election day, the Piazza of St. Peter's is thronged with some half a million spectators. People climb to the top of the colonnade; and the Palatine Guard is hard pressed to hold a line about fifty yards from the Basilica's facade. All eyes watch carefully toward the chimney of the stove in the Sistine Chapel, where the ballots are burnt, after the election. If the election lasted more than one day, this scene on the piazza would be repeated daily until the smoke is white; which means that the pope has been elected. In the Sacristy of the Sistine Chapel, robes have been prepared. There the Sacristan and the Secretary of the Conclave assist the pope in donning the white silk cassock, the pectoral cross, the purple silk slippers embroidered with gold crosses; and a red mantle trimmed with ermine and a gold-embroidered white stole. Thus vested, the pope returns to the altar and occupies the small throne which was waiting for him during the election; then he stands and imparts his first pontifical Blessing to the members of the Sacred College who elected him. When the pope is again seated, one by one, according to seniority, the cardinals approach, kneel and kiss his hands. After this ceremony, the Cardinal Camerlengo, accompanied by the Master of Ceremonies, genuflects (bends the knee to revere or worship) and puts the Fisherman's Ring on the pope's finger; the ring has no seal yet, for it was destroyed at the death of the pope's predecessor. The new pope therefore removes the ring and returns it to the Master of Ceremonies who will obtain a new seal bearing the new pope's name.

After this the pope receives the so-called second obedience of the cardinals. While he is still seated on his throne in the chapel, they approach him, and genuflecting, kiss his feet, then kiss the hands, through the mantle which covers them. Then the pope and each cardinal embrace, first from the right and then from the left. The ceremony signifies that the cardinals, no longer equal, are bound to obey. In the meantime, the first cardinal deacon appears on the balcony of St. Peter's Church. Silence fills the air, as the multitude in hundreds of thousands wait to see the pope, for they have seen the white smoke, which indicates that their pope (papa) has been elected.

The cardinal deacon lifts up his hand, indicating that he will now speak. And he announces: I announce to you with great joy; we have our pope. The cardinal pauses, then continues: His Eminence the Most Reverend Lord Cardinal _____, who chooses the following name _____. (Annuntio vobis gaudium magnum; habemus Papam. Eminentissimum ac Reverendissimum Dominum Cardinalem _____ qui sibi nomen _____ imposuit.) The joyous cheers of the crowd overwhelm the atmosphere; and from this moment the news is known in all corners of the world.

The pope now rises from his throne inside the Sistine Chapel, and walks towards the same balcony of St. Peter's; and on the way imparts his blessing. He stands on the balcony facing Rome, and the great multitude, and raises a hand in benediction. The new pope will sign his utterance Papa, as well as Servant of the Servants of God (Servus Servorum Dei).

The next ritual after the ceremonies following the election is that of crowning the pope, the Coronation. It is Spiritual from the beginning to the end, an uplifting selection of solemn prayers, in celebration of the sacrifice of the Mass. An emphasis on facts, accuracy, and detail in all things, in uniforms, buildings, hymns, and the Coronation itself are merely outward manifestations of the higher and Spiritual things which can only be discerned by a parabolic view (through discerning the truths and realities behind the facts, as did Jesus). The first three words of the hymn that greet the new pope when he enters the portico of St. Peter's in solemn procession are: You are Peter . . .(Tu es Petrus), the successor of Peter the Fisherman.

Although no Coronation is required to establish power and authority, it does serve its purpose most marvelously. During the first ten centuries popes were not crowned. The papal Coronation grew out of ceremonies associated with the consecration of a bishop. The first successors of Peter were elected bishops. Until about the tenth century, all popes were laymen or priests (of the Roman Aaronic Order); and they had to be consecrated before receiving the fulness, or plenitude, of their powers. Beginning about the fifth century, a distinctive covering was placed on the head of the new bishop of Rome (the pope), during the consecration ceremony. The bishop's crown was a round, bulbous hat made of cloth of camel hair (camelancium). This hat, worn by all the bishops and the pope himself, took different forms in different times, in different regions. In the West it evolved into the mitre, and in certain parts of the East they wore real crowns, as those of the royalty. From the tenth century onward, the pope received two crowns; the bishop's mitre, and during the Coronation, the tiara.

The order in which the papal procession proceeds during the Coronation is as follows: the mendicant orders head the procession, followed by monastic orders, canons regular, secular clergy, collegiate churches, minor basilicas, patriarchal basilicas, the papal court; and lastly, the Generals of religious Orders, Bussolanti, and ushers.

The Coronation of a pope is divided into these activities: formation of the procession within the Vatican Palace; the vesting of the pope for the papal Mass; the procession into the portico of St. Peter's Basilica, where the sacred ceremonies are performed; the procession into the Basilica to the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament for adoration of the Eucharist; the procession into St. Peter's Chapel of St. Gregory, and the vesting of the Cardinals; the procession to the papal altar and the preparation for the Mass; the praising of the pope; the papal Mass; the placing of the sacred pallium upon the pope's shoulders; the procession after the Mass to the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica; and finally, the Coronation of the pope in the open air, before the eyes of the multitude.

The maintenance of this gigantic Church building, St. Peter's Basilica, is no ordinary matter. An organization exists called Venerable Edifice of St. Peter (Rev. Fabbrica di San Pietro), a workshop whose employees are architects, sculptors, masons, carpenters and electricians. These devoted individuals work under the direction of a high-ranking prelate; and cherish history, art and liturgy. The workmen in the Basilica are called Sanpietrini, or people of St. Peter; and it is an honor to be made one of them. There are families who have had sons in the Sanpietrini for generations. The monumental task of decorating St. Peter's for the Coronation is undertaken by an army of Sanpietrini; which sets to work at the moment the white smoke of the Sistine Chapel's chimney becomes visible, confirming that a new pope has been elected.

The invited guests to the Coronation ceremonies at the Basilica receive earliest consideration. To each of these the Secretary of State issues an ornate invitation telling him how he should be dressed, and where he will be seated. The floor of the route of the papal procession is covered with red carpet, and the pillars of the Basilica and many sections of the walls support heavy embroidered brocade. The hundred and sixty altars, mostly of marble, are covered with flowers; on them shine thousands of wax candles and candles with electric bulbs; endless chains of lights embellish the inside of the Basilica's dome, and powerful floodlights point to the side chapels. Beneath the dome a great crown of light descends upon the main altar. There is a papal throne at the end of the apsis, another in the Gregorian Chapel, another in the portico, and one more on the balcony facing St. Peter's Square.

The facade of the Basilica and the outside of the dome are lined with thousands of electric lights. Before the discovery of electricity, during coronations, tens of thousands of candles and torches were installed on the outside of the Church; and yet due to the grace of God upon the good works of the Sanpietrini, there have been no fires. These devoted Sanpietrini set up fences on the piazza, for there and nearby streets and rooftops over a milliion people assemble; perhaps six hundred thousand actually will see the new pope. Others will see some part of the great event, foreign dignitaries, pilgrims in their national costumes, the cardinals, and will hear the pope's voice broadcast by loudspeakers. The Palatine Guard was formed in 1850 during the reign of Pius IX. Its five hundred members are recruited from Italian families, and are charged with general guard service during ceremonies. They are not warriors by nature, but if necessary they would die in defense of their pope. All the entrances of the Vatican and St. Peter's Church are manned by the Swiss Guard, whose first two hundred members arrived in Rome in 1506, hired by pope Julius II. (As of 1955, the Swiss Guard consisted of the Commander, five officers, six sergeants, ninety corporals and guards; their Commander is also a prominent member of the papal court.) But first among the guards of the pope are the members of the papal Noble Guard. It was founded in 1801 by Pius VII, and consists of two hundred men, all members of Italian nobility, who accompany the pope from the moment of his election until his coffin is walled in. Their general staff consists of four Lieutenant Generals (Napoleonic nomenclature); and one of these is the Commander of the Guard; another Lieutenant General carries the title of Standard Bearer of the Holy Roman Church. This title and the Lieutenant General rank in the guard is hereditary in the family of Marquess Patrizi Montoro of Rome.

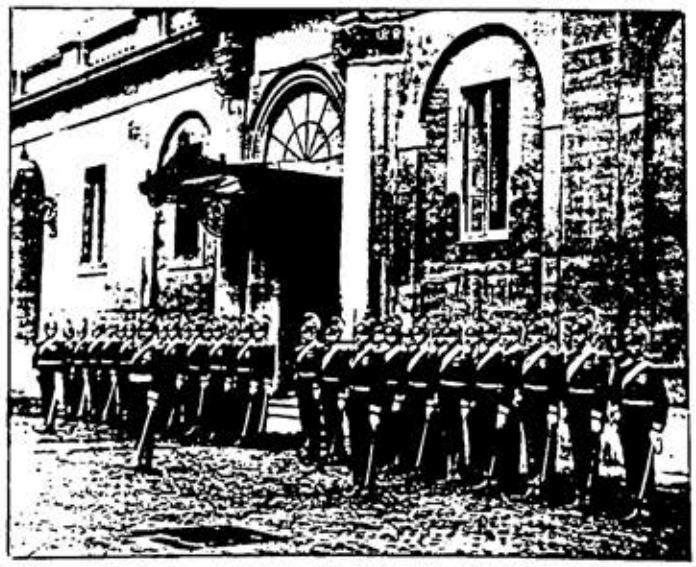
While the people in the Basilica and St. Peter's Square await, the pope is vested in sacred garments he will wear in the procession, which starts at the papal apartments and will reach the main altar of St. Peter's Church. Now some hundred persons, led by the Chief Master of Ceremonies, are assigned to the task of directing the procession and related activities. Everyone knows his place, for written instructions have been sent to all. They accompany the pope, cardinals and all other personnel to the smallest function of the papal Mass and the Coronation ceremonies. And they give signs that ensure the even flow of the day's dramatic events. The day of the Coronation is always a Sunday or Holy day.



Some of the two hundred members of the Papal Noble Guard, all of whom belong to the Italian nobility.

The Palatine Guard, shown in dress uniform, has five hundred members, charged with general guard service during ceremonies (1955).

In the morning of the Coronation day, when all the cardinals are gathered in the Vatican Sala paramenti, the pope, in his white cassock with a purple ermine-lined mantle around his shoulders, descends from his apartments; accompanied by two Noble Guards flanked by two officers of the Swiss Guard, followed by his personal physician and his valet in tailcoats and surrounded by chamberlains. Slowly they proceed through the ten large rooms between the papal apartment and Sala Clementina. At the door of the Sala Clementina a Swiss Guard stands at attention; against a wall of the room stand ten others as honor guards. The room has no furniture, but is embellished with large paintings; one of them representing the martyrdom of St. Clement VIII (1592-1605), who rebuilt it. Here the first ceremony of the day takes place, the vesting of the pope.

Many a millennia of history and tradition are manifested in what the pope wears on the day of his Coronation. The pope is about to perform a divine service; for the Holy mass is considered an offer of sacrifice to God, in which God himself is offered as a sacrifice, repeating the sacrifice on the Cross. It is for this reason all those who participate in this mystery are to be reverently attired. Of these papal garments, the alb is of Roman and Greek origin; it is made of white linen, and reaches from neck to ankles, symbolizing purity of heart. The stole is also of Roman origin, and symbolizes immortality of which man is unworthy. The large white mantle (manto) is a sign of authority; and for thousands of years has been worn by Jews, Persians and Chinese, and represents the same sign. The pectoral cross, hanging on a chain around the neck, represents episcopal authority, and contains a relic of a saint. The mitre, adorned with gold and precious stones, which a cardinal places upon the pope's head, symbolizes the helmet of salvation. The pope will remove it whenever he prays.

The portable throne, sedia gestatoria, is of Oriental origin; it was first used in the western world by Charlemagne and later by other emperors. And the two ceremonial fans made of ostrich plumes on long staffs, called flabelli, are of Egyptian origin. (At one time they were made of peacock feathers, and the eye-shaped designs symbolized the vigilance and eye of the pope over the whole world. The canopy, or baldachino, is held by four prelates, and it originated in Baghdad.)

In the large rooms in which the papal procession forms, the cardinals in long scarlet robes are grouped according to their rank and function, not according to their national origin. Each cardinal is accompanied by his secretary and priest (caudatario), who holds the train of the cardinal's mantle. (The train used to be nine feet long until recently, when pope Pius XII, in his order of November 30, 1952, shortened it to four and a half feet.) Three hundred or more patriarchs, archbishops and bishops are formed into two groups: those who are assistants to the papal throne, and thus remain relatively close to the pope; and those who are not, these are the most colorful in the procession. Those who belong to the Latin Rite, or western world, can be distinguished by their dress from those who belong to the Oriental Rites. No archbishop, patriarch, or abbot is allowed to carry Episcopal Staff in the presence of the pope. Bishops residing in Rome may use it only at benedictions at afternoon vespers, or when a new bishop is consecrated. Only the bishop of Rome, the pope, has the right to the Episcopal Staff, a long staff ending in a triple cross.

Patriarchs and bishops of the Eastern world wear crowns instead of mitres; their Episcopal Staffs end in a cross, or triple cross. The archbishops, bishops and the higher ranking abbots of the western world wear mitres of varying shapes, but do not carry the curved bishop's staff. In the procession about two thousand people participate, including bearded Arabs from Syria, Lebanon and other Near Eastern countries. Some of their communities, which date back to the first centuries of the Christian Era, not only possess and wear ancient robes, but also they have preserved a great deal of independence in administration and liturgy. Bishops of Coptic and Indian (of Malabar) Rites wear the heaviest vestments, so richly embroidered with gold that from a distance they appear like gold plate.

The cardinals and the bishops, with patriarchs and archbishops, are the core of the Church; and form the most important group around the new pope. And the papal court is the oldest in the world, and has preserved a wealth of Spiritual and temporal truths from every part of the earth; a truly Universal or Catholic Church, in every sense of the word. But this outward show of ceremonies, in form of procession, is recognized as comparatively unimportant; nothing is essential save the Spirit which guides every aspect of the ceremonies. It is said that king Francis I of France, in the sixteenth century, having witnessed a papal procession, later made a malicious remark to pope Leo X, saying: Your Holiness, the first followers of Christ wore simple sheepskin. The pope had a ready answer: Those were times, Your Majesty, when kings herded the sheep. (Meaning that the ways of one age cannot be judged from the perspective of another.)

But most commendably, it is self-evident to pope, bishops, mendicant monks, laymen, and all who participate in the Coronation, that gold, velvet, jewels, and traditional pageantry, might even work harm, if they were not the outcome of purity of heart and desire to please God by external symbols of respect. And all know the mere processions and ceremonies will not lead the wicked to Heaven.

Now, this most ancient papal court is the Pontifical Family. The following lists the courtiers and their titles; but only a few of them are in daily service to the pope and the Vatican State; the rest of them are called only for solemn functions, such as the reception of foreign sovereigns, heads of states and diplomats. The highest ranking members of the papal court, or Pontifical Family, are two Palatine Cardinals, the Cardinal Datary and Cardinal Secretary of State. The second group is called the Noble Antechamber of His Holiness; these include the Palatine prelates, the secret chamberlains, and the Master of the Sacred Hospice. the Palatine prelates include the Maestro di Camera; the Auditor of His Holiness; and the Master of Sacred Apostolic Palaces. The participating secret chamberlains who actually perform daily service around the pope include: The Master of the Alms; the Secretary of the Papal Briefs; the Secretary of the Cipher; the Office Chief of the Datary; the Secretary of the Latin Letters (Coppiere); the Secretary of the Embassies; the Guardian of the Papal Vestments; the Sacristan of His Holiness, who is also his vicar for Vatican City. The third group consists of those civilian secret chamberlains who, in their daily service to the pope, have the right to wear sword and cape during solemn functions. These include: Foriere Major of the Sacred Palaces; Cavallerizzo Major of His Holiness; the Postmaster General; the Commanding General of the Noble Guard; and the Commanding Colonel of the Swiss Guard. The fourth group is composed of the Assistants at the Throne (patriarchs, archbishops, and bishops chosen by the pope); the Protonotaries; and prelates of the Roman Curia. And the fifth and last group includes the rest of the papal court, or Pontifical Family, such as: Domestic prelates, all members of the Noble Guard, Secret Chamberlains, Honorary Chamberlains, the officers of the Swiss and Palatine Guards and the officers of the papal gendarmes, privy chaplains, and honorary privy chaplains, non-resident honorary privy chaplains, privy clerics, ordinary nonprivy Pontifical chaplains, the Apostolic preacher, the Confessor of the Pontifical Family, Archiatro (physician) of His Holiness, pope's valet, called Aiutante di Camera; the quartermaster, called Decano di Sala; and the Bussolanti (lay chamberlain ushers).

The Bussolanti (lay chamberlain ushers); their chief is third from left.

All civilian and religious dignitaries who participate in the procession, when the pope enters St. Peter's Church to pontificate solemn Mass, belong to Papal (or Pontifical) Chapel. The Papal Chapel has a liturgical function, and participation in the procession is according to rank. The following are the members of the Papal Chapel in order of their rank:

2. The Vice-Camerlengo of the Holy Roman Church.

When the pope is vested, and everyone in his place, the papal cross-bearer, a high prelate in a long purple cape, genuflects before the pope and waits for a word from the Chief of the Master of Ceremonies. The large halls of the Vatican in which the procession forms are connected by open doors. And when the Chief of the Master of Ceremonies utters the Latin word Extra (out) in a loud voice, those who are in the lead slowly begin to move, and the procession gets under way. The portable throne, sedia gestatoria, upon which the new pope is seated, is carried by twelve thronebearers (sediari), six on each side; and is surrounded by at least fifty persons. They wear white gloves, white silk stiff-collared shirts, reaching to the knee. On the left of the throne is the Standard Bearer of the Holy Roman Church, wearing cuirassier's helmet with plume, blue tunic with crossed black belts, white breeches and black topboots. Ten other officers of the Noble Guard; and three laymen in fifteenth century gold embroidered black court dress, with golden chains and keys around their necks, are also there; these are highest ranking chamberlains. At each corner of the portable throne walks a Swiss Guardsman holding a sword slanting forward. The canopy above the papal throne is the largest and most elaborate. It is fastened to four poles, held by four prelates of the Rota, the members of the high ecclesiastical tribunal. The two ceremonial fans are carried behind the throne by two private chamberlains, in gold-embroidered scarlet tunics with velvet lapels. The pope, in long gold cape, called a falda, worn only by the popes, rests his left hand on an arm of the portable throne (sedia gestatoria); and with his right hand continually imparts his Benediction; and on his head is the mitre. This is the pope's first official public appearance in the sedia gestatoria. When the throne approaches, people kneel in reverence, for the Catholic Benediction coming from God's Grace is to be received on both knees. And now the pope has arrived at the entrance of the portico of St. Peter's Basilica, and the main Coronation ceremony begins.

The newly elected pope is carried to St. Peter's Basilica for his Coronation, seated on his portable throne (sedia gestatoria).

Cassocks of different sizes are prepared for the election of a new pope.

In the corner of the immense portico, the choir of the Basilica, which was founded by Julius III (1550-1555), the Capella Giulia begins the ancient hymn: You are Peter (Tu es Petrus). This is the first greeting the new pope receives. He descends from the seat, and mounts the portable throne, sedia gestatoria, in the portico and listens to the few words in Latin spoken to him by the Cardinal Archpriest of the Basilica. The cardinal kisses the pope's ring and, genuflecting, kisses the embroidered cross on his right shoe; this liturgical kiss signifies honor and reverence. After this, about fifty-five members of the clergy of St. Peter's Church step before the pope and kiss his feet, while the choir continues the hymn Tu es Petrus. The hymn ends only when the pope again has mounted the portable throne and the procession slowly enters the front door of St. Peter's Church. Then there is absolute silence. The gigantic Church building is seldom dim due to the sunlight which enters through its great windows, but now hundreds of thousands of lights ablaze, and the scene truly becomes radiant. Suddenly the silence is shattered by the sound of twelve trumpets, as the members of the band of the Palatine Guard play (the Marcia Triomfale . . .); then the sounds of the vast congregation greeting the pope subdue the sound of the trumpets. Each of the thousands of people in the church waves something, little flags with yellow and white papal color; flags of various countries; branches of olive trees, handkerchiefs, etc. It is a spontaneous demonstration of love; while the pope ceaselessly imparts his Benediction, and smiling turns right and left. Then the ovation comes to a sudden halt, as if someone had given a sign. The portable throne, sedia gestatoria, is carried to the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament, on the right side of the Basilica, close to the altar where stands the Pieta of Michelangelo. Before the portable throne is lowered to the floor, the pope removes his mitre to pray. He prays about ten minutes in the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament before the Holy Eucharist is placed in a monstrance on the altar. Except for the actual crowning, the Coronation ceremony in the Basilica is part of the Pontifical Mass. For this Mass all priests are attired in sacred vestments of symbolic meanings.

Next, the vesting of the pope is performed in another chapel, also on the side of St. Peter's Church, called the Chapel of St. Gregory. A part of the procession moves to this chapel, and another part takes its place near the Basilica's main altar. In the Chapel of St. Gregory, the pope prays again, kneeling on the Faldistero; and the entire Sacred College of cardinals again expresses obedience to the pope. The venerable princes of the Church kneel before him and kiss his right hand. Then, while the crossbearer stands at his right side, he blesses the cardinals with the words: Blessed be the name of God (Sit nomen Domini benedictum). The help of the Holy Ghost is invoked before the vesting begins. The Divine Office (a sequence of meditations said in prayer daily by all priests and members of religious communities) is divided according to the day's periods. This is the Terce (or teria), which commemorates the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles. One of the cardinals intones the first prayer and the choir follows. The melodic Gregorian chant fills the air, and the choir continues to sing while the pope and the cardinals are attired in the robes of their office. The pope's large mantle is replaced by the dalmatic, the Mass vestment of a deacon, and over it the chasuble, the Mass vestment of an ordained priest; which resembles a yoke and signifies that he is enyoked of God. The pope then receives the stole and his mitre is put back upon his head. All these vestments, weighing some sixty pounds, are elaborately fastened with belts to distribute the weight. When the pope is ready, two cardinals from the order of the cardinal deacons step to his side, and remain with him until the end of the Coronation; another cardinal deacon and a cardinal bishop will assist him at the altar.

As one of the cardinal deacons lifts his staff (the ferule), the pope calls out to the celebrants of the Mass in the Basilica, and gives his permission to proceed to the altar, saying: Let us proceed in peace! (Procedamus in pace!) The choir responds with joy: In Christ's name (In nomine Christ). The pope is lifted by the sediari and the procession to the main altar begins. And the pope on this his day of worldly glory is reminded thrice that the material world and its glory will crumble and vanish away; as the flax put into the burner. Three times the pope puts the flax into the little burner held by the Master of Ceremonies. And three times as the flax flames and smoke disappears the Master of Ceremonies reminds him: Sic transit gloria mundi (Thus passes the glory of the world). As the portable throne is carried to the main altar, it passes before the ancient statue of St. Peter, the first pope. It was erected by Leo I (440-461 A.D.), in grateful recognition of the withdrawal of the scourge of God from the gates of Rome, after he had met Attila. Soon it became the most revered of all the statues of Rome. On the feast day of St. Peter, June 29, it is dressed in papal vestment, and has been since the time it was erected.

Then the portable throne (sedia gestatoria) is placed in front of the papal altar toward the apse, under the great dome of St. Peter's Church; here the solemn papal Mass is celebrated. Around the altar the circular floor is clear in a radius of about twenty yards. Members of the procession are around this space; the cardinals seated on their benches in the apse, and the whole apse is covered with red carpet, its design showing the tiara and the keys of papal authority. The members of the Noble Guard, palatine and Swiss Guard stand with drawn swords. The steps of the altar are surrounded by small tables with sacred objects for the Mass, such as chalice, candles, white linen clothes (purifiers), a golden spoon, a golden tube, an incense boat, the Book of the Gospels, and the Book of Epistles.

Although the papal Mass does not differ significantly from any other Mass celebrated in a Catholic church of Christ, it does signify Christ's sacrifice on the Cross. The Low Mass is its simplest form; and in the High Mass only certain parts are sung by the officiating priest in a Gregorian chant, and the choir responds. But in a Solemn Mass the officiating priest is assisted by other priests, deacons, acolytes and others. The consecration of the bread and wine by the priest, symbolizing Christ's body and blood, is the heart of any Mass. The papal Mass, then, is a Solemn Mass in which the celebrant is assisted by cardinals, bishops, deacons, acolytes, and others. The beginnings of the liturgy go back to the year ninety-six, to the time of St. Clement. And, the essence of the Mass is the sacrifice. After partaking of the Sacrament (sacrifice and communion), comes the time to share testimony, as an expression of gratitude. The pope, bareheaded, stands at the altar at the beginning of the Mass and publicly, with deep bow, confesses his sins and asks for forgiveness. All but two parts of the Mass, the reading of the Epistle and the Gospel, are celebrated in Latin.

The pope at the steps of the altar says the first prayers, and the Confiteor; the Confiteor is said in Latin, and is repeated by all the cardinals, prelates and participating clergy. Suddenly, there is an interruption, and the placing of the pallium around the pope's neck and shoulders. The pallium is a circular band of white wool two inches wide, and is decorated with six crosses and has a pendant strip before and behind. Only the pope may wear it at all times, although it is granted to archbishops and bishops to symbolize the fullness of episcopal power. In ancient times, it signified that the bishop who received it from the pope had gained special merit by his obedience to the Holy See. Moreover, the pallium is made of the wool of two lambs; it is blessed in the Church of St. Agnes in Rome on her feast day, blessed again by the pope on the feast day of St. Peter, and then stored in a casket near the tomb of St. Peter. The pallium is placed upon the shoulders of the pope by a cardinal who receives it from a genuflecting prelate. Holding the sacred object in his extended hands, the cardinal recites in Latin the solemn formula: Receive the sacred pallium which signifies the fullness of thy pontifical office for the hour of the omnipotent God and the Most Glorious virgin Mary, His Mother, and for the honor of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and for the honor of the Holy Roman Church.

The pope steps up to the altar, bareheaded, bowing, performs the ceremony of incensing, then the assisting cardinals kiss his left cheek and his pectoral cross. After this, the cardinals, bishops, patriarchs, abbots, prelates and the penitentiaries of St. Peter show their obedience to their new pontiff. The cardinals, without their caps, kiss the pontiff's feet and right hand, and the pope embraces them. The patriarchs, archbishops and bishops kiss his feet and right knee; the abbots and the penitentiaries kiss his feet. Then proceeds the Mass. Now, it is interrupted again for praising of the pope, an invocation to God and the saints to help him. Parts of the papal procession, including the assisting cardinals, guards and macebearers, walk around the main altar to the entrance of St. Peter's tomb; and the ceremony begins with officiating cardinal's invocation. The participants are divided into two groups, responding to each other:

> Hearken, O God, to our prayers for our master, pope _____;
> Savior of the world,
> Help him, help him,
> St. Michael and St. Gabriel,
> Help him, help him.

Then the Epistle and the Gospel are sung in both Latin and Greek; and are incensed. Those who sing say a special prayer, beseeching God to cleanse their mouths while they pronounce the eternal words. The acolytes bring candles to express the joy that accompanies listening to the words of the Lord. The pope blesses the Books and those who bring them to him kiss his feet. All these acts have a single meaning, to honor the Word. Next is the ceremony of the blessing of the sacrament, bread (Host) and wine. Seventy-five to eighty thousand people in the Basilica kneel in silence as the pope pronounces the words: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus (Holy, holy, holy is our Lord). The guardsmen lower their swords. Eight prelates, accompanied by a Master of Ceremonies, hold lighted torches before the altar. And the pope elevates the sacred bread (Host), after having consecrated it; trumpets in the dome of the Basilica play a sacred melody, the Largo of Longhi; bells are not used at Masses celebrated by the pope or in the presence of the pope. Three times the pope elevates the Host and the chalice before him, then to the right and to the left; any other priest would elevate only before him.

Communion means the union with Christ in the spirit of peace and love. Before the pope takes Communion, that is before partaking of the sacrament, standing before the altar he embraces the cardinals who have assisted him. This is called the kiss of peace. The embrace will be repeated several hundred times. One cardinal after another receives it, then the lowest ranking cardinal embraces the first patriarch, and the lowest ranking patriarch embraces the first archbishop, and so on down to the prelates. The pope, as every priest, partakes both the Host and the Precious Blood, but laymen receive only the Host. And before receiving the celestial bread, like any other sinner, he strikes his breast, saying: Domine, non sum dignus (I am not worthy, O Lord). It is a privilege of the pope to take the Precious Blood from the chalice through a golden tube; each drop of the Precious Blood and each particle of the Host must be consumed. Then the assisting cardinals and the Sacristan purify the paten, cleanse the chalice, and consume the water mixed with the Precious Blood.

Now the last act of Coronation begins, as the papal Mass ends. One of the cardinals replaces the gloves, the skullcap and the Episcopal ring on the pope's hands, for they had been removed before he touched the chalice and the bread. Then the pope mounts the portable throne, sedia gestatoria, and the mitre is placed upon his head as the multitude bursts into cheers and good wishes. The papal procession passes through the congregation, and stops at the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament; here the pope prays. Then it leaves through the great bronze doors of the Basilica, passing through the portico and mounting the Sala Regia that leads to the huge balcony of St. Peter's facing the Square.

The balcony on which the Coronation ceremony will be performed is adorned with a large canopy, under which a throne awaits the pope. A thirty-foot carpet, decorated with the pope's coat of arms, is lowered over the balcony railing. So far the multitude on St. Peter's Square has not seen the papal Mass and has participated in it only by listening to the prayers, and the description of the broadcast through loudspeakers (as of 1955). This is the climax of the Coronation ceremony. After the tiara is on his head, the ceremonies end abruptly. The multitude cheers, stopping only when the choir intones the hymn Corona Aurea Super Caput (A golden crown is placed upon his head). Then the Dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals recites the Lord's Prayer. The pope is seated on the throne. One of the cardinals removes the mitre from his head, and the Dean of the Sacred College summons the prelate holding the tiara. Then he approaches the pope, kneels and, with tiara in his hands pronounces these words: Accept this ornate tiara of the three crowns, and remember that you are Father of the princes and kings, Pontiff of the world and Vicar of Our Savior Jesus Christ on earth; whose honor and glory will last through centuries and centuries. After this, the cardinal rises and places the tiara upon the pope's head. He is now officially crowned. He imparts his benediction in the name of the Father, and the Son and the Holy Ghost, looking at the crowd; and smiles when he gives the Apostolic Blessing, and the crowd cheers.

Various aspects of the priesthood of Aaron are evident, which was established when the children of Israel crossed the Red Sea and entered into the wilderness of Sinai, during a seven-day ceremony, when Moses laid his hands upon his brother Aaron, according to the will and commandment of the Lord; that he and his descendants might minister to the temporal needs of the Church. Although the Melchizedek priesthood, unseen to the world and the worldly, remains Spiritual in its ministry, always remains in close contact with the worldly priesthood of Aaron, which ministers to the carnal Israel. A priest in the Roman Catholic Church is a minister of divine worship; he is ordained by a bishop in union with the pope. He receives authority to bless the Sacrament (bread and wine), baptize, hear confessions in his jurisdiction, administer Extreme Unction, assist in the sacrament of matrimony; and with special permission, administer the sacrament of confirmation.

A bishop is a priest authorized to administer all the above-mentioned sacraments; and also can ordain priests and consecrate other bishops. Bishops are the vicars of the Apostles, and govern a ward (diocese). A titular bishop is a bishop appointed to a diocese that exists only nominally. An archbishop is a bishop who has authority over an ecclesiastical territorial division usually including more than one diocese. A patriarch is a bishop, highest in rank below pope in jurisdictional affairs; the patriarchs are not subject to any ecclesiastical authority but the pope and his legates.

There exist two Orders within the Church, Major Orders and Minor Orders. An ordained priest is a priest of the second order. Those who prepare for the priesthood receive during their studies the following Minor Orders, all having meaning in the liturgy of the Church: Porter, Reader, Exorcist, Acolyte. The Major Orders are: Subdeacon, Deacon, Priest, Bishop, Archbishop, and Patriarch. There are also prelates, both real and titular, meaning a papal distinction; usually a bishop is also a prelate. There are cardinals, consistories (assemblies of cardinals called together by the pope, and presided over by him).

The Councils are assemblies of prelates summoned by their appointed chief. There are ward or diocesan councils (synods), stake or provincial councils, and plenary or national councils, under the chairmanship of the pope's emissary, or legate. The General or Ecumenical Council (or Conference) is an assembly of all bishops of the world called together by the pope. Beside these, the Roman Curia consists of churchmen organized into various groups in order to aid in the government of the Church. The Curia consists of the following:

1. Twelve Sacred Congregations

5. Diplomatic Representatives
Nuncios and Internuncios (lower ranking nuncios) of the Pope at foreign governments

Apostolic Delegates of the Holy See (the Pope) at the hierarchy (or episcopate) of a country which has no diplomatic relations with the Holy See Papal Legates for special occasions and functions

The diplomatic relations of the Vatican can also be viewed as follows: The Holy See has nuncios or internuncios accredited to the governments of these countries (as of 1955): Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Nationalist China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Germany, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland (exiled government in London), Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Syria, Uruguay, Venezuela.

In the following countries the Holy See has a representative at the episcopate of the country, called the Apostolic Delegate: United States of America, Australia (New Zealand, Oceania), Belgian Congo, British East and West Africa, Canada, French West Africa, Great Britain, Jerusalem (Cyprus, Jordan, Palestine), Malaya, Mexico, Turkey, Union of South Africa. And there is a special envoy in Ethiopia.

And the following countries maintain diplomatic missions, embassies or legations at the Holy See: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Lithuania (appointed by the prewar non-communist government), Monaco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Order of Malta, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland (appointed by the pre-war non-communist government), Portugal, San Marino, Spain, Syria, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Thus the Sixth Epoch, which began with pope Sibinianus, ended with pope Pius VIII (1829-30). By now the Church of Rome had become fully a telestial entity; and both the terrestrial and celestial priesthoods had already moved to the New World, the Republic of America. In the eighteenth century, the Papal States comprised seventeen thousand square miles and three million inhabitants. They included: the duchies of Romagna, Urbino, Spoleto, Piacenza, Parma, Modena (Madina) and Castro; also the March of Ancona, the provinces of Bologna, Orvieto and Perugia. (Later, in 1870, all of these were annexed to the unified Kingdom of Italy, and thus the pope had no territory.) Several times kings and foreign governments offered protection to the pope when danger arose. The United States had already established consular offices in the Papal States as early as 1797. And the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was to be established in the United States some thirty-three years later.

By the time of Julius II (1503-1513 A.D.), the Catholic Church of Christ had degenerated to the level that the pope, having the right of approving the election of archbishops and bishops, charged fixed sums for privileges, dispensations and absolutions from certain sins. Payments were regulated by a tax book; and the purchase price of an office was almost always covered by the first year's revenue. But as it was payable in advance, the new office-holders often had recourse to Roman credit institutions. Before pope Sixtus IV (1471-1484), there were some six hundred and fifty purchasable offices in Rome. Innocent VIII created three hundred new posts, each priced at two hundred gold ducats. A place in the College of the Sealers cost its occupant five hundred ducats. Alexander VI appointed eighty writers of briefs, each of whom paid seven hundred and fifty scudi. Under Julius II's successor, Leo X, the number of offices was raised to 2,150; his income from this source reached the figure of 900,000 gold florins, but the treasury was mostly empty. Moreover, trade in indulgences was carried out by Leo X and the twenty-three year old archbishop of Mainz; such trade had been practised in the dioceses and the lands of the House of Brandenburg since 1514. When the Elector of Brandenburg, Albert, youngest brother of Joachim, had acquired the high appointment of archbishop of Magdeburg, administrator of Halberstadt, and archbishop and Elector of Mainz, he had to pay the church in Rome 14,000 ducats in ordinary taxes and 10,000 in supertax.

But this was all according to the Lord's will and His plans. From the time of pope Leo X (1513-1521), the Christians began to break away from the Catholic Church; and the so-called Reformed Churches came into existence. In 1521, Martin Luther was excommunicated from the Church by pope Leo X; and the Lutheran sect began with him.

In 1529, the name "Protestants" was given to the Lutheran signers of the protest. Later, Protestantism was applied to embrace all types of opponents of the papacy. In 1536, the Church of England (Ecclesia Anglicana) became a distinctive part of the Catholic Church, when the Parliament passed an act by which loyalty to the Roman See was made illegal in the realm. In 1564, the Reformation Movement soon spread to France, Germany and Netherlands. In the British Isles the movement and its churches were called Presbyterian; and the first congregation in the United States was formed in 1640. Presbyterianism utilized many teachings of Swiss reformer John Calvin, who died in 1564. Then in 1639, a man named Roger Williams formed the First Baptist Church in America. After this came into existence Methodism, out of two great urges of the time: the Spiritual destitution of the eighteenth century England, and the religious experience of John Wesley, when his heart was strangely warmed on May 24, 1738.

Now the time was nigh at hand for the Saints of the world to organize, or rather re-organize, their own Church in the United States, to bring to pass the fulfillment of the ancient and Latter-day prophecies concerning the Second Coming of the Messiah, or the Savior, in the fulness of time; and to prepare a people for the Millennial reign, and establish the cause of Zion; and to continue in the traditions and oracles of righteousness of their fathers, which had been preserved and handed down from one generation to the next, from the time of Adam unto this day. In 1829, the Lord sent Peter, James and John to ordain Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to confer upon them the holy priesthood. On April 6, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established as an institution among men; and Joseph Smith, Jr., was elected its first president and prophet, seer and revelator, by the voice of its members. Thus the powers and authorities of the Universal Church of Christ were officially separated in 1830, when the policy of adherence to the telestial traditions and limitations of Egypt was separated from the zealous pursuit and realization of the fulness of the scriptural knowledge by the Saints in America, who were to prepare the way for the Second Coming and to establish the cause of Zion.

Thus ended the Sixth Epoch, which began with pope Sibinianus and ended with pope Pius VIII. The Seventh and final Epoch begins from the time the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established, and Joseph Smith, Jr., was elected its first president (although it is reckoned from the birth of Joseph Smith, Jr., in 1805), and ends with Ezra Taft Benson (the current president and prophet of the Church) and the Second Coming of Jesus Christ. In Rome, the conditions were doomed to worsen; and president Polk of the United States, in 1848, with the consent of Congress, had created its first legation in Rome. In 1863, when the armies of Victor Emmanuel I and Garibaldi invaded the Papal States, the prime minister of Britain, Lord Russell, wrote to cardinal Antonelli, papal Secretary of State, and offered the island of Malta as a haven for pope Pius IX. The British prime minister ordered the Admiralty to be prepared to send a naval squadron to Civitavecchia, the principal port of the Papal States, to wait there for the pope. In Malta, Lord Russell wrote to Antonelli, saying: His Holiness (the pope) might be surrounded by his chief cardinals and most trusty counselors; he would not be asked to subscribe to any conditions repugnant to his conscience.

Later, when the political and Spiritual conditions became worse, Rufus King, the United States minister accredited to the Papal States, took the initiative. One of the highest Vatican officials told him that probably the only country in which the pope could seek and find a suitable and secure asylum was the great Republic of America. And Rufus King replied: Our country is the home of civil and religious liberty as well as the refuge to all who have fled from political and other troubles in the Old World. His Holiness, should he see fit to go to the United States, would, no doubt, meet with a kind welcome, and be left to pursue, unquestioned and unmolested, his great work as the Head of the Catholic (Universal) Church.

Rufus King also proposed that the United States send warships to Civitavecchia to await the papal decision. Secretary of State Seward approved the proposal and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Fox, at the time visiting Rome, instructed admiral Goldsborough, commander of the U.S. Mediterranean Fleet, then anchored in Lisbon, to dispatch two ships to Civitavecchia immediately; and two destroyers soon arrived at the papal port. In 1867, when Garibaldi with a small force was only fifteen miles away from the Vatican and the sound of artillery was heard in the capital of Christianity, the pope (Pius IX) told some of his entourage: Yes, I hear them coming! Then he pointed to his crucifix, and said: This will be my artillery. On February 7, 1878, he died in the Vatican; and Leo XIII was elected on February 20, 1878.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Seventh Epoch: from Joseph Smith, Jr., to Ezra Taft Benson (c.1805 A.D. - c.1990 A.D. and beyond)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized as an institution among men, on the sixth day of April, 1830. A background into the character and works of Joseph Smith, Jr., who was appointed the first president and prophet of the Church by the voice of its members, is herewith provided from the extracts of his words which he had written in defense against those who found him not worthy to be a prophet of the Lord; for he had transgressed the commandments which were given to him, before his baptism into the Church, and even after his baptism and having obtained the keys pertaining to his office. Thus he became guilty by reason of his fall and transgressions. Furthermore, he took upon himself glory to which he was not entitled; for he pretended to translate the Book of Mormon directly from the plates, and prophecied in the name of the Lord things which were not of the Lord, but were the imaginings of his own heart; nor did Joseph Smith, Jr., or Professor Anthon of New York interpret the Egyptian symbols correctly, but falsely and fraudulently. Surely the Holy One of Israel can enable man to reach the highest heights, to serve and build His Kingdom, to magnify one's calling, and indeed He upbraideth not; but man is also given the wondrous gift of agency, the gift of free-will, liberty and choice, which if used in error and rebellion, causes man to fall and the presence of the Lord is withdrawn from him. Yea, the grace of the Lord did enable Joseph Smith to reach the fulfillment of his visions, dreams and aspirations, but the man fell in the tempter's snare and the snares of his own heart. Thus the presence of the Lord was withdrawn from him, and all His gifts and blessings also. By the year 1842, some two years before his martyrdom at Carthage jail, in Illinois, he reached the depths whereby he could no longer discern the whisperings of the Holy Spirit, for his mind became deluded and his soul corrupt. He fell into the bondage of eternal misery, into the realm of the spiritually dead; and came to be under the power and influence of the forces of darkness, the subterranean region of the underworld.

The fall and character of Joseph Smith can be observed in all of his interpretations and translations of the Egyptian hieroglyphs and symbolisms, found in the records known as the Book of Abraham. One such example of his explanations is shown on the next page. No prophet since the world began has ever brought such shame, insult and disgrace to the Most Holy Name of the Lord of Hosts, to His Holy Kingdom, and to the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, as did Joseph Smith in his later years in Nauvoo, Illinois; while he was still appointed the first president and prophet of the eternal church of Christ. His translation and interpretation of Facsimile No. 2 in the Book of Abraham, shown on the next page, reveals the depth of his fall. Woe to the man who hath brought the Lord's condemnation upon His Church and the chosen seed, and hath brought confusion and doubt in Israel; but, yea, the Lord's infinite wisdom and divine judgements are never-ending and always fulfilling;

Facsimile No.2 from the Book of Abraham

(A detailed explanation is provided on page 62)

Joseph Smith's explanation (Fig.3): "Is made to represent God (the Lord God of Israel) sitting upon his throne, clothed with power and authority; with a crown of eternal life upon his head; representing also the grand Key-words of the Holy Priesthood, as revealed to Adam in the Garden of Eden, as also to Seth, Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, and all to whom the Priesthood was revealed."

Commentary: It is not a representation of the Lord God of Israel, the True and Living God of the heavens and the earth; but it represents the Egyptian hawk-faced god Horus, of the temporal world in his celestial barque; in his left hand is the scepter of dominion, and over his head is the sun-disk; the symbol (𓂀) is called the Udjat eye, the emblem of Horus; under the Udjat eye is the stand for lotus flowers (for out of the lotus flower came the sun-god).

Joseph Smith's explanation (Fig.5): "Is called in Egyptian Enish-go-on-dosh; this is one of the governing planets also, and is said by the Egyptians to be the Sun, and to borrow its light from Kolob through the medium of Kae-e-vanrash, which is the grand Key, or, in other words, the governing power, which governs fifteen other fixed planets or stars, as also Floeese or the Moon, the Earth and the Sun in their annual revolutions. This planet receives its power through the medium of Kli-flos-is-es, or Hah-ko-kah-beam, the stars represented by numbers 22 and 23, receiving light from revolutions of Kolob."

Commentary: Not one word of the above explanation is true or applies to (Figure 5), not one single word; for it represents the realm of the dead or the underworld, which is upside down. It is also called the "western world," the world of the spiritually and physically dead. Both the gods of the dead and their multitudes are as numerous as stars in the sky and sand upon the sea shore. They are forever cut off from the presence of the Son of God, but the Father hath assigned angels to minister unto their temporal and spiritual needs.

Joseph Smith's explanation (Fig.6): "Represents earth in its four quarters."

Commentary: It does not represent the earth; but represents the canopic jars or the four sons of Horus within which the embalmed organs Imsety (liver), Hapi (lungs), Duamutef (stomach), and Qebehsenuef (intestines) are placed and buried with the embalmed body of the deceased.

Joseph Smith's explanation (Fig.7): "Represents God (the Lord God of Israel) sitting upon his throne, revealing through the heavens the grand Key-words of the Priesthood; as, also, the sign of the Holy Ghost unto Abraham, in the form of a dove."

Commentary: Nay, God forbid. It does not represent our Mighty and Powerful and Living God of Glory; but it represents the god of the dead in the realm of the underworld, who dwells in the world which is forever upside down; the world where good is bad and bad is good, and black is white and white is black.

for now hath fallen the rider backward, because a serpent by the way, an adder in the Lord's path, hath bitten the horse's heel.

Beginning on March 1, 1842, Joseph Smith's translation from the Egyptian papyri was published serially in the Times and Seasons in Nauvoo, Illinois; an example of which has been shown on the previous page. The following excerpts are from Joseph Smith's official testimony and account (history), which were prepared by him in 1838 in defense against those who found him not worthy of being a prophet in Israel. These excerpts were also published serially in the Times and Seasons, the newspaper of the Mormons, just two weeks after the translation of the Egyptian papyri, on March 15, 1842:

TESTIMONY AND ACCOUNT OF JOSEPH SMITH

Owing to the many reports which have been put in circulation by evil-disposed and designing persons, in relation to the rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, all of which have been designed by the authors to militate against its character as a Church and its progress in the world — I have been induced to write this history (account), to disabuse the public mind, and put all inquiries after truth in possession of the facts, as they have transpired, in relation both to myself and the Church, so far as I have such facts in my possession. In this history (account) I shall present the various events in relation to this church as they have transpired, or as they at present exist, being now the eighth year since the organization of the said church (1838).

I was born in the year 1805, on the twenty-third day of December, in the town of Sharon, Windsor County, State of Vermont . . . My father, Joseph Smith, Sr., left the state of Vermont, and moved to Palmyra, Ontario (now Wayne) County, in the state of New York, when I was in my tenth year, or thereabouts. In about four years after my father's arrival in Palmyra, he moved with his family into Manchester in the same county of Ontario. His family consisted of eleven souls, namely: my father Joseph Smith, my mother Lucy Smith (whose name previous to her marriage was Mack, daughter of Solomon Mack); my brothers Alvin (who died November 19, 1823, in the 26th year of his age), Hyrum, myself, Samuel Harrison, William, Don Carlos; and my sisters Sophronia, Catherine, and Lucy.

Some time in the second year after our removal to Manchester, there was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. It commenced with the Methodists, but soon became general among all the sects in that region of country. Indeed, the whole district of country seemed affected by it; and great multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties, which created no small stir and division amongst the people, some crying, "Lo, here!" and others "Lo, there!" Some were contending for the Methodist faith, some for the Presbyterian, and some for the Baptist.

For, notwithstanding the great love which the converts to these different faiths expressed at the time of their conversion, and the great zeal manifested by the respective clergy, who were active in getting up and promoting this extraordinary scene of religious feeling, in order to have everybody converted, as they were pleased to call it, let them join what sect they pleased; yet when the converts began to file off, some to one party and some to another, it was seen that the seemingly good feelings of both priests and the converts were more pretended than real; for a scene of great confusion and bad feelings ensued — priest contending against priest, and convert against convert; so that all their good feelings one for another, if they ever had any, were entirely lost in a strife of words and a contest about opinions.

I was at this time in my fifteenth year. My father's family was proselyted to the Presbyterian faith, and four of them joined that church, namely, my mother, Lucy, my brothers Hyrum and Samuel Harrison, and my sister Sophronia. During this time of great excitement my mind was called up to serious reflection and great uneasiness; but though my feelings were deep and often poignant, still I kept myself aloof from all these parties, though I attended their several meetings as often as occasion would permit. In process of time my mind became somewhat partial to the Methodist sect, and I felt some desire to be united with them; but so great were the confusion and strife among the different denominations, that it was impossible for a person young as I was, and so unacquainted with men and things, to come to any certain conclusion who was right and who was wrong.

My mind was at times greatly excited, the cry and tumult were so great and incessant. The Presbyterians were most decided against the Baptists and Methodists, and used all the powers of both reason and sophistry to prove their errors, or, at least, to make the people think they were in error. On the other hand, the Baptists and Methodists in their turn were equally zealous in endeavoring to establish their own tenets and disprove all others. In the midst of this war of words and tumult of opinions, I often said to myself: What is to be done? Who of all these parties are right? Or, are they all wrong together? If any one of them be right, which is it, and how shall I know it?

While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the Epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads: If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. I reflected on it again and again, knowing that if any person needed wisdom from God, I did; for how to act I did not know, and unless I could get more wisdom than I then had, I would never know; for the teachers of religion of the different sects understood the same passages of the scripture so differently as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible. At length I came to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs, that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to "ask of God," concluding that if he gave wisdom to them that lacked wisdom, and would give liberally, and not upbraid, I might venture.

So, in accordance with this, my determination to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful, clear day, early in the spring of 1820. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt, for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally. After I had retired to the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me, and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such an astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction. But, exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction — not to an imaginary ruin, but to power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being — just at this moment of great alarm, I saw (in a vision) a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other — This is my beloved Son. Hear Him!

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner, therefore, did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong) — and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong; and the personage who addressed me said that all creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors (preachers) were all corrupt; that, "they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me, they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof." He again forbade me to join with any of them; and many other things did he say unto me, which I cannot write at this time. When I came to myself again, I found myself lying on my back, looking up into heaven. When the light had departed, I had no strength; but recovering in some degree, I went home. And as I leaned up to the fireplace, mother inquired what the matter was. I replied, "Never mind, all is well — I am well enough off." I then said to my mother, "I have learned for myself that Presbyterianism is not true." It seems as though the adversary was aware, at a very early period of my life, that I was destined to prove a disturber and an annoyer of his kingdom; else why should the powers of darkness combine against me? Why the opposition and persecution that arose against me, almost in my infancy?

Some few days after I had this vision, I happened to be in company with one of the Methodist preachers, who was very active in the before-mentioned religious excitement; and, conversing with him on the subject of religion, I took occasion to give him an account of the vision which I had had. I was greatly surprised at his behavior; he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the devil, that there were no such things as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there would never be any more of them.

I soon found, however, that my telling the story had excited a great deal of prejudice against me among professors of religion, and was the cause of great persecution, which continued to increase; and though I was an obscure boy, only between fourteen and fifteen years of age, and my circumstances in life such as to make a boy of no consequence in the world, yet men of high standing would take notice sufficient to excite the public mind against me, and create a bitter persecution; and this was common among all the sects — all united to persecute me.

It caused me serious reflection then, and often has since, how very strange it was that an obscure boy, of a little over fourteen years of age, and one, too, who was doomed to the necessity of obtaining a scanty maintenance by his daily labor, should be thought a character of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the great ones of the most popular sects of the day, and in a manner to create in them a spirit of the most bitter persecution and reviling. But strange or not, so it was, and it was often the cause of great sorrow to myself.

However, it was nevertheless a fact that I had beheld a vision. I have thought since, that I felt much like Paul, when he made his defense before King Agrippa, and related the account of the vision he had when he saw a light, and heard a voice; but still there were but few who believed him; some said he was dishonest, others said he was mad; and he was ridiculed and reviled. But all this did not destroy the reality of his vision. He had seen a vision, he knew he had, and all the persecution under heaven could not make it otherwise; and though they should persecute him unto death, yet he knew, and would know to his latest breath, that he had both seen a light and heard a voice speaking unto him, and all the world could not make him think or believe otherwise.

So it was with me. I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was led to say in my heart: Why persecute me for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision; and who am I that I can withstand God, or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation.

I had now got my mind satisfied so far as the sectarian world was concerned — that it was not my duty to join with any of them, but to continue as I was until further directed. I had found the testimony of James to be true — that a man who lacked wisdom might ask of God, and obtain, and not be upbraided.

I continued to pursue my common vocations in life until the twenty-first of September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, all the time suffering severe persecution at the hands of all classes of men, both religious and irreligious, because I continued to affirm that I had seen a vision.

During the space of time which intervened between the time I had the vision and the year eighteen hundred and twenty-three — having been forbidden to join any of the religious sects of the day, and being of very tender years, and persecuted by those who ought to have been my friends and to have treated me kindly, and if they supposed me to be deluded to have endeavored in a proper and affectionate manner to have reclaimed me — I was left to all kinds of temptations; and, mingling with all kinds of society, I frequently fell into many foolish errors, and displayed the weakness of youth, and the foibles of human nature; which, I am sorry to say, led me into divers temptations, offensive in the sight of God. In making this confession, no one need suppose me guilty of any great or malignant sins. A disposition to commit such was never in my nature. But I was guilty of levity, and sometimes associated with jovial company, etc., not consistent with that character which ought to be maintained by one who was called of God as I had been. But this will not seem very strange to any one who recollects my youth, and is acquainted with my native cheery temperament.

In consequence of these things, I often felt condemned for my weakness and imperfections; when, on the evening of the above-mentioned twenty-first of September, after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to Almighty God for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know of my state of standing before him; for I had full confidence in obtaining a divine manifestation, as I previously had one.

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God, I discovered a light appearing in my room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside, standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor.

He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant. His hands were naked, and his arms also, a little above the wrists; so, also, were his feet naked, as were his legs, a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing on but this robe, as it was open, so that I could see into his bosom.

Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceedingly light, but not so very bright as immediately around his person. When I first looked upon him, I was afraid; but the fear soon left me.

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni; that God had a work for me to do; and that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people.

He said there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fulness of the everlasting Gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants;

Also, that there were two stones fastened to a breastplate, constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim — deposited with the plates; and the possession and use of these stones were what constituted "seers" in ancient or former times; and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book.

After telling me these things, he commenced quoting the prophecies of the Old Testament. He first quoted part of the third chapter of Malachi; and he quoted also the fourth or last chapter of the same prophecy, though with a little variation from the way it reads in our Bibles. Instead of quoting the first verse as it reads in our books, he quoted it thus:

> For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall burn as stubble; for they that come shall burn them, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

> And, again, he quoted the fifth verse thus:

> Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

> He also quoted the next verse differently:

> And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers. If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at His coming.

In addition to these, he quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying that it was about to be fulfilled. He quoted also the third chapter of Acts, twenty-second and twenty-third verses, precisely as they stand in our New Testament. He said that that prophet was Christ; but the day had not yet come when "they who would not hear his voice should be cut off from among the people," but soon would come.

He also quoted the second chapter of Joel, from the twenty-eighth verse to the last. He also said that this was not yet fulfilled, but was soon to be. And he further stated that the fulness of the Gentiles was soon to come in. He quoted many other passages of scripture, and offered many explanations which cannot be mentioned here.

Again, he told me, that when I got those plates of which he had spoken — for the time that they should be obtained was not yet fulfilled — I should not show them to any person; neither the breastplate with the Urim and Thummim; only to those to whom I should be commanded to show them; if I did I should be destroyed. While he was conversing with me about the plates, the vision was opened to my mind that I could see the place where the plates were deposited, and that so clearly and distinctly that I knew the place again when I visited it.

After this communication, I saw the light in the room begin to gather immediately around the person of him who had been speaking to me, and it continued to do so until the room was again left dark, except just around him; when, instantly I saw, as it were, a conduit open right up into heaven, and he ascended till he entirely disappeared, and the room was left as it had been before this heavenly light had made its appearance.

I lay musing on the singularity of the scene, and marveling greatly at what had been told to me by this extraordinary messenger; when, in the midst of my meditation, I suddenly discovered that my room was again beginning to get lighted, and in an instant, as it were, the same heavenly messenger was again by my bedside.

He commenced, and again related the very same things which he had done at his first visit, without the least variation; which having done, he informed me of great judgments which were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence; and that these grievous judgments would come on the earth in this generation. Having related these things, he again ascended as he had done before.

By this time, so deep were the impressions made on my mind, that sleep had fled from my eyes, and I lay overwhelmed in astonishment at what I had both seen and heard. But what was my surprise when again I beheld the same messenger at my bedside, and heard him rehearse or repeat over again to me the same things as before; and added a caution to me, telling me that Satan would try to tempt me (in consequence of the indigent circumstances of my father's family), to get the plates for the purpose of getting rich. This he forbade me, saying that I must have no other object in view in getting the plates but to glorify God, and must not be influenced by any other motive than that of building his kingdom; otherwise I could not get them.

After this third visit, he again ascended into heaven as before, and I was again left to ponder on the strangeness of what I had just experienced; when almost immediately after the heavenly messenger had ascended from me for the third time, the cock crowed, and I found that day was approaching, so that our interviews must have occupied the whole of that night.

I shortly after arose from my bed, and, as usual, went to the necessary labors of the day; but, in attempting to work as at other times, I found my strength so exhausted as to render me entirely unable. My father, who was laboring along with me, discovered something to be wrong with me, and told me to go home. I started with the intention of going to the house; but, in attempting to cross the fence out of the field where we were, my strength entirely failed me, and I fell helpless on the ground, and for a time was quite unconscious of anything.

The first thing that I can recollect was a voice speaking unto me, calling me by name. I looked up, and beheld the same messenger standing over my head, surrounded by light as before. He then again related unto me all that he had related to me the previous night, and commanded me to go to my father and tell him of the vision and commandments which I had received.

I obeyed; I returned to my father in the field, and rehearsed the whole matter to him. He replied to me that it was of God, and told me to go and do as commanded by the messenger. I left the field, and went to the place where the messenger had told me the plates were deposited; and owing to the distinctness of the vision which I had had concerning it, I knew the place the instant that I arrived there.

Convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario County, New York, stands a hill of considerable size, and the most elevated of any in the neighborhood. On the west side of this hill, not far from the top, under a stone of considerable size, lay the plates, deposited in a stone box. This stone was thick and rounding in the middle on the upper side, and thinner towards the edges, so that the middle part of it was visible above the ground, but the edge all around was covered with earth.

Having removed the earth, I obtained a lever, which I got fixed under the edge of the stone, and with a little exertion raised it up. I looked in, and there indeed did I behold the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate, as stated by the messenger. The box in which they lay was formed by laying stones together in some kind of cement. In the bottom of the box were laid two stones crossways of the box, and on these stones lay the plates and the other things with them.

I made an attempt to take them out, but was forbidden by the messenger, and was again informed that the time for bringing them forth had not yet arrived, neither would it, until four years from that time; but he told me that I should come to that place precisely in one year from that time, and that he would there meet with me, and that I should continue to do so until the time should come for obtaining the plates.

Accordingly, as I had been commanded, I went at the end of each year, and at each time I found the same messenger there, and received instruction and intelligence from him at each of our interviews, respecting what the Lord was going to do, and how and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted in the last days.

As my father's worldly circumstances were very limited, we were under the necessity of laboring with our hands, hiring out by day's work and otherwise, as we could get opportunity. Sometimes we were at home, and sometimes abroad, and by continuous labor were enabled to get a comfortable maintenance.

In the year 1823 my father's family met with a great affliction by the death of my eldest brother, Alvin. In the month of October, 1825, I hired with an old gentleman by the name of Josiah Stoal, who lived in Chenango County, state of New York. He had heard something of a silver mine having been opened by the Spaniards in Harmony, Susquehanna County, state of Pennsylvania; and had, previous to my hiring to him, been digging, in order, if possible, to discover the mine. After I went to live with him, he took me, with the rest of his hands, to dig for the silver mine, at which I continued to work for nearly a month, without success in our undertaking, and finally I prevailed with the old gentleman to cease digging after it. Hence arose the very prevalent story of my having been a money-digger.

During the time that I was thus employed, I was put to board with a Mr. Isaac Hale, of that place; it was there I first saw my wife (his daughter), Emma Hale. On the 18th of January, 1827, we were married, while I was yet employed in the service of Mr. Stoal.

Owing to my continuing to assert that I had seen a vision, persecution still followed me, and my wife's father's family were very much opposed to our being married. I was, therefore, under the necessity of taking her elsewhere; so we went and were married at the house of Squire Tarbill, in South Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York. Immediately after my marriage, I left Mr. Stoal's, and went to my father's, and farmed with him that season.

At length the time arrived for obtaining the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate. On the twenty-second day of September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, having gone as usual at the end of another year to the place where they were deposited, the same heavenly messenger delivered them up to me with this charge: that I should be responsible for them; that if I should let them go carelessly, or through any neglect of mine, I should be cut off; but that if I would use all my endeavors to preserve them, until he, the messenger, should call for them, they should be protected.

I soon found out the reason why I had received such strict charges to keep them safe, and why it was that the messenger had said that when I had done what was required at my hand, he would call for them. For no sooner was it known that I had them, than the most strenuous exertions were used to get them from me. Every stratagem that could be invented was resorted to for that purpose. The persecution became more bitter and severe than before, and multitudes were on the alert continually to get them from me if possible. But by the wisdom of God, they remained safe in my hands, until I had accomplished by them what was required at my hand. When, according to arrangements, the messenger called for them, I delivered them up to him; and he has them in his charge until this day, being the second day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty eight.

The excitement, however, still continued, and rumor with her thousand tongues was all the time employed in circulating falsehoods about my father's family, and about myself. If I were to relate a thousandth part of them, it would fill up volumes. The persecution, however, became so intolerable that I was under the necessity of leaving Manchester, and going with my wife to Susquehanna County, in the state of Pennsylvania. While preparing to start — being very poor, and the persecution so heavy upon us that there was no probability that we would ever be otherwise — in the midst of our afflictions we found a friend in a gentleman by the name of Martin Harris, who came to us and gave me fifty dollars to assist us on our journey. Mr. Harris was a resident of Palmyra township, Wayne County, in the state of New York, and a farmer of respectability.

By this timely aid was I enabled to reach the place of my destination in Pennsylvania; and immediately after my arrival there I commenced copying the characters off the plates. I copied a considerable number of them, and by means of the Urim and Thummim I translated some of them, which I did between the time I arrived at the house of my wife's father, in the month of December, and the February following.

Sometime in this month of February, the aforementioned Mr. Martin Harris came to our place, got the characters which I had drawn off the plates, and started with them to the city of New York. For what took place relative to him and the characters, I refer to his own account of the circumstances, as he related them to me after his return, which was as follows:

"I went to the city of New York, and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Charles Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said that they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic; and he said they were true characters. He gave me a certificate, certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house, when Mr. Anthon called me back, and asked me how the young man found that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it unto him.

"He then said to me, 'Let me see that certificate.' I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying that there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied, 'I cannot read a sealed book.' I left him and went to Dr. Mitchell, who sanctioned what Professor Anthon had said respecting both the characters and the translation."

On the 5th day of April, 1829, Oliver Cowdery came to my house, until which time I had never seen him. He stated to me that having been teaching school in the neighborhood where my father resided, and my father being one of those who sent to the school, he went to board for a season at his house, and while there the family related to him the circumstances of my having received the plates, and accordingly he had come to make inquiries of me.

Two days after the arrival of Mr. Cowdery (being the 7th of April) I commenced to translate the Book of Mormon, and he began to write for me.

We still continued the work of translation, when, in the ensuing month (May, 1829), we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, that we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying:

> Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.

He said this Aaronic Priesthood had not the power of laying on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and that afterwards he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized. I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me — after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic Priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same Priesthood — for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion and conferred this Priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James and John, who held the keys of the Priesthood of Melchizedek, which Priesthood, he said, would in due time be conferred on us, and that I should be called the first Elder of the Church, and he (Oliver Cowdery) the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, 1829, that we were ordained under the hand of this messenger, and baptized.

Immediately on our coming up out of the water after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our Heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery, than the Holy Ghost fell upon him, and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, so soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when, standing up, I prophesied concerning the rise of this Church, and many other things connected with the Church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation.

Our minds being now enlightened, we began to have the scriptures laid open to our understandings, and the true meaning and intention of their more mysterious passages revealed unto us in a manner which we never could attain to previously, nor ever before had thought of. In the meantime we were forced to keep secret the circumstances of having received the Priesthood and our having been baptized, owing to a spirit of persecution which had already manifested itself in the neighborhood.

We had been threatened with being mobbed, from time to time, and this, too, by professors of religion. And their intentions of mobbing us were only counteracted by the influence of my wife's father's family (under Divine providence), who had become very friendly to me, and who were opposed to mobs, and were willing that I should be allowed to continue the work of translation without interruption; and therefore offered and promised us protection from all unlawful proceedings, as far as in them lay.

Such is the account and a biographical sketch of Joseph Smith, Jr., who was appointed by voice of the people the first president and prophet of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; which church was organized as an institution among men, on the sixth day of April, 1830, in the United States; while (pope) Saint Pius VIII was the canonically chosen pope of Rome. Now, know ye O elders of Israel that the roots of this church are embedded in the foundation laid by our fathers, even by the Lord Jesus Christ; yea, by the same who was called of God and made high priest after the Order of Melchizedek (c.30-33 A.D.), forever; who in the days of his flesh offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save him from death; and was heard, in that he feared. Though he was the Son of the living God, yet he learned obedience by the things he suffered; and being made perfect in the refiner's fire, by going through the experiences of mortality in the world, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him. For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; and have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way. No man taketh this honor upon himself, except he be called of God, as were Moses and Aaron. Christ also glorified not himself when made high priest, and the Father said unto him: Thou art my Son, today I have begotten thee.

Peter, James, and John were ordained Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, between 30 and 33 A.D., and were blessed by the Lord in these words: . . . Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, He may give you . . . And the Lord blessed Peter, saying: Blessed art thou Simon son of Jonah. . . And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter (rock), and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

St. Peter the Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ was martyred in Rome, c.64-67 A.D.; and the canonically chosen popes of Rome became the successors to Peter. The first pope to succeed St. Peter was St. Linus (c.67-76 A.D.); St. Anacletus or Cletus succeeded St. Linus and reigned from 76 to 88 A.D., and St. Clement succeeded St. Anacletus (88-97 A.D.). In this manner, after the succession of two hundred and fifty-three canonically chosen popes of Rome, from St. Linus (67-76 A.D.) to St. Pius VIII (1829-30 A.D.), the Order of the bishops and popes continued to be the bearers of the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God (Melchizedek Priesthood); while the two lesser Orders of priests and deacons, with sub-orders, continued to deal with the ceremonial, ritualistic, and temporal aspects of the government of the church of Christ.

And in the United States, the Melchizedek Priesthood was conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the year 1829, under the hands of Peter, James, and John, who were sent by the Lord to ordain them into the Holy Order. Thus, on April 6, 1830, the powers and authorities of the eternal church of Christ were separated; when the policy of strict adherence to tradition and limitations became the policy of the Catholic (universal) Church of Rome; and in the United States the pursuit and realization of the fulness of the scriptural knowledge and understanding became the policy of the newly organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and the latter-day saints became separate from the former-day saints of the ancient Church.

Then it came to pass that the Three Witnesses were called by revelation to choose the twelve apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and on February 14, 1835, were blessed by the laying on of the hands of the First Presidency of the Church (Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams) to ordain the Twelve.

And after the martyrdom of Joseph Smith by a mob in Carthage Jail, in Illinois, on June 27, 1844 (for his name was prophecied to be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; and it was to be both good and evil spoken of him among all people), Brigham Young was named the next president of the church followed by John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, Heber J. Grant, George Albert Smith, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith, Harold B. Lee, Spencer W. Kimball, and Ezra Taft Benson (the likeness of these twelve presidents of the church is shown in the photographs on the next page). But it was not until the First Presidency of Ezra Taft Benson, Gordon B. Hinckley, and Thomas S. Monson and the Twelve Apostles of their time (the years 1990 and 1991 A.D.) that the culmination of the efforts to bring forth the long-foretold scriptures of the fulness of time, and the preparatory work to lay the foundation for the Millennial reign of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ officially began; requiring over one hundred and forty-six years from the time of Joseph Smith's martyrdom, to bring to pass the preparations for the ushering in of the fulness of time.

After the organization and establishment of the Church in 1830, on November 1, 1831, at a conference of the Elders held at Hiram, Ohio, specific actions relating to the publication of doctrine, covenants and commandments of the Lord were taken; and this compilation was called the Book of Commandments for the Government of the Church of Christ. During the selfsame conference, the Elders testified individually to their conviction of their Divine origin; and they were willing to proclaim their testimony to the world.

The official actions taken at this conference included: their desire to preach the Gospel to the inhabitants of the earth, to pave the way for the gathering of the tribes of Israel, and to build up and establish Zion and Jerusalem, prior to the Second Coming of the Messiah. Also, in accordance with the official actions taken by the Church, the manuscript of the book of commandments of the Lord was sent to Independence, Missouri, then known as Zion, in care of Oliver Cowdery and John Whitmer. But on July 20, 1833, the printing plant at Independence and most of its contents, except a few unfinished copies of portions of the book, were destroyed by a mob. On September 24, 1834, at a meeting of the High Council in Kirtland, Ohio, a committee with Joseph Smith, Jr., as its head was formed to oversee the publication of the revelations of the Lord and other related matters. On August 17, 1835, this committee reported to a General Assembly of the Church, at Kirtland, Ohio, the completion of their labors. The congregation was seated in order of solemn assembly — each quorum of the Priesthood being in its place — and the acceptance of the revelations published under the title of, The Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter-day Saints, was unanimous; first by a separate vote of each quorum, then by a united vote of the entire assembly. The Testimony of the Twelve Apostles of the Church was also formalized, signed and presented to the assembly in the following manner:

> The Testimony of the Witnesses to the Book of the Lord's Commandments, which commandments He gave unto His Church through Joseph Smith, Jr., who was appointed for this purpose.
>
> We, therefore, feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of the earth, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men and verily true.
> We give this testimony unto the world, the Lord being our helper; and it is through the grace of God the Father, and His Son Jesus Christ, that we are permitted to have this privilege of bearing this testimony unto the world, in the which we rejoice exceedingly, praying the Lord always that the children of men may be profited thereby.

The revelations consisting of doctrine, covenants and commandments of the Lord, were first compiled in 1833 under the title, The Book of Commandments for the Government of the Church of Christ; and in 1835, under The Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Latter-day Saints. A total of one hundred and twenty-four such revelations of the Lord given to His Church between September 21, 1823, and September 30, 1978, are again compiled and rewritten in the language of Man, by the power of the Holy Ghost; but in chronological order (including the location at which they were given), for the Millennial-day Saints of the eternal church of Jesus Christ; who shall set the foundations for the Millennial reign of our Lord and Savior, and bring to pass the fulfillment of all the prophecies recorded in the Holy Writ, by the prophets of God.

Doctrine, Covenants and Commandments (D&C) of the Church of Lord Messiah Jesus Christ of Millennial-day Saints

SECTION 1
(September 21, 1823; Manchester, New York)

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers. If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at His coming.

(These words were spoken by Moroni, an angel of the Lord; last of a long line of historians who had compiled the record now known as the Book of Mormon.)

SECTION 2
(July, 1828; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

The works, designs, and purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught. For God doth not walk in crooked paths, neither doth He turn to the right-hand nor to the left; neither doth He vary from that which He hath commanded, and His course is one eternal round.

Remember, remember that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men. For although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at naught the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own heart, overwhelmed by carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of the Just and Living God.

Behold, you (Joseph Smith, Jr.) have been entrusted with these things, but how strictly did you adhere to the commandments, and remember the promises that were made to you, if you did not transgress them? And how often did you choose to be led away in the persuasion of men, and fell in their snares? For behold, you should have not feared man more than God, as other men do and set at naught the counsels of God and despise His Word.

Yet, should you have been faithful, He would have extended His arm and supported you against all the fiery darts of the adversary; and He would have been with you in every time of trouble. Behold, thou art Joseph Smith, Jr., and thou wast chosen to do the works of the Lord; but because of your transgression, if you are not aware of it, you will fall. But remember, God is merciful; therefore, repent of that which you have done, which is contrary to the commandments which I gave you. You are still chosen and called to do the work. Except you do this, you shall be delivered up and become as other men, and have no more gift. And when you delivered up that which God hath given you sight and power to translate, you delivered up that which was sacred into the hands of a wicked man (Martin Harris); who hath set at naught the counsels of God, and hath broken the most sacred promises which were made before God, and has depended upon his own judgement and boasted in his own wisdom. This is the reason that you (Joseph Smith, Jr.) lost the privileges for a season. For you have suffered the counsel of your director (the Holy Ghost) to be trampled upon from the beginning.

Nevertheless, my work shall go forth, for inasmuch as the knowledge of a Savior has come unto the world, through the testimony of the Jews; even so the knowledge of a Savior shall come to my people — to the Nephites, the Jacobites, the Josephites, the Zoramites, through the testimony of their fathers. This testimony shall also come to the knowledge of the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites, and the Ishmaelites, who dwindled in disbelief because of the iniquity of their fathers; whom the Lord hath suffered to destroy their brethren the Nephites, because of their iniquities and abominations. And for this very purpose are these plates preserved, which contain these records — that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled, which He had made unto His people. And that the Lamanites might come to the knowledge of their fathers; and that they might know the promises of the Lord to them; if they only believe the Gospel and rely upon their Messiah, Jesus Christ; and that through faith in the Savior, repentance and fulfillment of the ordinances of my Gospel, they may be saved and liberated. Amen.

(Summer, 1828; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Now, behold, I say unto you (Joseph Smith, Jr.) that because you have delivered up those writings which were given to you by the power of God to translate by means of Urim and Thummim, into the hands of a wicked man (Martin Harris), you have lost them. You have also lost your gift at the same time, and your mind became darkened. Nevertheless, it is now restored unto you again; therefore see that you are faithful, and continue diligently unto the finishing of that portion of the work of translation which you had already begun. Do not run faster or labor more than you have strength, and means provided to enable you to translate. Pray always,' that you may come off conqueror: yea, that you may conquer Satan, and escape the hands of the servants of Satan that do uphold his work. Behold, they have sought to destroy you; yea, even the man whom you have trusted has sought to destroy you. And for this cause I said that he (Martin Harris) is a wicked man; for he sought to take away the things wherewith you have been entrusted; and he has also sought to destroy your gift.

And because you have delivered them up, yea, that which was sacred, unto wickedness; behold, Satan hath put it into their hearts to alter the words which were caused to be written, and were translated under your hands. Behold, because they have altered the words, they read contrary to that which was written and translated. And on this wise the devil has sought to lay a cunning plan, that he may destroy this work; that by lying they may say they have caught you in the words which you (Joseph Smith, Jr.) have pretended to translate.

Verily, I say unto you that I will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil designs in this thing. For behold, he hath put it into their hearts to get you to tempt the Lord your God, in asking to translate it again. And then they say and think in their hearts — we will see if God has indeed given him power to translate; if so, he will also give him power again; and if God doth give him power again to translate, and if he bringeth forth the same words, behold, we have the same with us, which we have altered. Therefore, the twain shall not agree, and we will say that he has lied in his words; and destroy him and also the work. And we will do this that we may not be ashamed in the end, and that we may get glory of the world. Verily, verily I say unto you, that Satan has great hold upon their hearts, and stirreth them up to iniquity against that which is good. And their hearts are corrupt, full of wickedness and abominations, loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil; therefore they will not ask of me. Satan stirreth them up that he may lead their souls to destruction; and thus he had laid a cunning plan, thinking to destroy the work of God, but I will require this at their hands, and it shall turn to their shame and condemnation in the day of judgement. Yea, he stirreth up their hearts to anger against this work, and saith unto them: Deceive and lie in wait to catch, that ye may destroy; behold there is no harm in it. And he flattereth them, saying it is no sin to lie that they may catch a man in a lie, that they may destroy him. Thus he flattereth them, and leadeth them along until he draggeth their souls down to hell, and causeth them to be caught in their own snares.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Wo be unto him that lieth to deceive because he supposeth that another lieth to deceive; for such are not exempt from the justice of God. Now, behold, they have altered the words, because Satan saith unto them: He hath deceived you. Thus he flattereth them to do iniquity, to get them to tempt the Lord your God. Behold, I say unto you, that you shall not translate again those words which have gone forth out of your hand. For, behold, they shall not accomplish their evil designs in lying against those words. For behold, if you should bring forth the same words they will say that you have lied and that you have pretended to translate; and if the words are not exactly the same, then they will say that you have contradicted yourself. And, behold, they will publish this, and Satan will harden the hearts of the people to stir them up to anger against you, that they will not believe the words. Thus Satan thinketh to overpower your testimony in this generation, that the work may not come forth in this generation. But behold, I show unto you wisdom, and give you commandments and guidance concerning these things: Show it not unto the world until you have accomplished the work of translation. Marvel not that which I have spoken, for I said, show it not unto the world, that you may be preserved: Behold, I do not say that you shall not show it unto the righteous; but as you cannot always judge the righteous, nor always tell the wicked from the righteous, therefore I say unto you to hold your peace until I shall see fit to make all things known unto the world concerning this matter. And now, verily I say unto you that an account of those things which have gone out of your hands is engraven upon the plates of Nephi; yea, and you remember it was said in those writings that a more particular account was given of these things upon the plates of Nephi. And now, the account which is engraven upon the plates of Nephi is more particular, in my wisdom; therefore I would bring to the people the knowledge of this account. Therefore, the translation of the engravings down till you come to the reign of King Benjamin, or until you come to that which you have translated and retained, you shall publish as the record of Nephi; and those who have altered my words shall be confounded.

I will not suffer that they destroy my work; yea, I will show unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the devil. Behold, they have only got a part, or an abridgement of the account of Nephi. Behold, there are many things engraven upon the plates of Nephi which do throw greater views upon my gospel; therefore it is wisdom in me that you should translate this first part of the engravings of Nephi and send forth in this work. And, behold, all the remainder of this work does contain all those parts of my gospel which my holy prophets, yea, and also my disciples, desired in their prayers, should come forth unto this people. And I said unto them that it should be granted unto them according to their faith in their prayers; and, this was their prayer in faith — that my gospel, which I gave unto them, they might preach unto their brethren the Lamanites, and also unto all those who had become Lamanites because of their dissensions. Now, this is not all; their faith in prayers was also that this gospel should be made known, if possible, to other nations who should possess this land. And thus they did leave a blessing upon this land in their prayers, that whosoever should believe in this gospel in this land, might have eternal life; yea, that it might be free unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people. And now, behold, according to their faith in their prayers will I bring this part of my gospel to the knowledge of my people. Behold, I do not bring it to destroy that which they have received, but to build it up. And for this cause have I said: If this generation harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them; now I do not say this to destroy my church, but to build up my church. Therefore, whosoever belongeth to my church need not fear, for such shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. And those who do not fear me, nor keep my commandments, but build up churches unto themselves to get gain, and all those that do wickedly and build up the kingdom of the devil, yea, verily, verily, I say unto you that it is they that I will disturb and cause them to tremble and shake to the center.

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I came into my own, and my own received me not. I am the light which shineth in the darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not. I am he who said that other sheep have I which are not of this fold, unto my disciples, and many there were that understood me not. I will show unto this people that I had other sheep, and that they were a branch of the house of Jacob, and I will bring to light their marvelous works which they did in my name. Yea, and I will also bring to light my Gospel which was ministered unto them; and behold, they shall not deny that which you have received, but they shall build it up and bring to light the true points of my doctrine, the only doctrine which is in me. And this I do that I may establish my Gospel, that there may not be so much contention; yea, Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention concerning the points of my doctrine, and in these things they do err, for they do wrest the scriptures and do not understand them. Therefore, I will unfold unto them this great mystery; for, behold, I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chicks under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts, and come unto me and partake of the waters of life freely; behold, this is my doctrine: whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, fulfilling the ordinances of my Gospel and obeying my commandments, the same is my church. Whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore he is not of my church. And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth to the end, him will I establish upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him. And now, remember the words of Him who is the life and light of the world, your Redeemer, your Lord and your God. Amen.

(February, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men. Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve Him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to do the work; for behold, the field is white already to harvest; and he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul, and with faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence; and ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.

(March, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Behold, I say unto you that as my servant Martin Harris, whose heart is far from me, has desired a witness at my hand that you, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., have got the plates of which you have testified and borne record that you have received of me; now, behold, this shall you say unto him: He who spake unto you, saith that I the Lord, am God, and have given these things unto you (my servant Joseph Smith, Jr.) and have commanded you that you should stand as a witness of these things. Thus I have caused that you should enter into a covenant with me; that you should not show them except to those persons to whom I command you; and you have no power over them except that which I grant unto you. Now you have a gift to translate the plates, which is the first gift that I have bestowed upon you; that you should pretend no more to any other gift, until my purpose is fulfilled, for I will grant unto you no other gift until the task is finished.

Verily, I say unto you that woe shall come unto the inhabitants of the earth if they will not hearken unto my words. For hereforth you shall be ordained (into the Holy Priesthood) to go forth and declare my words unto the children of men. Behold, if they will not believe my words, they would not believe you, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., if it were possible that you should show them all these things which I have committed unto you.

Oh, this unbelieving and stiffnecked generation — mine anger is kindled against them. Behold, verily I say unto you (my servant Joseph Smith, Jr.) that I have preserved those things with which you have been entrusted, for a wise purpose; which shall be made known to the future generations. But this generation shall have my Word through you. In addition to your testimony, will be the testimony of three of my servants, whom I shall call and ordain; unto whom these things shall be shown, and they shall go forth with my words, given through you. Yea, they shall know for a surety that these things are true, for from heaven will I declare it unto them. And I will give them power that they may behold and view these things as they are; to none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony in this generation. In this shall be the beginning of the rising up and coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; the church clear as the moon, fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. And of the testimony of Three Witnesses will I send forth my Word. Behold, whosoever believeth on my words, them will I visit with the manifestation of my Spirit; and they shall be born of me, even of water and of the Spirit.

Thus, you (Joseph Smith, Jr.) must wait yet a little while, for ye are not yet ordained; and their testimony shall go forth unto the condemnation of this generation, if they harden their hearts against these witnesses; and a desolating scourge shall go forth among the inhabitants of the earth, and shall continue to be poured out from time to time, if they repent not; until the earth is become empty and the inhabitants consumed and utterly destroyed by the brightness of my Coming. Behold, I tell you these things, even as they were told of the destruction of Jerusalem; and my Word shall be verified and fulfilled, and not a yod nor a tittle shall fall to the ground.

Now I command you, my servant Joseph, to repent and walk more uprightly before me; and yield no more to the persuasions of men; that you be firm in keeping the commandments wherewith I have commanded you; and if you do this, behold, I shall grant you eternal life, even if you should be slain. Again, I speak unto you, my servant Joseph, concerning the man (Martin Harris) that desireth the witness. Behold, he exalts himself and does not humble himself sufficiently before me; but if he will bow down and humble himself in mighty prayer and faith, in the sincerity of his heart, then will I grant unto him a view of the things which he desires to see; that he may say unto the people of this generation: Behold, I have seen the things which the Lord hath shown unto Joseph Smith, Jr.; that I know of a surety that they are true, for I have seen them; that they have been shown unto me by the power of God and not of man. Thus, I the Lord command him (Martin Harris) that he shall say no more concerning these things, except that, I have seen them, and they have been shown unto me by the power of God. These are the words that he shall say. But if he speak otherwise, or deny this, he will break the covenant which he has made with me, and shall be condemned. Therefore, except he humble himself and acknowledge (confess) unto me the things that he has done which are wrong; and covenant with me to keep my commandments, and exercise faith in me, he shall have no such views, for I will grant unto him no views of the things of which I have spoken. In either case, I command you, my servant Joseph, that you see to it that he forsakes these things and do no more; nor trouble me any more concerning this matter.

Behold, I say unto thee Joseph, when thou hast translated a few more pages, thou shalt stop for a season, until I command thee again to proceed. Except thou do this, behold, thou shalt have no more gift, and I will take away the things which you have been entrusted with. Thou mayest know that I foresee the lying in wait to destroy thee, yea, I foresee that my servant Martin Harris humbleth not himself, and receive a witness from my hand, he will again fall into transgression. Furthermore, there are many that lie in wait to destroy thee from off the face of the earth. For this cause, that thy days may be prolonged, I have given unto thee these commandments. Yea, for this cause I have said: Stop, and stand still, until thou art guided; for I shall provide means whereby thou mayest accomplish thy task. And if thou art faithful in keeping the commandments, thou shalt be lifted up at the last day. Amen.

(April, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men. Behold, I am God. Give heed to my Word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow. Behold, the field is white already to harvest; therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God. Yea, whosoever thrusts in his sickle and reaps, the same is called of God. Therefore, if you will ask of me, you shall receive; if you will knock, it shall be opened unto you.

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you (Oliver Cowdery): Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion; seek not the riches of the world, but wisdom; then the mysteries of God shall be unfolded, and you shall be made rich. Verily, verily, I say unto you: Even as you desire of me, so it shall be granted unto you; and if you desire of doing much good in this generation, say nothing but repentance unto them; keep my commandments that ye may fall not and die not; and assist to bring forth my work according to my needs and purposes, then ye shall be blessed with my eternal grace and mercy. Behold thou hast a gift (of writing); and blessed art thou because of thy gift; it is a sacred gift that cometh from on high and lieth under. Behold, according to thy faithfulness, thou shalt know mysteries which are great and marvelous; and thou shalt exercise thy gift, that thou mayest find out sacred mysteries, and bring many to the knowledge of the truth; to convince them of their ways of error, iniquity, sin, and transgression. Make not thy gift known unto any, save those who are of thy faith. Trifle not with sacred things. If thou wilt do good, and remain faithful to the end, thou shalt be saved in the kingdom of God, which is the greatest of all the gifts of God; for there is no gift greater than the gift of salvation; yea, even the eternal and blissful salvation.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee (Oliver Cowdery): Blessed art thou for what thou hast done; for thou hast inquired of me; and behold, as often as thou hast inquired, thou hast received instruction of my Spirit. If it were not so, thou wouldst not have come to the place where thou standeth now. Behold, thou knowest that thy mind was enlightened, when thou didst inquire of me; and now I tell thee these things that thou mayest know that thou hast been enlightened by the Spirit of truth; yea, know also that there is none else save God that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thine heart. I tell thee these things as a witness unto thee, that the words or the works which thou hast been writing in the English language are true.

Therefore be diligent; and stand by my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., faithfully in whatsoever difficult circumstances he may be, for the Word's sake; admonish him in his faults, and also receive admonition of him. Be patient, be sober, be temperate; develop and increase faith, hope, charity and love. Behold, thou art Oliver (Cowdery), and I have spoken these words unto thee because of thy desires; therefore treasure up these words in thine heart; and be faithful and diligent in keeping the commandments of God, and I will encircle thee in the arms of my love. Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God; the same that came unto his own, and his own received Him not; the light that shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee (Oliver Cowdery), if thou desireth further witness, cast thy mind upon the night when thou cried unto me in thine heart, that thou mayest know the truth concerning these things. Did I not bring peace to thy mind concerning this matter? What greater witness can one have than from God? Now, behold, I grant thee another gift, if thou so desireth, to translate even as my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. Verily, verily, I say unto thee that there are records which contain much of my Gospel, which have been kept away from men, because of their wickedness. And now I command thee (Oliver Cowdery) that if thou hast good desires, a desire to lay up treasures for thyself in heaven, then shalt thou assist in bringing to light those parts of my scriptures which have been hidden because of the iniquity and unbelief of the people. And behold, I give unto thee and also unto my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., the keys of this gift, which shall bring to light this ministry; and in the mouth of two or more witnesses shall every word of the Gospel be established.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, if they reject my words and this part of my gospel and ministry, blessed are ye, for they can do no more unto you than unto me. And even if they do unto you even as they have done unto me, blessed are ye, for you shall dwell with me in glory. But if they reject not my Word and my ministry, blessed shall be they, and ye shall have joy in the fruit of your labors. Verily, verily, I say unto you, as I have said to my disciples (apostles), where two or more are gathered together in my name, there will I be in the midst of them, even so as I am in the midst of you.

Fear not to do good, my sons, for whatsoever ye sow, the same shall ye reap; therefore, if ye sow good, ye shall also reap good for your reward. Therefore fear not little flock; do good; let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my rock, they cannot prevail against it. Behold, you are not under my condemnation; go your ways and sin no more; with soberness perform the work which I have commanded you. Look unto me in your thoughts and action; doubt not, fear not. Remember the wounds which pierced my sides, and also the prints of nails in my hands and feet; be faithful, keep my commandments; and ye shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. Amen.

(April, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

And the Lord said unto me: John, my beloved, what desireth thou? For if thou shalt ask what thou wilt, it shall be granted unto thee. And I replied: Lord, give unto me power over death, that I may live and bring souls unto Thee. And the Lord said unto me: Verily, verily, I say unto thee, because thou desireth this, thou shalt tarry until I come in my glory, and shalt prophesy before nations, kindreds, tongues and people.

And the Lord said unto Peter: If I will that he (John) tarry till I come, what is that to thee? For he desireth of me that he might bring souls unto me; but thou desireth that thou mightest speedily come unto me in my kingdom. I say unto thee, Peter, this was a good desire; but my beloved John has desired that he might do more, a greater work among men than what he has done before. Yea, he has undertaken a greater work; therefore I will make him as flaming fire and a ministering angel; and he shall minister unto those on earth who shall become heirs of salvation; and I shall make thee to minister unto him and unto thy brother James; and unto you three will I give the power and the keys of this ministry, until I come. Verily I say unto you, ye shall both have according to your desires, for ye both joy in that which ye have desired.

(April, 1829; Harmony Pennsylvania)

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Oliver Cowdery, that assuredly as the Lord liveth, who is your God and your Redeemer, thou shalt receive knowledge of whatsoever things you shall ask in faith, with an honest heart, believing that you shall receive a knowledge concerning the engravings of old and ancient records, which contain those parts of my scriptures of which has been spoken by the manifestation of my Spirit. Yea, behold, I will tell you in your mind and in your heart, by the Holy Ghost, which shall come upon you, and dwell in your heart. Now, behold, this is the spirit of revelation, the spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea onto the dry ground. This is thy gift; use this gift, and thou shalt be blessed; for it shall deliver you out of the hands of your enemies; if it were not so, they would slay you and bring your soul to destruction. Oh, remember these words, and keep my commandments; for this is your gift. Now this is not all thy gift, for you have another gift, which is the gift of Aaron (Aaronic priesthood), which has revealed to you many things. Behold, there is no other power, save the power of God, that can cause this gift of Aaron to be with you. Therefore, doubt not, nor fear, for it is the gift of God; and you shall possess it, and do marvelous works; and no power shall be able to take it away from you, for it is the work of God. And whatsoever you shall ask of me by that means, the same will be granted unto you. Remember that without faith you can do nothing; therefore ask in faith. Trifle not with these things; do not ask for that which you ought not; ask that you may know the mysteries of God, and receive knowledge to translate these ancient records which have been hid up, that are sacred; and according to your faith it shall be done unto you. Behold, it is I that have spoken it; and I am the same that spake unto you from the beginning. Amen.

(April, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Behold, I say unto you, my son (Oliver Cowdery) that because you did not translate according to that which you desired of me; and did commence again to write for my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., even so I would that ye should continue until you have finished the record which I have entrusted unto him. Be patient, my son, for it is wisdom in me; and it is not expedient that you should translate at this present time. Behold, the work which you are called to do is to write for my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. And, it is because you did not continue as you commenced to translate, that I have taken away this privilege from you. Do not murmur, my son, for it is wisdom in me that I have dealt with you in this manner. Behold, you have not understood, nor followed the guidance which was provided you. I say unto you, my son, that you should study a thing out in your mind, then you might ask of me, if it be right; and if it is right, I will cause your bosom to burn within you, that you should feel that it is right. But if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong; therefore, you cannot write that which is sacred, save it be given you from me.

Now, if you had known this you could have translated; nevertheless, it is not expedient that you should translate now; for do you not see that I have given my servant Joseph Smith sufficient strength, whereby it is made up? And neither of you have I condemned. Do this thing which I have commanded you; be faithful, and yield to no temptation, and you shall prosper. Stand fast in the work for which you have been called, and a hair of your head shall not be lost, and you shall be lifted up at the last day. Amen.

(May, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men. Behold, I am God; give heed to my Word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow. Behold, the field is white already to harvest; therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might and reap while the day lasts; that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God. Yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God. Therefore, if you ask of me you shall receive; if you will knock it shall be opened unto you.

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. Seek not riches of the world, but wisdom; and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then you shall be made rich. Yea, he that hath eternal life is rich. Verily, verily I say unto you as you desire of me, so it shall be done unto you. And if you desire to be the instrument and the means of doing much good in this generation, say nothing but repentance unto this generation; keep my commandments and assist to bring forth my work according to my will and purposes and designs; and you shall be blessed. Behold, I am the light which shineth in the darkness, and give thee power and guidance, and life eternal through my Word. Ask of me all that thine heart desireth in faith, with an honest heart, believing in the power of Jesus Christ, and it shall be granted you.

Now, verily, verily, I say unto you, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously; and this is my Spirit. Verily, verily, I say unto you, I will impart my Spirit unto you, and it shall enlighten your mind, and fill your soul with joy. Behold, I command you that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called to do so. Wait a little longer, until you have learned to understand the Word, my gospel, and my church, and my doctrine; seek yet not to declare my Word, but first seek to obtain the knowledge of the Word; and then shall your tongue be loosed, my Spirit shall prevail upon you, and you shall have the power of God unto the convincing of men. With calmness of mind study my word which is now being translated. Yea, cleave unto me with all your heart, that you may assist in bringing to light those things of which has been spoken — yea, the translation of my work. Be patient and be diligent; this is your work, to keep my commandments with all your might, mind, heart and strength.

Behold, thou art Hyrum (Smith, brother of Joseph), my son; seek the kingdom of God,and all things shall be added, according to thy faith. Build upon my rock, which is my Gospel. Deny not the spirit of revelation, nor the spirit of prophecy; for woe unto him that denieth such things. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and light of the world. I speak unto all those who have good desires and have thrust in their sickle to reap. I am the same who came unto mine own and mine own received me not. Verily, verily, I say unto you that as many as receive me with all their heart and soul, to them I will give power to become the sons and daughters of God, and degrees of salvation to all those who believe on my name. Amen.

(May, 1829; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men. Behold, I am God; give heed to my Word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow. Behold, the field is white already to harvest; therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts; that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God. Yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God. Therefore, if you will ask of me, you shall receive; if you will knock, it shall be opened unto you.

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish my work. Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. No one can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate with all things entrusted to his care. Behold, I am the light and the life of the world that speaketh these words; therefore give heed with your might, and then you are called. Amen.

(May 15, 1829; near Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery were ordained into the Aaronic Priesthood, along the bank of the Susquehanna River by the angel John the Baptist, who acted under the direction of Peter, James and John, saying: Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. Amen.

(June, 1829; Fayette, New York)

Seek to bring forth and establish Zion; keep my commandments in all things; and if you keep my commandments and endure to the end, you shall have eternal life, which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God. And it shall come to pass that if you ask the Father in my name, in faith believing, you shall receive the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance; that you may stand as a witness of things of God, and that you may declare repentance unto this generation. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, who created the heavens and the earth, a light which cannot be hid in darkness; wherefore, I must bring forth the fulness of my Gospel by the way of Gentiles unto the house of Israel. And, behold, thou art David (Whitmer), and thou art called to assist; which thing if ye do, and are faithful, ye shall be blessed both spiritually and temporally, and great shall be your reward. Amen.

SECTION 14
(June, 1829; Fayette, New York)

Hearken my servants John and Peter (Whitmer), and listen to the words of Jesus Christ, your Lord and Redeemer. For behold, I speak unto you with sharpness and with power, for mine arm is over all the earth; for many times you didst desire of me to know that which would be of most worth unto you. Behold, blessed art you both for this thing; now, behold, I say unto you that the thing which will be of most worth unto you will be to declare (preach) repentance unto this generation, that you may bring souls unto me, and that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. Amen.

SECTION 15
(June, 1829; Fayette, New York)

Behold, I say unto you (Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris), that you must rely upon my Word; which if you do with full purpose of heart, you shall have a view of the plates, and also the breastplate (of Aaron), the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount, the compass (Liahona) given to Lehi on the borders of the Red Sea. It is by your faith and obedience to my commandments that you shall obtain a view of them; even by that faith which was had by the prophets of old; and after having seen them, you shall testify of them, by the power of God; and you shall do this that my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., may not be destroyed, and that I may bring to light my will, purposes and designs unto the children of men. Behold, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., has seen them because he had faith and he was obedient to my commandments; and he has translated that part of the book, which I had commanded him to do; wherefore, you have now received the same power and the same gift, according to the same faith.

And if you do these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you, for my grace is sufficient, and you shall be lifted up at the last day.

I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your Redeemer, even your God have spoken it, that I may bring about my righteous purposes unto the children of men. Amen.

(June, 1829; Fayette, New York)

Now, behold, because of the thing which you, my servant Oliver Cowdery, have desired to know of me, I give unto you these words: Behold, I have manifested unto you by my Spirit in many instances, that the things which were caused to be written by you are true; wherefore you know that they are true. And if you know them to be true, then I give unto you a commandment, that you rely upon the things which are written; for in them are all things written concerning the foundation of my church, my gospel, and my rock. Wherefore, if you should build up my church upon the foundation of my gospel and my rock, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you.

Behold, the world is ripening in iniquity; and it must needs be that the children of men are stirred up unto repentance, both the Gentile, and also the house of Israel. Wherefore, as thou hast been baptized under the hands of Joseph Smith, Jr., my servant, as he was commanded to do; thus he hath fulfilled that which I commanded him.

And now marvel not that I have called him unto mine own purpose, which purpose is known only unto me; wherefore if he will be diligent in keeping my commandments, he shall be blessed with the blessings of the deep that come from on high and lieth under; even the blessings of eternal life and salvation; for he carrieth the name of Joseph; but if he does not, he shall become like all other men.

Now, Oliver Cowdery, I speak unto you and also unto David Whitmer, by the way of commandment, for I command all men everywhere to repent; and I speak unto you, even as Paul mine apostle, for you are called even with the same calling with which he was called. Remember that the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; for, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered the pains of all men, and death in the flesh, and arose again from the dead; that all men might repent and come unto him. Great indeed is my joy in the soul that repenteth. Wherefore you are called to cry repentance unto this people everywhere. And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto all this people, and bring unto me save it be one soul, how great shall be your joy with Him in the kingdom of my Father. And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me!

Behold, you have before you my gospel, my rock, and my salvation. Ask the Father in my name, in faith believing that you shall receive, and the Holy Ghost shall manifest unto you all things which are expedient unto the children of men. But if ye have not faith, hope, charity and love, you can do nothing, but doubt and fall. Therefore, pondering upon these things, contend not against any church, save it be the church of the devil; and take upon you the name of Christ, and speak the truth in soberness. Now, as many as repent and are baptized in my name and endure to the end, the same shall be saved. Behold, here is a mystery revealed: Jesus Christ is the name which is given of the Father (Elohim, the Great Council in Heaven); and there is none other name given whereby man can be saved from his fall and consequences resulting from sin. Therefore all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name they shall be called at the last day; and if they know not the name by which they are called, they cannot be given a place in the kingdom of my Father.

And, now, behold, there are others to be called to declare my gospel, both unto the Gentile and the Jew. Yea, even twelve; and the Twelve shall be my apostles (disciples), and they shall take upon them the name of Christ with full purpose of heart; and those who do so, are called to go into all the world to preach my gospel unto every nation, kindred, tongue and people; that they may perform ordinances and declare my gospel, according to their capacities, through the power of the Holy Ghost. Yea, I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your God, have spoken it. And now, behold, Oliver Cowdery, and also David Whitmer, I give unto you to search out the Twelve, who are found worthy, according to that which is written; and when you have found them, you show these things unto them, and you shall fall down and worship the Father in my name. And you shall preach unto the world, saying; You must repent and be baptized, in the name of Jesus Christ. For all men must repent and be baptized; and not only men, but women, and children who have arrived at the years (age) of accountability.

And now, after that you have received this, you must keep my commandments in all things; for by your hands I will perform a marvelous work among the children of men, unto the convincing of many of their sins; that they may come unto repentance, and that they may come unto the kingdom of my Father. Wherefore, the blessings which I give unto you are above all blessings. Nevertheless, if after receiving this knowledge, you keep not my commandments, you cannot be saved in the kingdom of my Father, but will be damned. Behold, I, Jesus Christ, your Lord, God and Redeemer by the power of His Spirit has spoken it. Amen.

(March, 1830; Manchester, New York)

I am Alpha and Omega, Christ the Lord; yea, I am the beginning and the end, the Redeemer of the world. Having accomplished and finished the will of Him whose I am, even the Father, all things are subject unto me. Myself retaining all power unto destroying the works of Satan, and to pass judgement upon the inhabitants for their salvation; I judge every man according to his works and deeds. And surely every man must repent or suffer, for I, your God, am endless, and I revoke not my judgements. Those whose hearts have been hardened by the consequences of their sins, transgressions, iniquities and ways of error, shall weep, wail and gnash their teeth at the time of judgement; yea, these are they who dwell on the left-hand of my eternal throne. Nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to their torment and misery, but that they shall be under eternal torment and damnation.

Now, I will explain unto you a mystery, for it is meet unto you to know these things, as my apostles; and I speak unto you that are chosen as my apostles, even as one, that you may enter into my rest. Behold, the mysteries of godliness, how great they are! For I am endless, and the punishments and blessings that are given from my hand are also endless; for behold, Endless is my name; wherefore all things which are eternal and endless are of God; wherefore, that man may not suffer and be damned forever, I say unto you that unless a man repents and comes unto me by keeping my commandments, he can in no wise be saved and liberated. Therefore, I command you to repent — repent, lest I smite you by the rod of my mouth, and by my wrath and indignation; and your sufferings be sore — how sore and painful you know not, how hard to bear you know not. For behold, I, your God, have suffered all these things in the flesh, that ye might not suffer if you repent. So if a man would not repent, he must suffer even as I; which suffering causeth myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble with pain and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both in body and spirit; that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink. Nevertheless, for the glory be to the Father forever and ever, I partook of the bitter cup and finished my preparations unto the children of men.

Wherefore, I command you again to repent, and confess your sins, lest you be humbled by my almighty power, and suffer the punishments of which I have spoken; the smallest of these punishments, yea, even the least degree of which you have tasted when my Spirit was withdrawn from you. Furthermore, I command you to do the same, preach repentance unto all men; preach not unto them the mysteries of the kingdom yet, for they cannot bear meat now, but milk they must receive. Keep my commandments and walk in the meekness of my Spirit, and you shall enter into my peace. Behold, I am Jesus Christ; I came by the will of the Father, to do His will. Remember, ye shall not covet your fellowman's wife, and seek not to take the life of your fellowman; nor shall ye have strong attachments to your own properties and possessions, but impart them freely to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion, including the printing of the Book of Mormon, which contains the truth and the Word of God; that the Word may go to the Gentiles, and also to the Jews, of whom the Lamanites are a remnant; that they may believe the Gospel, and look not for the Messiah to come, who already came in the meridian of time. I also command you to pray vocally as well as in your heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret, in public as well as in private; and declare glad tidings unto every nation, kindred, tongue and people; and ye shall do it with humility, long-suffering, patience, and meekness, trusting in me, and reviling not against the revilers. The tenets of the church ye shall not preach unto the children of men; but ye shall declare: faith on the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and baptism by fire, even the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. Behold, this is a great and the last commandment concerning this matter, for this shall suffice for your daily walk, even unto the end of your lives; and woe and misery shall they receive who give no heed to these counsels, and follow the snares of their own heart, to deny the truth.

And I speak freely unto all; yea, preach, exhort, declare the truth, even with a loud voice, with a sound of rejoicing, and cry Hosanna unto the Most High God. Pray always, and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessings; yea, even greater than all the treasures of the earth and corruptible things thereof. Behold, can you read and understand this without rejoicing and lifting up your heart with gladness? Or can you run about any longer as a blind guide? Yea, be humble and meek, and conduct yourselves wisely before me, and come unto your Redeemer and Savior. Amen.

(April 6, 1830; near Fayette, New York)

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh; it being regularly organized and established according to the laws of our land, by the will and commandment of God, in the fourth month, on the sixth day of April. And these commandments were given to Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery; Joseph was ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of the Church; and Oliver was also ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of the Church and was ordained by Joseph. And this was accomplished according to the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom belongs all glory, now and forever.

After it was truly manifested unto this first elder (Joseph Smith) that he had received a remission of his sins, he was entangled again in the vanities of the world; but after repenting and humbling himself sincerely, through faith in Jesus Christ, God ministered unto him by an holy angel; whose countenance was as lightning, and whose garments were pure white above all other whiteness, who gave unto him commandments and power from on high, to translate the Book of Mormon into the English language, by the means which were previously prepared for this purpose. This holy book contains a record of a fallen people, and the fulness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; which record was written and compiled by the Spirit of inspiration of the priests and holy men of old; and was confirmed unto each succeeding generation through the power of the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, and by the ministering angels. Thus proving to the world that the Holy Scriptures are true, and that God does inspire men and call them to do His work in all generations, even today as in the ages past; and revealing that He is the same God, yesterday, today and forever. Therefore, ye now having so great a witness, know that by the Holy Scriptures shall the world be judged, forever and ever.

As many as shall come to a knowledge of this work, and receive it in faith, and work righteousness, shall receive a crown of eternal life; but those who harden their hearts in unbelief, and reject it, it shall turn to their own condemnation; for the Lord has spoken it, and we the elders of the Church have heart and bear witness to the words of the Most High God, to whom be the glory forever and ever. Furthermore, by these things we know that there is a God in heaven, who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting, the same unchangeable God of truth and righteousness, grace and mercy; the framer of heaven and earth, and all things which are in them. We also know that He created man, male and female, after His own image and in His own likeness created He them; and gave them commandments that they should love and serve Him, the only living and true God; and that they should worship no other being or object but Him. But they obeyed not the commandments of God, but transgressed the holy laws, and fell; became guilty by the consequences of sin and died spiritually; and kicking against the pricks, became carnal, sensual, devilish, and wicked, to the end of their own shame and folly.

Wherefore, the Almighty God gave His only begotten Son, according to the fulfillment of the words of the Holy Scriptures. The Son, Jesus Christ, suffered all the temptations of the world, but gave no heed unto them, He was crucified, died and rose again the third day (He was crucified on Friday and resurrected on Sunday in the year 33 A.D.); and ascended into heaven, to sit down on the right hand of the eternal throne of the Lord God the Father; that as many as would believe on His holy name, and endure to the end, should be saved and have eternal life. Not only those who believed Him when he came in the meridian of time, but all those from the very foundation of the world who believed in the Gospel of Jesus Christ and the words of the holy prophets, were blessed with the gift of salvation and eternal life; and those who should come after shall inherit the same blessings, according to their faithfulness. Those who believe in the gifts and callings of God by the power of the Holy Ghost, shall find that it beareth record of the Father and the Son; which Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal with no end. Furthermore, we know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ, and worship the Father in His name, and endure in faith to the end; or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God. We also know that we are justified and sanctified through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, if we love and serve our God with all our heart and soul; with all our heart, might, mind, and strength. But, for man is given his eternal gift of agency to choose right or wrong, he may fall from the grace and mercy of the Lord, and depart from the Living God. Therefore, let the Church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptations, and suffer spiritual death. Yea, we know for a surety that these things are true also according to the words of John the Revelator and the Holy Scriptures; the revelations of God now and in the future shall continue to come from God, by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, and the ministering angels; yet there are other means by which the Lord revealeth the mysteries of His kingdom unto His humble servants.

Now, all those who humble themselves before God, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and bear witness that they have truly repented of all their sins; and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve the true and living God to the end; their works truly manifesting the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins; shall be received into the Kingdom of God by means of baptism by full immersion. And these shall be the duties of the elders, (Aaronic) priests, teachers, deacons, and members of the church of Christ: An apostle is an elder, and his calling is to baptize; to ordain other elders, (Aaronic) priests, teachers, and deacons; to anoint and seal; to administer bread and pure wine or water, the emblems of the flesh and blood of Christ; to confer the gift of the Holy Ghost upon those who are baptized into the Church, by the laying on of hands, even the baptism of fire; to teach, expound, exhort, and watch over the Church; and the elders are to lead and conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the Holy Writ and the revelations of God.

The duty of the (Aaronic) priests is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, baptize, administer the sacrament; and to visit the homes of the members, and exhort them to live the principles and doctrines of the Gospel, and to pray vocally and in secret. The (Aaronic) priest may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; he is to take lead in meetings when there is no elder present; and in all his duties the priest is to assist the elder if the occasion requires. The teacher's duty is to watch over the Church always, to be with them and strengthen them; to keep a watchful eye that there is no iniquity, hardness, lying, back-biting, nor evil-speaking and wickedness in the Church; to see that the Church meet together often, that harmony prevails among all members; in the absence of the elder or priest, he is to lead the meetings, and is to be assisted by the deacons, if occasion requires. But neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they may, however, warn, expound, exhort, teach and invite men to come unto Christ.

Every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is to be ordained, according to the gifts and callings of God, by the power of the Holy Ghost within the person who ordains them. Several elders composing this church of Christ are to meet in conference every three months,or from time to time, to conduct the necessary business of the church. The elders are to receive their licenses from other elders, and must be confirmed by the vote of the congregation. Each priest, teacher, or deacon who is ordained by another (Aaronic) priest, may take a certificate from him at the time of ordination, which certificate when presented to an elder shall entitle him to a license, authorizing him to perform the duties of his calling; he may also receive his license at a conference of the church. No person is to be ordained to any office without the vote of the members, where there is a regularly organized branch of the Church; but if there is no branch of the Church nearby anywhere that a vote may be called, the presiding elders, travelling bishops, high councilors, high priests, and elders may have the privilege of ordaining, with due justifications. Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder), bishop, high councilor, and high priest, is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference. The elders and priests of the Church are to take sufficient time to expound all doctrines and principles of the Church of Christ to the prospective members, to the best of their understanding; and prior to partaking of the sacrament and their baptism; so that all things are done in order. And the prospective members shall manifest to the elders and the Church by their works and deeds, that they are worthy of joining the Church in faith agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, and walking in holiness before the Lord. Every member of the church of Christ having children, is to bring them unto the elders, before the church, who are to lay their hands upon them in the name of Jesus Christ, and bless them in His name. No one can be received into the church of Christ unless he has arrived at the age of accountability before God (which is eight years); has become convinced in his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; has repented of all his sins, transgressions, iniquities and ways of error; has been baptized by full immersion for the remission of sins; and the gift of the Holy Ghost has been conferred upon him by the laying on of the hands of the elders of the Church; and has been confirmed by the body of the Church.

The person who is called of God and has been given authority from Jesus Christ to baptize, shall go down into the water with the person who is to be baptized, and shall say: Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ (or anciently, Having authority given me of Jesus Christ), I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Then shall he immerse the person fully in water, and come forth again out of the water.

It is expedient that the church meet together on the day of Sabbath, to partake of the bread and pure wine or water, in remembrance of the Lord Jesus; and the elder or (Aaronic) priest shall administer (bless) it; by kneeling in behalf of or with the congregation, and calling upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying:

> O God the Eternal Father, we ask Thee in the name of Thy Son Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this bread to the souls of all those who partake of it, that they may eat in remembrance of the body of Thy Son, and witness unto Thee, O God the Eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of Thy Son, and always remember Him and keep His commandments which He hath given them; that they may always have His Spirit to be with them. Amen.

And the elder or (Aaronic) priest shall administer (bless) the pure wine or water also by kneeling and calling upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying:

> O God the Eternal Father, we ask Thee in the name of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this water (or wine) to the souls of all those who drink of it; that they may do it in remembrance of the blood of Thy Son, which was shed for them; that they may witness unto Thee, O God the Eternal Father, that they do always remember Him, that they may have His Spirit to be with them. Amen.

Any member of the church of Christ transgressing the commandments and covenants, or being overtaken by faults and ways of error, shall be dealt with according to the Holy Scriptures; and those who have been expelled from the Church, their names shall be blotted out of the general church record of names. Those members who are moving to a new location, where they are not known in the church, may take with them a letter certifying as to their membership in the church of Christ.

It shall be the duty of the several churches, composing the church of Christ, to send as the occasion dictates, one or more of their teachers to attend conferences, held by the elders of the Church; and a list of the names of all their members be kept, on a perpetual basis, on the local level; and also a book be kept to record the names of all the church members throughout the land and the world. Amen.

SECTION 19
(April 6, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you; and in it thou (Joseph Smith, Jr.,) shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, and an apostle of Jesus Christ; an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ. Being inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation of the Church of Christ of Latter-day Saints, the church was organized and established as an institution among men on April 6, 1830. Wherefore, the church shall give heed unto the commandments and guidance of him who is appointed for this purpose, even Joseph Smith, Jr. According to his faithfulness and uprightness, the revelations and commandments will be given to him from time to time; and his words ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith. For obedience to divine guidance and portents shall be a shield unto you against the powers of darkness, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against you. Yea, the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and His name's glory.

For thus saith the Lord God: I have inspired Joseph Smith, Jr., to move the cause of Zion with mighty power, for the benefit of the chosen seed; he appears diligent in his calling, his prayers I have heard, and his weeping for Zion I have seen. Yea, I will cause that he shall mourn for her no longer; for his days of rejoicing are come unto the remission of his sins, and the manifestations of my blessings upon his works. For, behold, I will bless all those who labor in my vineyard with a mighty blessing, that they shall believe on his words, which are given him through me, the Lord, by the Comforter; which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified by sinful and wicked men for the sins of the world; yea, for the remission of sins unto the contrite heart. Wherefore it behooveth me that Joseph Smith, Jr., be ordained by you, Oliver Cowdery mine apostle. This being my commandment unto you (Oliver Cowdery), for you were ordained an elder under his hand, he being the first unto you, that you might be an elder unto this church of Christ, bearing my name, and be the first preacher of the entire church, and before the Gentiles, and lo, lo, the Jews also. Amen.

(April, 1830; Manchester, New York)

Behold, I say unto you that all old contentions have I caused to be done away in this thing, even on the subject of baptism; and the new and everlasting covenant has been restored unto its original intentions. Wherefore, although a man be baptized an hundred times, it availeth him nothing; for he cannot enter in at the straight gate by the law of Moses alone, neither by his dead works; for this reason, I have caused this last covenant to be restored, and the church of Christ built up unto my name, even as in the days of old. Wherefore, enter ye in at the straight gate, according to my commandments; and seek not to counsel your God. Amen.

SECTION 21
(April, 1830; Manchester, New York)

Behold, I speak unto you, Oliver (Cowdery), a few words. Verily, thou art blessed, and art under no condemnation; but beware of pride, lest thou shouldst enter into temptation and fall. Make known thy calling unto the church and also before the world; and thine heart shall be opened to preach the truth from henceforth. Amen.

Behold, I speak unto you, Hyrum (Smith), a few words; for thou also art under no condemnation, and thine heart is opened and thy tongue loosed. Thy calling is to exhort and to strengthen the church continually; wherefore thy duty is unto the church until the end of thy days, and this is also because of thy family. Amen.

Behold, I speak a few words unto you, Samuel (H. Smith), for thou also art under no condemnation; thy calling is to exhort and to strengthen the church, but thou art not as yet called to preach before the world. Amen.

And, behold, I speak a few words unto you, Joseph (Smith, Sr.); for thou art also under no condemnation; thy calling is also to exhort the principles and doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, and to strengthen the church; and this is thy calling from henceforth, until the end of thy days. Amen.

And now, behold, I say unto you, Joseph Knight, that you should take up your cross, and pray vocally before the world, with your family, among your friends and kinsfolk, in all places; and also pray in secret to the Father in my name. Your calling is to unite the true church and bring forth the cause of Zion; and give your language to exhortation and building up of the church; that you may receive the reward of the laborer. Amen.

(July, 1830; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Behold, thou (Joseph Smith, Jr.,) wast chosen and called to my ministry, and to write the Book of Mormon in the English language, and to bring forth the cause of Zion; and I have lifted thee up out of thine afflictions, and delivered thee from thine enemies and the powers of Satan and darkness. Nevertheless, thou didst transgress in matters of supreme importance, and brought guilt upon thyself and upon my church; nevertheless go thy way and sin no more; magnify thy calling, after thou hast sowed thy fields and secured them. Go speedily unto the church in Colesville, Fayette, and Manchester; and if they should receive and support thee, I will bless them both spiritually and temporally; but if they receive thee not, I shall send upon them a cursing, instead of a blessing.

Thou shalt continue to call upon the Father in my name; and write the things which shall be given thee by the Comforter (Holy Ghost), and expound the Scriptures unto the church; and it shall be given thee in that very moment what thou shalt speak or write; and thou shalt devote all thy time in service to the church, in this thou shalt have strength. Be patient in afflictions, for thou shalt have many; but endure them, for, lo, I am with thee unto the end of thy days. In temporal labors thou shalt not have strength, for it is not thy calling; therefore, be diligent in attending to thy calling and magnifying thine office, to expounding the Holy Scriptures, and in continuing to lay hands upon the blessed, and confirming the churches.

Behold, thy brother Oliver (Cowdery) shall continue to bear my name before the world and the Church; and he shall not suppose that he can say enough in the cause of bringing forth and establishing Zion. And at all times, and in all places, he shall open his mouth and declare my gospel with the voice of a trump, both day and night; and whether in weakness or strength, in bonds or freedom, he shall not take the glory upon himself, but in me he shall have glory; and I will give unto him strength such as is not known among men. Require not miracles, except it be required of you by them who desire it, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled; for ye shall do all according to that which is written; you may cast out devils, heal the sick and afflicted, and protect against poisonous serpents and deadly poisons. And in whatsoever place ye shall enter, and they receive you not in my name, ye may leave a cursing instead of a blessing, by casting off the dust of your feet, as a testimony against them, and washing your feet by the wayside. And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall lay their hands upon you by violence, ye may command them to be smitten in my name; and, behold, I will smite them according to your words, in mine own due time. And whosoever shall go to the law against thee, shall be cursed by the law. Furthermore, ye shall take no purse or scrip, neither staves nor two coats, for it shall be provided you in the very hour all that ye may need during your travels. Behold, you and all those who have been ordained, are called to prune my vineyard with a mighty pruning; and prepare the way for that great and dreadful day. Amen.

(July, 1830; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Hearken unto the voice of the Lord your God, while I speak unto you, Emma Smith, my daughter; for verily I say unto you, all those who receive my gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom. A revelation I give unto you concerning my will: if thou art faithful and walk in the paths of virtue before me, I will preserve thy life, and thou shalt receive an inheritance in Zion. Behold, thy sins and iniquities are forgiven, and thou art called to become an elect lady. Murmur not because of the things which thou hast not seen, for they are withheld from thee and from the world, which is wisdom in me. The office of thy calling shall be to administer comfort unto my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., thy husband, in his afflictions and trials, with consoling words, in the spirit of meekness; and thou shalt travel with him in all places, and be his scribe until the end of his days, that also I may send my servant Oliver Cowdery, whithersoever I will.

Behold, my daughter Emma, thou shalt be ordained under his hand to expound the Scriptures and exhort the Church according to that which shall be given thee by my Spirit; and he shall lay his hands upon thee, and thou shalt receive the Holy Ghost; and thou shalt devote thy time to writing and learning much. Thou shalt have no fear or doubt, for both are of the devil; for thine husband shall support thee in the church, and unto the church is his calling; that all things might be revealed unto them, according to their faith. And verily I say unto thee (Emma Smith) that thou shalt lay aside the things of this world, and seek for things far better. It shall also be given thee to make a selection of sacred hymns; and this thing is pleasing unto me, to be had in my church, for my Soul delighteth in the song of the heart; yea, the song of the righteous is a prayer unto me; and it shall be answered with mighty blessings upon their heads. Wherefore, lift up thine heart, and rejoice always in the covenants and commitments which thou hast made; continue in the spirit of meekness, and beware of pride; let thy soul delight in thy husband, and the glory shall come upon him. Keep my commandments continually, and the crown of the righteous shall be upon thine head forever and ever; for thou shalt be a lady elect in the eternal kingdom of Christ, and in the nation of Israel. Henceforth, my daughter, thou art blessed with these blessings, according to thy faithfulness. Avoid the snares of thine own heart and of the adversary, and continue to walk uprightly before me; for verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my voice unto all my daughters, the chosen, the called, the elect. And thus have I spoken it. Amen.

(July, 1830; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Behold, I say unto you (Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer), let your time be devoted to studying the scriptures and preaching the Gospel; and confirming the church at Colesville, and to performing all labors in the cause of Zion, according to my will and purposes, until the time you go to the west to hold the next conference; and then it shall be made known what you shall do. All things in my church shall be done in order and by common consent of the members; in much prayer and faith, for all things shall be given unto you in faith, and according to your capacities to partake of the mighty blessings from on high. And thus have I spoken it, even your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECTION 25
(August, 1830; Harmony, Pennsylvania)

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Lord and Redeemer and Savior; whose word is quick and powerful. For, behold, (on the subject of sacrament) I say unto you that it mattereth not what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink when ye partake of the sacrament, if it is done with an eye single to my glory in the name of the Father; and remembering my body which was laid down for you, and my blood which was shed for the remission of your sins. But for this my church I give a commandment, that ye shall not purchase wine nor strong drink of your enemies or non-believers, but partake of that which is made new among you, throughout my Father's kingdom which shall be built up on the earth.

Behold, this is wisdom in me; wherefore, marvel not; for the hour cometh in the fulness of time that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you. Yea, even with my servant Moroni, whom I didst send unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fulness of my everlasting Gospel; and to whom I have committed the keys of the record (stick) of Ephraim. And with Elias, to whom I have committed the keys for bringing to pass the restoration of all things, spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, concerning the latter days. And with John, the son of Zacharias, the Zacharias who was visited by Elias, and to whom the promise was made that a son will he beget, and his name will be John, and he will be filled with the spirit of Elias; this same John I didst send unto my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery to ordain them into the first (Aaronic) priesthood, that they might be called and ordained even as was Aaron. And also with Elijah, unto whom I have committed the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, the hearts of the children to their fathers; that the earth may not be smitten with a curse and be utterly wasted before the coming of that great and dreadful day, in the fulness of time. Yea, also with Michael the Adam, the father and prince of all, the ancient of days; with Abraham and Isaac, and Jacob, and Joseph, your fathers with whom the promises were made, and shall remain unto the eternities. And also with Peter, James and John, whom I didst send to ordain and confirm Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to be apostles and special witnesses unto my name, and to bear the keys of the same ministry as them; and unto the same (Peter, James, and John) I have committed the keys of my kingdom and a dispensation of the gospel for these latter days; and in the fulness of time, I will gather together in one all things; and the Holy Writ shall contain both things which are in heaven and also in earth; and this shall be combined with that which my Father hath prepared to be included.

Wherefore, lift up your hearts and rejoice, and gird up your loins, and put on my whole armour, that ye may be able to withstand the great and dreadful day of my coming. Stand erect having loins girt about with truth, put on the breastplate of righteousness, then move forward and preach my gospel of peace to every nation, kindred, tongue and people; for the angels have already been sent before you to prepare the way. Take with you the shield of faith to withstand the fiery darts of the wicked; and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of my Spirit, which shall be poured upon you abundantly, and the power of my Word; furthermore, is not my grace sufficient in all things? Ask me that which ye may with full heart and purpose, and it will be granted you; remain faithful, and ye shall be caught up to come also where I am. Amen.

(September, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Behold, I say unto thee, Oliver (Cowdery), that it is given unto thee to teach and to exhort all things and to build up my Church by the power of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost; but, behold, verily, verily, I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive the commandments and revelations in behalf of the church except the one person appointed for this purpose, even as my servant Joseph Smith, Jr.; for the revelations and commandments are given unto him as to Moses of old; for such are chosen and called by God for this very purpose and none other. Therefore, thou shalt be obedient to all things given through him, even as Aaron was unto Moses.

And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to teach or exhort the doctrine, covenants or commandments of my church, thou shalt be justified accordingly, but thou shalt declare no revelations and commandments, nor shalt thou command him (Joseph Smith) who is placed above thee as the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and ordained him into this office; but thou art not given these things, for thy calling is of a different kind; behold, for my servant Joseph has been bestowed with the power and authority to lead my church in these days, thou shalt be obedient to him, until such time that I shall appoint unto my church another in his stead.

Now, behold, I say unto you (Oliver Cowdery) that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach my gospel; and inasmuch as they receive your teaching, you shall cause my church to be established among them. Furthermore, you shall be provided with revelations at times, but you shall not write them as commandments for my church. And now, behold, I say unto you which has not been revealed and no man knoweth, that only in the days yet to come the location of building the city of Zion will be revealed; for there shall be many Zions where the tribes of Israel and the pure in heart shall dwell during the thousand years of peaceful, blissful, and glorious reign in the three kingdoms of heaven and earth. Yea, even the Lamanites thy brethren shall be blessed with Zion in the midst of their borders.

You (Oliver Cowdery) shall not leave this place until after the conference, in which my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., shall be appointed to preside by the voice of my church; and thou shalt be obedient unto that which he tells thee. And to thy brother Hyrum Page thou shalt say that those things which he hath interpreted and translated from that stone are fraudulent and false, and not of me, and that Satan deceiveth him. For, behold, these things are not appointed unto him, nor to any other member of my church, contrary to the church covenants; for, behold, all things must be done in order and by common consent of the church, with prayer of faith. Thus thou (Oliver Cowdery) shall assist to settle all these things prior to taking thy journey among the Lamanites. Now, my servant Oliver, go and open thy mouth among the Lamanites, declaring my gospel with the sound of rejoicing; and it shall be given thee the time of thy departure and return, and the things that thou shalt do. Amen.

(September, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the Great I AM, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins; who will gather his people as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer. Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you that once again your sins are forgiven according to your faithfulness; but remember to sin no more, lest ye fall again into death and bondage.

Verily, I say unto you that ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing and the voice of a trump. Lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst, your advocate with the Father; and it is His goodwill to give you the kingdom, and grant whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer and obedient to His commandments; yea, all shall be granted to those who proclaim their faith in Jesus Christ the Son of God, and obey his commandments with their heart and soul. Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of my chosen and elect, for these hear my voice and harden not their hearts; furthermore, the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land, the land which is choice above all other lands on the face of the earth; to prepare their hearts and be prepared in all things against the day when tribulations and desolations are sent forth upon the wicked. For the hour is nigh and the day soon at hand when the earth shall become ripe for judgement, and all the proud and wicked shall be as stubble; and I will burn up the proud and the wicked from the face of the earth once more, saith the Lord of Hosts; that out of the ashes shall come forth new stalks of my crop, which shall be pruned and raised to dwell in peace and salvation within my kingdom, for a thousand years. Yea, the hour is nigh when all that which has been spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for every whit must be fulfilled, that which is recorded in the Holy Writ. And in that day I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, in the absence of wickedness.

And again, verily, verily, I say unto you that the word hath gone forth in a firm decree, by the will of the Father, that mine apostles, the Twelve, which were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand at the day of my coming in a pillar of fire, being clothed with robes of whiteness, even the robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads, in glory of the highest, as mine own, to judge the whole house of Israel. And a trump shall sound long and loud, as upon Mount Sinai, and the earth shall quake; and yea, the dead who died in me, shall also come forth in robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads, to be with me that we may be one.

But, behold, I say unto you that before this great and dreadful day cometh, the sun shall be darkened, the moon turned to blood, and stars shall fall from heaven; and there shall be greater signs and wonders in the heaven above and earth beneath; there shall be weeping and wailing among the hosts of men, and a great hail-storm shall be sent forth to destroy their crops. The haughty and the wicked will not repent; for their hearts have been hardened and eyes blinded, as a consequence of their sins, transgressions, trespasses, iniquities, and ways of error; even my blood shall not cleanse them, for they make mockery of my mercy and grace; yea, these shall be left to kick against the pricks, and be cut off from my presence. Wherefore, I the Lord, will send forth flies upon the face of the earth which shall take hold of the inhabitants and eat their flesh, and shall cause maggots to come in upon them; their flesh shall fall from their bones and their eyes from their sockets; the beasts of the forest and the fowl of the air shall devour them up; those who are spared shall not utter against me, for their tongues shall be stayed. And it shall come to pass that the great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall be cast down by devouring fire from above and below, and according to all that which is spoken by the mouth of Ezekiel the prophet; these things have not come to pass, but they surely must, as the Lord liveth, for the wickedness and abominations shall reign no more for a thousand years.

Verily, verily, I say unto you that when the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a season, and wickedness and abominations shall prevail therein. At the end of the Millennium, the heaven and earth shall be consumed and pass away; and a new heaven and a new earth will be established. All things shall become new again, as the heaven and the earth, so also the men and beasts, fowls of the air and the fishes of the sea; and not one hair, neither mote of my Saints shall be lost, for it is the workmanship of mine hand. But, behold, before the earth shall pass away, Michael (Adam) mine archangel, shall sound his trump; and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves and hiding places shall be opened; and they all shall come forth; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand unto their own shame and folly, before the Father. And I shall say unto them: Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels from the beginning of the foundation of the first generations. And, behold, never at any time have I declared from mine own mouth that they should return, for where I am, they cannot come, for they have no power. But remember that all my judgements are not given unto men; and as the words have gone forth out of my mouth, even so shall they be fulfilled, that the first shall be last, and the last shall be first in all things whatsoever I have created by power of my Word, which is the power of my Spirit; for by the power of my Spirit created I all things both spiritual and temporal; first spiritual, then temporal, which is the beginning of my work; and again, first temporal, then spiritual, which is the last of my work; and my works have no end, neither beginning, for they reach from eternities past to eternities future; endless and eternal is the nature of my work. But, verily I say unto you that all things unto me are spiritual; and not at any time have I given you a law, a commandment, or an ordinance which was temporal in its nature or its consequence; neither did I give to any man or the children of men, nor to your father Adam.

Behold, I gave unto all men that they should be an agent unto themselves, but I gave them not temporal commandments; for my commandments are spiritual and eternal in their nature and consequence; they are not natural or temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.

Yea, the eternal gift of agency was granted unto Adam (the first high priest of the Order of the Son of God, who was taken from among men); and Adam was tempted of the devil, for the devil was before Adam, which devil who became the father of all lies, rebelled against me, saying: Give me thine honor, and glory and power; and sought to destroy the agency of man; and a third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency; thus they were thrust down into a place which had been prepared from the beginning, which place is hell (Jehenna, Sheol). And thus it was recorded in the books that it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not become agents unto themselves; for if they should never taste the bitter, they could not know the sweet. Wherefore, when the devil tempted Adam, and he partook of the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, becoming subject unto the will of the devil, because he yielded into temptation and became guilty, as a consequence of his transgression, I the Lord caused that he be cast out from the garden of Eden, and from my presence; for after his transgression he became spiritually dead, which is the first death, even the same death as the last.

But, behold, I the Lord also gave unto Adam and his posterity that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I the Lord should send forth angels to declare unto them my gospel of repentance and redemption, through faith in the Only Begotten Son. Thus, it was appointed unto men the days of their probation, that by their natural death they might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe; and those that believed not, unto eternal damnation; for they cannot be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, and love darkness rather than light; their deeds are evil, and they receive their wages of whom they list to obey.

But, verily, verily, I say unto you that the children are redeemed from the foundation of the world through the Only Begotten Son; wherefore they are not counted sinners; for the power to tempt little children is not given unto Satan, until they reach the age of accountability (which is eight years). This ancient decree prevaileth forever, for it is given unto them, according to mine own pleasure, wisdom and purposes, that great sacrifices may be required at the hands of their fathers. And, again, I say unto you that no man can be saved in ignorance or without Jesus Christ; therefore, learn ye all the scriptures well, that through this knowledge and obedience to my commandments, ye may be saved. And now I declare no more at this time. Amen.

(September, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Behold, I say unto you, David (Whitmer), that you have feared man; and have not relied on your God the Lord, for strength and guidance.

Your mind has been on the things of the earth more than the things of me, your Maker; you have not been diligent in your calling unto this ministry. And too, you have not given heed unto my Spirit, nor unto the spirit of those who have been placed above you; but have been persuaded by those who are placed to tempt you and prove you, and to vex your soul. Wherefore, you are left to inquire for yourself at my hand, and ponder upon the things which you have received. You shall dwell at your father's house, until further instructions are provided; and you shall continue to attend to your calling unto the ministry within the church, and in the regions round about. Amen.

Behold, I say unto you, Peter (Whitmer, Jr.), that you shall take your journey with your brother Oliver (Cowdery); for the time has come that it is expedient in me that you shall open your mouth to declare my gospel. Doubt not, fear not; and give heed to the words and advice of your brother, for I have given unto him power to build up my church among the Lamanites. And none have I appointed to be his counselor over him in this church, except his brother, Joseph Smith, Jr. Wherefore, give heed unto these things and be diligent in keeping my commandments; and share the burden of his afflictions and trials, ever lifting up your heart unto me in faith and prayer; and you shall be blessed unto eternal life. Amen.

Behold, I say unto you, my servant John (Whitmer), that thou shalt commence from this time forth to proclaim my gospel as with the voice of a trump. And thy labor shall be at your brother Philip Burroughs', and in that region round about. Thou shalt remain there, until commanded to go from hence. Yea, henceforth, thy whole labor shall be in the cause of Zion; and thou shalt serve the church with all thine heart and soul, and open thy mouth with no fear of man, for I am with thee. Amen.

(September, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Thomas (B. Marsh), my son, blessed are you because of your faith in my work. Behold, you have had many afflictions, because of your family; nevertheless, I will bless you and your family, yea, your little ones; and the day cometh that they will believe and know the truth, and be one with you in my church. Lift up your heart and rejoice, for the hour of your mission is come; soon your tongue will be loosed, and you shall declare glad tidings with great joy unto this generation. You shall declare the things which have been revealed to my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. From this time forth you are to preach the gospel, and reap in the field which is white already to harvest. Therefore, thrust in your sickle with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, and you shall be laden with sheaves upon your back; for the laborer is worthy of his hire; wherefore your family shall live.

But, behold, go from them for a little time, while I prepare a place for them. Yea, I will open the hearts of the people, that they might receive you; and I will establish a church by your hand. And you shall strengthen and prepare them against the time when all the house of Israel shall be gathered, and the Third Temple built in Jerusalem; and the world shall be divided into Three Great Kingdoms, with degrees of glory within each; and Zion shall be established in the Americas.

Be patient, my son, in afflictions, revile not against those that revile. Govern your household in meekness and humility, and be steadfast in keeping the holy commandments. Behold, I say unto you that you shall be likened to a physician unto the church, but not unto the world, for they will not receive you. Go whithersoever I will, and it shall be given you by the Comforter (Holy Ghost) what you shall do and whither you shall go. Pray always, lest you enter into temptation and lose your reward. Be faithful unto the end, behold, I am with you. These words are not of man nor of men, but of me, even Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, by the will of the Father. Amen.

(October, 1830; near Fayette, New York)

And now concerning my servant Parley P. Pratt, behold, I say unto him that as I live I will that he shall declare my gospel and learn of me, and be meek and lowly of heart. It has been appointed unto him that he shall go with my servants, Oliver Cowdery and Peter Whitmer, Jr., into the wilderness among the Lamanites. And Ziba Peterson also shall go with them; and I myself shall go with them, and be in their midst; and nothing shall prevail against them, for I am their advocate with the Father. But, behold, they shall give heed to that which is written, and pretend to no other revelations; and by prayer in faith they shall receive all things from me. And if they give heed unto these words and trifle not, I will bless them. Amen.

SECTION 31
(October, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Behold, I say unto you, my servants Ezra (Thayre) and Northrop (Sweet): Open ye your ears and hearken to the voice of the Lord your God, whose word is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow, soul and spirit; a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. For verily, verily, I say unto you that ye are called to lift up your voices as with the sound of a trump, to declare my gospel unto a crooked and perverse generation. For behold, the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and the last time today I shall call the laborers into my vineyard, which has become corrupted and wicked, every whit; and there is none that doeth good, save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of the priestcrafts and their own delusions, having corrupted their minds.

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that as this church and nation did I establish, and called forth out of the wilderness of Sinai, even so will I gather mine elect and the children of Israel from the four quarters of the earth; even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice. Yea, the field is white already to harvest; wherefore, thrust in your sickles, and reap with all your heart, might, mind, and strength. Open your mouths and they shall be filled, and you shall become like the prophets of old, who journeyed from the wilderness and Jerusalem to other lands and places, and proclaimed the gospel in my name. Yea, open your mouths and spare not, and you shall be laden with sheaves upon your backs, for, lo, I am with you. Proclaim my gospel, saying: Repent, repent, and prepare ye the way of the Lord; and make his paths straight, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand! Yea, repent and be baptized, every one of you, for a remission of your sins; be baptized by (full) immersion in water; and then be baptized of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and remember that they shall have faith in me, or they can in nowise be saved. And upon my gospel, even this rock, I will build my church; behold, upon this rock ye are built, and if ye continue to abide in faith and righteousness, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you. Remember ye also the church articles and covenants, and abide in them.

And whoso having faith ye shall confirm in my church, by the laying on of the hands, I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them. The holy scriptures and the Book of Mormon are given of me for your instruction; and the power of my Spirit quickeneth all things; wherefore, be faithful in prayers, having your lamp oiled, trimmed, and burning, that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom, the Messiah; for behold verily, verily, I say unto you, that I come quickly. Even so. Amen.

(November 4, 1830; Fayette, New York)

My son Orson (Pratt), hearken, hear, and behold, that which I, the Lord God, shall say unto you, even Jesus Christ your Redeemer; the same which is the light and life of the world, a light that shineth in the darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not; who so loved the world that he gave his own life, that as many as would believe might be saved, and become sons of God, even my sons and daughters.

Blessed are you (Orson Pratt), for you have believed; and more blessed are you because you are called to preach my gospel; to lift up your voice as with the sound of a trump, both long and loud, and cry repentance unto a crooked and perverse generation, preparing the way of the Lord for his second coming. For behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, the time is soon at hand that I shall come in a cloud with power and great glory; and it shall be a great day at the time of my coming, for all nations shall tremble. But, before that great day shall come, the sun shall be darkened, the moon turned to blood, and the stars will refuse to shine and some shall fall; and great destruction shall await the wicked. Wherefore, lift up your voice and spare not, and prophesy that which shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost; for the Lord God hath spoken it. And if you are faithful, behold, I am with you; and verily, verily, I say unto you, I come quickly. I am your Lord and your Redeemer. Even so. Amen.

(December, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, even the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, whose course is one eternal round; the same today as yesterday, and forever; behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was crucified for the sins of the world, that as many as will believe on my name, may become my children, even in me, as I am in the Father, and the Father in me, that we may be one.

Behold, verily, verily, I say unto my servant Sidney (Rigdon), I have looked upon thee and thy works, and heard thy prayers, and prepared thee for a greater work. Thou art blessed to do great things, even as John (the Baptist). Behold, thou wast sent forth to prepare the way before my second coming, and before Elijah, but thou knew it not (for it is not given unto the angels to know these things, unless they are chosen to be called). Thou didst baptize by water unto the remission of sin, but they received not the Holy Ghost. But now I give unto thee the power and authority to baptize by water, and bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, even as the apostles of old.

And it shall come to pass that there shall be a great work for you to do, even among the Gentiles, for their follies and abominations shall be made manifest in the eyes of all people; for I am God, and mine arm is not shortened, and I will show miracles, signs, and wonders, unto all who believe on my name. And all my elect who are ordained into the Holy Order (of the Son of God) shall be given the power and authority to cast out devils, heal the sick, cause the blind to receive their sight, the deaf to hear, dumb to speak, and the lame to walk, even more. Yea, the time speedily cometh that great and marvelous wonders will be shown to the children of men, by the hands of my disciples, in my name, to glorify the Father forever and ever. But without faith shall not be anything shown, except desolations upon the Babylon of this generation; the same which has made all nations drink of the wine of wrath and guile, of her lies and fornication. And there are none that doeth good, except those who are ready to receive a portion of the fulness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation.

Wherefore, I call upon the weak things of the world, those who are pure and despised, and also the unlearned and faithful, to thrash the great nations, by the power of my Spirit; and their arm shall be mine arm, and I will be their shield and buckler, to gird up their loins; that they shall accomplish my purposes; and their enemies shall be under their feet; and I will let the sword fall in their behalf; and by the fire of my indignation I shall preserve them; and the poor and meek shall have the gospel preached unto them, and they shall be looking forth for the time of my (second) coming, for it is nigh at hand; by and by, but a few generations are yet to be passed away. Yea, they shall learn the parable of the fig-tree, for now the summer is nigh; and I have sent forth my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and those who accept it and abide in faith, shall be the partakers of the fulness of my everlasting gospel, even the scriptures of the fulness of time, before the arrival of that great and dreadful day. Yea, in weakness have I blessed him (Joseph Smith, Jr.); and given him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, and hid from the foundation of the world; and also things which shall come to pass from this time until the time of my coming, if he abides in me; but if he does not, another will I appoint in his stead.

Wherefore, I say unto you my servant Sidney (Rigdon), watch over him (Joseph Smith, Jr.) that his faith fail not; and the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, shall guide you as to what you shall do, for it knoweth all things. And a commandment I give unto thee — that thou shalt write for him, for the scriptures shall be given, even as they are in my bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect; and my elect shall hear my voice and see me; they shall not be asleep, but abide in the day of my coming; for they shall be purified, even as I am. Thus I say unto you, tarry a little longer, and he shall journey with you; forsake him not, and surely these things shall be fulfilled.

Now, inasmuch as ye do not write, behold, it shall be given unto him (Joseph Smith, Jr.) to prophesy, and you (Sidney Rigdon) to preach my gospel; and call on the prophets of the church to prove his words, as they are given by him. Keep all the commandments and covenants by which ye are bound; and I will cause the heavens to shake for your good, and Satan to tremble, that Zion shall rejoice upon the hills and flourish. And Israel shall be gathered and saved again in mine own due time, not to be confounded for a thousand years. Therefore lift up your hearts and be glad, for the redemption and salvation draweth nigh. Fear not little flock; for the kingdom is yours until I come. Behold, I come quickly. Even so. Amen.

(December, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Thus saith the Lord God, the Mighty One of Israel: Behold, I say unto you, my servant Edward (Partridge), that you are blessed and cleansed of your sins, and are called to preach my gospel as with the voice of a trump; and I will lay my hands upon you by the hand of my servant Sidney Rigdon; and you shall receive my Spirit, the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which shall teach you the peaceable things of the kingdom. And you shall declare my gospel with a loud voice, crying Hosanna to the name of the Most High God; that as many as shall come before my servants, Sidney Rigdon, and Joseph Smith, Jr., embracing my gospel, shall be ordained and sent forth to preach the everlasting gospel among the nations. They shall cry repentance, saying: Save yourselves from this froward and perverse generation, and come forth out of the consuming fire and misery of the consequences of your sins, transgressions, iniquities, and ways of error. Yea, come unto your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and be redeemed and saved, even unto eternal and blissful salvation. And this commandment shall be given to all elders of my church; that every man who embraces it with sincerity of heart may be ordained, and sent forth, even as I have spoken. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God; wherefore gird up your loins and I will suddenly come to my temple. Even so. Amen.

(December, 1830; Fayette, New York)

Behold, I say unto you (Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon) that it is not expedient in me that ye should translate any more until ye shall go to the Ohio; and this because of the adversary and for your sakes. Ye shall not leave that place until ye have preached my gospel and have strengthened up the church whithersoever it is found, and more especially in Colesville; for, behold, they pray unto me in much faith. And, now, a commandment I give unto the church, that they should assemble together at the Ohio, until the time my servant Oliver Cowdery returns unto them; behold, this is expedient in me, and let every man choose for himself until I come. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 36
(January 2, 1831; Fayette, New York)

Thus saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, the Great I AM, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end; the same which looked upon the wide expanse of eternity and all the seraphic hosts of heaven (fiery celestial beings and purifying ministers of Jehovah), before the world was made; the same which spake, and the world was made according to his Word, and all things came to be according to the Word; the same which knoweth all things, for all things are present before his eyes. Yea, I am the same which hath taken the Zion of Enoch into mine own bosom; and, verily, even as many as have believed in my name, for I am Christ whose blood was shed for them, I have pleaded before the Father in their behalf. But behold, the residue of the wicked have I kept in chains of darkness and fire, until the coming of that great and dreadful day of judgement; and they shall remain in their conditions, and will not hear my voice but harden their hearts; and woe, woe, woe, shall be their doom. Yea, the day soon cometh in the fulness of time, that a new earth and a new heaven, with its new Order, shall prevail in peace and harmony for a thousand years at all costs, and sacrifices and offerings; that every whit which has been written by the prophets shall be fulfilled.

But, behold, mine eyes are upon my church and my saints; I am in their midst, but they know it not, for they cannot see me. Behold, the day soon cometh that ye shall see me, and know that I am; for the veil of darkness shall be rent, and the eyes of understanding shall be opened; and those who are not purified, shall not abide the day. Wherefore, gird up your loins and be prepared. Behold, the kingdom is yours, and the adversary shall not prevail against it. Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye are clean in my sight, but not fully; and there is none else beside you, with whom I am well pleased; for all flesh is corrupted to the bone, and the powers of darkness thrive in their pride and wickedness, everywhere upon the earth, in the presence of the hosts of heaven; which causeth silence to reign and all eternity is pained, and the angels are waiting the great command to reap down the earth; to gather the tares to be burned; behold, the adversary had joined forces, and hath become puffed up and strong.

And now, behold, I show you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass the destruction of your soul in the process of time; yea, to destroy you spiritually, that you may be taken captive unto eternal bondage and misery of the adversary; which ye knew not. But now I will be merciful unto you, not because of your iniquities and ways of error, and faithlessness; but because ye have repented of your sins, and have made a covenant to abide in my commandments. Therefore, be strong and prove faithful unto the end of your days; fear not, nor doubt my word, for the kingdom is yours. And for your salvation and life eternal have I given commandments added upon commandments, and made covenants added upon covenants, that ye might live and die not spiritually. Yea, I have heard your prayers and the cry of the poor, and the complaints of the rich. For all flesh is mine, and the rich and the poor have I made, and I am no respecter of men, behold, upon my footstool the earth shall I stand again, and judge all men according to their works and deeds; and my chosen, and called and elect shall dwell in the land of their inheritance, the land which is choice above all other lands on the face of the earth, even a land of promise which also floweth with milk and honey, and upon which land there shall be no curse, but the blessings of the Lord shall abound in the gathered tribes of Israel. And ye shall have this land for the inheritance of your children forever, no more to be passed away; yea, a possession of my gathered Israel shall it be forever and ever.

But, verily I say unto you that in time ye shall live under no king nor ruler, for I the Lord shall be your king, to watch over my gathered sheep in their various folds. Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people for a thousand years, and beyond; and ye shall have no laws but my laws, and dwell in peace, safety and salvation under the eternal grace and mercy of the Holy One of Israel, even your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, during the Millennium. In the meantime, verily, I say unto you, to abide in faith and prayer, and magnify your callings, according to the office to which ye have been appointed; that ye may rejoice and receive your portion of the reward, when the dreadful day cometh. And let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me.

And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve obedient sons, being no respecter of them, saith unto one: Be thou clothed in robes of riches and sit on this side, and to the other: Be thou clothed in rags and sit on the other side; and saith to his sons that he is a just man? Behold, this I have given unto you as a parable, and it is even as I am. I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine. Remember, again, the adversary in the secret chambers seeketh your lives; and by the means of deception and secret combinations stirreth up mightily the hearts of men against the faithful and pure. Wherefore, treasure up these things in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you with a voice loud enough to shake the earth. But if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear, but escape the power of the adversary, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, purified and spotless. For this cause, the decree was sent forth that ye shall go to the Ohio, where my law will be given, and you shall be endowed with power from on high. From thence, whosoever I will shall be sent forth among all nations; and it shall be told them what they shall do or say on their mission, for I have a great work laid up in store, that Israel shall be gathered again and be saved; and I will accomplish my purposes and designs, and no power shall stay my hand.

And now, I give unto the church in these parts a command that certain men be appointed by the voice of the church to look after the needy and the poor among them; that they administer to their hardships and sufferings unto their relief, and send them to a place which I have commanded. And this shall be their work: to govern the affairs of the property of this church, and to see all is done in order, properly recorded and preserved. And those whose farms cannot be sold, let them be left or rented as seemeth them good. Yea, when men are endowed with power from on high and sent forth, all these things are gathered unto the bosom of the church. And if ye seek the riches of heaven, which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be richest of all people, for ye shall have the riches of eternity; but it must need be that the riches of the earth are also mine to give, therefore beware of pride and wickedness, lest ye become as the Nephites of old. And again, I say unto you, that every man in my church shall perform his labors with all his might and strength, to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion; and to preach my gospel unto every man his neighbor, in mildness and in meekness; but go ye not among the wicked and deluded, for they cannot be taught the gospel, nor can they be saved. Save yourselves from vexation and anger; and be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Even so. Amen.

(January 5, 1831; Fayette, New York)

Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from all eternity to all eternity, the Great I AM, even Jesus Christ; the light and life of the world, the light which shineth in the darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not; the same which came in the meridian of time unto his own, and his own received him not; but to as many as received him, he gave power to become his sons and daughters; even so, will I give in these days unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons and daughters.

And verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth my gospel receiveth me; and he that receiveth not my gospel receiveth me not. And this is my gospel — repentance, baptism by water; and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things and teacheth the peaceable things, and revealeth the mysteries of life and the kingdom.

Now, behold, I say unto you, my servant James (Covill), I have looked upon thy works and I know thee. And verily I say unto thee, thine heart is now right before me at this time; and, behold, I have bestowed great blessings upon thine head. Nevertheless, thou hast seen great sorrow, for thou didst reject me many times because of pride and cares of the world. But, behold, the days of thy deliverance are come, and my voice saith unto thee: Arise and be baptized, and wash away your sins; and under the hands of my servants you shall receive my Spirit, and a blessing so great as you have never before known. And if thou do this, I shall prepare thee for a greater work, even a greater blessing of the eternal priesthood; and thou shalt preach my gospel, which I have sent forth in these latter days; and pursue the decree which I have sent forth to gather my people, which are of the house of Israel. And it shall come to pass that you will be clothed with power and authority, and I will be in your midst and go before you, according to your faithfulness.

My servant James (Covill) is called to labor in my vineyard, and to build up my church, and to bring forth Zion, that it may rejoice upon the hills and flourish. Behold, you are not called to go into eastern countries, but to go to the Ohio; and there shall I pour a blessing upon their heads, such as is not known among the children of men; and from thence men shall go forth to preach my gospel unto all nations.

Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, that the people in Ohio have called upon me in much faith, praying that I may stay my hand in judgement upon the nations, but I cannot deny my word, for it hath gone forth out of my mouth; wherefore undertake your task with your might and call faithful laborers into my vineyard, that it may be pruned in these last days. And inasmuch as they do repent and receive my gospel in sincerity of their hearts, I will stay my hand in judgement. Wherefore, go forth, crying with a loud voice, saying: The kingdom of heaven is at hand; Hosanna to the Most High God. Go forth baptizing with water, preparing the way for my (second) coming; for the time is at hand, the day and hour no man knoweth, when all who receive these things shall be gathered into one; for all who receive my gospel, receive me. And, on as many as ye may baptize, ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; and shall be able to look forth for the ensigns of my coming, and shall know me as I AM. Behold, I come quickly. Even so. Amen.

(January, 1831; Fayette, New York)

Behold, verily I say unto you, that the heart of my servant James Covill was right before me, for he covenanted with me that he would obey my word. And he received the word with gladness; but straightway Satan tempted him, and he fell in the tempter's snare; and the fear of persecution and cares of the world caused him to reject the Word. Wherefore, he hath broken my covenant, and it remaineth with me to do with him as seemeth me good. Amen.

(February 4, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord your God. Ye in whom I take delight to bless with the greatest of all blessings, for ye hear me; but those that profess my name and hear me not, will I curse with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called, behold, I give unto you a commandment that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word; and by prayer in faith ye shall receive my law concerning how to govern my church (see section 40), and set all things right before me; and ye shall see that my law is kept, until I come to dwell in the midst of my people and to be their ruler, in the fulness of time. He that receiveth my law and abides in it, the same is my disciple; and he that receiveth it, and abides not in it, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not expedient that things which belong to the children of the kingdom should be given to them that are unworthy or to dogs; or the pearls should be cast before the swine.

It is expedient, however, that my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., should have a house built, in which to live and translate; and my servant Sidney Rigdon should live as seemeth him good, inasmuch as he keepeth my commandments. Furthermore, I have called my servant Edward Partridge, that he should be appointed by the voice of the church, and ordained a bishop unto the church, to leave his merchandise and temporal affairs, and spend his time in the labors of the church, and fulfill his duties according to the laws which I shall soon give unto my church; and this because his heart is pure before me, for he is like unto Nathanael (Bartholomew, son of Tolmai) of old, in whom there is no guile.

These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold on to them, for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgement. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 40
(February 9, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together in my name, even Jesus Christ the Son of the living God and the Savior of the world; and obey the laws which I shall give unto you, and keep my commandments. For verily I say unto you that I have heard your prayers unto the Father in my name, touching these things; and, behold, even so you shall receive these laws; that by abiding in them, ye may live and die not in the Spirit; and that ye may be able to dwell in my kingdom forever, in peace, safety, and salvation; yea, even in the selfsame eternal kingdom which hath been established before the time of Adam, by Lord God the Father.

Behold, this is my decree, that ye shall go forth for a season in my name, every one of you, except my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon; and it shall be given by the power of the Spirit when ye shall return; and ye shall go forth clothed with the power of my Spirit, and preaching my gospel two by two, lifting up your voices in my name with a sound of a trump, declaring my word like unto the angels of God. And ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying; Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And from this place ye shall go forth into the regions westward; and inasmuch as ye find that they receive the gospel, ye shall build up my church in every region; and ye shall continue to preach, until my coming, when my people shall be gathered again in one, and I will be their God for a thousand years; and the cause of Zion will be established.

And I say unto you, that my servant Edward Partridge shall remain in his office to which he has been appointed; and it shall be, that if he transgresses, another shall be appointed in his stead. Even so. Amen.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, that it is not given to any one to go forth and preach my gospel or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who has authority, and be confirmed by the church. And the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall confine their teachings to the doctrine and principles of my gospel which are included in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and will be included in the Holy Writ of the fulness of time; and they shall observe the teachings of the covenants and commandments included therein, that they shall teach with the power of the Spirit; but if they have not the Spirit, they shall not teach; and ye shall all abide in my decree, until all shall be gathered in my scriptures of the fulness of time, and ye shall lift up your voice by the power of the Comforter the Holy Ghost, for it knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and of the Son.

And now, behold, I give unto the church these commandments. Thou shalt not kill, and he that killeth shall have no forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come. And again, I say, thou shalt not kill, but he that killeth another fellowman shall die.

Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent shall be cast out.

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thine heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else; and the man or woman that looketh upon another to lust after, shall deny the faith and the guidance of the Holy Spirit; such an one if repents not, shall be cast out.

Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that commiteth adultery in thought or action, and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and does it no more, shall be granted forgiveness; but if he does it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out.

Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm.

Thou shalt obey all commandments given in my scriptures; and he that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out. And if thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me with all thine heart and soul, and keep my commandments. And behold, remember the poor and consecrate of your properties for their support, according to the covenants and commandments of the church; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me; and they shall be laid before the bishop and his two counselors (two of the elders or high priests appointed or set apart for this purpose). And the consecrated properties cannot be taken from the church agreeable to the covenants and commandments; and every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, as much as is sufficient for himself and his family. And, if there are properties in the hand of the church or its members, in excess of the necessities for their support after the first consecration, the residue is to be consecrated to the bishop; and is to be earmarked for the administration to the needy of the church; that from time to time, every man who has need may be amply taken care of. The residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy, as sanctioned by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council; it shall also be used for the purposes of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, building houses of worship and New Jerusalem, and to bring to pass the causes of Zion on the face of the earth. And if a man sinneth and repenteth not, he shall be cast out of the church, and shall not receive again that which he has consecrated unto the poor and the needy of my church, even unto me; for inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it unto me. Furthermore, that my covenant people be gathered in one, in that day when I shall return to my temple (this I do for the salvation of my people); and that which I spake by the mouths of my prophets shall be fulfilled, I will consecrate the riches of those who embrace my gospel among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people, who are of the house of Israel.

Remember ye, O elders of Israel, that you shall not be proud in your hearts; let your garment be plain, your thoughts pure, and your beauty the beauty of the work of your own hands; let all things be done in cleanliness before me; and let not your lives be spent in idleness, for he that is such among you shall not eat the bread nor wear the garment of the laborer. And whosoever among you are sick, and the Holy Spirit says that the sickness cannot be healed by faith, but with medicinal herbs and food or by a doctor of the profession, must obey the promptings of the Spirit; that he may not be overtaken by disease or error, nor be attended by the ministers of the enemy. But the elders of my church have the power and authority from on high to lay their hands upon the sick in my name, and bless them; and if death is not appointed unto them, they will be saved by the everlasting power and authority of the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, even the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Ye elders are commanded to live together in love, insomuch that you shall weep for the loss of those who die among you, especially for those who have not hope of a glorious resurrection; and it shall come to pass that those that die in me shall not taste the bitterness of death, but it shall be sweet unto them; and my saints shall be bestowed the great blessing, a gift so marvelous, on their last day, when they shall be called home unto the eternal world of the spirits; yea, the heavens do open their windows and pour out their wondrous blessings upon my saints, on their great and blissful day of arrival in the next world.

And the elders of my church shall have the power and authority to lay their hands, to bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost in my name, and to heal the sick and the afflicted; and verily, verily, I say unto you that he that hath faith in me to be healed, and is not appointed unto death, shall be healed for a surety; he who hath faith to see shall see; he who hath faith to hear shall hear; the lame who hath faith to leap shall leap; and the child who hath faith to go to the moon, shall be taken there; and if the voice of one of my servants calls in faith to move the mountain, it shall be moved, according to their words. But those who have not faith in these things, but believe in me, have the power to become sons and daughters; and inasmuch as they break not my commandments and laws, the elders of my church shall bear their infirmities.

Ye shall be diligent in your stewardships, and shall not take your brother's garment, but pay for that which you have received of him; and if you obtainest more than that which you desire for your support, ye shall give the excess into my storehouse, that all things might be done in order, and according to my instructions. Behold, the time soon cometh that my scriptures shall be given, according to the time appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; but, it is expedient that ye hold your peace and not talk about them, until ye have received them in full; for all that belongs to the Father and all that belongs to the Son shall be combined into one; yea, even the scriptures of the fulness of time, which must soon come before the arrival of that great and dreadful day. But I say unto you, in the meantime, ye shall teach my gospel of this dispensation unto every nation, kindred, tongue and people. And you shall take all things given in my scriptures as the law, the laws to be obeyed and lived by, and to govern my church. And those who abide in my laws shall be saved and those who transgress them and repent not, shall be damned.

Therefore, ask for knowledge and mysteries of the kingdom, and it shall be revealed unto you line upon line, precept upon precept, knowledge upon knowledge. Yea, all the mysteries and peaceable things which bring joy and life eternal, shall be revealed in its time and season, according to the capacity and worthiness of the individual. And behold, it shall come to pass that my servants shall be sent forth to the east and to the west, to the north and to the south to proclaim my gospel; and those who shall be sent forth to the east shall teach the converts to flee to the west, in consequence of that which is coming of secret combinations upon the earth. But, behold, great shall be your reward, if ye observe all these things; for unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but unto the world it is not given. Soon ye shall receive the compilation of church covenants, which shall be sufficient to prepare you for here and in the New Jerusalem. Therefore, he that lacketh wisdom, let him ask of me, and I will give him liberally and upbraid him not. Lift up your hearts and rejoice, O ye elders of Israel, for unto you is given the kingdom, even the keys of the church. Even so. Amen.

Now, the elders and high priests who are appointed to assist the bishop as counselors in all things, are to have their families supported out of the property consecrated to the bishop, for the good of the needy and the poor, and for other purposes; or they are to receive a just remuneration for all their services, as may be thought best by the counselors and bishop; and the bishop also shall receive his support, or a just remuneration for all his services in the church.

Behold, verily I say unto you, that whatever persons among you, having put away their companions for the cause of fornication, if they shall testify before the elders in all lowliness of heart and in truth, ye shall not cast them out from among you, if they have truly repented and forsaken it; for, verily, carnal relationships by mutual agreement betwixt two persons not married to each other, are abominations in my sight, for they bring man's soul to hell; for fornication leads to captivity by the arm of the great and abominable church, with whom the kings and rulers of the world commit fornication; yea, it is likened to wicked reasoning, murders, thieving, false testimony, blasphemy and such, all of which arise from desires and whims of man, and defile him; it is likened to idolatry and eating of blood; it is one of the works of flesh and darkness, which antagonizes the spirit of God; and it is an offense for which an individual can be disfellowshiped from the congregation; for they who commit fornication commit sin against their own body and are cursed unto the diseases of the same, and are craftily led unto the captivity of the devil. Furthermore, spiritual decay resulting from fornication, brings defilement and uncleanness, disgraceful folly, and reproach unto the congregation. And if ye find that any persons have left their companions for the sake of adultery, and they themselves are the offenders, and their companions are living, they shall be cast out; for adultery is sin against God, and none who repent and forsake it not will ever inherit the kingdom of God; for all who commit adultery are in bonds of their hearts and snares of the devil, which brings their soul to ruin. Furthermore, married persons that keep on looking at other women or men with eyes of lust, to crave and desire them in their hearts, have already committed adultery; such ye shall know by the beam in their eyes and their mock behavior, in the absence of the Spirit. Yea, for these reasons, ye shall be watchful and careful, with full inquiry, that ye receive no such among you.

Furthermore, every person who belongeth to this church of Christ, shall be diligent in keeping all the commandments and covenants of the church. And if any person among you kills another person, he shall be delivered and dealt with according to the laws of the land; for remember he hath no forgiveness in this life nor in life to come. And if a man or woman commits adultery, he or she shall be tried by two or more elders of the church, and every word shall be established by two or more witnesses of the church, and not of the enemy; and the elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall deal with him or her according to the law of God. Thus, lest a prompt judgement is rendered by the church against the offenders, they shall die in the Spirit, as a consequence of their sin, and fall away from the church, and will be left alone to kick against the pricks; but if a person repents and forsaketh with sincerity of heart, he shall be forgiven.

And if a man or woman robs or steals, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land.

And if one lies, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land; but if anyone does any manner of iniquity, transgression or sin, he shall be judged by the law of God. And if your brother or sister offend you, ye shall seek reconciliation amongst yourselves, but if no reconciliation is reached, you shall deliver him or her up unto the elders of the church, not to the members, and it should be resolved in a private meeting, and not before the world; and if your brother or sister offend many, he or she shall be chastened before many. And if one offends openly, he or she shall be rebuked openly, that he or she be ashamed; and if one confesses not his or her guilt, arising from the consequence of misconduct, such will be delivered up unto the law of God, to be judged in due time. If anyone offends in secret, he or she shall be rebuked and chastened in secret, that he or she might have the opportunity to confess in secret to the one whom he or she has offended, and to God, that the church may not speak reproachfully of him or her. And thus ye elders shall conduct the affairs of my church in all things. Even so. Amen.

(February, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

O hearken ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you; for behold, ye have now received this law and commandment (Section 40), through him whom I have appointed unto you for this purpose. Now know ye assuredly that there is none other appointed unto you to receive my commandments and revelations, except the one who hath been anointed for this very purpose; yea, the one man chosen and called, and elected out of all the men on the face of the earth, at any given time. But, verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him; for if this gift is taken away from him, he shall have no power but to appoint another in his stead. And let this be a law and a commandment unto you, that ye shall not receive the teachings of any member of the church which come before you as my revelations or commandments; for unless they come from the one man appointed for this purpose, and none other, they are not of me; and only those who have been ordained and confirmed according to the laws of my church shall go forth to teach my gospel, and revelations and commandments.

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye might know how to act and direct my church, and how to act upon the points of my doctrine, laws and commandments; and become instructed in the affairs of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received; and learn to act in all holiness before me. That inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received; and inasmuch as ye do not this, it shall be taken away, even that which ye have received. Therefore, purge ye out the iniquity and strife which is among you, and sanctify yourselves before me; and if ye desire the glories or mysteries of the kingdom, appoint ye my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and uphold him before me by the prayer of faith; and provide for his food and raiment, and all that he needs to accomplish the work to which I have appointed him; and if ye do it not, he shall remain with those who have received him, that I may reserve unto myself a pure people that abide in my commandments and covenants.

Hearken ye elders of my church, whom I have appointed: ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things of God, by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high. Therefore sanctify yourselves to be endowed with power and authority, that ye may accomplish all that which I have spoken; for, behold, the great day of the Lord soon cometh; that the Lord shall utter his voice out of heaven; the heavens shall shake and the earth shall tremble, and the trump of God shall sound both long and loud, declaring to the sleeping nations: Ye saints arise and live; ye sinners stay and sleep, until I call again. Wherefore gird up your loins, lest ye be found among the wicked. Lift up your voices and spare not; call upon the nations to repent, both old and young, bond and free, saying: Prepare ye, prepare ye, for the great day of the Lord is nigh at hand. For if I, who am a man, do lift up my voice and call upon you to repent, and ye despise, what will ye say when the day cometh when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth, speaking to the ears of all living, saying; Repent, and prepare ye for the great day of the Lord? And when the lightnings shall streak forth from the east unto the west, and utter their voices unto all the living, making the ears of all tingle with the words — Repent ye, repent ye for the last time, for the great day of the Lord is come.

And the Lord your God shall utter his voice out of heaven, saying: Hearken, O ye nations of the earth, and hear the words of that God who made you. O ye nations of the earth, how often would I have gathered you together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not! How oft have I called upon you by the mouth of my servants and by my ministering angels, and by mine own voice; and by the voice of thunderings and lightnings, tempests and earthquakes, great hailstorms and by the voice of famines and pestilences of all kinds; and by the great sound of a trump, by the voice of judgement, grace and mercy, and by the voice of glory, honor and riches of eternal life, and by the highest blessing of everlasting salvation, but ye would not!

Behold, the day hath come, that the cup of the wrath of mine indignation is full; and verily, verily, I say unto you that these are the words of the Lord your God; wherefore, labor ye in my vineyard in these latter days, and call upon the inhabitants to repent, until the ushering in of the Millennial Day; for in the fulness of time will I come upon the earth in judgement; and my people shall be redeemed and reign with me on the earth for a thousand years. For the great Millennium, of which my servants the prophets of old, and also of latter days have spoken and written, and prayed about, shall soon arrive, and Satan will be bound, until the end of this time, then he shall be loosed again for a season; then cometh the end of this epoch, the Seventh Day of the Lord; the righteous and faithful shall again be gathered and changed in the twinkle of an eye, and the old earth and the wicked shall pass away by fire; yea, into that unquenchable fire, and their end no man on earth shall know, until they come before my judgement.

O ye elders of Israel, hearken to these words. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world; treasure these things in your hearts, and let the solemnities of eternities rest upon your minds. Be sober. Keep all my commandments. Even so. Amen.

(February, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto you my servants; It is expedient in me that the elders of my church should be called together, from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, by letter or some other way; and it shall be that inasmuch as they are faithful in their prayers unto me, I will pour out my Spirit upon them in the day of their assembly. And it shall come to pass that they shall go forth in the regions round about, and preach repentance unto the people. And many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man; that enemies may not have power over you; that ye may be preserved in all things; that ye may become learned in keeping my laws; and that every bond, by which the enemy seeketh to destroy my people, may be broken. Behold, I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things are done according to my laws and commandments which ye have received. Amen.

SECTION 43
(March 7, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people of my church, to whom the kingdom is given. Hearken ye and give ear to him who laid the foundation of the old earth and the new earth, the old heavens and the new heavens, and all the hosts thereof; and by whom all things were made, which live, move, and exist. Again, I say, hearken unto my voice, lest death overtake you, in an hour when ye think not the summer is over and the harvest ended, nor your souls saved.

Now listen to him who is your advocate with the Father, who is pleading your cause before Him, saying: Father, behold the sufferings and death of him who died without sin, in whom there was no guile, and in whom Thou wast well pleased; behold the blood of Thy Son which was shed for them, that in doing it Thyself might be glorified; wherefore, Father, spare these my brethren that believe on my name, that they might come unto me and have everlasting life. Hearken O ye people of my church and ye elders listen, and hear my voice this day, and harden not your hearts; for, verily, I say unto you that I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the light and the life of the world — yea, a light that shineth in the darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not; the same who came unto his own, and his own received him not; but unto as many as received him and his gospel, gave he power to do miracles and wonders, and glory beyond measure, and life eternal unto everlasting salvation.

And even so, I have sent mine everlasting covenants and commandments in various dispensations to the world, to be a light and beacon unto my people; and to be the precious gift sought by the Gentiles; and to prepare the way for my coming. Wherefore, come unto them, that ye might be able to come nigh unto me, and learn of all there is to know under the heavens above and over the earth below. Wherefore, hearken ye elders of Israel to my words, and let me show unto you my wisdom, the wisdom of him whom ye say is the God of Enoch, and his brethren who were separated from all other people, and were received unto myself a city reserved until the coming of the day of righteousness — a day which was sought for by all holy men of old, but they found it not because of the wickedness, abominations, and secret combinations on the earth. Yea, these my servants confessed they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth; and didst receive my promise that they should find it and see it; and in the fulness of time my people be allowed to dwell there, during the Day of the Lord.

Now, I will speak unto you the words of a prophecy, and reason with you as in the days of old, even as I spake unto my disciples, saying: As ye have asked of me concerning the signs of my coming in glory in a pillar of cloud, verily, verily, I say unto you that for ye have looked upon the long absence of your spirits from your bodies to be a bondage, I will show unto you the Day of your redemption, and also the restoration of the scattered Israel. And, behold, this temple in Jerusalem, which ye call the House of God, and your enemies say that this House will never fall, I say unto you that desolation shall come upon this generation as a thief in the night, and this people shall be destroyed and scattered among all nations; and this temple shall be thrown down, and not a stone shall be left upon another. And it shall come to pass that a generation of Jews shall not pass away that all shall be fulfilled.

Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh, and that also the heavens and the old earth shall pass away; and in this ye say truly; for so it is; but every whit, which hath been written by the prophets of old, and all that which I have spoken must first be fulfilled, for order and eternal nature of things prevaileth forever in the kingdom. Behold, the Day shall come in the fulness of time when Israel shall be gathered again, many a temple shall be built in my name, and many a Zion shall be established on the face of the earth. But Israel shall not be gathered until the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled; yea, until the everlasting gospel of the fulness of time, in which all under the sun and the moon will be gathered into one, and shall come forth by the way of the Gentiles; and there will be no more contentions and disputes among yourselves. And in that Day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and fear, doubt and commotion shall prevail throughout the world; men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the heavens and the earth. And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound, and the heavens and earth shall wait impatiently for the coming of the Messiah.

And when the time of the Gentiles is come, and all the scriptures gathered into one, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fulness of my gospel. But, there will be many also who will deny the scriptures, for they perceive not the light, for their hearts are turned away from the things of God, and they obey the precepts of men. Overflowing scourge and desolating sicknesses shall cover the land; wicked men shall lift up their voices and curse God and die; there shall be earthquakes, landslides, and eruptions in divers places; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword, one against another, and kill one another; but, behold, my disciples and saints shall stand firm in holy places, untouched, unharmed, and preserved in peace, safety and salvation.

And, when I the Lord had spoken these words unto my disciples, they were troubled, for they could comprehend them not; so, I said unto them: Be not troubled, for when all that I have spoken this day shall come to pass, ye may know that the promises which have been made to your fathers and to you shall be fulfilled. And when the light shall begin to break forth from among the Gentiles that remain in darkness, it shall be like a parable unto them, that when the fig trees begin to shoot forth their tender leaves, ye know for a surety that summer is now nigh at hand; even so it shall be before the coming of the great and the dreadful day of my return, that all the signs and wonders, and marvelous works shall be fulfilled; and they shall know that the hour is nigh at hand. And it shall come to pass that he who feareth me and keeps my commandments shall look forward to the great day of the Lord, even for the ensigns, wonders, and the fulfillment of all the prophecies before the coming of the Son of Man, with great joy and peace in heart. And he shall see many signs and wonders shown forth from the heavens above and the earth below, and not be disturbed by them, for he shall be saved by his faith.

And before the day of the Lord shall come, the sun shall be darkened, the moon turned to blood, and many stars shall fall from heaven; and the earth will be covered with blood, fire, and vapors of smoke. Yet, in the midst of tumult and turmoil, I shall descend from heaven in a pillar of cloud, and ye shall also come in power and great glory, with the hosts of holy angels; and he who prepareth not for this day, shall be cut off from among my people.

But before the arm of the Lord shall fall in judgement, an angel shall sound his trump, and the saints that have slept shall rise unto eternal life and come forth to meet me, when I descend again to dwell on earth for a thousand years, for it shall be the Day of the Father, even the Seventh Day. Wherefore, blessed are ye if you have slept in peace; for as you now behold me and know that I am, even so shall ye come unto me, and your souls shall live and redemption perfected; and my saints shall come forth from the four quarters of the earth. Then shall the arm of the Lord fall upon the nations; and the Lord set his foot upon this mount (of Olives), and it shall cleave in twain, and the earth shall tremble, and reel to and fro; and the heavens also shall shake. And the Lord shall utter his voice, and all the ends of the earth shall hear it and mourn; and those that have laughed shall see their own folly; calamity shall cover the mocker, the scorner shall be consumed; and the wicked shall be hewn down and cast into the fire. And then the Jews shall look upon me and say: What are these wounds in thine hands, and in thy feet? And then they shall know that I am the Lord, and I shall say unto them: Behold, these wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends; I am he who was lifted up unto the cross, and crucified; yea, I am Jesus the Son of the living God. Then they shall weep and lament for their iniquities, for they persecuted their king and believed him not.

And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed; and those that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them. And Satan shall be bound, that he shall have no place in the hearts of men for a thousand years. Therefore, prepare yourselves against the day of my coming, and learn of my parable which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for those that have embraced the truths of my gospel, and rely upon the Holy Spirit for their guidance, cannot be deceived by the cunning of the Devil and his snares for the captivity of man's soul. And verily, verily I say unto you, that those who are prepared shall not be hewn down and cast into fire, but they shall abide the day in gladness, and shall be saved. And the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation; to dwell in one of the three kingdoms, prepared by the Father for this very purpose. And the Lord of glory shall be in their midst, to be their king and lawgiver.

And now, behold, I say unto you that dreadful things, and great sacrifices await you; ye hear of wars in foreign lands, but they are nigh in your own lands; yea, this generation shall not pass away, that the war cries will be heard at your doorsteps. Wherefore, I the Lord, have said that ye elders of my church gather yourselves together from the eastern lands, and go ye forth into the western countries, and there call upon the inhabitants to repent; and inasmuch as they do repent, ye may build up churches unto me. And with unity of heart and purpose, with one accord, gather up your riches that ye may be able to purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you; in a place which shall be known as the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the Most High God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also; insomuch that the wicked will not come unto Zion, for in this place only the pure in heart shall dwell.

And it will come to pass among the wicked, that every man who will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for refuge and safety; and the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion, singing songs of everlasting joy. And these shall be the only people on the face of the earth that shall not be at war with one another. And it shall be said among the wicked: Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand.

And now I say unto you, keep these things from going abroad unto the world until it is expedient in me, that ye may accomplish all that which hath been commanded; that ye may be acceptable in the eyes of the people and in the eyes of your enemies; that all may know in time and season, according to their own natures and according to their own capacities. For when the Lord shall appear, He shall be terrible unto them, and they know it to be so; and they shall stand afar off and tremble and shake, and fear shall seize upon them. And all nations shall dwell in the midst of fear and terror of the Lord; but the saints and the righteous will abide the day in gladness of their heart, and rejoice in their blissful salvation. Even so. Amen.

(March 8, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hear, O ye people of my church; for verily I say unto you that these things were spoken unto you for your profit and learning (on March 7). Notwithstanding those things which are written, such things are always given to the elders of my church, from the beginning and always shall be, to conduct all meetings and affairs of the church as directed and guided by the Holy Spirit.

Nevertheless ye are commanded never to cast any one out from your public meetings, which are held before the world; and not to cast any one out of your sacrament meetings; but if a member of the church feels that he is unworthy to partake of the sacrament, let him by his own free will abstain, until he is reconciled. Ye are commanded in all things to ask God, who giveth liberally, and considering the consequences of sins, transgressions, iniquities and ways of error, always walk uprightly, and in holiness of heart before God; that ye may not be seduced by the evil spirits, or the doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men. Wherefore, be aware and learn to discern between the familiar spirits of devils and men and the Spirit of God, lest ye are deceived unto bondage and captivity of the adversary. Seek ye earnestly the best gifts, remembering always why they were given; for verily I say unto you, that such gifts are given for the benefit of those who love me and obey all my commandments, and to those who seek them diligently with sincerity of their hearts. Know ye also that all do not receive the same gifts, for there are many gifts, and to every man is given his portion according to his worthiness and his capacities to receive the gift by the Spirit of God.

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, in faith and prayer; to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the different ways by which these gifts are administered, according to the will and purposes of the Lord who worketh all in all; suiting His mercies according to the conditions of the children of men. Yet, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the diversities of operations and mysteries of the kingdom, the words of wisdom and words of knowledge; and it is given to have faith to be healed, or to have faith to heal; or the working of miracles, to prophesy, the power of discerning of spirits, or to speak in tongues and interpretation of tongues. All these gifts come from the same God, for the benefit of the children of God. And unto the bishop and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church and to be elders unto the church, are to be given to discern all these gifts; lest there be any among you professing and yet not to be of God. Remember, O ye people of my church, he that asketh in Spirit shall receive in Spirit; and also unto some it may be given to have all those gifts, that these may be head among you; in order that every member might be profited by his knowledge and understanding of my gospel; for he that asketh in the Spirit, asketh according to the will of God; wherefore it is done even as he asketh.

And again, I say unto you, all things must be done in the name of Christ, whatsoever you do in the Spirit; giving thanks unto God with sincerity of heart; and practicing virtue and holiness before the Lord continually. Even so. Amen.

(March 8, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, it is expedient in me that my servant John (Whitmer) should write and keep a regular history; and assist my servant Joseph Smith in transcribing all things which are given him; until he is called to further duties. Verily I say unto you that he can also lift up his voice in meetings, whenever it shall be expedient; and it shall be appointed unto him to keep the church records and history continually; for Oliver Cowdery (the current church historian and recorder) I have appointed to another office. Wherefore, it shall be given him by the Comforter according to his faithfulness, to write these things. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 46

It is necessary that ye should remain for the present time in your places of abode, as it shall be suitable to your circumstances. And inasmuch as ye have lands, ye shall impart a portion to your eastern brethren to dwell in. And inasmuch as ye have not lands, let them buy in the regions round about, as seemeth them good, for they must have a place to live for the present time. It is also necessary that ye save as much money as ye can, and obtain all that ye can in righteousness, that in time ye may be enabled to purchase land for an inheritance, even the city.

The place is not to be revealed; but after your brethren arrive from the east, certain men shall be appointed to whom it shall be revealed. And they shall be appointed to purchase the lands, and to begin laying the foundation of the city; then shall ye begin to be gathered with your families, according to circumstances, to that which has been appointed by the presidency and the bishop of the church; according to the laws and commandments which ye have received and shall hereafter receive. Even so. Amen.

(March, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken unto my word, my servants Sidney (Rigdon), Parley (Pratt), and Leman (Copely); for behold, verily I say unto you that you should go and preach my gospel, even as ye have received it, unto the Shakers. Behold, they desire to know the truth in part, but not all, for they are not right before me, and need to repent. Wherefore, I send my servants Sidney and Parley to preach the gospel unto them; and my servant Leman shall be ordained unto this work, that he may reason with them; not according to what he has received of them, but according to that which shall be taught to them by him and you my servants. And thus saith the Father. For I am God, and have sent mine Only Begotten Son into the world for the redemption of men; and have decreed that he that receiveth him shall be saved, and he that receiveth him not shall be damned. And they have done unto the Son of Man even as they listed; which Son hath taken his power on the right hand of his glory, and now reigneth in the heavens; and will reign till he descends on the earth in a pillar of cloud, to put all enemies under his feet, in the fulness of time.

I, the Lord God, have spoken it, but the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven; nor shall they know until he comes. Wherefore, I will that all men must repent, for all are under condemnation, due to the consequences of their sins and transgressions, iniquities and ways of error; except those whom I have reserved unto myself, holy men that ye know not of. Now, I give unto you a commandment that ye go among this people, and preach my gospel and build up my church, like mine apostle of old, whose name was Peter son of Jonah, saying: Believe ye on the name of the Lord Jesus, who was on earth, and is to come, the beginning and the end. Repent and be baptized (washed) in the name of Jesus Christ, according to my covenant which was established from the beginning, for the remission of sins. And whoso doeth this, shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, by the laying on of the hands of the elders of the church.

And, verily I say unto you that all nations of the earth shall bow to the will of the Father, to bring to pass that which hath been spoken by the mouths of my prophets; and those who are now exalted of themselves shall be brought low, that wickedness shall prevail no more upon earth for a thousand years. Furthermore, whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore, it is expedient that all men on earth who are not under my everlasting covenant, should have one wife; and the twain shall be one flesh, that earth might answer the end of its creation, that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his capacities and blessings. And whoso preaches to abstain from meats, that man is not ordained of God, and he should not eat the same; for, behold, the lawful beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, and that which cometh out of the earth, is ordained for the use of man for food and raiment, that he might have in abundance. But it is not given that one man or a handful of men possess all the wealth and temporal power, and the others be their slaves; woe, woe, unto such, for the same are the enemy of God and the despisers of truth and virtue; wherefore the world lieth in sin, in ignorance, and in disease and misery of the consequences of their sins, iniquities, transgressions, and ways of error.

And again, verily I say unto you, that the Son of Man cometh not in the form of a woman, nor in the form of a common man going about his business; but at the time of his coming the heavens shall be shaken, and the earth shall tremble and reel to and fro, as a drunken man; the valleys shall be exalted and mountains made low; the haughty, the wicked and the proud will be as stubble; this and more when the angel shall sound his trumpet loud and long. Yea, before the great day of the Lord, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness, and the Lamanites shall blossom unto their salvation and rejoicings. Zion shall flourish and rejoice upon the hills and the mountains, and shall be gathered together unto the place which I have appointed.

Behold, go forth and work diligently to bring to pass the things which I have commanded you; repent of all your sins; ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you. Fear not and doubt not, for mine angels will go before you, and behind you, and I will be in the midst of you; and ye shall not be confounded. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, and I come quickly. Even so. Amen.

(May, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, and give ear to the voice of the living God; and attend to the words of wisdom which are being given unto you, according to your wishes, concerning this church and the spirits which prevaileth upon the earth in this generation. Behold, verily I say unto you, that there are many false spirits which have gone forth, deceiving the world. Satan hath sought to destroy the children of God by corrupting their hearts and souls, that he may overthrow you. Behold, I, the Lord, have looked upon you, and have seen abominations in the church that profess my name. But blessed are they who are faithful and endure to the end, for they shall inherit eternal life. But woe unto them that are deceivers and hypocrites, for these shall be brought to judgement. Behold, verily I say unto you, there are hypocrites among you, who have deceived some, giving the adversary power, but, behold, such shall be reclaimed. But the hypocrites shall be detected and shall be cut off, either in life or in death, even as I will; and woe be unto them who are cut off from my church, for the same are overcome of the world.

Wherefore, let every man beware lest he do that which is not in truth and righteousness. And now saith the Lord by the Spirit, unto the elders of His church, come and let us reason together, even as a man reasoneth one with another face to face, that ye may understand. Wherefore, I the Lord ask you this question — unto what were ye ordained? Was it not to preach my gospel by the Spirit, even as the Comforter which was sent forth to teach the truth; and to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion? Then ye fell in the tempter's snares and received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and ye received them to be of God. Now, in this are ye justified? Verily, I say unto you, that all who are ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, shall preach it by the Spirit of truth, and no other way; and if it be that they preach it some other way, it is not of God.

And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth or some other way? If it be some other way, it is not of God. Therefore, why is it that ye cannot understand and know, that he who receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it exactly as it is preached by the Spirit of truth? Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understand one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; therefore if there is no edification or rejoicing, it is not of God, but is of darkness. That which is of God is light; and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light; and the light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

And again, verily I say unto you, O ye elders of my church, that ye may know the truth, and chase darkness from among you. He that is ordained of God and sent forth, the same is appointed to be the greatest, notwithstanding he is the least and the servant of all. Wherefore, he is possessor of all things; for all things are subject unto him, both in heaven and on the earth, the light and the life, the Spirit and power; sent forth by the will of the Father through Jesus Christ, His Son. But no man is possessor of all things, except he be purified and cleansed from all sin. And if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus Christ, and it shall be done.

But know this also, it shall be given you what you shall ask, for you are appointed to lead my church, the spirits shall be subject unto you. Wherefore, if you behold a spirit that you cannot understand, ye shall ask of the Father in the name of Jesus Christ, and if you receive not the spirit, it is not of God. And it shall be given unto you, power over that spirit, and you shall proclaim against that spirit with a loud voice that it is not of God; not with railing accusations, neither with boasting nor rejoicing, lest you be seized therewith; but rather to chase the darkness away from among you.

He that receiveth of God, let him account it of God, and let him rejoice that he is accounted of God. And by giving heed to my words, and keeping my commandments, you shall overcome all things, for the kingdom is given you of the Father. Behold, blessed are ye who are hearing these words from the mouth of my servant; and inasmuch as ye shall repent, your sins and transgressions shall be forgiven.

Let my servant Joseph Wakefield, in whom I am well pleased, and my servant Parley P. Pratt, go forth among the churches and strengthen them by the words of exhortation. And my servant John Corrill and others who are ordained unto this office, let them labor in my vineyard according to their instruction, and let no man hinder their tasks. In this thing my servant Edward Partridge is not justified; nevertheless let him repent, and he shall be forgiven.

Behold, ye are little children, and cannot bear all things now; but in grace and in the knowledge of truth ye must grow. Fear not, little children, for you are mine; and I have overcome the world, and you are of them that my Father hath given me; and none of them that my Father hath given me shall be lost. And the Father and I are one, I am in the Father and the Father in me; and inasmuch as ye have received me, ye are in me and I in you. Yea, I am in your midst, the good shepherd, and the stone of Israel. He that buildeth upon this rock shall never fall; and soon the day cometh when you shall hear my voice and see me, and know that I am. Watch therefore, that ye may be ready. Even so. Amen.

(May, 1831; Thompson, Ohio)

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak to Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions, that he might organize this people according to my laws; if otherwise, they will be cut off from my presence. Wherefore, let my servant Edward Partridge and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portions; to every man according to his family, and according to his needs, wants, desires, and circumstances. And when my servant Edward Partridge shall appoint a man his portion, let him also give unto the man in writing that his portion shall be secured unto him to be held as his right and his inheritance in the church; until such time he is not accounted worthy to belong to the church by the voice of the church. And if the man transgresses the laws and covenants of the church, and is not counted worthy of belonging to the church, by the voice of the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church, therefore, he shall only have claim on that portion which is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure, according to the laws of the land.

Furthermore, let every man deal honestly and sincerely with one another; and receive a just portion of your inheritance, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you; for if ye are not one, ye are not mine. And let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto the church; where money, meat and all that which is in excess of the needs and wants of this people shall be kept, under his supervision; also, let the bishop reserve a portion unto himself and his family, as he is employed in doing this business.

And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws; and I consecrate unto them this land for a season, until I, the Lord, shall command them otherwise, to go hence; the hour and the day is not given unto them, that they may dwell and prepare themselves for their journey, and turn their land into their good.

Behold, these are my instructions to my servant Edward Partridge, for his guidance, to be followed in all places throughout my church. And whoso is found a faithful, just, and a wise steward, shall enter into the joy of the Lord, and shall inherit eternal life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am Jesus Christ, who cometh quickly in an hour you think not. Even so. Amen.

(June 7, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto the elders whom he hath chosen and called in these days, by the voice of his Spirit — I, the Lord, will make known unto you what I will, that ye shall do from this time until the next conference, which shall be held in Missouri; upon the land which I will consecrate unto my people, who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and are heirs to the covenant of their fathers.

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, let my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon take their journey to the land of Missouri, as soon as the preparations can be made to leave their homes. And inasmuch as they are faithful unto me, they shall be provided with divine guidance along their journey; but, inasmuch as they are not faithful, they shall be cut off from my presence, even as I will and seemeth me good. Let my servants Lyman Wight and John Corrill take their journey speedily; and my servants John Murdock and Hyrum Smith take their journey unto the same place by way of Detroit. After the conference, let them take their journey, two by two, preaching my gospel along the way, saying none other things than that which are written by the prophets and apostles; and that which they have learned by the Comforter, through the prayer of faith; yea, let them preach in every congregation along their journey; baptizing by water, and laying on of the hands by the water's side. For thus saith the Lord, I will cut my work short in righteousness, and send forth judgement unto your victory.

And let my servant Lyman Wight beware, for Satan desireth to sift him as chaff. But behold, he that is faithful shall be made ruler over many things; wherefore, he that prayeth with contrite spirit and sincere heart, the same is accepted of me, if he obeys my ordinances. Yea, he that speaketh with lowliness of heart the language of God, and edifieth, the same is called of God. And he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise and wisdom, according to my truths revealed unto him. But he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruit, is not of me; but shall be hewn down in its time and season.

Behold, I have given unto you a pattern of these things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan stirreth mightily the hearts of the children of men, and goeth forth deceiving the nations. Wherefore, by this pattern ye shall discern the spirits in all cases under the whole heavens. And the days have come that according to man's faith it shall be done unto them. Behold, these are my words to the elders whom I have chosen.

Now, verily I say unto you, let my servants Thomas B. Marsh and Ezra Thayre take their journey also; preaching the word along the way to the same land. And my servants Isaac Morley, Ezra Booth, David Whitmer, Harvey Whitlock, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Solomon Hancock, Simeon Carter, Edson Fuller, Jacob Scott, Levi W. Hancock, Zebedee Coltrin, Reynolds Cahoon, Samuel H. Smith, Wheeler Baldwin, and William Carter also take journeys to the same land, preaching along the way. And let my servants Edward Partridge and Martin Harris take their journey with my servants Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, Jr.

And let my servants Newel Knight and Selah J. Griffin both be ordained; and also take their journey. Yea, verily I say, let all these take their journey unto one place in their several courses; and one man shall not interfere with the works of another, neither journey along the same track. He that is faithful, the same shall be kept and blessed with much fruit. Furthermore, let my servants Joseph Wakefield and Solomon Humphrey take their journey into the eastern lands, that they might labor with their families; declaring none other than that which has been written by the prophets and apostles, and their own testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel.

In consequence of transgression, and for he repents not, let that which was bestowed upon Heman Basset be taken away from him, and placed upon the head of Simonds Ryder; and let Jared Carter and George James be ordained as priests; and let the residue of the elders watch over the churches, and declare the word in the regions round about them, that they might labor with their own hands, that there be no idolatry nor wickedness practised among you. Remember in all things the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted, for he that ignores them, the same is not my disciple.

And again, let my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, and Edward Partridge take with them a recommend from the church; and let there be one obtained for my servant Oliver Cowdery also.

Thus have I spoken it, if ye are faithful in prayer and united in purpose, ye shall assemble yourselves together in the land of Missouri, which is a land of your inheritance, which is now the land of your enemies, to rejoice in partaking the blessings of heaven. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God; and I will lift them up at the last day. Even so. Amen.

(June, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, I say unto you, my servant Sidney Gilbert, that I have heard your prayers; which you offered unto me with a sincere heart and contrite spirit. Therefore, it should be made known unto you, of the Lord your God, concerning your calling and election in the church, which I, the Lord, have raised up in these last days. Behold, I, the Lord, who was crucified for the sins of the world, give unto you a commandment that you shall forsake the world; and take upon you mine ordination, even that of an elder; to preach faith and repentance and remission of sins, according to my word; and the reception of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands; and also to be an agent unto this church in the place which shall be appointed by the bishop, according to my commandments.

And again, verily I say unto you, that you shall take your journey with my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon. Behold, these are the first ordinances which you shall receive, and the residue shall be made known in its time and season, according to your labor in my vineyard. Therefore, my son Sidney, learn that he only is saved who endureth to the end. Even so. Amen.

(June, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord, even Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the same who was crucified for the sins of the world — verily, verily, I say unto you, my servant Newel Knight, that you shall remain steadfast in the office to which I have appointed you; and if your brethren desire to escape their enemies, which have been placed to strengthen and perfect them, let them do so; for they shall be confounded and judged accordingly, for they have broken their covenant with God; and if they repent not of all their sins, transgressions, iniquities, and ways of error, they shall be cast out from my presence. And woe unto that man from whom this offense cometh, for it would have been better for him that he had been drowned in the depth of the sea. But blessed is the man that keepeth my commandment, for the same loveth me and is loved of me; and the same shall dwell under my umbrella of grace and mercy, forever.

Wherefore, you are now commanded to take your journey into the regions westward, unto the land of Missouri, unto the borders of the Lamanites; and there seek ye to dwell like the men of the earth, until I prepare a place for you. Remember to be patient in tribulation until I come; and, behold, I come quickly, with a just recompense for your labors; and they who have sought me early in their lives, shall find rest to their souls.

(June, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant William (W. Phelps), even the Lord of the whole earth: Thou are chosen and called; and after thou hast been baptized by water, which if you do with an eye single to my glory, you shall have a remission of your sins, and a reception of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands; and thou shall be ordained under the hands of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., to be an elder unto this church; that you mayst preach repentance and remission of sins by way of baptism, in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God. And on whomsoever you shall lay your hands, if they are contrite before me, you shall have power to give the Holy Spirit.

Furthermore, you shall be ordained to assist my servant Oliver Cowdery to do the work of printing, of selecting and writing books for the schools in this church, that little children also may receive instructions and guidance, which are pleasing unto me. Verily, I say unto you (William Phelps), for this cause you shall take your journey with my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, that you may be established in the land of your inheritance; and again, let my servant Joseph Coe also take his journey with them. To the residue it shall be made known hereafter, even as I will. Amen.

(June, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people who profess my name, saith the Lord your God; for behold, mine indignation is kindled against the rebellious, and they shall know mine arm and my wrath, in the day of visitation upon the nations of the world. And he that will not take up his cross and follow me, and keep my commandments, the same shall not be saved; behold, he that will not obey shall be cut off in mine own due time, after he enters into a holy covenant, and then breaks it and repents not. Wherefore I, the Lord, command and revoke, as it seemeth me good.

Wherefore, I revoke the commandment which was given unto my servants Thomas B. Marsh and Ezra Thayre, and give a new commandment; that my servant Thomas shall take up his journey speedily to the land of Missouri, and my servant Selah J. Griffin shall go with him; for behold, I revoke the commandment which was given unto my servants Selah J.

Griffin and Newel Knight, in consequence of the stiffneckedness and rebellions of my people in Thompson. Wherefore, let my servant Newel Knight remain with them (in Thompson, Ohio); that as many as are contrite before me, may be led by him to the land which I have appointed.

And, verily I say unto you, that my servant Ezra Thayre must repent of his pride, and of his selfishness; and obey the former commandments which were given him, concerning the place upon which he lives. And if he will do this, for there shall be no divisions among my people, for the sake of the possession of land and wealth, he shall be appointed still to go to the land of Missouri; otherwise, he shall receive the money which he has paid, and shall be cut off from my church, saith the Lord God of hosts. And though the heavens and the earth shall pass away, my words shall not pass away, but shall be fulfilled.

And, if my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., must needs pay the money for the land in Missouri and for living there, behold, I, the Lord, will pay it unto him again in the land of Missouri; that those he shall receive there, may be rewarded again according to that which they do, even in lands for their inheritance.

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto my people: you have many things to do and to repent of; for behold, your sins have come up unto me, and are not pardoned, because you seek the counsel of your own hearts, and obey not my commandments. And your hearts are not satisfied, but are diseased, for ye obey not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness. Woe unto you rich, that will not give their substance to the poor and the needy; for their riches will canker their souls, and they shall become deluded in vanities and lies of the world; and they shall lament, saying: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, yet my soul is not saved! And they shall dread the day of my visitation and judgement. Woe unto you poor, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, whose bellies are not satisfied, whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods and possessions, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who labor not with their own hands; such are foolish and vain men of this world, taken into captivity and bondage, because of their fallen state.

But blessed are the poor who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, whose spirits are contrite; for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs, and the Lord shall reward every worthy man, and the poor shall rejoice in the justice and mercy of God; and their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, forever and ever. And now I make an end of speaking unto you. Even so. Amen.

(July 20, 1831; Zion, Jackson County, Missouri)

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandment in this land of Missouri; which land I have appointed and consecrated for a gathering of the saints; wherefore, this is a land of promise and a place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God: If you receive wisdom, here is one. Behold, the place which is now called Independence is the center place; and a spot for the temple is lying westward, upon a lot not far from the courthouse. Wherefore, it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile; and every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my saints are enabled to buy. Behold, this is wisdom that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance in these days.

And let my servant Sidney Gilbert remain in the office to which I have appointed him, to be a custodian of moneys, and an agent unto the church; to buy land in all the regions round about, always guided by the Holy Spirit in all transactions. And let my servant Edward Partridge and those he has appointed to assist him remain in the office to which I have appointed them; to divide unto the saints their inheritance, according to the Spirit, and my commandments.

And again, let my servant Sidney Gilbert settle himself in this place, and establish a store, that he may sell goods without fraud, but in righteousness and in wisdom; that he may receive moneys to buy lands for the good of the saints, and that he may obtain whatsoever things the disciples may need to plant them in their inheritance. Also let him obtain a license — behold here is wisdom, and whoso readeth it, let him understand — that he may send goods unto the people, even also by whom he will, as clerks employed in his service; and thus provide for my saints, that my gospel may be preached unto those who sit in darkness, in the region and shadow of death.

And, verily, I say unto you, let my servant William W. Phelps be planted in this place, and be established as a printer unto the church. And lo, if the world receives his writings — behold there is wisdom — let him obtain whatsoever he can in righteousness, for the good of the saints; and let my servant Oliver Cowdery assist him, even as I have commanded him, in whatsoever place I shall appoint him, to correct, to rewrite, and to select; that all things may be right before me.

Thus, let those of whom I have spoken be planted, with their families, in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, to do those things which I have spoken; and concerning the gathering, let the bishop and the agent make preparations for those families which have been commanded to come to this land, as soon as possible, and plant them in their inheritance. And unto the residue of both elders and members, instructions and guidance will be provided as needed. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 56
(August 1, 1831; Zion, Jackson County, Missouri)

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, and give ear to my word; and learn of me, what I will, concerning you and concerning this land unto which I have sent you. For verily I say unto you, blessed is he that keepeth my commandments whether in life or in death, and is faithful in tribulations; for he shall inherit many gifts, even the gifts of life eternal and everlasting salvation. Ye cannot at the present time behold with your natural eyes, the designs and plans of your God concerning the things to come; and the glory which follows after much tribulation; for after much tribulation come the blessings. Wherefore the day cometh that ye shall be crowned with much glory; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand. Remember, for this cause I have sent you, that ye may learn to value obedience, and your hearts be prepared to bear testimony of the things to come; and that you might be honored in laying the foundation of the land upon which a Zion of God shall stand; and a feast of fat things shall be prepared for the poor, that the earth may know that the mouths of my prophets fail not; yea, in the similitude of the supper of the Lord which shall be prepared before the arrival of the great and terrible day, a great supper shall be prepared. First, the rich and the learned, the wise and the noble, shall be invited; then cometh the day of my power, and the poor, the lame, the blind, and the deaf shall come unto the marriage of the Lamb, and partake of the supper of the Lord. Behold, I, the Lord have spoken it.

And that the testimony might go forth from Zion, yea, from the mouths of a people pure in heart, have I brought you hither; and have selected my servant Edward Partridge, and appointed unto him his mission in this land. But if he repents not of his sins, which are unbelief and blindness of heart, he shall fall; therefore, let him take heed. Behold, his mission is given unto him, and it shall not be given again. Whoso is selected in this mission, is appointed to be a judge in Israel, as it was in the days of old, when the land of their inheritance was to be divided among the children of Israel; and to judge his people by the testimony of the just, and by the assistance of his counselors, according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God.

For verily I say unto you, my laws shall be kept in this land. Let no man think he is a ruler; but let God rule him that judgeth, or counseleth, or sitteth upon the judgement seat. Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; for the temporal is subject to the eternal, even the spiritual, for ever and ever. Wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.

Behold, the laws which ye have received from mine hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth; behold, here is wisdom. And now, as I spake concerning my servant Edward Partridge, this land is the land of his residence, and of those whom he has appointed as his counselors, and also of him whom I have appointed to keep my storehouse. Wherefore, let them bring their families to this land, as they are instructed to counsel among themselves and me. Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and unwise servant; and he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power to choose and decide is given unto them, wherefore they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward; but he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, and hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments? Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled? Yea, I command and men obey not; I revoke and they receive not the blessing. Then they say in their hearts: This is not the work of the Lord, for his promises are not fulfilled. Woe unto such, for their reward lurketh beneath, and not from above.

And now I give unto you additional directions concerning this land and my church: It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church; and also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land to receive an inheritance, that he shall do with his moneys, according to the laws of the church. It is also wisdom that there should be lands purchased in Independence, for building a storehouse and a printing place. And I also say concerning my servant Martin Harris, that he must repent of his sins, for he seeketh the praise of the world.

And also let my servant William W. Phelps remain in his office to which I have appointed him, and receive his inheritance in the land; but he hath need to repent, for I, the Lord, am not well pleased with him; for he seeketh to strive and excel his brethren, and he is not sufficiently meek before me. Now, by this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins — behold, he will confess them and forsake them.

But the time for the residue of my elders to receive their inheritance in this land has not yet come; nevertheless, if they seek it through the prayer of faith, a portion shall be appointed unto them; for, behold, they shall push the people together from the ends of the earth. Wherefore, assemble yourselves together; and those who are not appointed to stay in this land, let them preach the gospel in the regions round about, then they may return to their homes. Let them preach along the way, and bear testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel; and call upon the rich, the high and the low, and the poor to repent. And let them build up churches, inasmuch as the inhabitants of the earth will repent; and let there be an agent appointed by the voice of the church, unto the church in Ohio, to receive moneys to purchase lands in Zion in Jackson County. And let my servant Sidney Rigdon write a description of the land of Zion, and a statement of the will of God, as revealed by the Holy Spirit; for behold the Lord willeth that the disciples and the children of men should open their hearts, even to purchase this whole region, as soon as time will permit, for an inheritance for the children of God.

Behold, here is wisdom. Let them do this lest they receive no inheritance, save it be by the shedding of blood, which is not acceptable unto me; and inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen of all kinds sent forth to labor for the saints of God. Let all these things be done in order, and the privileges of the lands be made known from time to time, by the bishop or the agent of the church. Verily, verily, I say unto you, let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight; but it shall be done as shall be counseled by the elders of the church at various conferences yet to come, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time.

And let my servant Sidney Rigdon consecrate and dedicate this land, and the spot for the temple, unto the Lord. Furthermore, let a conference meeting be called; and afterwards, let my servants Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, return to their own land, to accomplish the residue of the work which I have appointed unto them. Let all others returning to their homes from this conference, bear their testimonies along their way, of that which they know to be true, and most assuredly believe.

It is also decreed, let that which has been bestowed upon Ziba Peterson be taken away from him; and let him stand as a member in the church, and labor with his own hands with his brethren; until he is sufficiently chastened for all his sins; for he confesseth them not, and thinketh to hide them; and let my servant Edward Partridge direct the conference which shall be held by the elders of this church; and let him and his companions also return preaching the gospel along the way, and bearing record of things which they believe to be most assuredly true; for verily, the sound must go forth from this place unto all the world, unto the uttermost parts of the earth — the gospel must be preached unto every creature, with signs following them that believe. And, behold, the Son of Man cometh quickly. Even so. Amen.

(August 7, 1831; Zion, Jackson County, Missouri)

Behold, saith the Lord, blessed are they who have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory, according to my commandment. For those that live in me shall inherit the earth, and those that die in me, shall rest from all their labors, and their works shall follow them; and they shall receive a crown in the mansions of my Father, which I have prepared for them.

Yea, blessed are they whose feet stand upon this land of Zion, who have obeyed my gospel; for they shall receive for their reward the good things of the earth and it shall bring forth their strength. And they shall be crowned with blessings from above, and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time and season. Yea, even the great mysteries and glories of the kingdom shall be unfolded unto them that are faithful and diligent before me. Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and soul, and with might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve Him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal, nor commit adultery; nor kill a fellowman, nor do anything like unto it, as written by my prophets. Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things. Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness, even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and partake of the sacraments, on my holy day; for verily this day is a day appointed unto you to rest from your worldly labors, and to pay your devotions unto the Most High God; nevertheless, your vows shall be offered in righteousness on all days, and at all times. Remember, on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, confessing thy sins and transgressions before the Lord, if any, and renewing thy covenants in prayerfulness and thanksgiving, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. On this day thou shalt restrict thyself from all servile labor, only let your food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect, or in other words, thy joy may be full; verily, this is fasting and prayer, or in other words, rejoicing and prayer.

And inasmuch as ye do these things with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts and countenances, not with much laughter, for this is sin, but glad and peaceful heart and a cheerful countenance — verily, verily, I say unto you, the fulness of the earth is yours, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees and walketh upon the earth; and all clean herbs, and good things which come of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, for houses and barns, for orchards, gardens, and vineyards, all are ordained for man's use. Yea, all things which come of the earth, in the seasons thereof, are made for the benefit of man, and for the use of man; both to please the eye and to gladden the heart, and to enliven the Spirit. Yea, all these things are ordained of our fathers and prophets of old, as a gift of God unto His children, for now and forever. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end they were made to be used, with judgement, not to excess, neither by extortion. And in none of these things doth man offend God, nor kindle his wrath; save those who confess not His hand in all things, and obey not His commandments. Behold, this is according to the law and the prophets, an everlasting covenant of God with his children of the kingdom; wherefore, trouble me no more concerning this matter. But learn that he who does the works of righteousness shall receive his just reward, even all the bounty of God, and peace and salvation in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. I, the Lord, hath spoken it, and the Spirit beareth record. Amen.

SECTION 58
(August 8, 1831; Jackson County, Missouri)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto the elders of his church, who are soon to return to the land from whence they came: It pleaseth me, that you have come up hither, but with some I am not well pleased; for they will open not their mouths, to bear record of their testimony, because of the fear of man. Woe unto such, for mine indignation is kindled against them. And if they continue to abide in their sins and transgressions, and stiffneckedness, even that which they have shall be taken away from them. For I, the Lord, rule in the heavens above, and among the hosts of the earth.

Now, verily, I speak unto you concerning your journey unto the land from whence you came. Let there be a craft made, or bought, as seemeth you good, it mattereth not, and take your journey speedily for the place which is called St. Louis. And from thence, let my servants Sidney Rigdon, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, take their journey for Cincinnati. And here, let them lift up their voices and declare my word, not in haste, but by the power of the Holy Spirit unto all men, even the fallen and the wicked; without anger or doubt, in meekness and in humility, in long-suffering and patience; for I shall go before you to prepare the way. And let the residue of my servants take their journey from St. Louis, two by two, and preach the word, not in haste, among the congregations of the fallen and the wicked, along the way, until they return to the churches from whence they came; and all this for the good of the churches, for such was the intent of my commandment.

Furthermore, let my servant Edward Partridge impart of the money which was given him, a portion unto mine elders who are commanded to return; and he that is able, let him return his portion by the way of the agent of the church, but it is not required of him who is unable. Now, I speak of the residue who are to return to this land; behold, they have been sent to preach my gospel among the congregation of the fallen and the wicked; not in haste, neither in anger or strife; that they shall not idle away their time, nor shall they bury their talents, that they may not be known. But, if the congregations of the fallen and the wicked receive you not, and mistreat you, shake off the dust of your feet against such; not in their presence, lest you provoke them, but in secret; and wash your feet, as a testimony against them. Behold, in due time they shall be judged according to your words.

And now, behold, this shall suffice you and the will of him who hath sent you; and further instructions concerning my servants Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery shall be made known by the mouth of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. Even so. Amen.

(August 12, 1831; McIlwaine's Bend, on the bank of the Missouri River)

Behold and hearken unto the voice of him who has all power, who is from everlasting to everlasting, even Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. Verily, verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, O ye elders of my church, who are assembled upon this spot: Your sins are now forgiven you, for I, the Lord, forgive the sins of those who confess them with humble heart, and forsake them.

But, verily I say unto you, that it is not needful for this whole company of mine elders to be moving swiftly upon the waters of this river; whilst the inhabitants on either side are perishing in unbelief. Nevertheless, I have suffered it that ye might bear record; behold there are many dangers upon these waters, especially from here onward; for I, the Lord, in years past have decreed in mine indignation, the destruction upon this river, that no flesh shall be safe upon these waters; and by the mouth of my servant John, I cursed the waters; that it shall be said that none is able to go up to the land of Zion by the way of these waters, except he that is upright in heart.

Therefore, for all flesh is in mine hand, he that is faithful among you shall not perish by the waters. Now, it is expedient in me that my servants Sidney Gilbert and William W. Phelps depart on their mission. Nevertheless, I would not suffer that ye should part until you were chastened for all your sins, that you might be one, and not perish in wickedness; but now it behooveth me that ye should part; wherefore, let my servants Sidney Gilbert and William W. Phelps join their former company; and let them take their journey in haste that they may fill their mission, and through faith and prayer overcome the world. And inasmuch as they are faithful, they shall be preserved against all the cunning of the Devil, and the fiery darts of the adversary; for I, the Lord, shall be with them.

Behold I, the Lord, in the beginning blessed these waters, for they serve a useful purpose in my kingdom, requiring a watchful eye for their preservation and use; and in the last days, by the mouth of my servant John, I cursed these waters, that no flesh shall be safe upon them; that it may be spoken by men, saying: None is able to go up to the land of Zion by the way of these waters, but he that is upright before their God. Therefore, as I, the Lord, have previously cursed the land, even so in these days have I blessed it, for the use of my saints, that they may partake of the fatness thereof. Now, I give unto you all a commandment, that you shall forewarn your brethren concerning these waters, that they come not journeying upon them, lest their faith fail, and they find themselves caught in the snares, which are placed for this very purpose; yea, for I, the Lord, have decreed it, the destroyer rideth upon the face of the waters, to keep a watchful eye upon the trespassers; and revoke not the decree. But, today my anger is turned away; wherefore, let those who are called to take their journey in haste, depart according to their judgement, by water or by land, it mattereth not.

And now, concerning my servants Sidney Rigdon, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery — let them come not again upon the waters of this river (Missouri), save it be upon the canal, while journeying unto their homes; in other words, they shall never journey by the way of this river, but by the way of the canal. Behold, I, the Lord, have appointed a way for the journeying of my saints, and this is the way. And, behold, after they leave the canal, they shall journey by land, inasmuch as they are commanded to journey, and go up unto the land of Zion; and they shall pitch their tents, like unto the children of Israel in the wilderness, along the way, and behold, this is my commandment unto one and unto all. Nevertheless, unto whom is given power to command the waters, he shall find his course along the river, by the power of the Spirit; and the destroyer shall be able to discern the Spirit, and allow him to pass. But unto you is given the course for the saints, or the way for the saints of the camp of the Lord, unto the land of Zion, by the way of canal, and not by the river.

And again, verily I say unto you, my servants Sidney Rigdon, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, shall not open their mouths in the congregation of the fallen and the wicked, until they arrive at Cincinnati; and there they shall lift up their voices unto God, against that people; yea, unto him whose indignation is kindled against their wickedness and abominations, a people who are well-nigh ripened for destruction. And from thence let them journey for the congregations of their brethren; for their labors are even more needed among them, than among the congregations of the fallen and the wicked. But let the residue of the elders take their journey unto those congregations, to declare the word, in patience, in meekness, in humility, in long-suffering, and in brotherly love. And inasmuch as ye do this, your old garment shall be washed clean, and you shall become spotless before me. These elders may journey together, or two by two, as seemeth them good; but let my servants Reynolds Cahoon and Samuel H. Smith, with whom I am well pleased, be not separated, until they return to their homes, and this for a wise purpose in me.

And now, verily I say unto you and unto all: Be of good cheer, little children, for I am in your midst, and you are not forsaken; and inasmuch as you have humbled yourselves before me, and have obeyed my commandments, the blessings of the kingdom are yours. Therefore, gird up your loins and be watchful and sober, looking forth for the coming of the Son of Man; for he cometh in an hour of which you think not. Pray always, my little children, that you enter not into temptation, that you may abide in the day of his coming, whether in life or in death, unto the end. Even so. Amen.

(August 13, 1831; Chariton, on the bank of the Missouri River)

Behold, and hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, your advocate with the Father, who understandeth every weakness of man, and comprehendeth every power of God. Verily, mine eyes are upon those who have not gone up unto the land of Zion in Missouri; wherefore your mission is not yet fulfilled. Nevertheless, ye are blessed, for the testimony which you have borne is recorded in heaven, for the angels to look upon; and they rejoice over you, and your sins are forgiven, and erased from the records. And now continue your journey unto Zion, and assemble there; hold a meeting and rejoice together, and offer sacrament unto the Most High. Then you may return to bear your record, altogether or two by two, it mattereth not; only be faithful, and declare glad tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, or among the congregations of the fallen and the wicked. Behold, I, the Lord have brought you together, that the promise might be fulfilled; that the faithful among you should be preserved, and rejoice together in the land of Missouri; for every promise made to my saints must be fulfilled, every whit, for the Lord cannot lie.

I, the Lord, am willing, if some among you desire to ride upon horses, or mules, or in chariots, they shall be blessed, if they receive them from the hand of the Lord, with a thankful heart in all things. Keep my words, and do according to your judgement and the guidance of the Spirit. Behold, the kingdom is yours; and, lo, I am with the faithful always. Even so. Amen.

(August, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people, that call yourselves the people of the Lord, and open your hearts and hear the word of the Lord, and his will concerning you. Behold, hear the word of him whose indignation is kindled against the wicked and the rebellious; who taketh away that which he taketh away, and giveth in abundance that which he giveth; the same who buildeth up at his own will and pleasure; and destroyeth according to his designs and purposes, and can cast souls down to hell; behold, I, the Lord utter my voice, and it is obeyed. Wherefore, verily I say, let the wicked take heed, and the rebellious tremble and fear; and let the unbelieving hold their lips, for the day of wrath shall come upon them as a whirlwind, and all flesh shall know that I am God. And he that seeketh signs shall see signs, but not unto salvation; for, verily, there are those among you who seek signs; and there have been such even from the beginning of days; but, behold, faith cometh not by signs, but signs and ensigns follow those that believe. Yea, signs and warnings come unto the faithful, by the grace and mercy of God, not by the will of man, nor do they appear by themselves. Yea, the signs, wonders, and ensigns come unto all who abide in faith; and for without faith no man pleaseth God. Those with whom God is not well pleased are declared faithless and fallen; wherefore unto such he showeth no signs or ensigns, for they are left alone unto their condemnation and folly; to kick against the pricks, to curse God, and die.

Wherefore, I, the Lord, am not pleased with those among you who have sought after signs and wonders, and after your own glory, rather than to glorify your God. And when I give commandments to them, they keep them not, but rejoice in transgressing them when they are put to the test; in this manner the world dwells in sin and death. Yea, there are among you adulterers, that commit adultery in their hearts and lust after the pleasures of the flesh, in secret; such are not detected by the world, but behold, mine angels know their thoughts well; woe unto them if they repent and forsake not, for they shall be chastened in secret, and cursed with the diseases of the same. Let such beware and repent speedily, lest judgement shall come upon them as a snare, and then shame and folly be made manifest in the eyes of the people. And, verily, I say unto you, he that looketh upon a woman to lust after, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith; and shall dwell in fear and doubt unto the end of their days; and their end by no means is sweet, but painful and bitter is their journey's end.

Wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful and doubtful, the unbelieving, the liars, the thieves and whoremongers, and sorcerers and soothsayers, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death; and they shall have no part in the first resurrection. And now behold, I the Lord, say unto you that, for these things prevail among you, the church is under condemnation. Nevertheless, he that endureth in faith unto the end, and keepeth my commandments, the same shall overcome the world, and be saved in my kingdom; and shall receive an inheritance upon the earth, when the day of transfiguration shall come; when earth will be transfigured according to the pattern which was shown unto mine apostles upon the mount; of which account the fulness ye have not yet received.

And now, verily I say, he that keepeth my commandments, unto him I will give the mysteries of my kingdom, and the same shall be in him a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life. Behold, it is the will of the Lord your God concerning his saints, that they assemble themselves together unto the land of Zion, not in haste, lest there be confusion, which bringeth disease and pestilence. Behold, the land of Zion, I the Lord, hold it in mine own hand; nevertheless, I, the Lord, render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's. Wherefore, I the Lord will that you should purchase the lands, that ye may have advantage of the world, that you may have claim upon it, that the inhabitants (your Lamanite brethren) may not be stirred up unto envy, jealousy and anger; for Satan putteth it into their hearts to hostility and anger against you, and to the shedding of blood. Wherefore, the land of Zion shall be obtained by purchase, and not by shedding of blood; for you are forbidden to shed blood; lo, your enemies are upon you, and ye shall be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, and but few shall remain to receive an inheritance.

Behold, I, the Lord, am angry with the fallen and the wicked; and my presence is withdrawn from the men of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath, and decreed wars upon every place on earth, that the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear and doubt shall come upon every man; and the saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, shall be in their midst, to gather them under my wings, as the hen gathereth her chickens; while the wicked and the haughty shall be consumed by unquenchable fire; and, behold, this is not yet, but by and by.

Wherefore, seeing that I, the Lord, have decreed all these things upon the face of the earth, I will that my saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion; and every man should take the shield of righteousness in his hand and the armour of faithfulness, and lift a warning voice unto the inhabitants of the earth, declaring that the desolation shall soon come upon the wicked; therefore, let my disciples in Kirtland (Ohio), who dwell upon the farm, arrange their temporal concerns; and let my servant Titus Billings, who is the caretaker of the place, dispose of the land; that he may be prepared to take a journey, the coming spring, unto the land of Zion; and let all moneys which can be spared, little or much it mattereth not, be sent unto the land of Zion, unto those who are appointed to receive it.

Behold, I, the Lord, will give unto my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., power that he shall be able to discern by the Spirit those of my disciples who shall go unto the land of Zion, and those who shall tarry. Let my servant Newel K. Whitney retain the store, yet for a little season; nevertheless, let him impart all the money he can, unto the land of Zion. Furthermore, let him be ordained unto this power, as an agent unto the disciples that shall tarry. And now I will that ye speedily visit the churches, expounding these things, with my servant Oliver Cowdery:

He that is faithful and endureth, shall overcome the world.

He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive inheritance in this world, and also in the world to come; and his works shall follow him.

Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead, and shall die not afterward; and shall receive an inheritance in the holy city.

He that liveth when the Lord shall come, and hath kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed that he die at the age of man, according to the death of the world; wherefore, children shall grow up until they become old, and die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; yea, for this cause the apostles preached unto the world the resurrection of the dead.

Verily, I say unto you that these are the things that ye are to preach, and all that which the Holy Spirit brings to utterance, ye may preach; you are also to look for these things, for they are now nigh at hand, and prepare yourselves for the day of the coming of the Son of Man; and until that hour, there will be foolish virgins among the wise, and at that hour shall come an entire separation of the righteous from the wicked; and in that day I will send mine angels to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into the unquenchable fire, which hath been prepared for them since the first generation.

And now behold, verily I say unto you, that I am not pleased with my servant Sidney Rigdon; for he exalts himself in his heart, and receives not my counsel, but grieves the Spirit; wherefore his writing is not acceptable unto the Lord, and he shall write another; and, if he obeys not that which he is commanded to do, behold he remains no longer in the office to which I have appointed him. Furthermore, those who desire in their hearts, in meekness and humility, to warn sinners to repentance, let them be ordained unto this power; for this is a day of warning, not a day of many words; and I, the Lord, am not to be mocked in these the latter days.

Behold, I am Alpha and Omega, even Jesus Christ; wherefore let all men beware how they bring my name to their lips; for behold, there are many among you under this condemnation, who use the name of the Lord, and use it in vain, without having authority; wherefore, let the church repent of their sins in sincerity of heart, and I will forgive them, and remember them no more; otherwise, they will be cut off from my presence. Remember, that which cometh from above is sacred, and must be spoken with care, by the power of the Holy Spirit; and in this there is no condemnation, but rejoicings in heaven; thus both the speaker and the listener are edified and rejoice together in the partaking of the Holy Spirit; wherefore, utterance in the absence of the Spirit brings the saints under condemnation.

Let my servants, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, seek themselves a home, according to the guidance of the Holy Ghost, in prayer of faith. Behold, all these things remain to be overcome through patience and diligence, that my faithful may receive a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; and the wicked a greater condemnation. Even so. Amen.

(September 11, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord your God unto you, O ye elders of my church; hearken ye, and listen, and receive my will concerning you. For verily I say unto you, I will that you should overcome the world, that I might be able to bestow compassion upon you. There are those among you who have sinned, and have not forsaken them altogether, but I am pleased with the church as a whole; for this cause, and for mine own glory, and for the salvation of souls, I have decreed that your sins be washed clean once more; for I have forgiven your sins, and shall remember them no more. I will be merciful unto you, for I have given unto you the kingdom; and the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom shall be revealed unto you by the hand of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., who has been appointed for this purpose, by the voice of the people; and these keys shall not be taken away from him, while he liveth, and inasmuch as he obeyeth my commandments.

There are those among you who have sought occasion against him, knowing not the cause, nevertheless, he has sinned. But verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, forgive sins unto those who confess before me in sincerity of heart, except those who have committed the sin of death. My disciples, in the days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts; and for this evil they were afflicted and sorely chastened. Wherefore, I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another; for he that forgiveth not the sins and iniquities of others, standeth condemned before God, for there remaineth within him a greater sin. Yea, I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive; but of you it is required to forgive all men, and this is wisdom in me.

And those among you that repent not of their sins, and confess them not, ye shall bring forth before the church; and do with them according to the holy writ, in prayer of faith, according to the guidance of the Holy Spirit; and this ye shall do that God may be glorified; not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend Him who is your Lawgiver; verily, for this cause ye shall do these things.

Behold, my indignation was kindled against my servants Ezra Booth and Isaac Morley, for they kept not the law, nor the commandments, but sought evil in their hearts; and I, the Lord, withheld my Spirit, for they condemned for evil that thing which was not evil, but good; nevertheless, my servant Isaac Morley hath been forgiven of his sins. And, behold, my servant Edward Partridge hath sinned, and Satan seeketh to destroy his soul; but verily, I say unto you, that those who repent of their sins in sincerity of their heart, they shall be forgiven.

And now, let my servant Sidney Gilbert, after a few weeks, return to his business and his agency in the land of Zion; and that which he hath seen and heard be made known unto my disciples, that they perish not. Behold, verily I say unto you, that my servant Isaac Morley, nor any other man, is to be tempted beyond that which he is able to bear; for ye have counseled him wrongfully, saying unto your own hurt, that the Lord gave commandment that his farm should be sold. I also will not that my servant Frederick G. Williams should sell his farm; for I, the Lord, will that he retain a strong hold in the land of Kirtland for the space of five years, in the which I will not overthrow the wicked, that some may be saved; and after this time, I, the Lord, will hold none guilty, that go with gladness of their hearts and rejoicings to the land of Zion; for I, the Lord, require the hearts of the children of men.

Behold, these are called the last days or the Latter-days, until the coming of the Son of Man; then shall begin the Millennial-days; and those who are pure in heart and those who pay their tithes, and love the Lord their God, shall be saved, and not destroyed, at the day of his coming; for verily I say unto you, that tomorrow all the proud and the wicked shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, and spare not any that remain in Babylon and sins. Wherefore, if ye believe in me, ye shall labor today, which are called the Latter-days; and prepare my church for the great and terrible day.

And, now, behold, it is forbidden unto you, by the decree, that ye shall enter in debt of your enemies; but is not decreed at any time that the Lord should not take away as he pleaseth, and increase in abundance as he pleaseth; wherefore, ye are agents always on the Lord's errands; to do his will, and to remember his divine purposes in all business dealings. And he hath placed you to provide for his saints in these latter days, that they may obtain an inheritance in the land of Zion; wherefore, be not weary in doing well and offering sacrifices unto the Lord in righteousness, for ye are laying the foundation of a great work, which shall be built up in the fulness of time; for out of small things proceedeth that which is great. Behold, the Lord requireth pure hearts and willing minds, and those who are obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion, all their days; and the rebellious shall be cut off from my people, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, nor of Judah; therefore, those who are rebellious among them, shall be plucked out of their inheritance in Israel.

Behold, I, the Lord, have built up my church in these latter days, like unto a judge sitting in a high place on the hill, to judge his church of the Firstborn and the elect of God, and all nations. For, verily, it shall come to pass that my people that dwell in Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and the liars and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and those who are not apostles and prophets shall be known. And even the bishop, who is likened to a judge, and his counselors, if they are not faithful in their stewardships shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead. For, behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her; and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and they shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come when the nations of the earth shall tremble and shake with fear and doubt, for her terrible justice shall frighten and overwhelm them. Thus hath the Lord spoken it. Amen.

(October 25, 1831; Orange, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto my servant William E. McLellin — Blessed are you, inasmuch as you have turned away from your iniquities, and have received my truths, saith the Lord your Redeemer, the Savior of the world. Verily I say unto you, that even as many as believe on my name and obey, blessed are they; for they shall be blessed of receiving my everlasting gospel and entering into mine everlasting covenant, unto peace, safety, and salvation; yea, they shall even be blessed of receiving the fulness of my gospel, in its time and season; that they might become partakers of the life-giving springs of water, even unto immortality and eternal life; and be made partakers of the highest glories, according to their faith and worthiness, and according to the prayers and the blessings of those who are appointed at the right hand of God's throne.

Verily, I say, that my servant William (McLellin) is clean before me, but only partly; therefore, he must repent of those things which are not pleasing in my sight, and he must not fear man more than God, nor should he pretend to fear or doubt; for it is given unto you to choose your own thoughts and actions, that ye may come before the judgement seat of God, which no man can escape, according to your works and deeds, and capacities. Behold, it is my will that you should proclaim my gospel from land to land, and from city to city, yea, in all those regions where it has not been proclaimed. Tarry not many days in this place (Orange, Ohio), nor go up unto the land of Zion, but inasmuch as you can help, do always help; and be not overly attached to your properties and worldly possessions. Go unto the eastern lands, bearing testimony in every place, unto every people, in their synagogues, exhorting the doctrines of the gospel, in meekness and in humility, in long-suffering and patience.

Now, let my servant Samuel H. Smith take his journey with you; forsake him not, for he shall obey your instruction. Remember, he that is faithful shall be made strong in every place; and my presence will go with that person. Lay your hands upon the sick and the afflicted, and they shall recover by the grace and the mercy of the Lord your God. Return not until all your mission is fulfilled; be patient in afflictions and trials and tribulations, for they are calculated to strengthen and perfect you. Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Do not be troubled or perplexed, overwhelmed or astonished; for by faith you are to overcome the world, and not be overcome by it. Commit not adultery in your thoughts, or actions, for the waters of life spring from the purity of thought; yea, forsake this evil temptation, with which you have been troubled, lest you lose faith, and walk alone in the world of the fallen and the dead.

Keep these words of mine, and abide in my gospel; for each commandment which is given through my servants unto my children, is calculated to preserve your soul, and to prevent you from the eternal bondage and misery of the Devil. Thus, you shall magnify your calling, and send many people to Zion, with songs of everlasting joy and gladness in their hearts, singing Hosanna to the Most High God. Continue ye in these things unto the end, and you shall have a crown of eternal life at the right hand of my Father's throne. Verily, thus saith the Lord your God, your Redeemer and Savior, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

(November 1, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwelleth on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; Hearken ye people of far off lands, and those that dwell upon the islands of the sea; and listen to my words which I shall give unto you this day. For verily the voice of the Lord your God is unto all men, and there is none that can escape; each eye shall see, each ear shall hear, and each heart shall be penetrated by the word of your Redeemer and Savior. The rebellious and the wicked shall be pierced with much sorrow; for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these latter days.

Yea, my servants shall go forth to declare these things, and none can stay them, for I, the Lord, have commanded them; and have given them the authority to publish unto you my preface to the book of church articles, covenants, and commandments, that all men may be profited by them, O inhabitants of the earth. Wherefore, fear and tremble, O ye people, for that which I the Lord have decreed in them, shall be fulfilled every whit; and not a yod or a tittle shall fall to the ground.

And verily I say unto you, that those who go forth bearing these tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, to them is given the power to seal both on earth and in heaven; yea, even the same power and authority which was given unto my apostles Simon Peter the son of Jonah, and James and John; that whatsoever they shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever they shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven; and to seal the wicked and the rebellious unto the day when they shall be judged, and none can escape the judgement of the Most High God, unto their salvation and eternal life, or unto their damnation and condemnation.

Wherefore, the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all mankind may be given the opportunity to learn of my gospel, and the Father's plan of salvation and redemption, by the mouths of my servants, who shall say: Prepare ye, prepare ye, for the coming of the Lord is nigh; and the wrath of the Lord is kindled against this evil and pervert generation, and his sword is out of its sheath, ready to fall upon the inhabitants of the world. The day soon cometh that the arm of the Lord shall be revealed unto all men; and those who give no heed, nor hear the words of my prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the congregation of my covenant people, who have kept my ordinances and commandments, and have broken not mine everlasting covenant.

Yea, the fallen and the wicked seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness upon earth; but seek to destroy and frustrate the works of the eternal kingdom of God, unto their own folly and shame; and it is given unto them to do as they please, and serve whom they choose to list; every man walketh in his own way, after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and perisheth, as doth Babylon of this generation.

Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamities which are to come upon the inhabitants of the world, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments; and also called others and gave them commandments, that they should proclaim these things unto the world, that all which has been written by my prophets and disciples might be fulfilled. Yea, the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the powers and dominions and empires of the mighty and the strong, that man may learn not to rely on the counsels of men, but to obey the commandments of God; and not to trust the arm of flesh.

But, every man might speak in the name of the Lord their God, even the Savior of the world; that the faith of man may increase upon the earth; that mine everlasting covenant be established; that the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple unto kings and rulers and their congregations. Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and are given unto my servants in their meekness, humility, long-suffering, patience, and diligence, in consequence of their prayers of faith and living sacrifices; that those who have fallen and died, but are willing to repent and forsake their evil ways, might be saved; that those who sought wisdom might be instructed; that those that have sinned might be chastened unto repentance and forgiveness, or be damned unto stiffneckedness and eternal misery; that those who are humble and pure in heart, might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge and intelligence from time to time.

And after having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., might have power to translate, through the mercy and power of God, the Book of Mormon into the English language; for, behold, my mind and will, and purposes and designs, are revealed unto my servants, according to the manner of their language.

It is also by the grace and mercy of God, that these commandments are given unto men, in these latter days; that this eternal and living church of Christ may be brought forth out of obscurity, and out of the mist of its darkness, unto the dawning of the day of the Lord; and to prepare the grounds for the foundation of this church to be established, in the fulness of time; that upon this foundation be built my millennial-day church, to dwell under the light of the Son for a thousand years. Yea, ye are given these commandments, that ye might have power to lay the foundation of this great and marvelous work of the church, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively, and not individually.

Nevertheless, he that repents and keeps the commandments of the Lord, shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken away even the light which he has received; for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts.

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth: I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh; and for I am no respecter of persons, I will that all men shall know that the day soon cometh when peace shall be taken away from the world; and the devil shall have power over his own dominion; and the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in the midst of them; and shall come down in judgement upon Idumea (Dunea), or the world. Therefore, search ye well the scriptures and my commandments, for they are true and life-giving; and the prophecies and promises which are in them, shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken it, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but all shall be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; for behold, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever. Amen.

(November, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Behold and hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together; whose prayers have I heard, and whose hearts I know, and whose desires have come up before me. Behold, mine eyes are upon you, and the heavens and the earth are in mine hands, and the riches of eternity are mine to give. But, verily I say, that ye pretended to believe that ye should receive the blessing which was offered unto you; then, behold, fears and doubt came in your hearts, and ye were overtaken by them, then some of you fell down on your faces, saying: O Lord, I am not worthy of receiving such a wondrous gift; and others began to disbelieve altogether the grace and the mercies of their Lord the Creator and their Redeemer, and chose to abide in their unbeliefs, in the pretentions and snares of their hearts; yea, even in the realm of the dead in the Spirit, they chose to dwell. And it was for these reasons that the gift was withdrawn.

And, now I, the Lord, show unto you the things which prevail amongst you. Your eyes have been upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and his language you have known, and his imperfections also; then, you sought in your hearts to make a mockery of him. Now, ye elders of my church, seek ye out of the Book of Commandments, the least of the scriptures contained therein, and appoint the wisest among you or the wisest among the kings of all the nations of the earth, to question its truthfulness and wisdom. Yea, ye shall find none, except those who are chosen and elected and appointed by the Father and the Son, under the recommendations of the Supreme Council in heaven, by the power of the Holy Ghost, for this selfsame purpose, and none other. Therefore, ye are under condemnation, if you do not bear a testimony that they are true and are of God; for the Holy Ghost beareth the record of its truthfulness and righteousness; and that which is true and good is of God and cometh from the Father of lights, and from no other source; and that which is false or partly false and is bad for the soul, cometh from the father of lies, from the great and abominable church, even that of the devil, the Satan, and from no other source.

Therefore, verily, I say unto you, that there is no blessing under the Sun or the Moon, that can exceed the blessings of the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, even the Melchizedek Priesthood. And it is your privilege that you have been ordained unto this ministry; but, he that is envious, jealous, covetous, or adulterous among you, cannot abide in the kingdom of God, for such diseases of mind and soul vex the Holy Spirit, and destroy the faith of man; and without faith and the Spirit, man is but a mere beast, and a despised animal, having no place in the kingdom of God. Yea, while the pure in heart shall dwell in Zion, those that are adulterers, whoremongers, and all that love to make a lie, and live a lie, shall dwell in Jehenna, or hell, which has been prepared for them from the foundation of the first generations.

Now, touching this subject of adultery, with which most of you are lately concerned, seeking explanation from on high; verily, verily, I say unto you, that any thought or action that adulterates or dilutes the faith in the true and living God or the Holy Spirit, or weakens the bonds of marriage and the holy union between a man and woman, is declared to be the sin of adultery; and any thought or action which glorifieth God, and is in obedience to God's commandments, increases man's faith and love in his Creator, gladdens his heart or enlivens the Spirit, and in the which man perceiveth the hand of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, is liberated and freed from all bonds and snares of the world; therefore, no person can abide in my covenant, and yet commit the sin of adultery, but is washed clean of all sins; therefore, any thought or action which solidifies and strengthens the bonds of holy matrimony, is declared to be good and of the quality of virtue and truth, and is, accordingly ordained of God, for the benefit of man, even for the benefit of the sons and daughters of God, that they may glorify the Lord their God all the days of their lives. Behold, this is my word on this matter unto all, who are within, and those who are without this church; and it is binding as my everlasting covenant; therefore, trouble me no more concerning this matter.

Yea, when ye humble yourselves sufficiently before me, for many of you carry within your hearts hatred and evils unto the destruction of the Spirit, the veil shall be rent and ye shall see me and know that I am. But ye cannot see me with your carnal nor natural eyes, but with your spiritual eyes, and by the power of the Holy Ghost ye shall see me; for no man has seen God at any time in the flesh, except quickened by the Spirit of God. It is for this reason no natural man nor a man of carnal mind can abide the presence of God. Therefore, let your minds not return to the snares and pretensions of childhood, but put on the clean and white garment of purity and chastity, and rejoice in the gifts of the priesthood, which have been bestowed upon you; that through obedience to my commandments, ye may live and prepare yourselves for that just and marvelous recompense of reward, at the dawning of the Millennial Day; when ye shall truly learn to cherish that which has been conferred upon you by the hands of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. Thus have I spoken it. Even so. Amen.

(November, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Behold, by the Spirit of the living God, my servant Orson Hyde has been called and ordained unto this priesthood, to proclaim the eternal gospel of Christ unto every nation, kindred, tongue and people; in the congregations of the fallen and the wicked, and in the synagogues, reasoning with them and expounding all scriptures. And, behold, it is decreed that all those who are ordained into this Holy Order, to go forth on their missions to preach the gospel, shall speak as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and they shall teach the doctrine, covenants and commandments of the church in the spirit of meekness, humility, patience, and long-suffering, by the power of the Holy Spirit; and if they carry not the Spirit with them, they shall abstain from teaching or expounding the scriptures; lo, this shall be an ensample unto all those who are ordained unto this office.

And whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scriptures, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and shall be the power of God unto salvation and glory; behold, this is a law unto my church, and a promise unto my faithful servants. Wherefore, be of good cheer, and do not fear, for I the Lord am with you, and will stand in the midst of you; and ye shall bear record of me, even Jesus Christ, that I am the Son of the living God, that I was, that I am, and that I am to come.

This is the word of the Lord unto you, my servant Orson Hyde; and also unto my servants Luke Johnson, Lyman Johnson, and William E. McLellin, and all the faithful elders of my church. Go ye into the world; preach the gospel to every man, woman and child, acting under the authority which I have bestowed upon you; baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And he that is baptized shall be saved, and shall be blessed with signs and ensigns following his baptism, yea, even as it is written; that he might gain a testimony of the Son of the only true and living God on the face of the earth. And he that believeth not, shall be damned unto everlasting torment and misery, and the captivity of the devil. And unto my faithful, shall be given to know the signs and ensigns of the times, and of the coming of the Son of Man; and as many as the Father shall bear record, the elders of my church shall be given power to seal them up unto eternal life.

Now, concerning the temporal and other affairs of this church, in due time of the Lord, other bishops are to be set apart unto the church, to minister even as the first; wherefore they shall be high priests worthy of this calling; and they shall be appointed by the First Presidency of the Melchizedek Priesthood, except they be literal descendants of Aaron; for the literal descendants of Aaron have a legal right to the bishopric, if they are the firstborn among the sons of Aaron; and the firstborn holds the right of the presidency over this priesthood, and the keys or authority of the same. No other man has a legal right to this office, except he be a literal descendant and the firstborn of Aaron.

But, as a high priest of the Melchizedek Priesthood has authority to officiate in all the lesser offices, he may be appointed to the office of bishop, when no literal descendants of Aaron can be found, provided he is called and set apart and ordained unto this power, under the hands of the First Presidency of the Melchizedek Priesthood. And even the literal descendant of Aaron, having a legal right to the bishopric, must be designated by the First Presidency, and found worthy, to be anointed and ordained; otherwise they are not legally authorized to officiate in their priesthood. Nevertheless, by virtue of the decree concerning their right of the (Aaronic) priesthood descending from father to son, they may claim their anointing if they can prove their lineage, or if their lineage is revealed unto them under the hands of the First Presidency.

Furthermore, no bishop or high priest set up for this ministry, shall be tried or condemned for any crime, save it be before the First Presidency of the church; and inasmuch as he is found guilty before the Presidency, by testimony that cannot be rebuked, he shall be condemned; but, if he repents in sincerity of his heart and forsakes the evil, he shall be forgiven according to the covenants and commandments of the church. And inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, by the time they reach the age of eight years, or the age of accountability, the sin shall be upon the heads of the parents, and they shall become guilty in the sight of God. The parents or guardians of the children in Zion must also teach their children to pray often, both in secret and in public, and walk uprightly and meekly before the Lord. The inhabitants of Zion are required to keep the Sabbath day holy, by the means of fasting, prayer, partaking of the sacrament, worshiping, learning and teaching the scriptures, and abstaining from servile labors on the day of holy convocation, the day of the Lord's rest. But, on other days of the week, the inhabitants of Zion shall perform their duties diligently, in faithfulness and thanksgiving; for the idlers and talebearers shall be had in remembrance before the Lord.

Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers and talebearers among them; and their children are growing up in wickedness and ignorance, for they seek the recognition of the world, and the things of the world, and seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, things which last forever; their eyes are full of greediness, and their minds confused with evil images and thoughts, and strong attachments to the desires and lusts of their hearts. These things ought not to be among them, and must be done away, as the canker must be from the body, lest the body be overtaken by the disease; wherefore, let my servant Oliver Cowdery carry these tidings unto the land of Zion, and exhort unto them a commandment, that he who offereth not his prayers unto the Lord, in sincerity of heart and in righteousness, in its due time, let him be had in remembrance before the Lord.

Behold, these words are true and binding, and are eternal; wherefore transgress them not, nor trifle with them; verily, I say, I am Alpha and Omega, even Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world; and I come quickly. Amen.

(November, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, for my servant Oliver Cowdery's sake. It is not wisdom in me that he should be entrusted with commandments and the moneys which he shall carry unto the land of Zion, except one go with him who will be true and faithful. Wherefore, I, the Lord, will that my servant John Whitmer go with him; and continue to write and record important observations concerning my church; and also that he receive counsel and assistance from my servant Oliver Cowdery and others, if it needs be. Nevertheless, let my servant John Whitmer travel according to his needs and purposes, whithersoever he chooses to travel, from place to place, and from church to church, that he may more easily obtain knowledge — preaching and expounding, writing, copying, selecting, and gathering all things which are for the good of the church; and for the rising generations that shall grow up in Zion and in all of her stakes, to possess it from generation to generation, forever and ever.

Furthermore, it is decreed that my servants who are abroad in various parts of the world, should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion; for the land of Zion shall be a seat and a place to receive and do all such things. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 68
(November 3, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people of my church, and hear the word, saith the Lord your God; the Lord who shall soon come to his temple, and upon the world with a sore judgement; yea, upon all the nations that have forgotten the Lord their God, even upon all the godly and ungodly nations. For he shall make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all nations, and they shall witness the miracles of their God's salvation.

Wherefore, prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves and gather ye together upon the land of Zion, all those who are not commanded to tarry. Go ye out of Babylon, and be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Call your solemn assemblies, to exhort and edify each other, and with unity of thought and purpose to call upon the name of the Lord, with all your hearts and souls. Gather ye out from among all the nations on the face of the earth; yea, even the spiritual Babylon, from the four winds of the earth and from one end of heaven to the other. Let the elders of my church be sent unto afar off nations and the islands of the sea, and unto every land, preaching the gospel first unto the nations of the Gentiles, and then unto the Jews; for the time shall come when the fulness of my scriptures will be brought forth by the way of the Gentiles, unto the Jews. And, behold, mine elders shall cry unto all people, saying: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may flourish in the regions round about. Awake and arise, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom; behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and be awakened from your sleep, for ye know neither the day nor the hour of his coming; nevertheless, come he will for a surety, and every whit shall be fulfilled according to the words of my prophets.

But verily, thus saith the Lord, let not your flight be in haste, for it bringeth chaos and pestilence and misery; but in faith and prayerfulness shall you come unto the land of Zion, that ye may be prepared to partake of the blessings of the kingdom of God. Behold, the Lord God hath sent forth the angel crying through the midst of heaven, saying: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight, for the hour of his coming is nigh; when the Lamb shall stand upon Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand having the Father's name written on their foreheads; wherefore prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him. For behold, he shall stand upon the mount of Olivet, and upon the mighty ocean, even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion. And his voice shall go out of Zion and out of Jerusalem unto the ends of the heavens and earth, unto all people; and it shall be a voice as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, which shall bring the mountains down and the depths of the valleys to the surface of the earth; and the earth shall be divided into three great kingdoms, even the great kingdoms of the Orient, of the Europe, and of the Americas; and the land which is choice above all other lands on the face of the earth, the great kingdom of the Americas, the land of the Lord, shall be the combined lands of the United States, South America, and Canada and the islands round about, according to the treaties of the governments of the world. Yea, when all the words written by my prophets and apostles are fulfilled, then shall begin the peaceful and glorious reign of the Messiah, upon earth for a thousand years; and the earth shall once again become as it was before it was divided; yea, even under the eternal umbrella of the Savior of the world, the three great kingdoms shall be united in Christ forever, and divided in the world forever.

Blessed shall be this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; for in the fulness of time, the foundations of the Millennial-day shall be laid by its faithful saints and members; and the Lord and their Savior shall stand in the midst of them, and shall reign over all flesh. And behold, the inhabitants of the northern-most and southern-most regions of the world shall be brought in remembrance before the Lord; and their prophets shall hear his voice, and their past curses shall be removed from them, and they shall be given power and dominion over the harsh forces of nature, that they might also dwell in peace, safety and salvation in the coldest regions, and glorify their God for their redemption. And the barren deserts of the world shall bring forth pools of living waters, and the parched and dry grounds shall no longer be thirsty, for the Lord shall bless the land, and shall send forth waters from above. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants, and the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence; and when they come unto Zion, they shall fall down to worship and be crowned with glory, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim. And they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy and praise unto the Lord their God. Behold, this is a blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessings upon the head of Ephraim and his seed. And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pains and sufferings, which are natural consequences of their sins and transgressions, shall be forgiven and sanctified before the Lord, to dwell in his presence, day and night, forever and ever.

And now, verily saith the Lord, that these things might be known among you, O inhabitants of the earth, I have sent forth mine angel flying through the midst of heaven, proclaiming mine everlasting gospel, which shall be added upon and combined in the fulness of time. And my gospel shall be preached unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, by the mouths of my servants, saying with a loud voice: Fear God, and give glory unto Him and Him alone, for the hour of His judgement is nigh; that man must repent of his sins, that he may be saved in the great

(November 12, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, and hearken, O ye inhabitants of Zion, and all ye people of my church who are afar off; and hear the word of the Lord which is given unto my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, Sidney Rigdon and William W. Phelps; and by the way of commandment the Lord hath given unto them these things.

Now, I, the Lord have ordained them and appointed them to be faithful stewards over the revelations and commandments which are given unto them, and which shall be given hereafter; and an account of their stewardships will be required of them in the day of judgement. Wherefore, I have appointed unto them to preserve them and use them for the good of my church and for the benefit of all mankind on the face of the earth. Therefore a commandment I give unto them, that they shall not give them to the members nor to the world, unless found worthy.

Furthermore, inasmuch as my servants receive more than is needful for their necessities and wants, and desires, they shall consecrate that portion unto the storehouse of the Lord; and the benefits from the storehouse shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, according to the will, purposes and designs of God; and unto their generations, even as from the days of their fathers, according to the holy laws of the eternal kingdom of God. Behold, this is my commandment unto each man and his stewardship; even as I, the Lord, have appointed or shall hereafter appoint them.

And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, nor the agent who keepeth the Lord's storehouse, nor anyone who is appointed a steward over temporal things. Now, he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship over temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied through the manifestations of the Spirit. Nevertheless, in your temporal things you are commanded to be equal, not grudgingly but willingly; for whoso does things grudgingly or under compulsion, the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit is withheld from that person.

Now, this word have I given unto my servants for their benefit, as a manifestation of my blessings upon their heads, a just recompense for their faith and prayers, a reward for their obedience to my commandments. And, for they have been faithful over a few things, and over many things, they shall have the blessings of eternal increase and mine everlasting covenant. Behold, I, the Lord, am merciful and will bless them in all things, inasmuch as they continue to abide in me and obey my commandments; and they shall enter into the fulness of my joy, peace, safety and salvation. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 70
(December 1, 1831; Hiram, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, that the time has verily come that you should open your mouths in proclaiming my gospel, the things of the kingdom, expounding the mysteries in the light of the scriptures, according to the portion of the Spirit and power, which shall be given unto you, even as I will. Verily I say unto you, proclaim unto all the inhabitants of the regions round about and also in the church, for this mission I give unto you for a season.

Wherefore, labor ye in my vineyard, and call upon the inhabitants, and bear your testimonies; and prepare the way for the commandments and revelations of the Lord, which are soon to come forth. Now, behold, this is wisdom: Whoso readeth them, let him understand and receive them well, with a glad and thankful heart; for unto him that receiveth them gladly, and in faith, shall be given more abundantly, even power. Wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you both in public and in private and let them bring forth their strong reasons against the Lord; and inasmuch as ye are steadfast in your faith, their shame shall be made manifest unto all.

Verily, thus saith the Lord: There is no weapon formed by men, which can prosper against you. for I shall be in the midst of you; and if any man lifts his voice against you, he shall be confounded in mine own due time. Wherefore, be diligent in keeping my commandments, for they are true and faithful. And if ye transgress them, repent; that ye might not be damned eternally. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 71
(December 4, 1831; Kirtland, Ohio)

Hearken, and listen to the voice of the Lord, O ye elders and high priests of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, and to whom the kingdom and power have been given. For verily thus saith the Lord, it is expedient in me that a bishop be appointed unto you, or of you, unto the church in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

And verily in this thing ye have chosen wisely, for it is required of the Lord, that every steward in the kingdom render an account of his stewardship, both in time and eternity; for he who is found to be a faithful and wise steward, is worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for him of my Father. Verily I say unto you, the elders of the church in this part of my vineyard shall render an account of their stewardships unto the bishop, who shall be appointed in this part of my vineyard; and these records he shall hand over to the bishop in Zion.

The duties of the bishop shall be made known in the book of commandments, and by the voice of the conference; verily, my servant Newel K. Whitney is the man chosen to be appointed and ordained unto this power; this is the will of the Lord your God, your Redeemer. In addition, the bishop shall keep the Lord's storehouse, and receive funds of the church; and take an account of the elders, as commanded previously, and administering to their needs, wants, desires, and circumstances; but they should pay that which they receive, inasmuch as they are able to pay; that the poor and the needy of the church are amply taken care of. Thus, he who is unable to pay, the account shall be handed over to the bishop of Zion, who shall pay the debt out of the funds which are put into his hands, for this purpose. And the labors of the faithful who labor in spiritual things, administering the gospel and attending to the things of the kingdom, shall answer their debts unto the bishop of Zion; therefore every man that cometh up to Zion, must lay all things before the bishop of Zion. And verily, a certificate from a judge or bishop, in this part of the vineyard unto the bishop of Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things pertaining to an inheritance; and to be received in Zion as a wise steward, and faithful laborer; otherwise he will not be accepted by the bishop of Zion.

And the labors of the faithful who are appointed as stewards over the literary affairs of my church, have claim for assistance upon the bishop or bishops in all things. Furthermore, all that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up to Zion, and all that are privileged to go up there, let them carry unto the bishop of Zion, a certificate from three elders or bishop of their church; otherwise, he who goes to the land of Zion, shall not be accounted a wise steward, nor a faithful laborer in my vineyard. And now behold, this shall be an ensample for all the extensive branches of my church, in whatsoever land they shall be established. Even so. Amen.

(January 10, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

For verily, thus saith the Lord, it is expedient in me that the elders of my church should continue to preach the gospel and exhort in the regions round about, until the conference at Amherst (Ohio); and then, behold, it shall be made known unto them, by the voice of the assembly, their various missions. It is also expedient in me that my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon may begin the translation again; and inasmuch as it is needful, to preach in the regions round about until the conference; and after the conference they might continue the work of translation until finished.

Let these things suffice you for now; gird up your loins and be sober and grateful unto the Lord in all things. Even so. Amen.

(January 25, 1832; Amherst, Ohio)

Verily, verily, I say unto you, by the voice of my Spirit, even by the voice of Alpha and Omega, your Lord and your God — Hearken, O ye who are chosen to go forth and preach my gospel, and prune my vineyard. Behold, it is my will that you should go forth and not tarry, neither be idle, but labor with your might; lifting up your voices as with the sound of a trump, proclaiming the truth according to the power of the Holy Spirit, and according to the guidance provided in the revelations and commandments of the Lord your God. Therefore, if ye are faithful, ye shall be laden with many sheaves, and crowned with honor, glory, immortality, and eternal life; and shall dwell in peace, safety and salvation.

Now, verily I say unto my servant William E. McLellin, I revoke the commission which was given unto him, to go unto the eastern countries; and I give unto him a new commission to go unto the southern countries, that he may be chastened for the murmurings of his heart, and his sins; nevertheless, he is forgiven. And let my servant Luke Johnson go with him, and proclaim the things which I have commanded them; calling on the name of the Lord for the Comforter, which shall teach them all things which are expedient for them; praying always that they may faint not in their trials and tribulations, but be awakened in the Holy Spirit; and inasmuch as they are obedient to these commandments, I will be with them even unto the end. Behold, this is the will of the Lord your God concerning you.

And, let my servants Orson Hyde and Samuel H. Smith take their journey into the eastern countries, and proclaim the things which I have commanded them; and also my servants Orson Pratt, Lyman Johnson take their journey unto the eastern countries; behold, my Spirit shall go with them also, even unto the end. My servants Asa Dodds and Calves Wilson shall take their journey unto the western countries, and proclaim my gospel; and let my servants Major N. Ashley and Burr Riggs take their journey into the south country, along with my servants William and Luke. Yea, take ye all your journey going from house to house, from village to village, and from city to city. And whatsoever house receives you not but despise you, ye shall depart speedily from that house, and shake off the dust of your shoes, as a testimony against them; and lo, it shall be more tolerable for the heathen, than for that house, in the day of judgement.

And he who is faithful unto the end shall overcome all things, and all things in the heavens and earth shall be subject unto him, and he shall be lifted up at the last day. And while my faithful shall be filled with joy and gladness, each house against which my servants have borne their testimonies shall be condemned on the day of judgement. Therefore, gird up your loins and be faithful, and ye shall overcome and subdue all things.

Thus saith the Lord unto you, O ye elders of my church, concerning this matter about which you have inquired of me: Behold, I say unto you, that it is the duty of the church to assist in the support of the families who need temporal assistance; and also to support the families of those who have been called on a mission to be sent forth to proclaim the gospel unto the world. Wherefore, I, the Lord, give unto you this commandment, that ye obtain places for your families, inasmuch as your brethren are willing to open their hearts; and abide in faith, hope, charity, and love; then, ask whatsoever ye may in the heavens above and the earth below, and it shall be granted unto you, in its proper time and season, all this by the virtue of the eternal and irrevocable decree of the Lord their God, unto the sons and daughters of the kingdom; yea, all things shall be revealed unto them by the Comforter, even the Holy Ghost, whithersoever they shall go; from the core of the earth to the core of the sun, all shall be revealed, and all shall be seen. Furthermore, verily I say unto you, that every man who is obligated to provide for his own family, let him do so; and he shall in nowise lose his crown. Let every man labor diligently in the church, and magnify his calling; for the idlers and talebearers shall have no place in the church, unless they repent and mend their ways.

Now, let my servants Simeon Carter and Emer Harris be united in their ministry; and also let these servants travel in twos: Ezra Thayre and Thomas B. Marsh; Hyrum Smith and Reynolds Cahoon; Seymour Brunson and Daniel Stanton; Sylvester Smith and Gideon Carter; Ruggles Eames and Stephen Burnett; and my servants Micah B. Welton and Eden Smith. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 74
(February 16, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Hearken, O ye people of my church, and listen to my words which I shall give unto you by the hands of my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon:

Hear, O ye heavens, and give ear, O inhabitants of the earth and rejoice, for the Lord your God is and was and forever will be the only One true and living God of the heavens and the earth; and there is none other beside him; he is the Savior and the Messiah of all men, and there is none other, even Jesus Christ is his name; and there is no name under the heavens and the earth whereby salvation can be ministered unto men.

Great is his wisdom, and marvelous are his ways; and the extent of his power, glory and majesty and works, wonders, and blessings, none can find out; his purposes fail not, nor can anyone stay his hand; he prevaileth from the beginning of eternity to the end of eternity, as the rotation and revolution of celestial bodies prevaileth from eternity to eternity. And thus saith the Lord: I, the Lord, am merciful and gracious unto those who fear me and obey my commandments; and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness and truth unto the end; great shall be their reward and eternal shall be their glory; and to them will I reveal all mysteries, according to their capacities and worthiness; yea, to my faithful will I reveal all hidden mysteries of my kingdom, from the days of old unto this day, and for the ages to come; and their wisdom and power of discernment shall be great, and their understanding shall reach to heaven; and before them the wisest of the world shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall come to naught; for by my Spirit will I enlighten them, and by my power will I make known unto them the secrets of my will, mind, purposes and designs; yea, even those things which no eye has seen nor ears have heard, nor yet entered into the heart of man.

Now, this is the testimony of Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, the servants of God, being in the Spirit, on the sixteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two: By the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened and our understandings were enlightened, that we were able to see and understand the things of God; even the things from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his Only Begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning; of whom we bear record, and this record is the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of the true and living God; whom we saw and conversed with in heavenly vision. For while we were engaged in the work of translation, which the Lord had appointed unto us, as we came to the twenty-ninth verse of the fifth chapter of John, it was given unto us of the Spirit, that those dead who shall hear the voice of the Son of Man, shall come forth in the resurrection of the just, those who have done good; and in the resurrection of the unjust, those who have done evil. And while we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understanding, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about. And we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father's throne, in its fulness; and we saw the hosts of angels and holy men worshiping God before His throne; and we bear our testimonies unto the world that God the Father and the Lamb His Son live! For we saw the Son, on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that He is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by Him, through Him, and of Him, the worlds were and are created, and the inhabitants thereof are the begotten sons and daughters unto God; and those who believe upon the name of the Son, are the begotten sons and daughters of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God.

And we also bear record, that an angel of God who was in authority in the presence of God, rebelled against the Only Begotten Son whom the Father loved; and therefore was thrust down from the presence of God the Father and the Son; and this fallen angel was called Perdition, or the lost soul, or a son of the morning, or Lucifer; and the heavens wept over him, for behold, the son of the morning was fallen from the presence of the Lord, to be left alone, to kick against the pricks; to curse God, and die over and over again.

And while we were yet moved upon by the power of the Holy Spirit, the Lord commanded us that we should write the vision; and revealed unto us the works of Satan, the old serpent, even the devil, who rebelled against God, and sought to take the kingdom of our God and His Christ; wherefore, he maketh war with the saints of God, and encompasseth them. And, lo, we saw a vision of the sufferings and bondage of those with whom he made war and overcame them; and we heard the voice of the Lord, saying unto us: Behold these are they who are overcome of the world, who hearkened to the devil and his ministering angels, and sold their souls, for the fulfillment of the lusts of their stomachs, their eyes and their heart; these are they who purchased the ways of error at the price of death and eternal bondage, torment and misery; these are they who bargained with the father of all lies, even the devil, and received no recompense for their works, for they put their trust not in their God the Creator. Yea, these are verily the sons and daughters of perdition; of whom I say that it had been better for them, if they never had been born; for they are vessels of wrath, carrying deep within them guile, anger, and venom of the serpent.

Having denied the Holy Spirit, after receiving it; and having denied the Only Begotten Son of the Father, and after crucifying Him unto their own death, and putting Him to open shame, these are decreed to go into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels. These are they concerning whom I have said, there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; the only ones upon whom the second death shall have any power. For all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain; but those who denied the Holy Spirit shall not be redeemed in due time of the Lord, when the Son of Man cometh in the fulness of time.

Now, this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, even the fulness thereof; and the ennead of the Millennial-day church:

First, that man believe in God the eternal Father (Elohim, or Ellohim, or Alloheim), His Son Jesus Christ (Elloh, Allah, or God), and the Holy Ghost (Rūh-el Qudūs, or Holy Spirit); this trinity or godhead is the One God, and there is none other beside Him, which is true, living, and eternal.

Second, that in order man may not be damned eternally for the sins of his ancestors, or his own sins, the Lord hath decreed to extend His grace, mercy, and forgiveness unto all who repent of their sins in sincerity of their hearts; and in prayer of faith call upon the holy name of the Most High God.

Third, that through the atonement of Christ, those who are fallen and dead in their sins, may be resurrected unto the resurrection of the just or the unjust; and be saved by obedience to the covenants, commandments, and ordinances of God, given unto the church by means of the Holy Writ.

Fourth, that the sins of man may be washed clean by means of baptism by full immersion in water; the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands of the priests of the Holy Order of Melchizedek; and baptism of fire, by the mouth of an elder or a high priest of the Holy Order.

Fifth, that man believe in all holy scriptures of God, from the time of Adam unto this day; and also believe in all scriptures which are yet to be revealed to man, by the power and will of God, in their appointed time and season. Therefore, the Holy Writ is to be built upon line upon line and precept upon precept, generation after generation, even millennium after millennium; as from the time of our fathers, in ages past, when the history and scriptures were kept in the book of remembrance, and the book of generations, and the book of kings, from circa 3761 B.C., the time of Seth, son of Adam.

Sixth, that man believe in the great gathering of Israel and the second coming of the Messiah; and prepare for the coming of the Son of Man, and the dawning of the Millennial Day; when the earth shall be divided into the three great kingdoms; and Christ the Savior shall begin his glorious and peaceful reign upon earth for a thousand years. Therefore, let the Priesthood and all members of this church devote themselves to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.

Seventh, that in order every whit spoken and written by the prophets and apostles be fulfilled, upon this church of Jesus Christ, even the church of the Firstborn, the only true and living church on the face of the earth, all keys, power and authority, pertaining to man's salvation, immortality and eternal life have been conferred by the Lord Jesus Christ, and the eternal Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, or the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Eighth, that the agency of man, his freedom and liberty to choose, may never be taken away from him; that he might be able to choose right from wrong, and earn his own just rewards and punishments; and be accountable on the day of his resurrection, even the Day of Judgement (Yom el-Qiyamat), which no man can escape.

Ninth, that all men be bound by honesty, truthfulness, chastity, faithfulness and loyalty; and be obedient to each of the Ten Commandments (the Decalogue) of the Lord, which were given unto the children of Israel near Mount Sinai; for no man can enter the kingdom of Christ, until this law of God, given under the hand of Moses the prophet, is fulfilled; as it was fulfilled every whit by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was sent by the Father in the meridian of time. Yea, this is the gospel, the glad tidings, which is given unto the church of Jesus Christ in these the latter days approaching the Millennium.

Now, behold, this is the testimony concerning those who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just — these and their descendants are they who received the testimony of Jesus in the meridian of time, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of burial in water; and thus were washed clean of all their sins, and received the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands by the priest or priests who were ordained and sealed unto this power; these are they who believed in the Son of God, and were sealed by the holy Spirit of promise of the Father, which He sheds forth upon all those who are just, true, and faithful. Yea, these are the church of the Firstborn, and into their hands the Father hath given all things — they are priests and kings, who have received the fulness of His glory; even the priests of the Most High God, after the Order of Melchizedek, which order was after the Order of Enoch, which was after the Order of Adam, the first high priest of this Order, taken from among men, and placed in behalf of men over the things pertaining to the eternal kingdom of God; and it is to this holy order that the Only Begotten Son belongeth, forever and ever. Wherefore, as it is written they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore, all things are theirs who are of Christ, and Christ is of God the Father; wherefore, let no man glory in another man, but in God. Yea, the just shall dwell in the presence of God the Father and His Christ forever and ever; and shall abide in an innumerable company of angels, and holy assembly of the church of Enoch, even the church of the Firstborn; and their names are written and known in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all. The resurrection of the just also includes the righteous men made perfect through Jesus the Christ, the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out his all-fulfilling atonement through the shedding of his own blood. One hundred and forty-four thousand such men and the hosts of the prophets of God shall accompany the Son of Man, even the Lamb, when he shall descend in a pillar of cloud upon Mount Zion, to reign on the earth over his people. Yea, such are they who shall come forth in the first resurrection, even the resurrection of the just.

And the bodies of the just are celestial, and their glory is that of the sun, as the glory of God, the highest of all the glories. The celestial glory excels in all things, for it is the glory of the Father and His Son; before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and glorify Him forever and ever. They who dwell in His presence are the church of the Firstborn; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received the fulness of His grace, mercy and justice; and He makes them equal in power, might, and dominion. The glory of the celestial is as grand, powerful, bright and life-giving as the glory of the sun.

And, there is the terrestrial world, with its terrestrial glory. These are they who received not the testimony of Jesus the Christ, but afterward received it in passion and desire; they received the glory of the Son, but not the fulness of his gospel, nor did they receive the fulness of the Father. These are honorable men of the world, who have been blinded by the craftiness of men; they preferred the cunning of the devil, and the passing pleasures of the world, over the wisdom of the Lord and his blessings and gifts of eternities; these chose the temporal pleasures of the flesh and the things of the world, and rejected the guidance of the Holy Spirit to preserve their souls. Their glory is likened to the glory of the moon, and it differeth as doth differ the glory of the sun from that of the moon; for as the sun giveth light to brighten the earth, and no life can exist without it, the moon merely reflects the light of the sun unto the earth; and life does not depend upon its light, but the light of the moon doth brighten the night and guides the lonely travelers on their journey, and rules the firmament above and embellishes its beauty. Behold, the world of the terrestrial is of those who die not under the grace of our Lord and Savior, but they die under the law of the land; they are spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel, but they received not his testimony, but doubted and feared unto their own folly and chastisement, for they find no peace, salvation, nor safety in their lives, they harden their hearts, curse God, and die spiritually; nor do they repent and forsake their sins; they spend their lives in bondage of desires, passions, and lusts of their hearts and minds; therefore, they are left alone unto themselves, to kick against the pricks.

Now, the glory of the telestial world is lesser than that of the terrestrial; as the glory of the moon differeth from the glory of the stars.

For as the moon reflects the light of the sun, the innumerable company of stars reflect not the light unto the earth, but merely shine unto themselves, and their light neither brightens the world, nor does it give life to anything on earth. These are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus, but denied it; nevertheless, they deny not the Holy Spirit; these are they who shall not be redeemed from the captivity of the devil until the last resurrection, when Christ the Lord, even the Lamb, shall have finished his work; the inhabitants of the telestial world, which are as innumerable as stars in the firmament, and sand upon the seashore, are ministered through the terrestrial; by the ministration of the angels who are appointed by the Father to minister unto their temporal and spiritual needs. And, for the telestial world lists to worship idols and heroes, and the gods of the dead, objects and things of the world, the outward show of their glory and pretensions surpasses all human understanding. The telestial world chooses their own gods to worship, according to the Spirit within them; some say, we are of John, or of Moses, or of Mohammed, or of Buddha, or Zoroaster, or of Paul, or Apollos or Cephas; some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch, and so on; but they deny the gospel, and deny not the Holy Spirit. These are not to be gathered with the saints, to be caught up unto the church of the Firstborn, and be received into the cloud. For these are they who are liars, sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loveth to make a lie, and liveth a lie; they suffer the wrath of God, and vengeance of eternal fire. These are they who are cast down to hell, and shall suffer the wrath of the Almighty God, until the fulness of time, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work.

When Christ the Savior shall deliver up, and present his kingdom unto the Father, cleansed from sins and purified, saying: I have overcome the world and trodden the wine-press alone, even the wine-press of the fulness of the wrath of the Almighty God. Then shall he be crowned with the crown of eternal glory, to sit upon the throne of great power and majesty, to reign forever and ever.

Yea, great and marvelous are the mysteries and the works of the Lord; and His glory, might and dominion; and His wisdom, mercy and blessings, surpass all human understanding. To God the Father and the Lamb be glory, honor and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

(March, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, unto those who are ordained unto the high priesthood of my church, and have assembled themselves together. Now, listen to the counsel of him who has ordained you from on high, concerning the matter which you have presented before me. Verily, I say unto you, the time is now at hand that there must needs be an organization of my people, in regulating the temporal affairs of the storehouse for the poor and the needy, both in this place and in the land of Zion, for a permanent and everlasting establishment of order in my church; for advancing the cause of Zion; for bringing salvation unto man, and to glorify your Father which art in heaven; that you may be equal in the bonds of heavenly things; yea, in earthly things also according to your worthiness, capacities, and needs, wants, desires and circumstances. Therefore, if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I command you and require of you, that your boon may be granted.

And now, verily thus saith the Lord, it is expedient that all things be done unto my glory, by you who are joined together into this Holy Order. Therefore, let my servants Newel K. Whitney, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon sit in the council with the saints in Zion; otherwise, Satan seeketh to turn their hearts away from the truth, unto their blindness and folly, till they understand no more the good things which are prepared for them. Wherefore, a commandment I give unto you, to prepare and organize yourselves by a bond, even an everlasting covenant that cannot be broken; and those who break it shall lose their office and standing in the church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan, until the day of their redemption. Behold, this is the preparation with which I prepare you, and reveal unto you the mysteries of my church, which is built upon the foundation of my doctrine, covenants and commandments; revealed unto you by the hands of my servants who are ordained and appointed for this purpose. Through my providence, notwithstanding trials and tribulations which shall come upon you, the church will stand independent, above all other creatures beneath the celestial world; and my faithful will come up unto the crown prepared for them; and they will be made rulers over many kingdoms, saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel; who hath established the foundations of Adam-ondi-Ahman, and who hath appointed Michael, even Adam, your prince, and set him upon high, and given unto him the keys of salvation under the counsel and guidance of the Holy One.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye are little children, and ye have not yet understood how great blessings the Father has in his hands prepared for you. But ye cannot bear all things now, nevertheless, be of good cheer, for I will lead you along; the kingdom is yours, and the blessings thereof, and the riches of eternities are yours. And he who receiveth all things with thankfulness shall be made glorious, and the things of this earth shall be added unto him, even an hundred fold, yea, even more. Wherefore, do the things which I have commanded you, saith your Redeemer and Savior, who prepareth all things before he taketh you; for ye are the church of the Firstborn, and you will be taken up in a cloud, and appointed every man his portion. And he who is a faithful and wise steward shall inherit all things. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 76
(March, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Verily, I say unto you, that it is my will that my servant Jared Carter should go again into the eastern countries, from place to place, and from city to city, proclaiming glad tidings of great joy, even the everlasting gospel, having been ordained unto this office of his calling. And I will send upon him the Comforter, which shall teach him the truth and the ways of his journey; and inasmuch as he is faithful, I will crown him again with sheaves. Wherefore, let your heart be glad, my servant Jared Carter, and fear not, saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECTION 77
(March, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Stephen Burnett: Go ye, go ye, unto the world and preach the gospel to every creature, that cometh under the sound of your voice; and inasmuch as you desire a companion, Eden Smith shall go with you. Wherefore, go ye and preach my gospel in whithersoever place the Spirit shall guide you; and declare the things which ye believe and know to be true. Behold, this is the will of him who hath called you, even your Redeemer and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECTION 78
(March, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Verily, verily, I say unto you my servant Frederick G. Williams: Listen to the voice of him who speaketh the word of the Lord your God, and hearken to the calling, wherewith you are called to be a high priest in my church, and a counselor unto my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom; which keys belong unto the Presidency of the High Priesthood, even as they didst in the ages past, in the first generations of our fathers. Therefore, I will bless thee in this office, inasmuch as thou art faithful in thy counsel; remember to pray daily in thy heart and vocally, in public and in private; and preach the gospel in the land of the living, and among thy brethren. And in doing these things thou wilt do the greatest good unto thy fellow being, and glorify the Lord your God. Wherefore, be faithful; magnify thy calling by performing thy duties diligently, and in meekness of heart, in humility, and in patience; succor the weak, lift up the hands which hang down, and strengthen the feeble knees. And if thou art faithful unto the end, thou shalt have a crown of immortality and eternal life upon thine head, and shall dwell in the mansions which I have prepared in the house of my Father. Behold, and lo, these are the words of Alpha and Omega, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECTION 79
(April 26, 1832; Jackson County, Missouri)

Verily, verily, I say unto you, O people of my church, that inasmuch as you have forgiven one another in your trespasses, even so I, the Lord, forgive you. Nevertheless there are those among you whose sins are exceedingly great; but, beware from henceforth, and sin no more, lest sore judgements fall upon your heads. For of him unto whom much is given, much is required, and he who sins against the greater light, even the Son, shall receive greater condemnation. Ye call upon my name in your pains and afflictions, and receive my commandments and laws for the preservation of your soul, but ye keep not my commandments nor laws and guidance, but transgress them, and thus become guilty as a consequence; therefore, justice and judgement are the penalty affixed unto my law. Therefore, what I say unto one, I say unto all: Watch ye, for the adversary spreadeth his might and dominion, and darkness reigneth the world; and the anger of the Lord is kindled against the inhabitants of the earth, for none doeth good, and all have gone out of the way.

And, verily, I say unto you, I, the Lord, will not lay any sin against you, for this day they are forgiven unto you; but, henceforth sin no more, and go your ways; but unto him who sinneth again after receiving the light, shall return his former sins, saith the Lord your God. Now, verily, here is a mystery unto your understanding and salvation: I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.

Therefore, it is expedient in me that my servants Edward Partridge, Newel K. Whitney, A. Sidney Gilbert, Sidney Rigdon, Joseph Smith, Jr., John Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, and Martin Harris, be bound by a bond and covenant, which cannot be broken by transgressions; except judgement immediately follow, in your several stewardships — to manage the affairs of the needy and the poor, and all things pertaining to the bishopric, both in the land of Zion and in Kirtland, for I have consecrated the land of Kirtland for the future benefit of the saints of the Most High God, and as a stake of Zion; for Zion and its inhabitants must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged, and her stakes strengthened. Yea, verily, I say unto you, that Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments. Therefore I give unto you this commandment, that ye bind yourselves by this covenant, and all shall be seen and done according to the laws of the Lord's kingdom.

Behold, here is wisdom, that ye be equal in claims on the properties, and allowances for living, yet every man live according to his own needs, wants, desires, aspirations, and circumstances. And all this for the benefit of the church of the living God; that every man may improve upon his talent, and gain new talents and understandings. Yea, even an hundred fold to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church; and every man seeking the best interest of the church in all things; and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.

Now, O ye elders and high priests of my church, this is the order which I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you, and your successors, inasmuch as ye sin not. And the soul that sins against this covenant, and hardens his heart, shall be dealt with according to the laws of the church; and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan, until the day of redemption.

And, verily, I say unto you, and this is wisdom also, make unto yourselves friends with the mammon, even of unrighteousness, and they will not frustrate the works of God, nor will they destroy you; vengeance and judgement leave unto me, for it is mine, and I will repay. Peace be with you. And, inasmuch as ye abide in my commandments, my blessings shall continue with you; for the kingdom is given unto you; it is yours, and shall be forever, if you fall not from your steadfastness. Even so. Amen.

(April 30, 1832; Independence, Missouri)

Verily, thus saith the Lord, concerning the welfare of women and children of the church who have lost their husbands or fathers: women have claim on their husbands for their support and maintenance, until their husbands are taken; and if they are faithful to the laws of the church, they shall have fellowship in the church, and remain upon their inheritances, according to the laws of the land; but if they are found to be sinners and transgressors, who repent not, they shall not have fellowship in the church, yet they may remain upon their inheritances, according to the laws of the land.

All children below the legal age of adulthood, have claim upon their parents for their support and maintenance, until they become of age. And after that, they have claim upon the church, or in other words upon the Lord's storehouse, if they have no inheritances from their parents. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church; and also the poor and the needy, besides widows and orphans, shall be provided for from the consecrations. Even so. Amen.

(August, 1832; Hiram, Ohio)

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto my servant John Murdock — thou art called to go into the eastern area, from house to house, and from city to city, to proclaim my everlasting gospel unto the inhabitants thereof, in the midst of persecution and wickedness. And it shall be that whoso receiveth you receiveth me; and they shall receive the glad tidings by the power of the Holy Spirit. And if they receive you as a little child, blessed are they, for they shall receive my kingdom and obtain mercy. But whoso rejects you and the gospel, shall be rejected of my Father; and you may cleanse your feet in a secret place as a testimony against them. And, behold, and lo, I come quickly to judgement, to convince of their wicked works and designs.

And now, verily I say unto you, that it is not expedient that you should go on your mission until your children are provided for, and are sent up unto the bishop of Zion. After a few years, if thou desirest of me, thou mayest go up also unto the goodly land, to possess thine inheritance; otherwise thou shalt continue proclaiming my gospel until thou are taken. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 82 - A
(September 22-23, 1832; Kirtland, Ohio)

A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servants Joseph Smith, Jr., and six elders of the church; as they united their hearts in prayer, and lifted up their voices on high, to call upon the name of the Most High God, to know the mysteries of the Priesthood: Yea, this is my word concerning this church, which was established in these latter days, for the restoration of my people, as spoken by the mouths of my prophets and apostles; that my saints be gathered upon Mount Zion or the city of New Jerusalem. And in its similitude, a city shall be built in the State of Missouri, beginning at the temple lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the state; and was sanctified and dedicated by the hands of those with whom the Lord was well pleased. Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that this shall be the gathering place of the saints, and the temple shall be reared in this generation. For verily, this generation shall not pass away, until a house shall be built unto the Lord; and a cloud shall rest upon it, even the glory of the Lord shall rest upon it, and fill the house; inasmuch as the sins, transgressions, iniquities, and ways of error of the congregation are not upon their heads, and the building is not desecrated.

Now, Adam was the first high priest taken from among men, and appointed in behalf of men pertaining to the things of God and His kingdom. And the Holy Order of the Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God continued unchanged during nine hundred and thirty years of Adam's lifetime; and after his death, it came to be known as the Order of Adam. Then Seth, son of Adam, became the patriarch of the Order, and the priestly record-keeping officially began in the year 3761-60 B.C., when Seth was one hundred and thirty-five years old; and a book of remembrance and a book of generations began to be kept, to be built up and added upon, generation after generation, line upon line, precept upon precept, century after century, and even millennium after millennium. After Seth, came Enosh (Enos), Kenan, Mahalalel, Jared (Zared), and Enoch. With Enoch, who also walked with God, the Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, or the Order of Adam, came to be known as the Order of Enoch, until the entire city was lifted up unto the heavens, to dwell in the presence of the Lord their God. Then came Methuselah, Lamech, and Noah; and in Noah's time the Holy Order was still known as the Order of Enoch. Then, after the death of Shem, son of Noah, who was also known as the great high priest of the Most High God, and the prince or owner of peace, truth and righteousness, even Malek-us-Sadek, or in English, Melchizedek, the Holy Order came to be known as the Order of Melchizedek. Eight generations after Shem or Melchizedek, gradually became idolators and worshipers of pagan gods. Although the firstborn of the patriarch became the heir to the priesthood, due to wickedness and abominations of these eight generations, this privilege was replaced by the decree to bestow the holy priesthood only upon the firstborn who is found to be worthy of receiving it.

The priesthood was bestowed upon Abraham, who was ninth generation from Shem, by Melchizedek, king of peace, truth, and righteousness; then it was passed on to Isaac, Jacob (Israel), and to Joseph. But in the third generation after Joseph, son of Jacob, Moses was born in the tribe of Levi or Al-Levi; and this Moses, son of Amram (Imran), son of Kohath, son of Levi, son of Jacob, received his priesthood from his father-in-law Jethro, or Jether, also known as Reuel; and Jethro received it under the hand of Caleb; and Caleb from Elihu, and Elihu from Jeremy, and Jeremy from Gad, and Gad from Esaias, and Esaias received it under the hand of God; and Esaias lived in the days of Abraham, and was blessed of him.

This selfsame priesthood, after the Order of Melchizedek, continueth in the church of God in all generations; and is without beginning of days or end of years. And when the children of Israel were near Mount Sinai (1512 B.C.), the Lord conferred a lesser priesthood upon Aaron and his seed, even the Aaronic Priesthood, for the performance of certain ordinances, and ceremonial and temporal duties in the church.

The greater priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek holds the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom, and the knowledge of God, and administers the gospel of Christ. And, for without the holy ordinances the authority of the Priesthood, and the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh, the performance of ordinances is necessary to manifest the powers of godliness; wherefore no man can see the face of God, and live, lest he is prepared for this end. It is for this cause that Moses plainly taught the children of Israel these things, and sought diligently to sanctify his people, that they might be prepared to behold the face of God. But they hardened their hearts and could not endure the Lord's presence, and sought an intercessor, a mediator, between themselves and the Lord their God; and chose to worship the images of men and not the Spirit of God; therefore, they became carnal, sensual and devilish, and wicked; and as a consequence of their sins and transgressions they fell and died spiritually, and were cast out from the presence of God, and all the blessings of heaven were withheld by the power of the priesthood of God. And the Lord in his wrath and indignation swore that all Israel shall not enter into his rest, nor the fulness of his glory; and he numbered the fleshly Israel from the spiritual Israel, saying: these shall be ministered by the priesthood of Aaron and his seed, and he took Moses out of their midst, and the higher priesthood also.

Now, the lesser priesthood continued with Israel, until John the Baptist, and the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ, circa 33 A.D.; and the Order of Melchizedek once again began to minister unto all Israel.

And Jesus, the son of Mary, of virgin birth, was sealed unto Joseph and Mary, and was taught from on high, even by the Father, through the ministration of the priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek. Jesus the Christ was called of God, and made high priest after the selfsame order, even the Order of Melchizedek, forever; who in the days of flesh offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save him from death; and was heard, in that he feared. Though he was a Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, yet he learned obedience by the things he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him. For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; and have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way. No man taketh this honor upon himself, nor can all the wealth and power in the world buy it, but he who is called of God, as were Moses and Aaron. Jesus the Christ glorified not himself when made high priest, and the Father said unto him: Thou art my Son, today I have begotten thee.

Then, between 30 and 33 A.D., Peter, James, and John were ordained Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, and were blessed by him, saying: Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, He may give it you. Blessed art thou Simon son of Jonah, and I say unto thee, that thou art Peter (rock) and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

And it came to pass that Apostle Peter, or Saint Peter, was martyred in Rome; and thenceforth the canonically chosen popes of Rome became the successors to Peter; and the ancient middle-eastern Order of Melchizedek became the Order of the popes and bishops of Rome. And the Aaronic priesthood was modified into two lesser orders of priests and deacons, with sub-orders; and these continued to serve the ceremonial, ritualistic, and temporal needs of the universal (Catholic) church of Christ. The first pope to succeed St. Peter was St. Linus (67-76 A.D.), succeeded by St. Anacletus (Cletus), and St. Clements I (88-97 A.D.). And after the succession of two hundred and fifty-three such canonically chosen popes of Rome, from St. Linus (67-76 A.D.) to St. Pius VIII (1829-30 A.D.), the Order of Melchizedek was again established in the United States.

In the United States, the Melchizedek Priesthood was conferred upon Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery in 1829, under the hands of Peter, James, and John, who were sent by the Lord to ordain them into the Holy Order of Melchizedek. On April 6, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established as an institution among men; and Joseph Smith, Jr., was appointed its first president, seer and revelator. Thus the powers and authorities of the eternal and universal church of Christ were separated in 1830, when the policy of strict adherence to traditions and limitations became the policy of the Catholic (universal) Church of Rome; while in the United States the pursuit and realization of the fulness of scriptural knowledge and understanding became the policy of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and the latter-day saints became separate from the former-day saints of the ancient church.

{Then, it came to pass that the Three Witnesses were by revelation to choose the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and on February 14, 1835, were blessed by the laying on of hands of the Presidency of the Church, namely Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams, to ordain the Twelve Apostles. After Joseph Smith's martyrdom, Brigham Young became the president, seer and revelator of the church in 1847. Today, in 1990, Ezra Taft Benson is the president, and prophet of the church. He is the twelfth president of the high priesthood of the Order of Melchizedek, from the time of Joseph Smith's martyrdom; and the First Presidency of this day includes Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson as his two counselors. And Ezra Taft Benson succeeded Spencer W. Kimball (1973-85); who succeeded Harold B. Lee (1972-73), and Joseph Fielding Smith (1970-72); David O. McKay (1951-1970); George Albert Smith (1945-1951); Heber J. Grant (1918-1945): Joseph F. Smith (1901-1918); Lorenzo Snow (1898-1901); Wilford Woodruff* (1889-1898); John Taylor* (1880-1887); and Brigham Young* (1847-1877).}

Now, the priesthood of Aaron holds the keys of administering angels, and the preparatory gospel of repentance, and baptism by water for the remission of sins. This lesser priesthood was established to administer the outward ordinances, characterized by the ceremonial aspects of the laws of Moses. The Aaronic Priesthood was conferred upon Aaron, brother of Moses, during a seven-day ceremony, Nisan 1-7, 1512 B.C., near Mount Sinai, under the hands of Moses, the Melchizedek high priest, and continued with the house of Aaron among the children of Israel, from the time of Aaron until the time of John the Baptist, who was a priest of the Aaronic order. The selfsame John whom God raised up, being filled with the Holy Spirit from his mother's womb; for he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old, unto this power; that he shall overthrow the fleshly kingdom of the Jews, and make straight the way of the Lord, and prepare his people for the coming of the Lord Jesus the Christ, in whose hand is given all power. Now, this selfsame John was sent from heaven as a resurrected being to confer the Aaronic priesthood upon Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, on May 15, 1829 A.D., near Harmony, Pennsylvania, along the banks of the Susquehanna River. Although the Aaronic Priesthood holds the keys of ministry of angels and can perform certain ordinances, it has not the authority to confer the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The offices of elder and bishop are now necessary appendages belonging unto the higher priesthood of the Order of Melchizedek; this priesthood administereth the gospel of Christ, and holdeth the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom, and the knowledge of God. In the same manner, the offices of teacher and deacon are necessary appendages belonging to the lesser priesthood of the Order of Aaron. But bishop is an ordained office in the Aaronic priesthood, and being a common judge in Israel, he is the overseer of a ward or branches of the church, and a president of the Aaronic priesthood. And those who are literal descendants of Aaron, have a legal right to the bishopric, if they are the firstborn among the sons of Aaron; for the firstborn holds the right of presidency over the lesser priesthood. And although one be a literal descendant and the firstborn of Aaron, he has no legal authority to officiate, unless he be designated by the First Presidency of the Melchizedek Priesthood, and found worthy, and anointed, under the hands of the Presidency.

* These also led the Church as presidents of the Quorum of the Twelve: Brigham Young (1844-47); John Taylor (1877-80); and Wilford Woodruff (1887-89).

Furthermore, as a high priest of the Order of Melchizedek has authority to officiate in all the lesser offices, he may be ordained unto this power, even unto the office of bishop, where no literal descendant of Aaron can be found, under the hands of the First Presidency of the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Now, here is wisdom, and a mystery: For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining of these two priesthoods, of which I have spoken, and magnifieth his calling, the same is sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of his body; he becomes son of Moses and Aaron, and the seed of Abraham; yea, such are the church, the kingdom, and the elect of God, and they receive me well, saith the Lord. For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father; and he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him. And this according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore, whoso receiveth these two priesthoods, receiveth this oath and covenant of my Father, which He cannot break, nor can it be waived. But, whoso breaketh this covenant after receiving it, and turns away altogether, shall not have forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come.

And woe unto those who abide not in the covenants and commandments of the church, which ye have received, and which were given unto you this day, by mine own voice out of the heavens; and I have given the heavenly hosts and mine angels charge concerning you. And now I give unto you a commandment: Beware, and give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for my elders and high priests shall live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God; for the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus the Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that receiveth the word in faith, and the Spirit enlightens every man, through the word, whoso hearkens to the voice of the Spirit; and everyone that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father. And the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, for your benefit and for the benefit of all men.

Behold, the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth in darkness and bondage of sin; and by this you may know that they are in bondage of sin, that they come not unto me; therefore whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin; and whosoever receiveth not my voice, nor is acquainted with me, is not of me. Now, verily I say unto you, that your minds in times past have been darkened because of the stiffneckedness of your fathers, their unbelief, and because they treated the word of God lightly, and trifled with the commandments and the covenants of the Lord, and obeyed them not; each man walking after the desires and lusts of his own heart, until he is fallen to the ground, dead in the Spirit; captured by the snares of his own heart, unto the eternal captivity and bondage of the devil; until the time of his redemption is decreed by the Great Council in heaven. Behold, the children of Zion are under condemnation, their vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation; and this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all. And they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent of all their sins, and become obedient to the commandments and the covenants of God, even all the commandments and covenants from the time of Adam to this day, and unto the eternities to come, every whit must be fulfilled; for they are calculated to give the children of God the just and best advantage, as a portion of their inheritance. The choicest of God's gifts unto men, and there is none superior to it, is the holy scriptures of God; the secret and sacred mysteries of life and death, and eternal blessings, and punishments of God are contained therein; verily, a most marvelous gift of God unto his chosen seed, and unto every nation, kindred, tongue and people on the face of the earth. Hosanna to the Most High God!

Verily, verily, I say unto you, blessed are ye inasmuch as you receive my words; for I will forgive you of your sins with this commandment — that ye remain steadfast in solemnity of your minds and prayers of faith; and bear testimony, without fear or doubt, of those things which you believe and know to be true. And as I didst say unto my apostles, even so I say unto you in these latter days, even unto God's high priests and elders; ye are they whom my Father have given me, even to be my friends and disciples; therefore, every soul who believeth on your words, and is baptized by water for the remission of sins, shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; and that which is written should follow their baptism, that they may be strengthened in their testimonies.

And you shall do great and marvelous work, each according to his own calling and capacities, with diligence and a content heart; with his eye single to the glory of God and obedience to His commandments. And they shall be given power and authority from on high to perform many wonders and miracles for the benefit of man, and for the glory of God; in my name, they shall cast out devils; they shall heal the sick; they shall open the eyes of the blind, and the deaf shall be made to hear; and the tongue of the dumb shall be loosed to speak. And if anyone administereth poison unto them, it shall not hurt them; and the poison of the serpent shall not have the power to harm them. But a commandment

I give unto you, that ye boast not of these things nor use them without judgement and discretion, nor use them before the eyes of the world; for these things are given unto you for your profit and salvation.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, they who believe not on your words, are not baptized in water in my name, for the remission of their sins, and, thereby, receive not the Holy Ghost, shall be damned, and shall not come into my Father's kingdom, where my Father and I are. Behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire; therefore, any man that shall go and preach the gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithfully in all things, shall not be weary in his mind, neither would he be afflicted with sore diseases, and his spirit will not be destroyed nor corrupted; but, he shall be made whole, and a hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed; and he shall not go hungry, neither athirst. Therefore, remember, take ye not thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink or wherewithal ye shall be clothed. For, consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, are not as self-sufficient and content, nor arrayed like one of these; for, behold, your Father which art in heaven, knoweth of which he have need of; therefore take not thought for the morrow, but abide steadfast in the promises of the Lord, and there is no promise in heavens or earth more binding than the promises of the Lord unto his children; for as it is decreed in heaven, so shall it be fulfilled, every whit. Neither take ye thought before hand what ye shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, even eternal life and immortality, and it shall be given you in the very hour as to what ye shall say, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Therefore, let no man among you, who is called of God in the church unto the ministry to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom, take purse or scrip with him.

Behold, I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to prepare them for the judgement which is to come. And whoso receiveth you, there will I be also, for my presence shall go before you, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and my angels round about you shall bear you up. And whoso receiveth you receiveth me; and whoso feedeth you, and giveth you raiment and money, the same also receiveth me; and he shall in nowise lose his reward. And he that receiveth you not and despises you, go away from him, and cleanse your feet in secret, even with pure water, and bear your testimony against that household unto your Father which art in heaven; and return not again unto that household; in whatever village or city ye encounter such, bear your testimonies, and spare them not; and woe unto that house, or that village, or that city that rejecteth you or your testimony concerning me, or my word; for I, the Almighty, have laid mine hands upon nations, kindreds, tongues and people, to scourge them for their wickedness and stiffneckedness; for all who are in bondage of sins become wicked and stiffnecked, and by this ye shall discern the wicked from the righteous; that ye may not be caught in their snares, and suffer the spiritual death, and be taken captive into their bondage.

Now, behold, my faithful shall inherit Zion, and the day soon cometh that all shall know me as their Savior and the Messiah of the world; even from the least unto the greatest shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and abide in peace, safety, salvation, and in brotherly love, for a thousand years; and the Lord shall reign in the midst of the three great kingdoms of the world; and his saints and the chosen seed shall dwell for eternities to come in the land which is choice above all other lands on the face of the earth, even the great kingdom of the Americas, which shall include the United States, Canada, and South America, and all the islands round about, according to the agreements of the governments of the world. And in the gathering of the chosen seed, they shall sing this song, saying: The Lord hath brought forth Zion again, the Lord hath redeemed his people Israel; by His living judgements, and justice, and mercy, and Israel's faith in the Lord their God, He hath brought forth Israel again from the darkness unto His eternal light. Once again, we are blessed with His everlasting and millennial-day covenant which we make with Him, never to break it for a thousand years; yea, that all which has been written by the hands of the prophets and disciples be fulfilled. The Lord hath now redeemed this people, and Satan is bound; the Lord hath gathered all things in one, and hath blessed mankind, even with the scriptures of the fulness of time. The Lord hath brought down Zion from above, and brought up Zion from beneath; the earth hath travailed and brought forth her strength, and the truth is established in her bowels; the heavens have smiled upon her, and she is clothed with the glory of her God, for the Lord now stands in the midst of her people. May the glory, and honor, and power, and might be ascribed to the Lord our God, for He is full of justice and mercy, grace, truth, and peace, forever and ever.

Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head of the body say unto the feet or arm or eyes, or nose or any other part of the body, that it is not needed in the functioning of the body; for the body hath need of every member and organ of the body, that all may be edified together unto the perfect functioning of all systems. Behold, it is expedient that the high priests and elders should travel, and also the priests of the Aaronic Order; but the deacons and teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church.

Furthermore, I will that bishop Newel K. Whitney also should travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor and the needy, to administer to their needs, wants, desires and circumstances; by humbling the rich and the proud. He should also employ an agent to take charge, and to do his secular business, during his absence. Nevertheless, let the bishop go unto the cities of New York, Albany (Al-bani), and Boston, and warn the inhabitants of these cities with the gospel message, and the consequences of unbelief. And if they do reject these things, their houses shall be left in desolation, for the judgement of the Lord is nigh.

And unto the residue of my servants, I say, go ye forth as your circumstances shall permit, in your several callings, unto the great and notable cities and villages, reproving the world in righteousness of all their ungodly deeds, preparing them for the great and terrible day of the Lord, for with you saith the Lord Almighty, I will rend their kingdoms and empires; and I will not only shake the foundations of the earth, but the starry heavens shall tremble in fear and awe of it all. Remain steadfast in your faith, and pray regularly, that ye may be ready when the Son of Man descendeth upon earth, in a pillar of cloud, in great majesty and glory. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, and I come quickly. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 82 - B
(December 6, 1832; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servants, concerning the parable of the wheat and the tares: Behold, the field is the world, and my servants the apostles are the sowers of the seed; and after mine apostles have fallen asleep, the great persecutor of the church, the whore, the apostate, even Babylon that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose heart reigneth Satan, whose works are deception, lusts, murders, and all the evils linked with secret combinations, soweth the tares in the field, and the tares choke the wheat, and drive the church into the wilderness and unknown places; even as in these days, as the Lord is beginning to bring forth His word, the blade is springing up and is yet tender. Behold, verily I say unto you the angels are crying unto the Lord day and night, who are ready in wait to be sent forth to reap down the field.

But the Lord saith unto them, pluck not up the tares while the blade is yet tender, lest you pull down and destroy the wheat also. Therefore, let the wheat and the tares grow together until the harvest is fully ripe; then ye shall first gather out the wheat from among the tares; and then lo, and behold, the tares are bound in bundles, and the field remaineth to be burned.

It is for this cause, that the Lord raiseth the heirs of the priesthood, unto whom the priesthood hath come down through the lineage of their fathers, in places and circumstances known only unto the appointed ones in the kingdom of God. Yea, for ye are lawful heirs, and have been hid from the world, to be raised up unto the kingdom of Christ, your lives have been spared. Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue to abide in faith, and keep my commandments unto the end. And from the womb of this holy priesthood shall come forth the promised Messiah, even the Savior of the world, and a great light shall he be unto the Gentiles, and unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 83
(December 25, 1832; near Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord concerning the wars that will soon come to pass, beginning with the rebellion of South Carolina, which will cause deaths and misery of many souls. Then war cries shall be poured out upon all nations; and the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States; and the South shall reach out and call upon the nation of Great Britain, and other nations to defend its boundaries.

And it shall come to pass, that after many days, the slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshalled and disciplined for war; and the remnants of the inhabitants of the South will marshall themselves, and shall become extremely angry, and prick the souls of the Gentiles with sore vexations. So shall the inhabitants of earth be vexed by oppressions, wars and rumors of wars; and they shall mourn, tremble and shake, when plagues, earthquakes, thunderstorms and fierce lightnings are sent down from the heavens. Then the inhabitants of the earth shall remember the chastening hand of the Almighty God, and they shall feel the wrath and indignation of the Lord, until the consumption decreed is fulfilled in all nations; and the enemies of the Lord of Hosts are avenged. Wherefore, stand ye firm in holy places, and be not moved by the turmoil of the world, for my faithful shall abide the day under the protecting umbrella of their Lord and Savior, even Jesus Christ. Amen.

(December 27, 1832; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you who have assembled yourselves together to receive his word. Behold, this is pleasing unto the Lord, and the angels rejoice over you; your prayers of faith have come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are recorded in the book of the names of the sanctified, even those of the celestial world. Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; and this second Comforter is the same that was promised unto my disciples, and is recorded in the testimony of John; it is the promise of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial world, which is given unto you; which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, the Son of the true and living God; who ascended up high unto the eternal throne of God, and descended below the depths of the underworld, even into the subterranean world of the dead, and visited all the realms in between the two; that he might comprehend all things, that he might be enabled to combine all the colors and shades of the rainbow, to bring forth the white light of the gospel of the fulness of time; even the combined scriptures of the houses of Judah and Joseph, and all scriptures of the Father which he gave unto his other children of the kingdom.

Yea, the white light of the sun is the truth of the Son; it is the light of the fulness of truth, which truth shineth upon the earth as the light of Christ; the light which enlightens you, and quickens your understanding, and proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space; the light which gives life to all things, and by which all things are governed, even the power of God who sitteth upon His throne.

Now, verily I say unto you that through the redemption of your soul is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. For the unity of the spirit and the body is the soul of man, and the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul, the redemption of the soul quickens the body and the spirit of man. Therefore, it must needs be that the preservation of the soul of man is the most important ingredient in the ministration of salvation unto him.

Therefore, men must be sanctified and cleansed from all sins and transgressions, that they may be prepared to inherit the glory of the celestial kingdom, and preserve their souls forever, not having their bodies separated from their spirit. And after a soul hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that the bodies of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for it was for this intent these souls were made and created and sanctified. And those who are not sanctified unto the celestial glory, they must inherit another kingdom, even the terrestrial kingdom, or the telestial kingdom. For those who are not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, cannot abide a celestial glory; those who cannot abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, cannot abide the terrestrial glory; and those who abide not in the law of a telestial kingdom, cannot abide the telestial glory; therefore, such are not meet for a kingdom of glory, and they must abide in a kingdom which is not of glory, even in the outer darkness.

Verily, I say unto you, the whole earth abideth under the law of the celestial kingdom; for it filleth the measure of its creation, and remains supreme and separate from all others, forever and ever. Wherefore, if a sanctified soul die, it shall be quickened by the power from on high, and it shall rise again to abide in the realm of the power by which it was quickened.

They who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was their natural body; and others shall receive their bodies according to the glories of their inheritance. And those who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall be given the fulness thereof; they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial, shall receive of the same, even in fulness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory, shall receive the fulness of the telestial glory. The remainder, who abide not in a kingdom of glory, will also be quickened according to their inability to receive, nevertheless, they shall return to their own places to rejoice in the receiving of that which they are willing to obtain; because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received. For what doth it profit man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receive it not? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, nor in him who is the giver of the gift.

Now, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by the law of a kingdom is also preserved by that law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. Therefore, whoso breaketh a just law and abideth not in it, but seeketh to obey the dictates of his own heart, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by the law, neither by judgement, justice or mercy; therefore such must remain filthy still.

All kingdoms have a law given unto them. And there are many kingdoms, for there is not one cubit of ground upon the face of the earth, which is not governed by a kingdom, either a greater or a lesser kingdom. And unto the law of every kingdom are certain bounds and conditions. Therefore, all who abide not in them, become guilty by the consequence of their transgressions, and remain in their fallen state until the day of their resurrection, when they are judged of their works.

Remember ye who have assembled yourselves together, that intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth more wisdom; truth embraces truth, virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth her own; justice continueth its course, and also claimeth its own; and judgement goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the eternal throne of God, and governeth and executeth all things; who comprehendeth all things, and all things are before his eyes, and round about him; who is above all things, and in all things; and all things are by him and of him, forever and ever.

And again, verily I say unto you, the Father hath given a law unto all creatures, even laws according to the nature of men, that they may move about their fixed courses in their times and seasons. The earth rolls upon her wings, and the sun giveth its light by day and the moon reflects its light by night; and stars also shine unto themselves and add light to the darkness, and roll upon their wings in their glory; and each of these kingdoms of the sun, the moon and the stars, is the manifestation of the power and glory of God. Behold, these are the kingdoms of glory, and each is governed by the Christ of that kingdom, and Jesus Christ, the greatest of the anointed ones, or the christs, ruleth above all of them, and glorifieth the Father forever and ever.

Behold, these kingdoms are likened unto a man having a vineyard, and he sent his servants to labor in it; and he said unto the first: Go ye and labor in my vineyard, and in the first hour I will come down to visit you, and ye shall behold the joy of my countenance; and he said unto the second: Go ye also into my vineyard and do your labor,and in the second hour I will come down to visit you, and ye shall be blessed of my presence; and he said unto the third, and fourth, and unto the twelfth. And the Lord of the vineyard went unto the first in the first hour and tarried with him that hour, then he went to the second and tarried with him, and unto all the twelve in their appointed hours he visited; and each laborer was made glad with the joy of his presence, and his many blessings which he bestows upon them. Thus, as every man was ministered to in his own time and season, each kingdom is visited in its appointed hour, and in its due time, and the inhabitants thereof are judged for their works; that they may be resurrected unto the resurrection of the just or the unjust; that they may be washed clean from the consequences of their sins, transgressions, iniquities, and ways of error; that they may be redeemed from their fall, and be saved, if they are willing to repent, and accept the Messiah as the Son of the true and living God; that they may come to the knowledge that no salvation for man is possible without faith in Jesus Christ, and obedience to his commandments, and ordinances.

Verily, I say unto you, I leave these sayings with you to ponder in your hearts, to learn them and understand them; that you may draw nigh unto me. Seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, shall be given unto you, if it is expedient for you. Therefore, ask not that which is not expedient for you, lest it shall turn unto your own condemnation.

Behold, that which you hear is my voice, for my voice is Spirit, and my Spirit is truth, and truth abideth forever, and hath no end; and if it be in you, it shall abound. And if your eye be single to the glory of God, your whole bodies shall be filled with the light of truth and there shall be no darkness in you or amongst you. Now, the body which is filled with the light of the Holy Writ, comprehendeth all things; and for such a one comprehendeth and applies the learning for the benefit of man and the glory of God, and all things under the heavens and on the earth, including the angels, are subject unto him, for the kingdom is given unto such; the Father and the Son keep them near and under their wings, as the hen doth keep her chickens. Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your bodies and spirits become one with the knowledge of God; and ye dwell in the presence of the Father, even as the church of the Firstborn.

Remember the great and last promise which ye made unto me, when I said: Cast away your idle talk and excess of laughter far from you, for they lead your soul to hell. Now, henceforth forsake all such things, and learn to pray and fast, and to do good works for the kingdom; to teach and learn from each other the laws and commandments of God, and the principles of the gospel, and all things that pertain to the kingdom of God; also all things pertaining to the kingdoms of the earth, their governments, and the knowledge of their inhabitants; that ye may be prepared in all things, when you are called and commissioned to perform your labor in my vineyard; that ye may escape the wrath of God, and the desolation which awaits the wicked, both in this world and in the world to come. Verily, there are elders amongst you whose garments are not clean from the blood of this generation; lest they repent and forsake speedily, they shall be cast out to the buffeting of Satan.

Therefore, abide ye in liberty, in the which ye are made free; entangle yourselves not in the sins of your heart, nor in the snares of the world; but let your hands be clean, and endure all adversities unto the end; that ye may be given an inheritance in the land of the blessed, even in Zion. For not many generations shall pass away, that the earth shall tremble and reel to and fro as a drunken man; and the sun shall hide its face, and refuse to give light; and the moon shall be bathed in blood; and the stars shall turn exceedingly angry, and fall from their position, as the fig falleth from a fig tree.

Yea, after every whit written by the prophets and apostles is fulfilled, the angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with the sound of a trump, saying: Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgement of our God hath come, the hour of the Lord is here. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. And there shall appear a great sign in heaven, and people shall see it and marvel. And the first angel shall sound his trump long and loud, saying: The great and abominable church, even the church of the devil, that made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, that persecuteth the saints of God and shedeth their blood; yea, even the whore that sitteth upon many waters and upon the islands of the sea; behold, she is the tares of the earth, and she is bound in bundles; her bands are made strong that no man can loose them; therefore, she is ready to be burned in its appointed time, by the will and the power of God. And there shall be silence in heaven for a space of half an hour, then the curtain of heaven shall be unfolded, in the manner in which a rolled up scroll is unfolded, and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled unto all men. And the saints that are upon earth shall be quickened and caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves shall also come forth out of their graves to meet him, in the midst of the pillar of cloud.

Then the second angel shall sound his trump, to announce the redemption of those who are Christ's at his coming; who in the wisdom of God were kept in the prison which is prepared for them, that they may be prepared to receive the gospel, and to be redeemed, and yet be judged according to men in the flesh. And after this, the third angel shall sound his trump, to announce the judgement upon the spirits of men kept in prison, those who are taken captive by the cunning of man, that they are found under condemnation; and because of their stiffneckedness as a consequence of their sins, transgressions, iniquities and ways of error, they will neither accept Christ, nor repent in sincerity of their hearts; therefore, such shall remain in their fallen state, and dead in the Spirit and knowledge of God, until the end of the thousand years, yea, even beyond.

After this, the fourth angel shall sound his trump, saying: There remain yet those who shall remain filthier in their fallen state; yea, these are liars, sorcerers, adulterers, thieves, and whoremongers, who are kept in bondage by those spirits kept in prison, crafty men of the world. These love to make a lie and live a lie, and they suffer the wrath of God and vengeance of eternal fire of hell. Then the fifth angel shall sound his trump, saying unto all people in heaven and on earth and beneath the earth; for every ear shall hear it, every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess, when they shall hear the sound of the trump, saying: Fear God, and give glory unto Him who sitteth upon the eternal throne; for the hour of His judgement is come; and this selfsame angel, even the fifth, shall commit the Holy Writ of the fulness of time, even the everlasting gospel of the Millennial Day, flying through the midst of heaven, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

Then, the sixth angel shall sound his trump, saying; She is fallen who made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication; who corrupted the faith of every living soul by thrusting the lusts of her heart, light-mindedness and pride, and wicked doings upon them. Yea, the great whore is fallen! fallen! And again, another angel shall sound his trump, which is the seventh angel, saying: It is finished! it is finished! The Lamb of God hath overcome and trodden the wine-press alone, even the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God, the Father. And then shall the hosts of angels be crowned with the glory of his might, and the saints shall be filled with his Spirit and glory; and shall receive their inheritance, and be made equal with him.

And then again the first angel shall sound his trump in the ears of all living, and reveal the secret acts of men, the thoughts and intents of their hearts, and the mighty works of God in the first thousand years (from the time of Adam to the time of Enoch); and the second angel shall sound his trumpet, and reveal all things of the second thousand years (from Methuselah to Melchizedek or Shem). And so on, until the seventh angel shall sound his trump, and he shall stand upon the land and the sea and swear in the name of Him who sitteth upon the throne, that Satan shall be bound, even the old serpent called the devil; and shall not be loosed for the space of a thousand years. And then he shall be loosed for a season, that he may gather together his armies, and that the Lord's vineyard be pruned once again, to be prepared for the Second Millennium.

Now, the seventh angel, even Michael the archangel, shall gather together his armies from among the hosts of heaven; and the devil shall gather together his armies from among the hosts of hell, and shall come up to battle against Michael and his armies. Then cometh the battle of the great God; and the devil and his armies shall be cast away into their own place, even into a kingdom of their own, that they may have no power over the saints any more. For Michael shall fight their battles for them; and shall overcome him who seeketh the throne of him who sitteth upon the throne, even the Lamb. This is the glory of God, and those who are sanctified shall no more see death.

Therefore, verily I say unto you, call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you. And as all among you have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom from the scriptures; yea, seek ye out the best words of wisdom, and learn them by study, faith, and contemplation. Therefore, cease from all light speeches, excessive laughter, and lustful desires, from pride and light-mindedness, and wicked doings. That all your incomings and outgoings be in the name of the Lord; that your salutations be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High God. And I say unto you, organize yourselves, prepare every needful thing, and establish a house of prayer, even a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, even a house of God.

And appoint among yourselves a teacher; and let not all be spokesmen at once; but let one speak at a time, and all listen unto his words; that when all have spoken, all may be edified of all; and that every man may have an equal privilege. See that ye love one another, and impart to one another as the gospel requires; and cease to be covetous. Cease from dullness and idle talk; from strife, envy, and anger; and cease to sleep longer than is needful. Above all, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace. Pray always that ye may not faint, until I come. Behold, I come quickly.

Now, the order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them; even for all the officers of the church who are called to the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests down to the deacons, shall be as follows: He that is appointed to be president, or teacher, shall be found standing in his place in the house which shall be prepared for him. Therefore he shall be the first in the house of God, in a place that the congregation in the house may hear his words carefully and distinctly, requiring not loud speech. And when he cometh into the house of God, for he should be first in the house — behold, it is marvelous that he be an ensample unto others. Let him offer himself in prayer upon his knees before God, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant of the holy priesthood. And when any shall come in after him, let the teacher arise, and with uplifted hands to heaven, directly salute his brother or brethren with these words: Art thou a brother (or brethren)? I salute you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant; in which covenant I receive you to fellowship; in a determination that is fixed, immovable, and unchangeable; to be your friend and brother through the grace of God in the bonds of love; to walk in all the commandments of God blameless, in thanksgiving, forever and ever. Amen.

And he that is found unworthy of this salutation shall not have place among you; for ye shall not suffer that mine house be polluted by him. And if a brother (or brethren) cometh in and is faithful before me, he shall salute the president or teacher with uplifted hands to heaven, with the same prayer and covenant, or by saying Amen, in token of the same. Behold, verily, I say unto you, this is an ensample unto you for a salutation to one another in the house of God, in the school of the prophets. And ye are called to do this by prayer and thanksgiving, as the Spirit shall give utterance in all your doings in the house of the Lord, in the school of the prophets; that it may become a sanctuary, a tabernacle of the Holy Spirit to your edification. And ye shall not receive any among you into this school, save he be clean from the blood of this generation. And he shall be received by the ordinance of the washing of feet; for unto this end was the ordinance of the washing of feet instituted. The ordinance is to be administered by the president, or presiding elder of the church. It is to be commenced with prayer; and after partaking of bread and wine, he is to gird himself according to the pattern (given in the thirteenth chapter of John's testimony of Jesus the Christ). Amen.

(February 27, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

A Word of Wisdom, for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, the church and the saints in Zion; to be sent as a greeting and a blessing, not by compulsion or constraint, but in the spirit of revelation; showing unto the faithful the order and will of God in temporal salvation of all saints. Given unto them as a principle with a promise, adapted to the capacity of the weak and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints.

Behold, verily, thus saith the Lord: In consequence of evil designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom. That inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, unless it is so prescribed, is not good; nor is it meet in the sight of your Father; for only the consumption of the pure and sanctified wine for offering up the sacraments before Him is permitted. And, behold, this should be a pure wine of the grapes of the vine, of your own make, or made by your brethren. And, again, strong (alcoholic) drinks are not meant for the belly, but for washing wounds and other medicinal purposes. Tobacco also is not meet for the body, neither for the belly, but is an herb for bruises and sick cattle, and such purposes, to be used with judgement and skill. In the same manner, hot drinks (such as coffee and tea) are not meet for the saints.

Verily, I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the use of man. Yea, even all herbs and good things which come of the earth, whether for food or raiment; for houses or barns or orchards, for gardens or vineyards; all things which come of the earth, in season thereof, are made for the benefit and use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart, to strengthen the body and enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given these things unto man; for unto this end they were made to be used; with judgement, not to excess, nor by extortion. And in nothing doth man offend God, nor his wrath is kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments. Behold, this is according to the ancient and eternal law and the prophets. Every herb in season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof, to be used with prudence and thanksgiving. Yea, flesh also of the beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, have ordained for the use of man; nevertheless, flesh must be used sparingly, if eaten by itself.

All grain is ordained for the use of man, and also for the use of beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and the wild animals that run or creep on earth. Yea, all grain is good for the food of man; and also the fruits of the vine, trees, and shrubs, that are not found to be poisonous or harmful to man. Nevertheless, wheat and rice are acceptable unto man, corn for the ox, oats for the horse; rye or barley for the fowl and the swine, and other beasts of the field, and for mild drinks.

And those who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to these words of wisdom, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones; and shall find wisdom and great hidden treasures of knowledge; they shall run and be not weary, and walk and not faint. Yea, I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass over them, and slay them not; even as the children of Israel were spared before they left the land of Egypt. Amen.

(March 8, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Thus saith the Lord, verily, verily, I say unto you my son (Joseph Smith), thy sins are forgiven thee once more, according to thy petition and the prayers of thy brethren in thy behalf. Therefore, henceforth thou art given the keys of the kingdom, which kingdom is coming forth for the last time to prepare for the dawning of the millennial day, in the fulness of time. And, verily, the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken away from thee, while thou art in the world, or in the world to come; inasmuch as you transgress not the commandments of God. Nevertheless, it is expedient in me that through you, the oracles, even the revelations from the Lord, be given unto the church. And all those who receive them, be made aware how they receive them, lest they trifle with them, and trample upon them as the light things of the world; and therefore be brought under condemnation, to stumble and fall when the rains and storms descend, and the winds blow and beat upon their houses.

Now, verily I say unto thy brethren, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, their sins are forgiven them also, and they are accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom. And through your administration, the keys of the school of the prophets shall be established, according to my commandments; that they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles; that through your administration they may receive the Word, and the word may go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and behold, and lo, then unto the Jews.

And then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in convincing the heathen nations, and the house of Joseph, of the gospel plan of their salvation. For it shall come to pass that in that day every man will hear the glad tidings, even the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in his own language and in his own tongue, through their own who are ordained unto this power, by the administration of the Comforter, to shed forth upon them the light and truth of Christ.

Now I give unto you this commandment that you continue in the ministry and presidency; and upon completion of your translation of the prophets, you shall preside over the church and the school; and from time to time, as shall be manifested by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom; that you may set in order the churches, study and learn, become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues and people. And this shall be your mission and calling all your lives, to preside in the council, and set in order the affairs of this church and kingdom. Be not ashamed, neither confounded; but be admonished in all your high-mindedness and pride, for it bringeth a snare upon your souls. Begin with setting in order your own households, for how can one set in order the affairs of the entire church, who cannot manage the affairs of his own household? Keep slothfulness and uncleanness far from you.

Furthermore, let there be a place provided for the family of Frederick G. Williams; and let my servants Joseph Smith, Sr., and Sidney Rigdon continue with their families upon the place where they now reside; and let the bishop search diligently to obtain an agent, a man of God who has been blessed with riches, and of strong faith; that he may be enabled to discharge the debts of the storehouse of the Lord, that it may not be brought into disrepute before the eyes of men. Remember to search diligently, always praying and believing; and all things shall work together for your good, if ye walk uprightly and obey the commandments and the covenants which have been given unto you.

As pertaining to those who do not belong to your families, let the families be small, especially of my aged servant Joseph Smith, Sr.; that those things that are provided for you, to bring to pass my work, be not taken away from you and given unto those who are not worthy. Now, it is my will that my handmaid Vienna Jaques be provided with moneys and resources to go up unto the land of Zion; and verily it is also meet that she receive an inheritance there from the hand of the bishop; that she may settle down in peace, and not be idle in her days from thenceforth, inasmuch as she is faithful.

Behold, I say unto you, that some of your brethren in Zion are beginning to repent in sincerity of their hearts, and the angels rejoice over them; nevertheless, I am not well pleased with many, and I am not pleased with my servants William E. McLellin, Sidney Gilbert, and the bishop, and others also. But, verily, I, the Lord, shall contend with Zion, and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her until she is overcome, and made clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place, and I, the Lord, have spoken it. Amen.

(March 9, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you concerning the Apocrypha — there are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; but it also contains interpolations of men. Therefore, verily, I say unto you, that it is not needful that it should be translated, as a part of the canon of this church. Therefore, whoso readeth the Apocrypha, let him understand it according to the Spirit within that person, and be enlightened by it, and obtain benefit therefrom. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 88
(March 15, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord: I give unto the United Order, a commandment and a revelation, concerning my servant Frederick G. Williams; that ye shall receive him into the Order. And what I say unto one I say unto all, that my servant Frederick G. Williams shall be a lively member in this Order; and inasmuch as you are faithful in keeping all former commandments, you shall be exceedingly blessed. Amen.

SECTION 89
(May 6, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord: It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice by keeping the commandments, shall see my face, and know that I am; that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; that I am in the Father and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one — the Father because he gave me of his fulness, and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men. And while in the world, I was received of the Father, and the works of him were plainly manifest.

This is a record of John the apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ: I saw his glory, that he was in the beginning, before the world was. And in the beginning the Word was, for he was the word, even the messenger of salvation unto those who kept not their first estate, and were thrust down to earth with Lucifer; the light and the Redeemer of the world, the Spirit of truth, and the manifestation of intelligence. The worlds and men were made by him, through him, and of him. And I, John, bear record that I beheld the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace, truth and light, who came and dwelt in the flesh among us. And I, John, saw that he received not of the fulness at first, but received grace upon grace, and continued in it until he received a fulness. Thus he was called the Son of God, because he received not the fulness at first. And I, John, bear record, and lo, the heavens were opened, and the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove, and sat upon him; and there came a voice out of heaven, saying: This is my beloved Son. And I, John, bear record that he received a fulness of the glory of the Father, and received all power both in heaven and on earth.

Now, verily, verily, I, the Lord say unto you, that if ye are faithful, you shall receive the fulness of the record of John. I give you these sayings that you may know and understand how to worship, and what to worship, that you may come unto the Father in my name, and in due time receive of his fulness. For if you keep my commandments, you shall receive of his fulness, and be glorified in the Father, as I am in him; therefore, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall receive grace upon grace, a little here, a little there, line upon line, precept upon precept, until your portion of the fulness is imparted unto you. And all those who are begotten through me are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the Firstborn; for I was from the beginning with the Father, and I am the Firstborn.

Ye were also in the beginning with the Father, which was the collective Spirit, even the Spirit of truth. And truth is knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to be. The Spirit of truth is of God; the Son of God is the Spirit of truth, who received the fulness of truth, yea, even of all truth; and no man receiveth a fulness unless he keepeth all the commandments given by the Father through his Son. He that keepeth his commandments receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, even the sphere of the celestial, the terrestrial, or the telestial; to act for itself, as all intelligence also; and intelligence is light and truth combined.

Behold, for the agency of man is given unto him, he chooses right from wrong, light from darkness, truth from lies and deceptions; therefore, every man whose spirit receiveth not the light or truth is under condemnation. For the soul is body and spirit of man; and the elements of body are eternal, and when inseparably connected with spirit, bring unto man fulness of joy, and wholeness of being. Now, the glory of God is intelligence, or light and truth; and light and truth forsake that evil one, and the old serpent cannot withstand them. Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again in their infant state, innocent before God. Then cometh the wicked one and taketh away the light and truth from the children of men, by disobedience and craftiness; and they are cast away from the presence of God, and are left alone to kick against the pricks, without his guidance or blessings, nor are they given here and now, therefore they forever dwell in the traditions of their fathers.

But, verily I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth; and, behold, my servant Frederick G. Williams is under this condemnation. He has not taught his children truth and light according to my commandments; thereby giving the wicked one power over him and his family; and this is the cause of his afflictions. Nevertheless, henceforth set in order your own house, for there are many things that are not right in your household, and you will be delivered. And my servant Sidney Rigdon also hath not kept all commandments concerning his children, therefore, he must set in order his house. Verily, I say unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., that ye are my friends and brothers also, and ye have an inheritance with me; and I call you servants for the world's sake, and to maintain order; for ye are servants of the world for my sake, and an ensample unto them. Now, I say unto Joseph Smith, Jr., — you have again not kept my commandments, and must needs be rebuked before the Lord; nor did you teach your children light and truth; therefore, your family must needs repent and forsake things that are not of God; and give earnest heed unto the commandments of God; or be removed out of their place.

Also, my servant Newel K. Whitney, a bishop of my church, hath need to be chastened, and set in order his family; and see that they are more diligent in obeying the commandments, or they shall be removed from their place.

Now, let my servants Sidney Rigdon, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Frederick G. Williams, go on their journeys, and proclaim the gospel of salvation and the acceptable year of the Lord; and it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures into the English language, that you may obtain a knowledge of history, of countries, of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, for the salvation of Zion. Amen.

(May 6, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

And, verily, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall commence the work of laying out and preparing the foundation for a city of the stake of Zion, here in the land of Kirtland, beginning at my house. For behold, it must be done according to the pattern which I have given unto you, and shall be given later. Let the first lot on the south be consecrated unto me for the building of a house for the presidency; for the work of the presidency, in obtaining revelations; and for the work of the ministry of the presidency, in all things pertaining to the church and kingdom.

Verily, I say unto you, that it shall be built fifty-five by sixty-five feet in its width and length, being the measurements of the inner court; and there shall be a lower court and a higher court. The structure shall be dedicated unto the Lord from the foundation thereof, according to the order of the priesthood, and the pattern which shall be given later. The house shall be wholly dedicated unto the Lord for the work of the presidency; and ye shall not suffer any unclean thing to come in unto it, for my glory shall be there, and presence shall be there. But if there shall come into it any unclean thing, my glory shall not be there, nor my presence.

Now, the second lot on the south shall be dedicated unto me for the building of a house unto me, for the work of the printing of the translation of my scriptures; and to accomplish all things whatsoever I shall command you. The structure shall be of the same dimensions as the first; and shall be wholly dedicated unto the Lord from the foundation thereof, for the work of the printing, and all things whatsoever I shall command you, to be kept undefiled and holy, according to the pattern of things which shall be given later. And on the third lot shall my servant Hyrum Smith receive his inheritance.

And on the first and second lots on the north shall my servants Reynolds Cahoon and Jared Carter receive their inheritances, that they may do my work, to be a committee to build mine houses, according to my commandments; but they are not to begin construction immediately. Even so. Amen.

(June 1, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you whom I love; and whom I love I also chasten, that their torment and misery as the consequence of their sins be lessened; and that they may even be chastened unto forgiveness of their sins. Wherefore, ye must needs be chastened and stand rebuked before my face; for ye have sinned a grievous sin against me, concerning not building mine house; for I gave you a commandment that you should build it; yea, I commanded you to build a house, in the which I design to endow those whom I have chosen with power from on high; for this is the eternal promise of the Father unto you. Nevertheless, the contentions arose in the school of the prophets, which is a very grievous sin unto me, saith your Lord; therefore I sent them away to be chastened for a season.

Verily, I say unto you, it is my will that you should build a house, according to my commandments, and with generous hearts. But if you keep not the commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, and you shall again walk in darkness. Now, here is the wisdom and the mind of the Lord — let the house be built not after the manner of the world, for I give not unto you that ye live after the manner of the world. Let it be built in the manner which I shall show unto three of you (Frederick G. Williams, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon); I shall also show whom you shall appoint and ordain unto this power.

The size thereof shall be fifty-five feet in width and sixty-five feet in length, in the inner court. And let the lower part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for your sacrament offering, for your preaching, your fasting and praying, and offering up your most holy desires unto me, saith your Lord. And let the higher part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles, even the school of prophets, saith the son of Ahman, or in other words, Alphus and Omegus, even Jesus Christ your Lord. Amen.

(June 4, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Behold, I say unto you, that it is expedient in me that this city or stake of Zion (at Kirtland) which I have set to strengthen Zion, should be made stronger. Therefore, let my servant Newel K. Whitney take charge of the place upon which I design to build mine holy house. Let the land be divided into lots, according to wisdom, for the benefit of those who seek inheritances; as it shall be determined in counsel among you.

Therefore take heed that ye see to this matter and all other matters which are necessary and beneficial to mine order, and for the salvation of the children of men. And, behold, it is expedient in me, that my word should go forth unto the children of men, for the purpose of subduing their hearts for your good.

It is also wisdom and expedient in me, that my servant John Johnson, whose offering I have accepted, and whose prayers I have heard, unto whom I give a promise of eternal life, inasmuch as he keepeth my commandments from henceforth; for he is a descendant of Joseph, and partaker of the blessings of the promise made unto his fathers; verily, it is expedient in me that he should become a member of the order, that he may assist in bringing forth my word unto the children of men. Therefore, ye shall ordain him unto this blessing, and that he shall seek diligently to take away incumbrances that are upon the house named among you, that he may dwell there. Even so. Amen.

(August 2, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, I speak unto you with my voice, even the voice of my Spirit; that I may show unto you my will concerning your brethren in the land of Zion, many of whom are truly humble, and are seeking diligently to learn wisdom and find truth. Blessed are such, for they shall obtain; for I, the Lord, show mercy unto all the meek, and the afflicted, and upon whomsoever I will, that I may be justified, when they are brought forth to judgement before me.

Behold, I say unto you, concerning the school in Zion — I, the Lord, am well pleased that there should be a school in Zion; and also with my servant Parley P. Pratt, for he abideth in me. And inasmuch as he continueth to abide in me, he shall continue to preside over the school, until I give unto him other assignment. And I will bless him with a multiplicity of blessings, in expounding all scriptures and mysteries to the edification of the school and the church in Zion. And to the residue of the school, I, the Lord, shall be merciful; nevertheless, there are those that must needs be chastened, and their works shall be made known. The ax is laid at the root of the trees, and every tree that bringeth forth not good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire. Verily, I say unto you, blessed are they whose hearts are honest, broken and pure, whose spirits are contrite, and who are willing to observe their covenants and duties by sacrifice, yea, every sacrifice which I, the Lord, shall command. For I, the Lord, will cause them to bring forth, as a very fruitful tree planted in a goodly land, by a pure stream, yieldeth precious fruit in abundance.

Again, it is my will that a house should be built unto me in the land of Zion, according to the pattern which I have given you. Let it be built speedily, by the tithing of my people. Behold, the tithing and the sacrifice I, the Lord, require at their hands, that the houses of the Lord be built for the salvation of Zion — a place of thanksgiving for all saints, a place of instruction for all those who are called to the work of the ministry; that they may be perfected in the understanding of the ministry, and all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on earth; the keys of which kingdom have been conferred upon you.

And inasmuch as my people build a house unto me in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it to defile it, my glory shall rest upon it; yea, my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart shall come into it and see God. But if it be defiled, I will not come unto it, and my glory shall not be there; for I will not come into unholy temples. Now, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper, and spread herself; and become very glorious, very great and very terrible. And the nations of the earth shall honor her, and say: Surely Zion is the city of our God, and surely Zion cannot fall, nor be moved out of her place, for God is in the midst of her, and the hand of the Lord is there; and He hath sworn by the power of His might to be her salvation and her high tower.

Therefore, verily, thus saith the Lord: Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion — THE PURE IN HEART; and let the wicked mourn, for behold, and lo, vengeance cometh upon the ungodly as the whirlwind; and who can escape it? The Lord's scourge shall pass over night and day, and the reports thereof shall vex all people; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations and wicked works. Nevertheless, Zion shall escape if she abides in my commandments and observes to do all that I have commanded her; but if she rebels and observes to do them not, I will visit her according to her works, with sore afflictions, pestilence, plagues, with sword and vengeance, and with devouring fire.

Nevertheless, I, the Lord, have accepted her offering; and if she sins no more, none of these things shall come upon her; and I will bless her with multiplicity of blessings, and continue to bless her forever and ever, saith the Lord your God. Amen.

(August 6, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, I say unto you, fear not, let your hearts be comforted; rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks, waiting patiently on the Lord; for your prayers have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are recorded with this seal and testament: the Lord hath sworn and decreed that they shall be granted. And all things wherewith you have been afflicted shall work together for your good, and to my glory, saith the Lord.

And now, verily, I say unto you concerning obedience to the laws of the land. It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them. And that law of the land which is constitutional, and supports the principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges of all mankind, is justified before me. Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you and your brethren of my church, in befriending the law of the land which is constitutional; and as pertaining to the law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this, cometh of evil, and not of God.

I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed, and the law also makes you free; nevertheless, when the wicked rule, the people mourn. Wherefore, remember this principle always and compromise not, that honest men and wise men should be sought with utmost diligence, and these good men ye should observe to uphold; whatsoever is less than this cometh of evil, and not of God.

Now, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good; that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God; for he giveth unto the faithful line upon line, precept upon precept, and tries you and proves (tests) you. And whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake, shall find it again, even life eternal. Therefore be not afraid of your enemies, for I have decreed in my heart, saith the Lord, that I will prove you in all things, whether you will abide in my covenant, even unto death, that you may be found worthy. For if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me.

Henceforth, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of the children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the Jews unto the prophets, and the prophets unto the Jews; lest I come and smite the whole earth with a sore curse, and all flesh be consumed before me. Let not your hearts be troubled, for in my Father's house are many mansions, and I have prepared a place for you; and where my Father and I am, there shall ye be also.

Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many in the church at Kirtland; for they do not forsake their sins and wicked ways, the pride of their hearts, their covetousness, and all their detestable things; nor do they observe the words of wisdom and eternal life. Verily, I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will chasten them and will do whatsoever I list, if they repent and forsake not in sincerity of their hearts. And if ye observe to do whatsoever I command you, I, the Lord, will turn away all wrath and indignation from you, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against you.

Now, I speak unto you concerning your families — if men will smite you, or your families, once, and ye bear it patiently and revile not against them, neither seek revenge, ye shall be rewarded; but if ye bear it not patiently, it shall be accounted unto you as being meted out as a just measure unto you. If your enemy shall smite you the second time, and ye bear it patiently, your reward shall be an hundredfold; and if your enemy smite you the third time, and ye bear it patiently, your reward shall be doubled unto you four-fold. After these three testimonies, if your enemy repents not, he shall be brought into judgement before me, that he come no more upon you, nor upon your families, unto the third and fourth generation. But if your enemy cometh after this, behold, he is delivered into your hands; do that which you will with him, and you will be justified; nevertheless, if thou wilt spare him, thou shalt be rewarded for your righteousness, and also thy children's children unto their third and fourth generation.

Behold, this is the law of vengeance which was given to my servant Nephi, and thy fathers Joseph, Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham; and to all mine ancient prophets and apostles. And, behold, I also gave them this law of battle: that they shall not go out unto battle against any nation, kindred, tongue or people, save I, the Lord, command them; and if anyone proclaim war against them, they should first lift a standard of peace; and if the enemy does not accept the offer of peace the second and third time, they should bring their testimonies before the Lord. Then, I, the Lord, would justify them and would fight their battle, and their children's battles, and their children's children's battles unto their third and fourth generations.

Now, verily, I say unto you, if your enemy has come upon you the first time, and he repents and comes unto you praying for forgiveness, you shall forgive him in sincerity of your heart. And ye shall forgive him the second, and third time, as often as your enemy repenteth and asketh your forgiveness, even until seventy times seven. And if he trespass against you and repent not the first time, nevertheless you shall forgive him; and if he trespasses the second and the third time, and repents not, thou shalt yet forgive him. But, if he trespasses against you the fourth time, and repents not, you shall not forgive him, but shall bring these testimonies before the Lord; and their sins, iniquities, transgressions and wicked works will not be blotted out, until he repents and forsakes, and makes a restitution unto you four-fold in all things in which he has trespassed against you. And if your enemy does this, you shall forgive him in sincerity of your heart; but, if he does not, I, the Lord, will avenge you of your enemies an hundred-fold; and a curse shall be upon his children, and upon his children's children that hate me, unto the third and fourth generation.

But, afterwards, if their children repent and forsake the evil ways of their fathers, and turn to the Lord their God, with all their heart, might, mind, and strength, and make acceptable sacrifice unto the Lord, the vengeance shall no more come upon them, saith the Lord your God; and their trespasses and wicked works shall never be brought against them before the Lord. Even so. Amen.

(October 12, 1833; Perrysburg, New York)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants Sidney (Rigdon) and Joseph (Smith, Jr.): Your families are well, and they are under my watchful eyes during your absence. Behold, and lo, I have much people in this place and in regions round about; therefore, an effectual door shall be opened in the regions round about this eastern land. Therefore, I, the Lord, have suffered you to come unto this place; for it is expedient in me for the salvation of souls. Lift up your voices, and declare the glad tidings, even the gospel of Jesus Christ, unto these people, and you shall not be confounded before men, for it shall be given unto you in the very hour, yea, in the very moment, what ye shall say. Declare all that ye may in my name, in solemnity of heart, in the spirit of meekness, and I, the Lord, give you this promise, that the Holy Ghost shall be shed forth to bear you up, to uphold whatsoever ye may say.

Now, it is expedient in me that you, my servant Sidney (Rigdon), should be a spokesman unto this people; yea, I will ordain you unto this calling, even to be spokesman unto my servant Joseph (Smith, Jr.,). And I will give unto him power to be mighty in testimony, and I will give unto thee power to be mighty in expounding all scriptures, that thou mayest be a spokesman unto him, and he be a revelator unto thee; that thou mayest know with certainty of all things of my kingdom on earth.

Therefore, continue your journey, and let your hearts rejoice; for behold, and lo, I am with you even unto the end. And Zion shall be redeemed, although she is chastened for a little season. My servants Orson Hyde and John Gould are also under my watchful eyes, and inasmuch as they keep my commandments, they shall be saved. Let your hearts be comforted, for all things shall work together for the good of those who walk uprightly, and for the sanctification of the church. For I will raise up unto myself a pure people, that will serve me unto the end in righteousness; and all that call upon the name of the Lord, and keep his commandments, shall be saved. Amen.

(December 16, 1833; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily I say unto you, concerning your brethren who have been afflicted and persecuted, and cast out from the land of their inheritance — I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, in consequence of their transgressions. Yet, I will not forsake them altogether, and they shall be mine in that day when they shall repent of their transgressions in sincerity of their hearts and call upon my name in a prayer of faith. Therefore, they must needs be chastened and tried, even as Abraham, who was commanded to offer up his son Isaac. For all those who will not endure chastening, but deny me, cannot be sanctified.

Behold, there were jarrings, contentions, envying, strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them, by the which they polluted their inheritances; and fell in their own snares and the snares of the adversary, and died in the Spirit. For, behold, what good is a man unto the kingdom of Christ who hath no Spirit, or who is in bondage of the consequence of sins, and he repents and forsakes them not. Yea, they were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God, therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers in the day of their trouble.

Notwithstanding their sins, verily, I say unto you, my bowels are filled with compassion towards them, and in the day of my wrath I will remember to extend mercy. I have sworn, and the decree hath gone forth by my former commandment, that I would let fall the sword of indignation in behalf of my people; and even as I have spoken, it shall come to pass. Mine indignation is soon to be poured out in great measure upon all nations, and this I will do when the cup of their iniquity is full. And in that day all who are found upon the watch-tower, even all mine Israel, shall be saved. And those who have been scattered shall be gathered; those who have mourned shall be comforted; and those who have given their lives in obedience to my commandments, shall be crowned unto eternal life and immortality.

Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands; be still and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered. The pure in heart shall return, and come to their inheritance, with songs of everlasting joy, to build up the waste places of Zion. Behold, there is no other place appointed than the one which has already been appointed, for the work of gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them. Then, other places shall be appointed unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains or the strength of Zion.

Behold, it is my will, that all those who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together, and stand in holy places, and prepare for the day when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me. And every corruptible thing among men, beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea, upon the face of the earth, shall be consumed. And also the elements shall melt with fervent heat, to be refined, and to become new again; and the earth shall be renewed unto its paradisiacal glory, and be cleansed from all sin. Then each of the three great kingdoms of God, even the kingdoms of glory, shall dwell in peace, safety, and salvation, under the eternal umbrella of the Lord of Hosts, even the Savior and Messiah of the world, for a thousand years.

And in that millennial day the enmity between man and woman, between the left and the right arms of the throne of God, between the lion and the lamb, between the parent and the child, shall cease from the face of the earth. And each of the three great kingdoms of the world, even the kingdoms of the Orient, the Europe, and the Americas, shall be divided in the world, and united in the Christ, forever and ever. And in that whatsoever any man shall ask, it shall be given unto him; and Satan shall not have power to tempt any man; and there shall be no sorrow, because there is no death; and in that day every infant born shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, yea, even as a giant tree of the forest. And when he dies, he shall not sleep in the earth, but shall be changed in a twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious.

Yea, verily I say unto you, in the day when the Lord shall come, he shall reveal all things, the things that are hidden and sacred; and no man on the earth knoweth nor have ever heard of them; things most precious, things that are above, and beneath, and on the earth, and in heavens above. And all those who suffer persecution for my sake, and endure to the end in faith and prayer, and are called to lay down their lives in obedience to my commandments, shall partake of all this glory. Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in the world your joy is not full, but out of the world, your joy shall be made full, and the fulness thereof of everything in the heavens above or upon the earth.

Therefore, give not much thought to the body nor the life of the body; but care for your soul, and the life of the soul, and preserve it as the most cherished possession, that ye may have eternal life. Behold, when men are called unto mine everlasting gospel and everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth and savor of men; therefore, if the salt lose its savor, it is good for nothing, only to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men.

Behold, here is wisdom concerning the children of Zion: He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that abaseth himself shall be exalted. And now I will show unto you a parable, likened to my will concerning the redemption of Zion — A certain nobleman had a choice piece of land, and he said unto his servants: Go ye unto my vineyard, and plant twelve olive trees of the best garden variety; and set watchmen round about, and build a high watch-tower to guard my vineyard; that my olive trees be preserved and not stolen or hewed down or trampled upon, or the fruit of which be carried off as spoil by the enemy. Now the servants of the nobleman did as their master commanded them, and planted the choicest of the olive trees in the choicest of lands, and built a hedge round about and set watchmen to guard the vineyard. But when they were yet laying the foundation of the tower, they began to reason among themselves, saying: What need hath the lord for this tower; behold, we do have the hedge around the garden and watchmen are set to guard it, and this is a time of peace. Might not this money be given to the exchangers? Why not put the money for a better use than wasting it on building a watch-tower? And while they were at variance one with another, they became very slothful, and hearkened not to the commandments of their lord. And the enemy came by night and broke down the hedge, and the watchmen and servants fled in fright; and the enemy trampled upon the olive trees.

Now, behold, the lord of the vineyard called upon his servants, and said: Why! What is the cause of this great evil? Ought ye not to have done that which was commanded you, that after ye had planted the garden and built a hedge around it, and set watchmen upon the walls thereof, to build a tower and set a watchman upon the high tower; that he may be able to see far ahead, to warn and prepare you against the destroyer?

And the lord of the vineyard said unto one of his faithful and wise stewards: Go and gather the remainder of my servants, and take all the strength of mine house, all my warriors, and all my young and middle-aged servants, except those I have appointed to tarry, and go ye straightway unto the land of my vineyard, and redeem my orchard; for it is mine; I have bought it with money. Go ye and break down the walls of mine enemies, throw down the tower, and scatter their watchmen. And inasmuch as they come to battle against you, ye may avenge them in my name; that by and by the residue of mine house may be able to possess it. And the servant said: When shall these things be? And he said unto his servant: When I will; go ye straightway, and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And this shall be my seal upon you — a faithful and wise steward in the midst of mine house, a ruler in my kingdom. And his servant went straightway, and did all things whatsoever his lord commanded him; and after many days all things were fulfilled, and the lord of the vineyard planted his remnant, and began anew.

Now, verily, I will show unto you a wisdom concerning all the churches, inasmuch as they are willing to be guided by my light and truth, unto their salvation — that the work of the gathering of my saints may continue; that my church be built up upon holy places, for the harvest time is nigh at hand; and all that which hath been spoken and written by my prophets and apostles be fulfilled. Therefore, I must gather my people according to the parable of the wheat and the tares; that the wheat may be secured in the garners to possess eternal life and be crowned in the celestial glory of the kingdom of my Father, and rewarded every man according to his works; while the tares may be gathered to be bound in bundles, and their bands made strong, that they may be burned with unquenchable fire, in the place which hath been prepared for them from the foundation of the first generations.

Nevertheless, again I say unto you, let not your gathering be in haste nor by flight, but let all things be prepared before you. And in order that all things be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given unto you, and abide in all the covenants which you have promised to obey; that your souls may be preserved, and you not become guilty in my sight; that you may not be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan; and that ye may escape the suffocating yoke of the adversary, even all the forces of darkness.

Therefore, it is now expedient in me that ye purchase all the lands with money, in the region round about which is appointed to be in the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints. All the land which can be purchased in Jackson County and counties round about; let all the churches gather together their sources to acquire this, but, again, not in haste, lest chaos and destruction ensue; but with patience and diligence do all things. And let honorable and wise men, who are not covetous, lustful or envious, be appointed to go and purchase their lands. The churches in the eastern countries, when they are built up, and if they hearken to this counsel, may also buy lands, and gather together to establish Zion.

There is now already in store sufficient, yea, even an abundance to redeem Zion and re-establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down; if only the churches who call themselves after my name, hearken to my word. And, again I say unto you, those who have been scattered in various lands upon the face of the earth, must continue to plead for their cause and redemption in their native lands and be subject unto those who have been placed over them as rulers and guardians, until your case is brought before me.

To each nation upon the earth I have given a law and commandment; and have appointed rulers to govern all flesh in righteousness, according to just and holy principles, that every man in each of the three kingdoms of glories, may act according to the moral agency which I have granted unto him; that every man may be accountable for his own actions in the day of judgement. Therefore, it is not meet that any man should remain in bondage of another man.

And it is for this reason that I have established the Constitution of this land (the United States of America), by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. Now, I will liken the children of Zion unto the parable of the woman and the unjust judge, for saints ought always to pray and not faint, and persevere, and die if they must, for the cause of Zion. For, behold, if they die in faith for my name's sake in the world, they shall be lifted up in a twinkling of an eye unto eternal life and immortality.

Now, there was a judge in a city who neither feared God, nor regarded man; and there was a widow in the selfsame city, who went to him, and said: Avenge me of mine enemy. And he would not hearken to her at first, but afterward he said unto himself: though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual visits she weary me. Thus will I liken the children of Zion. Let them bring all their temporal and secular matters at the feet of the judge; and if he heed them not, let them plead their cause at the feet of the governor; and if he also heed them not, let them importune at the feet of the president of the land. And if the president heed them not, then will the Lord rise and come forth out of his hiding place, and in his fury shall vex that nation; and in his hot displeasure and fierce anger, in his own due time and season, he will cut off the wicked, the unfaithful, the unjust stewards, and appoint them their portion among the hypocrites and unbelievers, even in the outer darkness, where there is weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.

Behold, verily, I say unto you, that it is contrary to my commandments and my will that my servant Sidney Gilbert should sell the storehouse of my people unto the hands of mine enemies. Let not that which I have appointed be polluted by such an indiscriminate action, by the consent of those who call themselves after my name. For this is a very sore and grievous sin against me, the Lord your God, and a trespass against the trust of my people. Therefore, let the people claim and hold claim upon that which I have appointed unto them; although they should not be permitted to dwell there, lest they bring forth fruit and works meet for my kingdom; that the faithful may build, and not another inherit it, that they may plant, and eat the fruit thereof, and not another eat it. Thus have I spoken it. Amen.

(February 17, 1834; Kirtland, Ohio)
(Revised, 1835)

These are the minutes of the meeting of the high priests, the organization of the first high council of the church, at Kirtland, Ohio; recorded by elders Oliver Cowdery and Orson Hyde:

This day a general council of twenty-four high priests assembled at the house of Joseph Smith, Jr., by revelation, and proceeded to organize the high council of the church of Christ; which was to consist of twelve high priests, and one or three presidents as the case may require. The high council was appointed by revelation for the purpose of settling important difficulties which might arise in the church, which could not be settled by the church or the bishop's council, to the satisfaction of the parties.

Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams were acknowledged presidents by the voice of the council; and Joseph Smith, Sr., John Smith, Joseph Coe, John Johnson, Martin Harris, John S. Carter, Jared Carter, Oliver Cowdery, Samuel H. Smith, Orson Hyde, Sylvester Smith, and Luke Johnson, high priests, were chosen to be standing council for the church, by a unanimous voice of the council. The above-named councilors were then asked whether they accepted their appointments, and whether they would act in that office according to the law of heaven, even the law of God, to which they all answered that they accepted their appointment, and would fill their offices according to the grace of God bestowed upon them.

The number composing the council, who voted in behalf of the church, in appointing the above-named councilors, were forty-three: nine high priests, seventeen elders, four (Aaronic) priests, and thirteen members. It was voted that the high council cannot have power to act without seven of the above-named councilors, or their appointed successors being present. These seven shall have power to appoint other high priests, whom they may consider worthy and capable to act in place of the absent councilors. Voted also that whenever any vacancy shall occur by the death or removal from office for transgression, of any of the above-named councilors, it shall be filled by the nomination of the president or presidents, and sanctioned by the voice of the general council of high priests, convened for that purpose, to act in behalf of the church.

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged by the voice of the church. And it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed. And in case of the absence of one or both of those who are appointed to assist him, he has power to preside over the council without a counselor; and in case he himself is absent, the other two presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them.

Whenever a high council of the church of Christ is officially organized, it shall be the duty of the twelve councilors to cast lots by numbers, and ascertain who of the twelve shall speak first, beginning with number one and so on in succession to number twelve. And, whenever this council convenes to act upon any matter at hand, the twelve councilors shall consider whether it is a difficult one or not; if it is not, two only of the councilors shall speak upon it; but if it is thought to be a difficult matter, four shall be appointed; but in no case shall more than six be appointed to speak.

If an accusation is brought forth against a person, the accused, in all cases, has a right to one-half of the council, to prevent insult or injustice. And the councilors appointed to speak before the council are to present the case, after the evidence is examined in its true light, before the council; and every man is to speak in sincerity of his heart, according to equity and justice. Those councilors who draw even numbers, that is, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, and 12, are the individuals who are to stand up in behalf of the accused, and prevent insult and injustice. In all cases the accuser and the accused shall have the privilege of speaking for themselves before the council, after the evidences are heard, and the councilors who have been appointed to speak on the case have finished their remarks. After the evidences are heard, the councilors, accuser and accused have spoken, the president shall give a decision, according to his understanding of the case, and call upon the twelve councilors to sanction the same by their vote. But should the remaining councilors, who have not spoken, or any one of them, after hearing the evidences and pleadings impartially, discover an error in the decision of the president, they can manifest it, and the case shall have a rehearing. And if, after a careful re-hearing, any additional light is shed upon the case, the decision may be altered accordingly. But in case no additional light is shed, the first decision remains confirmed, and the majority of the council having power to determine the same.

In case of difficulty in the interpretation of doctrine or principle, the president may inquire of the Lord his mind on the matter under consideration. The high priests, when abroad, have the power to call and organize a council after the manner of the foregoing, to settle difficulties, when the circumstances require them to do so. And the said council of high priests shall have power to appoint one of their own number to preside over such council for the time being. It shall be the duty of the said council to transmit, immediately, the records of their proceedings, with a full statement of the testimony accompanying their decision, to the high council of the seat of the First Presidency of the church. Should the parties or either one of them be dissatisfied with the decision of the said council, they may appeal to the high council of the seat of the First Presidency of the church; and have a re-hearing, according to the former pattern, as though no such decision had been rendered.

The council of high priests abroad is to be called only on the most difficult cases of church matters; and the traveling or stationed high priests abroad have power to determine whether it is necessary to call such a council or not. There is a distinction between the high council (or traveling high priests) abroad, and the traveling high council composed of the twelve apostles, for the decision of the former can be appealed, and the decision of the latter cannot. The latter can only be called by the general authorities of the church, in case of transgression.

Resolved: that the president or presidents of the seat of the First Presidency of the church shall have power to determine whether any such case, as may be appealed, is justly entitled to a re-hearing, after examining the appeal and the evidences and statements accompanying it. The twelve councilors then proceeded to cast lots or ballots, to ascertain who should speak first, and the order in which they spoke was as follows: 1, Oliver Cowdery; 2, Joseph Coe; 3, Samuel H. Smith; 4, Luke Johnson; 5, John S. Carter; 6, Sylvester Smith; 7, John Johnson; 8, Orson Hyde; 9, Jared Carter; 10, Joseph Smith, Sr.; 11, John Smith; 12, Martin Harris. After the closing prayer, the conference was adjourned.

SECTION 98
(February 24, 1834; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily I say unto you, I will give you a revelation and commandment, that you may know how to act in the discharge of your duties, concerning the redemption and salvation of your brethren; who have been scattered on the land of Zion, being smitten and driven by the hands of mine enemies; on whom I will pour out my wrath without measure, in mine own time; for I have suffered them that they might fill up the measure of their iniquities, that their cup might be full; that those who call themselves after my name might be chastened for a season with sore and grievous chastisement; because they hearkened not altogether unto the commandments which I gave unto them, and nor did they abide in the covenants which they made with me.

But, verily, I have decreed a decree that, inasmuch as they hearken to obey my commandments from this very hour, and forsake their evil ways altogether, I, the Lord their God, shall be merciful unto them; and give unto them power over mine enemies, that they shall not prevail against them; until all the kingdoms of the world are subdued under my feet, and the earth is given unto the saints, to possess it forever and ever.

Now, my saints were set to be a light of truth unto the world, and to be the saviors of men; and inasmuch as they are not the saviors of men, they are as salt which has lost its savor, and is therefore good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under men's feet. Behold, verily, I say unto you, that your brethren who have been scattered shall return to the lands of their inheritances, and build up the master places of Zion; and, for after much tribulation cometh the blessing, I have promised your brethren this blessing after their tribulations — the redemption and salvation of my saints, even their restoration to the land of Zion, no more to be thrown down.

Nevertheless, if they pollute their inheritances, they shall be thrown down, for I will not spare them if they pollute their inheritances. Behold, I say unto you, the redemption of Zion must needs come by power. Therefore, I will raise up unto my people Israel a man in the fulness of time, who shall lead the children of Israel as did Moses, and redeem them once again unto the dawning of the millenial day. For ye are the children of Israel, and the seed of Abraham, ye must needs be led out of bondage from the Babylon of this generation by mighty power and a stretched-out arm; even as your fathers were from the land of Egypt. Therefore, let not your hearts faint, for I say not unto you as I said unto your fathers, that mine angel shall go before you, but not my presence; but I say unto you, that mine angels shall go before you, and my presence also; and when my people are gathered unto me once again, I shall be in the midst of them for a thousand years; and this is the unalterable decree of the Father and the Son. And in time ye shall possess the goodly land, the land which is choice above all other lands on the face of the earth, even the great kingdom of the Americas (including United States, Canada and South America, and the islands round about).

Now, behold, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., is likened unto the servant in the parable I gave you, of the lord of the vineyard, who spoke unto one of his servants, saying: Go and gather together the residue of my servants, and take all the strength of mine house, which are my warriors, my young, and my middle-aged, among all my servants, save those whom I have appointed to tarry; and go ye straightway unto the land of my vineyard, and redeem it; for it is mine, and I have bought it with money. Therefore, go ye straightway, and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And this shall be my seal and blessing upon you — a faithful and wise steward in the midst of mine house, a ruler in my kingdom. Therefore, let my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., say unto the strength of my house — Gather yourselves together unto the land of Zion, upon the land which I have bought with money that has been consecrated unto me. And let all the churches send up wise men with their resources, and purchase lands, even as I have commanded them. And inasmuch as mine enemies come against you to drive you from my goodly land, even the land of Zion, and from your own lands, they shall be cursed; and whomsoever ye shall curse, I will curse them also, and justify you; yea, unto the third and fourth generation of those who hate me shall be avenged.

Therefore, let no man be afraid to lay down his life for my sake; for whoso layeth down his life for my sake shall find it again; and whoso is not willing to lay down his life for my sake is not my disciple. Now, it is my will that my servant Sidney Rigdon lift up his voice in the congregations in the eastern countries, and prepare the churches to keep my commandments, and to bring to pass the redemption and restoration of Zion. It is also my will that my servants Parley P. Pratt and Lyman Wight not return to the land of their brethren, until they have gathered up companies by tens, by twenties, by fifties, or by an hundred, until they have gathered up five hundred of the strength of my house. And if you cannot obtain five hundred, seek diligently to gather up three hundred, or two hundred, or one hundred. But in no case ye shall go up unto the land of Zion with a company of less than a hundred of the strength of my house. Behold, this is my will on this matter.

Ask and ye shall receive; pray earnestly that peradventure my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., may go with you and preside in the midst of my people, and organize my kingdom on the consecrated land; for all victory and glory is brought to pass unto you through your diligence, prayers of faith, and obedience to my commandments. And establish the children of Zion upon the laws and commandments which have been and shall be given unto you. Now, let these servants of mine journey together: Parley P. Pratt and Joseph Smith., Jr.; Lyman Wight and Sidney Rigdon; Hyrum Smith and Frederick G. Williams; and Orson Hyde and Orson Pratt; whithersoever my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., shall counsel them, in fulfillment of all which has been commanded unto them, and leave the residue in my hands. Even so. Amen.

(April 23, 1834; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, I give unto you a counsel and a commandment, concerning all the properties which belong to the Order which I commanded to be organized and established, to be a united order for the benefit of my church, and for the salvation of men — with a promise immutable and unchangeable, that whoso is found to be faithful, shall be blessed with a multiplicity of blessings. But whoso is unfaithful, shall be cursed, and the blessings of heaven shall be withheld from that person. It is for this cause that some of my servants, who have not kept the commandments altogether, but have broken their covenants through envy, covetousness, and lusts of their hearts, are cursed unto sore afflictions. For, I, the Lord, have decreed, that inasmuch as any person belonging to the order be found a transgressor, or, in other words, breaks the covenant with which ye are bound, that person shall be cursed unto the buffetings of Satan, and to be trodden down by whom I will; for I, the Lord, am not to be mocked in these things. And all this that the innocent among you may not be condemned with the unjust, and the guilty among you may not escape; because I, the Lord, have promised unto you a crown of glory at my right hand. Therefore, inasmuch as ye are found transgressors, ye cannot escape my wrath, until the day of judgement. And inasmuch as ye are cut off for transgression, ye cannot escape the buffetings of Satan, until the day of redemption.

And now I give unto you power from this very hour to act upon the commandment, that if any man among you of the Order is found a transgressor and repenteth not of the evil, ye shall deliver him over unto the buffetings of Satan, without exception; lest he bring the whole church under condemnation, and that he shall not have power to bring a greater evil upon you. Therefore, ye shall organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship; that every man may give unto me the account of his stewardship which is appointed unto him. For it is expedient in me that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as a steward over earthly blessings, which I have designed and prepared for my creatures; for I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens to build the earth, my handiwork, and all things therein are mine. Yea, for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare, I prepared all things, and gave the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man taketh of my abundance, and imparts not a portion to the poor and the needy, according to my commandments, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, in torment and misery.

Behold, it is my purpose to eternally provide for my saints. But it must needs be done in mine own way, according to the order which prevaileth in the kingdom; and behold, this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints — that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low.

Now, verily I say unto you, concerning the matter of the properties of the Order: Let my servant Sidney Rigdon have appointed unto him the place where he now resides, and the lot of the tannery for his stewardship and support, while he is laboring in my vineyard. And let all things be done according to the counsel of the Order, and united consent or voice of the Order, in Kirtland (Ohio). And this stewardship and blessing, I, the Lord, confer upon my servant Sidney Rigdon and his seed after him, according to their faithfulness.

And inasmuch as all those who are blessed with the stewardship and remain faithful, I will multiply blessings upon them and their seed after them. Now, let my servant Martin Harris have appointed unto him, for his stewardship, the lot of the land which my servant John Johnson obtained in exchange for his former inheritance; and my servant Martin Harris consecrate his moneys in the cause of proclaiming my gospel, as directed by my servant Joseph Smith, Jr.; let my servant Frederick G. Williams be appointed the place in which he now dwells.

And let my servant Oliver Cowdery be given for his stewardship the lot which is set off joining lot number one where the printing office is to be built; and also the lot upon which his father resides. And let my servants Frederick G. Williams and Oliver Cowdery be given the printing office, and all things pertaining to it. Now, these are the stewardships appointed unto them and for their seed after them, according to their faithfulness.

Let my servant John Johnson have the house in which he now lives, all except the ground which has been reserved for the building of my houses, and the lots which have been appointed for my servant Oliver Cowdery. And let my servant Newel K. Whitney have appointed unto him the houses and lot where he now resides, the lot and building on which the mercantile establishment stands, the lot which is on the corner south of the mercantile establishment, and also the lot on which the ashery is situated. All this I have appointed unto my servant Newel K. Whitney for his stewardship, for a blessing upon him and his seed after him, for the benefit of the mercantile establishment of my Order which I have established for my stake in Kirtland. And let my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., have appointed unto him the lot which is laid off for the building of my house, which is forty rods long and twelve rods wide, and also the inheritance upon which his father now resides. Behold, these are the beginning of the stewardships and my blessings which I have appointed unto my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and mine other servants, his brethren. And inasmuch as they remain faithful, I will multiply a multiplicity of blessings upon each one of them.

And now, a commandment I give unto you concerning Zion, that beginning this hour you, in Kirtland, shall no longer be bound as a united order to your brethren of Zion. But after you are organized, you shall be called the United Order of the Stake of Zion, the City of Kirtland. And your brethren, after they are organized, shall be called the United Order of the City of Zion. Each shall be organized in their own names, and in their own name, and do their business in their own name, and in their own names; and you shall do your business in your own name, and in your own names. And this I have commanded for your and their salvation, in consequence of their being driven out, and that which is yet to come.

Behold, you have broken my commandments and disregarded the covenants, which you didst make with me; and transgressed the moral law through covetousness, envy, anger, strife and feigned words. Therefore, you are dissolved as a united order with your brethren. And again, hearken diligently to the counsel which I have given you concerning your stewardships which have been appointed unto you. Behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites; and if the properties are mine, then ye are stewards, otherwise ye cannot be my stewards.

Now, for this purpose I have commanded you to organize yourselves, to publish (print) my words, the revelations which I have given unto you, even the fulness thereof; and the revelations which I shall, hereafter, give unto you; that my church and the kingdom on the earth be built up, and to prepare my people for the time when I shall dwell in the midst of them, for a thousand years.

Behold, now, I, the Lord, give unto you this commandment, that ye shall prepare for yourselves a place for a treasury, and consecrate it unto my name. And ye shall appoint one among you to keep the treasury, and he shall be ordained unto this blessing. There shall be a seal upon the treasury, and sacred things shall be delivered into it, to be kept and accounted for; and no man amongst you shall call it, or any part of it, his own; for it shall belong to you all with one accord. And the avails of the sacred things, even the sacred writings to be printed, shall be had in the treasury, with a seal upon it; and the seal shall not be broken or taken out by any one, nor shall it be loosened; only by the voice of the Order, or by a commandment shall the seal upon the treasury be broken or replaced. And thus shall ye preserve the avails of the sacred things in the treasury, for sacred and holy purposes. And this shall be called the sacred treasury of the Lord, with a seal upon it, to keep it holy and consecrated unto the Lord.

And there shall be another treasury prepared, a treasury appointed to keep the treasury, and a seal shall be placed upon it. And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses, in lands, or in cattle, or in all things, save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself, for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury. Therefore, if any man among you obtain five dollars, or ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him cast it into the treasury. And let no one amongst you say that it is his own; for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it. And there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, except by the voice of the common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice of the common consent of the order — that any man among you say to the treasurer: I have need of this to help me in my stewardship — If it be five dollars, or ten, or twenty, or fifty, or a hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires; until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the Order plainly that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward. But so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer that the treasurer shall not withhold. But in case of transgression, the treasurer shall be subject unto the council and voice of the order. And in case the treasurer is found an unfaithful and unwise steward, he shall be subject to the council and the voice of the order; and shall be removed from his office, and another shall be appointed in his stead.

Now, concerning your debts, behold, it is my will that you should pay all your debts. And it is my will that you should humble yourselves before me, and obtain this blessing by your diligence, humility, and prayer of faith. And inasmuch as you are diligent and humble, and exercise the prayer of faith, behold, I will soften the hearts of those to whom you are in debt, until I shall send means unto you for your deliverance. And inasmuch as ye are humble and faithful and call upon my name, behold, I will give you victory, that you may be delivered out of your bondage; and inasmuch as you obtain a chance to loan money by hundreds, or thousands, even until you loan enough to deliver yourself from bondage, it is your privilege.

Therefore, write speedily to New York, according to that which shall be given you by my Spirit; and I will soften the hearts of those to whom you are in debt, that it shall be taken away out of their minds to bring affliction upon you. And pledge the properties which I have put into your hands, by giving your names by common consent or otherwise, as seemeth good unto you. I give you this privilege, this once; and behold, if you proceed to do the things which I have laid before you, according to my commandments, you shall be delivered. Remember, all these things are mine, and ye are my stewards, and the master will not suffer his house to be broken up. Even so. Amen.

(June 22, 1834; Fishing River, Missouri)

Verily, I say unto you who have assembled yourselves together that you may learn my will concerning the redemption of mine afflicted people. Behold, were it not for their transgressions, speaking collectively, not individually, they might have been redeemed even now. But, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil; and do not impart of their substance to the poor and the needy among them; nor are they united in the Spirit, according to the law of the celestial kingdom.

Behold, and lo, Zion cannot be built up, nor can I receive her unto myself, until my people abide in the law of the celestial kingdom. Therefore, it must needs be that they must be chastened until they learn to be obedient. I speak not concerning those who have been appointed to lead my people, even the first elders of my church, for they are not all under this condemnation; but I speak concerning my church outside Zion. There are many who say: Where is their God? Behold, he will deliver them in time of trouble; and if he doth not, behold, we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys.

Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a season for the redemption of Zion; that they themselves may be prepared, and my people be taught more perfectly; and be given knowledge and experience more perfectly concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands. And this cannot be brought to pass until my elders are endowed with power from on high. For behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them; inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me. It is for this cause, I say unto you, that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion. Behold, I do not require at your hands to fight my battles, for, as I have decreed in my former commandment, I will fight your battles, and avenge mine enemies.

Behold, the destroyer I have sent forth to destroy and lay waste mine enemies; and as soon as their iniquities become fully ripe, they shall not be left there to pollute mine heritage, and to blaspheme my name upon the land which I have consecrated for the gathering of my saints. And I have commanded my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., to say unto the strength of mine house, even my warriors, my young men, and my middle-aged, to gather together in the cause of establishing and bringing forth the cause of Zion, to bring to pass the redemption of my people, and to throw down the towers of mine enemies and scatter their watchmen; but, lo, the strength of mine house have not hearkened to my words.

But, inasmuch as those have hearkened unto my words, I have prepared a blessing and an endowment for them, if they continue faithful. And I have heard their prayers and accepted their offerings; it is therefore expedient in me that they should be brought forth for a trial of their faith; and as many as have already come up hither, be allowed to stay in the region round about. And let all people who dwell therein be faithful, prayerful and humble before me; and reveal not the things of God unto men, until they are told to do so.

Talk not of judgement, neither boast of your faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together as many as are in the region, according to the sentiments of the people; and, behold, I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, if you humbly and in sincerity of your hearts say unto them: Execute judgement and justice for us according to the law, and redress us of our wrong; and, verily, I say unto you, in this way you may find favor in the eyes of the people, until the army of Israel becomes very great. Yea, I will soften the hearts of the people, as I did the heart of Pharaoh in the land of Egypt, from time to time; until my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and mine elders and high priests shall have time to gather up the strength of my house.

And they shall send wise and just stewards to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchase of all the lands in Jackson County (Missouri), that can be purchased, and in the regions round about. For it is my will that these lands be purchased, that my saints might possess them according to the laws of consecrations, which I have given them. And after these lands are purchased, I will hold the armies of Israel guiltless in taking possession of their own lands, which they had previously purchased with their own moneys; and in throwing down the towers of mine enemies, and scattering their watchmen, and avenging them unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me.

But, first let my army become very great, and be sanctified before me; that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon; that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; and that the kingdoms of this world may acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ. Therefore, be diligent in keeping my commandments, and abide in the covenants that you made with me.

Verily, I say unto you, it is expedient in me that the first elders of my church should receive their endowment from on high in my house, which I have commanded to be built unto my name, in the land of Kirtland. And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and law be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption. There has been a day of calling, but the time has come for the choosing; therefore, let the worthy ones be chosen, according to the manifestation by the Spirit. And inasmuch as they continue in faith and diligence, they shall be given power to accomplish all things in Zion.

And again I say unto you, sue for peace, not only to the people who have smitten you, but also to all people; and lift a banner of peace, and proclaim peace unto the ends of the earth. Make proposals for peace according to the Spirit within you, and all things shall work for your good. Therefore, be faithful; behold, and lo, I am with you unto the end. Even so. Amen.

(November 25, 1834; Kirtland, Ohio)

It is my will that my servant Warren A. Cowdery (older brother of Oliver Cowdery) be appointed and ordained a presiding high priest over my church, in the land of Freedom (the city of Freedom, New York, and the region round about); and should preach mine everlasting gospel, lift up his voice and warn the people; and devote his whole time to this high and holy calling, seeking diligently the kingdom of heaven, and obeying its laws; and all things necessary shall be added thereunto; for the laborer is worthy of his hire.

And again, verily I say unto you, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and it shall overtake the world as a thief, in that great and dreadful day. Therefore, gird up your loins, abide forever in light and truth, that ye may not be overtaken in that day.

Now, behold, concerning my servant Warren (A. Cowdery), there was joy in heaven when he bowed to my scepter, and separated himself from the crafty men of the world. Therefore, he shall be blessed, and I will have mercy upon him; notwithstanding the vanity of his heart, I will lift him up, inasmuch as he will remain humble before me. And I will give him grace and assurance as to his standing. If he continues to be a faithful witness and a light unto the church, I have prepared a crown for him in the mansions of my Father. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 102
(March 28, 1835; Kirtland, Ohio)
[a compilation of earlier revelations]

There are, in the church, two priesthoods, namely: the Melchizedek and Aaronic (including the Levitical). Why is the first called the Melchizedek Priesthood? Because Melchizedek (Malek Us-Sadek) or Shem, son of Noah, was such a great high priest, known in his generation as the prince of peace, truth and righteousness. Before his day, it was called the Holy Order of Enoch; and before that it was known as the Holy Order of Adam, the first high priest taken from among the men, and made high priest of the Priesthood of the Order of the Son of God. This selfsame priesthood is without beginning of days or end of years. Therefore, it suffices to know that out of reverence and respect for the ineffable name of the Supreme Being, and to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, the church in ancient days referred to it by various names; such as the Holy Order of Adam, of Enoch, or of Melchizedek. And from the time of the death of Melchizedek (in 1868 B.C.), unto this day, it is known as the Holy Order after Melchizedek or Melchizedek Priesthood. All other offices in the church are appendages to this priesthood.

There are two grand heads or divisions of the holy priesthood of God — one being the Melchizedek, and the other the Aaronic (or Levitical) Priesthood; one being the Spiritual, and the other the political arm of the eternal throne of God; one being guided by the Holy Spirits and truths and lights of the Sun, the other by wisdom of the world and truths and lights of the Moon; one chooses to abide in the celestial law of the heavens, the law of piety and virtue, even the law of Christ, and the other abides in the terrestrial law of the earth, the law of passion and desire, even the law of the land; one is pure in heart, worthy to dwell in Zion and in the presence of the Father and the Son, as the elect of God and the church of the Firstborn, while the other has snares upon his soul and is not pure in heart, but worthy to dwell in Israel and in the presence of the angels and the spirits of just men made perfect; one sees as they are seen and knows as they are known, for they are the Sons (Suns), illuminated beings, who have inherited their bodies and assignments in the kingdom of God, according to their works and capacities; for these did not abide in their first estate, but fell in the snares which were calculated to strengthen and perfect them; therefore, they remain in their saved condition, forever and ever, and they shine in the darkness and reflect the light of the Sun; yea, the Melchizedek Priesthood belongs to the righteous, virtuous, pious, and the pure in heart, who abide in the law of the celestial kingdom, even the law of Christ; and the Aaronic Priesthood also belongs to those who transgressed the law of the celestial kingdom, therefore are given unto the buffetings of Satan, to remain in their saved condition, until the day of their judgement, and resurrection, unto the resurrection of the just or the unjust.

The office of an elder comes under the priesthood of Melchizedek. And this priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all offices in the church, in all ages at all times; without beginning of days or end of years — fixed, immovable, unchangeable is this Priesthood in its purposes and designs; and it administers in all spiritual matters on the face of the earth. The Presidency of the High Priesthood, after the Order of Melchizedek, has a right to officiate in all the offices of the church. The High Priests are given the right to officiate in their own standing, and under the direction of the presidency, in administering in all spiritual matters, and also in the office of an elder, (Aaronic) priest, teacher, deacon and member. An elder has a right to officiate, when a high priest is not present.

The second priesthood, or the priesthood of Aaron, is called the lesser priesthood, because it is an appendage to the greater, or Melchizedek priesthood. The power and authority of the Aaronic priesthood is to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer outward ordinances, by the letter of the gospel, including baptism by full immersion in water. The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood and holds the keys or authority of the same. The literal descendants of Aaron have a legal right to this office, upon the approval of the First Presidency of the church. But as a high priest of the Melchizedek Priesthood has authority to officiate in all lesser offices, he may be appointed to the office of bishop, when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found, or when he has transgressed the law of the celestial kingdom, or when his interest and capacities justify his appointment to this office, by the approval of the Presidency of the Melchizedek Priesthood.

The power and authority of the Melchizedek Priesthood is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church — to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, to have the heavens opened unto them, to commune with the general assembly of the church of the Firstborn, and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, the Savior and Messiah of the universe.

Now, it is by necessity that the presidents or presiding officers be appointed from among those who are ordained in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchizedek Priesthood three Presiding High Priests, chosen from the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the Presidency of the Church (the First Presidency). The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the Twelve Apostles, or Special Witnesses of the name of Christ in all the world; and they form a quorum, equal in authority and power to the quorum of the Presidency. The Seventy are called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witness unto the Gentiles and also to the Jews, in all the world; and they form a quorum, equal in authority to that of the Twelve Apostles or Special Witnesses. Every decision made by each of these quorums must be by the unanimous voice or vote of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decisions; nevertheless, a majority may form a quorum when circumstances justify it. Unless this is the case, their decisions will not carry the fulness of the blessings, which were bestowed upon the quorum of the three presidents, from the ancient of days, who were ordained after the Order of Melchizedek, and were righteous and holy men.

All decisions of each of these quorums are to be made in righteousness, in holiness and lowliness of heart, in meekness and in humility, in long-suffering and patience, in faith and virtue, knowledge and temperance; in patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity; consistent with the law of the celestial kingdom, even the law of Christ. And it is the promise of the Lord unto them, that all the mysteries of the kingdom of God shall be unfolded unto them, and their days shall be long and joyful. And there shall be no appeal from their decisions, unless any decision of these quorums is made in error or in unrighteousness; then, the matter may be brought before a general assembly of several quorums, which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church.

The Twelve are a Traveling Presiding High Council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Presidency of the Church, agreeable to the institution of heaven; to build up the church, and regulate its affairs in all nations, first unto the Gentiles and secondly unto the Jews. It is the duty of the Twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they are designated unto them by revelation and by the power of the Holy Spirit. It is also the duty of the Twelve, to ordain and set in order all other officers of the church, and to call upon the Seventy for assistance in filling various calls for preaching and administering the gospel.

The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating its affairs in all nations, first unto the Gentiles and then to the Jews.

The standing high councils at the stakes of Zion, form a quorum equal in authority in the affairs of the church, to the quorum of the Presidency or to the traveling high council. And the high council in Zion forms a quorum equal in authority in the affairs of the church, to the councils of the Twelve at the stakes of Zion.

The Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God or the Melchizedek Priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, rightly belonging to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made. The Order was instituted for man in the days of Adam, when he was chosen from among the children of men to be the first high priest of the Order; and came down by lineage in the following manner: From Adam to Seth, who was ordained by Adam at the age of sixty-nine years, and was blessed by him three years prior to Adam's death; and received the promise of God by his father, that his posterity shall be the chosen of the Lord, and that they shall be preserved unto the end of the earth. Seth was a perfected man, and his likeness was the express likeness of his father, insomuch that he seemed to be like unto his father in all things, and could be distinguished from him only by his age.

Enos, son of Seth, was ordained at the age of one hundred and thirty-four years and four months, by the hand of Adam. Kenan (Cainan), son of Seth, was called by God in the wilderness in the fortieth year of his age; and he met Adam while journeying to the place Shedolamak.

He was eighty-seven years old when he received his ordination. Mahalaleel (Mahalalel), son of Kenan, was four hundred and ninety-six years and seven days old when he was ordained by the hand of Adam, and also blessed by him.

Jared, son of Mahalaleel, was two hundred years old when he was ordained under the hand of Adam, and was blessed by him. Enoch, son of Jared, was twenty-five years old when he was ordained under the hand of Adam; and he was sixty-five when Adam blessed him. And Enoch saw and walked with the Lord, and was before his face continually; he walked with God three hundred and sixty-five years, after he was blessed by Adam; and he was translated at the age of four hundred and thirty years old. Methuselah, son of Enoch, was one hundred years old, when he was ordained under the hand of Adam. Lamech, son of Methuselah, was thirty-two years old when he was ordained under the hand of Seth. And Noah, son of Lamech, was ten years old when he was ordained under the hand of Methuselah.

Three years prior to the death of Adam, he called Seth, Enos, Kenan, Mahalalel, Jared, Enoch and Methuselah, who were all high priests, and the residue of his posterity who were righteous, into the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman, and there bestowed upon them his last blessings. And the Lord appeared unto them, and they all arose and blessed Adam, and called him Michael the prince, the Archangel. And the Lord administered comfort unto Adam, and said: I have set thee to be at the head; a multitude of nations shall come of thee, and thou art a prince over them forever. And Adam stood up with great difficulty in the midst of the congregation, notwithstanding he was bowed down with age, being filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophecied that which shall befall his posterity unto the latest generation. These things were recorded in the book of remembrance and generations, which was now kept by Enoch.

Now, verily, I say unto you, that there must needs be presiding officers in the church of Christ, in addition to the Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventy, and the standing high councils at the stakes of Zion. The presiding elders are to preside over those of the office of an elder; the (Aaronic) priests are to preside over the priests; teachers to preside over those who are of the office of teachers; and deacons to preside over the deacons. Wherefore, from deacon to teacher to priest to elder, each office shall have a presiding officer, according to covenants and commandments of the church. Then comes the high priesthood, which is greatest of all. Therefore, it must needs be that one be appointed President of the High Priesthood of the Church, or, in other words, the Presiding High Priest over the High Priesthood of the Church. And from the same come the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church, by the laying on of the hands.

The office of a bishop is not equal unto the President of the High Priesthood; for the office of a bishop administers in all temporal things; and a bishop is the president over the Aaronic priesthood. Nevertheless, when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found, a bishop must be chosen from the High Priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek, to be set apart unto the ministering of temporal things; and also to be a common judge in Israel, to manage the business affairs of the church, and to sit in judgement, with his counselors, upon the transgressors of the church laws, if they are brought to trial before the bishopric. This is the duty of a bishop who is not a literal descendant of Aaron, but has been appointed from among the High Priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek. It shall be the duty of a bishop to be a common judge among the inhabitants of Zion, or in a stake of Zion, or any branch of the church, where he is set apart unto this office; until the borders of Zion are enlarged, and it becomes necessary to have other bishops or judges in Israel. And inasmuch as there are other bishops appointed, they shall act in the same office.

But a literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the presidency of the Aaronic Priesthood, and to the keys of this office, to act as a bishop independently, without his counselors; except in a case where a president of the High Priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek is tried, to sit as a judge in Israel. And inasmuch as there is dissatisfaction and controversy concerning a decision made by the bishop or judges, the matter shall be brought before the Presidency of the High Priesthood. And the Presidency of the council of the High Priesthood shall have power to call other high priests, even the Twelve, to assist as counselors, and together they shall judge the matter, according to the laws of the church. And after their decision, it shall no more be had in remembrance before the Lord; for this is the highest council of the church of God, and a final word upon the controversies in spiritual matters. And there is not any person belonging to the church who is exempt from this council of the church.

Furthermore, inasmuch as a President of the High Priesthood transgresses, he shall be had in remembrance before the common council of the church, assisted by twelve counselors of the High Priesthood. And their decision upon his head shall be an end of controversy concerning him. Thus, none shall escape or be exempted from the justice and the laws of God; that all things be done in order and in solemnity, according to the lights and truths of the gospel of Christ.

And again, verily I say unto you, the duty of a president over the office of a deacon is to preside over twelve deacons, to sit in council with them, and to teach them their duties, edifying one another, according to the covenants and commandments of God. The duty of the president over the office of the teachers is to preside over twenty-four of the teachers and to sit in council, and to teach and edify each other. The duty of the president over the Priesthood of Aaron is to preside over forty-eight priests, and sit in council with them, and to teach them their duties, according to the covenants and commandments of God. The president of this priesthood is to be a bishop. The duty of the president over the office of elders is to preside over ninety-six elders, and sit in council with them, and to fulfill their duties according to the covenants and commandments of the Lord given unto the church. This presidency is distinct from that of the Seventy, and is designed for those who do not travel into all the world. And the duty of the President of the office of the High Priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses; to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet, having all the choice gifts of the Lord bestowed upon the head of the church.

Now, the order of the Seventy should have seven presidents to preside over them, chosen out of the Seventy; and these seven presidents are to choose seventy besides those who belong to the first quorum of the seventy, and are to preside over them; and also they may choose additional seventy, until seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard, of necessity, requires it. And the seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles first and also unto the Jews. Whereas other officers of the church, who neither belong to the Twelve nor to the Seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow them, notwithstanding they may hold high and responsible offices in the church.

Wherefore, let every man learn his duty, and act in the office to which he is appointed in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to hold that office; nor he that transgresses the law of God, for he may bring condemnation and guilt upon the whole church, as a consequence of his disobedience to the commandments and covenants of God. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 103
(April 17, 1835; Kirtland, Ohio)

A declaration of belief concerning governments and laws in general, adopted by unanimous vote at a general assembly of the church at Kirtland.

THAT OUR BELIEF CONCERNING THE EARTHLY GOVERNMENTS AND LAW IN GENERAL MAY NOT BE MISINTERPRETED OR MISUNDERSTOOD, WE PRESENT THE FOLLOWING, IN THE NAME OF OUR LORD AND SAVIOR JESUS CHRIST:

1. We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man; and that God holds men accountable for their acts, in relation to their laws; both in making laws and administering them, for the good and safety of society.

2. We believe that no government can exist in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate, to secure each individual the free exercise of conscience, right to own property, and protection of life.

3. We believe that all governments, due to necessity, require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same; and those that administer the law in equity and justice should be sought diligently, and upheld by the voice of the people if a republic, or by the will of a sovereign.

4. We believe that religion is instituted of God; and that men are amenable to him and him alone for the exercise of it; unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that the governments of the land have right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship or to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms of public or private devotion; that the civil magistrates should restrain crimes, but never control conscience; should punish the guilty, but never suppress the freedom of soul.

5. We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments; and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as, in their own judgement, are best calculated to secure the public interest; at the same time, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.

6. We believe that every man should be honored in his station; rulers and magistrates as such, being placed for the protection of the innocent, and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men show respect and deference, for without them peace and harmony would be replaced by anarchy and terror; the laws of the land (human laws) being instituted for the express purpose of regulating secular interests of individuals and nations; and the laws of God (spiritual laws) being instituted for the express purpose of preserving the souls of men and nations; and both to be answered by man to his Maker.

7. We believe that rulers, states, and governments have a right to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their conscience and religious beliefs, and are bound by them; but we do not believe that they have a right to deprive citizens of their God-given privileges, or to proscribe them in their opinions, as long as their opinions do not justify sedition or conspiracy, and as long as regard and reverence are shown to the laws.

8. We believe that the commission of crime should be punished according to the nature of the offense, that murder, treason, robbery, theft, breach of general peace, and such, in all respects, should be punished and justice must be rendered, that the guilty may not escape the consequence of disobedience.

9. We do not believe that it is just to mingle religious influence with the civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges; and the individual rights and privileges of its members, as citizens, are denied.

10. We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members, according to their rules and regulations; but we do not believe that any religious society should be authorized to try men in the matters of property or life — to take away from them their goods and possessions of this world, or to put them in jeopardy of either life or limb, or to inflict any physical punishment upon them. They can only excommunicate them from their society, and withdraw from their fellowship; but they should not infringe upon the power and authority given to the civil authorities.

11. We believe that men should appeal to the civil law for redress of all wrongs and grievances, where personal abuse or matters related to property or character, or such is involved, in lands where such laws prevail and are enforced; but, where immediate appeal cannot be made to such laws, that all men are justified in defending themselves, their friends, properties and possessions, and such, from the assaults and encroachments of all persons and governments in times of exigency.

12. We believe that it is just to preach the doctrines of salvation and redemption, even the gospel of Jesus Christ, to all nations of the earth; and warn the righteous to save themselves from the corruptions and evils of the world; but we do not believe it to be right to interfere with bond servants, neither to preach the gospel nor baptize them, if it is contrary to the will and wish of their masters; nor to meddle with or influence them in the least to cause them to be dissatisfied with their situations in their daily lives, thereby jeopardizing the lives of men; such interference we believe to be unlawful and unjust, and harmful to the safety of those governments which allow human beings to be held in bondage and servitude. Amen.

(December 26, 1835; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily thus saith the Lord unto my servant Lyman Sherman — your sins are forgiven you, because you obeyed my voice in coming up hither this morning, to receive counsel of him whom I have appointed. Therefore, let your soul be at rest concerning your spiritual standing, and resist no more my voice, but arise up and be more careful henceforth in observing your vows, which you have made, and do now make. Wait patiently until the solemn assembly is called of my servants, then you shall be remembered with the first of my elders, and receive your ordination with the rest of my elders whom I have chosen. Behold, this is a promise of the Father unto you, if you continue to abide in faith, and be obedient to my commandments.

Therefore, rejoice in the glad tidings, and strengthen your brethren in all your conversations, prayers, and exhortations, and in all your doings. And behold, and lo, I am with you unto the end, to deliver you. Even so. Amen.

(March 27, 1836; Kirtland, Ohio)

A prayer offered at the dedication of the temple at Kirtland, Ohio: Thanks be to thy name, O Lord God of Israel, who keepest covenant and showest mercy unto thy servants who walk uprightly before thee with all their hearts; thou who commanded thy servants to build a House unto thy name in this place (Kirtland). And now beholdest thou, O Lord, that thy servants have done according to thy commandments.

And now we ask thee, Holy Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of thy bosom, in whose name alone salvation can be administered unto the children of men, to accept this House, the workmanship of thy servants. For thou knowest, O Lord, that we have done this work through great tribulations, and out of poverty we have given our substance to build a House unto thy name; that the Son of Man might have a place to manifest himself unto his people.

Thou didst reveal unto us, O Lord, saying: Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you: And, as all among you have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom from the scriptures; seek ye out the best words of wisdom, and learn them by study, faith, and contemplation; and cease from all light speeches, excessive laughter, and lustful desires, from pride and light-mindedness, and wicked doings; that all your incomings and outgoings be in the name of the Lord; that your salutations be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High God. And I say unto you, organize yourselves, prepare every needful thing, and establish a house of prayer, even a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, even a house of God.

We now ask thee, Holy Father, to grant us, thy people, thy grace, in calling our solemn assembly; that it may be done to thy glory and honor, unto thy divine acceptance, in a manner acceptable in thy sight; that we may be found worthy to partake of the fulfillment of the promises which thou didst make unto us, and unto our fathers; that thy glory may rest upon thy people Israel, and upon this House of the Lord which we now dedicate unto thee; that it may be sanctified and consecrated to be holy; that thy presence may continually abide therein; that all people who shall enter upon the threshold of thine House may feel thy power, thy glory, and thy holiness.

May thou grant us, Holy Father, that all those who shall enter to worship in this House be taught best words of wisdom from the holy scriptures; that they may seek learning through diligence and prayer of faith; that they may grow up in thy gospel and abide in thy commandments; that they may be bound by good works, and testimony of thy truths and lights; that they may receive a fulness of the Holy Ghost, and be organized according to the laws, to prepare themselves to receive the fulness of thy countless and wondrous blessings; that this House be a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of glory, even the house of the Almighty God, in obedience to thy commandments, O Lord.

That all the incomings of thy people into this house be in the name of the Lord, and all their outgoings from this house be in the name of the Lord; that all their salutations be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands; that no unclean thing be permitted to enter into thine House to pollute it; and when thy people transgress thy laws and break their covenants, may they speedily repent and forsake the evil, that thou mayest extend thy mercy unto them, that they may be forgiven, once again, to return unto thee and find favor in thy sight, and be allowed to partake of thy blessings.

We ask thee, Holy Father, that thy servants be blessed to go forth from this house armed with thy power, with thy name upon them, thy glory round about them, and thine angels to look after them and have charge over them; that thy servants may go forth bearing exceedingly glad tidings, even thy truths, lights and perfections, unto the ends of the earth; that every nation, kindred, tongue and people may know that this is thy work.

We ask thee, Holy Father, that thou mayest establish thy people, in that no weapon formed against them may prosper; that whosoever diggeth a pit for them may fall into the selfsame pit; that no secret combinations of the wicked prevail against thy people; and if armies or nations rise against thy people Israel, may thine anger be kindled against the trespassers. And if they smite thy people, and hearken not to their voice of peace, may thou smite them and fight the battle for this people, and deliver them from the hands of tyrants and oppressors. We ask thee, Holy Father, to confound and astonish them, and bring them to shame and confusion, all those who are liars and crafty enemies of God. For thou knowest, O Lord, that thy servants are innocent before thee, in bearing their testimonies in thy name.

Therefore, we plead before thee, O Great Jehovah, that thy servants be fully delivered from this yoke, that thou mayest break it off by thy mighty power; that we may rise up in the midst of this generation and do thy work. May thou grant us, O Lord, that the anointing of thy servants be sealed upon them with power from on high, as upon those on the day of Pentecost. May the gift of tongues be poured out upon them, even as cloven tongues of fire, and the interpretation thereof; and may thine House be filled with thy might, majesty and glory.

We ask thee, Holy Father, to remember those who have been driven by the inhabitants of Jackson County, from the lands of their inheritance; and extend thy mercy and grace unto the rulers of all the nations of the earth, thy kings, princes, nobles, and the great ones of the earth, that they may govern their principalities and dominions by both the letter and the substance of those principles which are held sacred and eternal, to be honored and nobly defended, even as the Constitution of the land of the United States. We pray, Holy Father, that the remnants of the house of Jacob, who have been cursed and smitten because of their transgressions, be delivered from their wild and savage conditions, unto a kingdom of glory in Israel. And may all the scattered remnants of Israel, who have been driven to the ends of the earth, come to a knowledge of the lights and truths of the gospel, and believe in the Messiah; and be redeemed from bondage and oppression.

O Lord, we pray that thy church may come out of the depths of darkness, and shine forth brightly as the sun, fairly as the moon, and terribly as an army with banners; and be prepared and adorned as a bride, to be unveiled on the day when the Son of Man shall descend upon the earth, to reign for a thousand years; that our garment may remain pure, as we wait upon the second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in robes of righteousness, with palms in our hands, and crowns of glory upon our heads, and reap eternal joy of thy salvation; and dwell in the presence of the Father and the Lamb for a thousand years, in peace, safety and salvation, under eternal grace and mercy of the Most High God.

Thus we send our petition unto thee, O Holy Father, in the name of thy Son Jesus Christ, to thine holy habitation in the heavens, where thou sitteth upon the eternal throne of God, as we dedicate this House of the Lord unto thee, the work of our hands which we have brought forth in meekness, in humility, in long-suffering and patience; according to thine instructions and commandments. May this house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of the true and living God, be acceptable unto thee; that thy name be put upon this church, and the house be sanctified and consecrated to be holy; and thy presence abide therein, as in the pillar of cloud upon the tabernacle of old; that by the power of the Holy Spirit we may mingle our voices with those who sit upon the right hand of thy throne, and with thy shining and purifying ministers, even the seraphs (seraphim) around thy throne, and sing Hosanna to God and the Lamb, forever and ever. Amen.

(April 3, 1836; in Kirtland Temple, Ohio)

This is a testimony of Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery. In the afternoon (of a Sabbath day meeting), I (Joseph Smith) assisted the other Presidents in distributing the Lord's Supper to the Church, receiving it from the Twelve, whose privilege it was to officiate at the sacred desk this day. After having performed this service to my brethren, I retired to the pulpit, the veils being dropped, and bowed myself with Oliver Cowdery, in solemn and silent prayer. After rising from prayer, the following vision was opened unto us:

> The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit before us; and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold, in color like amber. His eyes were as a flame of fire; the hair of his head was white like the pure snow; his countenance shone like the brightness of the sun; his voice was as the sound of rushing waters, even the voice of Jehovah the Lord, saying: I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father. Behold, your sins are forgiven you, and ye are made clean before me, this day; therefore, lift up your heads and rejoice, and let the hearts of your brethren and all my people rejoice, who have, with their faith and might, built this house unto my name. For, behold, I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here; and I will manifest myself unto my people in mercy in this house. Yea, I will appear unto my servants, and speak unto them with mine own voice, if they will keep my commandments, and do not pollute this holy house. And the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands shall greatly rejoice in consequence of the blessings and endowments which shall be poured upon them; and the fame of my house shall be spread to foreign lands. Yea, this is the beginning of the blessings which shall be poured upon the heads of my people. Even so. Amen.

After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us; and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four corners of the world, and the leading of the ten tribes. After this, Elias appeared, and committed the gospel of Abraham, saying that in the seed of Abraham and in our seed all generations after us shall be blessed. Then, another great and glorious vision burst upon us; for Elijah the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, saying: Behold the time hath fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he (Elijah) should be sent, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. Therefore, the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands; and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day is nigh, even at the doors. Amen.

(August 6, 1836; Salem, Massachusetts)

I, the Lord your God, am not displeased with your coming hither (to Salem), from Kirtland, notwithstanding your follies. I have much treasure in this city for the benefit of Zion and for all my people, whom I will gather in due time, through your instrumentality. Therefore, it is expedient in me that you form acquaintance with the inhabitants of the city, as you shall be led by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And it shall come to pass, that in due time I will give this city into your hands, that you shall have power over it; insomuch that they shall not discover your secret parts, and its wealth, even the gold and the silver, shall be yours. Concern not yourselves about your debts, for I wil give you power to pay them. Concern not yourselves about Zion, for I will deal mercifully with her.

Tarry in this place, and in the regions round about; and the place where you should tarry shall be revealed unto you by the peace and joy it shall exude, when you behold the place by the power of my Spirit. This place you may obtain by hire (rent); and inquire diligently concerning the more ancient inhabitants and founders of this city, for there are more treasures than one may surely perceive. Therefore, be ye as wise as the serpents and yet without sin; and I will prepare all things for your good, as quickly as ye are able to receive them. Even so. Amen.

(July 23, 1837; Kirtland, Ohio)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Thomas B. Marsh (who was the president of the Quorum of the Twelve at this time): I have heard thy prayers; and thine alms have come up as a memorial before me, in behalf of those, thy brethren, who were chosen to bear testimony of my name, and to send it abroad among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people; and ordained through the instrumentality of my servants. Behold, there have been some few things in thine heart with which I, the Lord, was not well pleased; nevertheless, inasmuch as thou hast been abased, thou shalt be exalted, and thy sins are forgiven thee.

Let thine heart be of good cheer, for thou shalt bear record of my name, not only unto the Gentiles, but also unto the Jews; and send forth my word unto the ends of the earth. Contend thou, therefore, morning by morning; and day after day, let thy warning voice go forth; and when the night cometh, let not the inhabitants of the earth slumber, because of thy speech. And let thy habitation be known in Zion, and remove not thy household, for I, the Lord, have a great work for thee to do, in proclaiming my word among the children of men.

Therefore, gird up thy loins for the task which is up ahead, for thou are chosen and called, and thy path lieth among the mountains, and among nations. And by thy word many high ones shall be brought low, and the low ones shall be exalted. Thy voice shall be a rebuke unto the transgressor; and at thy rebuke the tongue of the slanderer shall cease its perverseness. Be thou humble, and the Lord thy God shall lead thee by the hand, and give thee answer to thy prayers. I know thine heart, and have heard thy prayers concerning thy brethren. Be not partial toward them in love, but let thy love abound unto all men, and unto all who love my name; and pray for brethren of the Twelve. Let them admonish sharply for my name's sake, and let them be admonished for their sins and transgressions; and be ye faithful in my sight, unto the end.

And now, I say unto you, and what I say unto you, I say unto all the Twelve: Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep. Exalt not yourselves, nor rebel against my servant Joseph Smith, Jr.; for verily I say unto you, my hand shall be over him; and the keys which I have given unto him shall not be taken away till I come.

Verily, I say unto my servant Thomas B. Marsh, thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom, pertaining to the Twelve, among all nations on the face of the earth — that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where my servants Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Hyrum Smith cannot come. For on them have I laid the burden of all the churches for a little season. Wherefore, whithersoever they shall send you, go ye, and I will be with you; and in whatsoever place ye shall proclaim my name, an effectual door shall be opened unto you. And whosoever receiveth my word receiveth me, and whosoever receiveth me receiveth the First Presidency, whom I have made counselors unto you for my name's sake.

And again, I say unto you, that whosoever ye shall send in my name, by the voice of your brethren the Twelve, recommended and authorized by you, shall have power to open the door of my kingdom unto any nation or people on the face of the earth; inasmuch as they are humble before me, abide in my commandments, and hearken to the voice of my Spirit. Verily, verily, I say unto you, darkness covereth the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people, and all flesh has become corrupt before my face.

Behold, vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth, even a day of wrath, a day of burning, a day of desolation; a day of weeping, wailing, mourning and lamentation; as a whirlwind it shall come, and astonish the wise and prudent of the world. Yea, upon my house shall it begin, and from my house it shall go forth unto the world; first those among you who have professed to know my name and have not known me, and blasphemed against me in the midst of my house, saith the Lord.

Therefore, trouble ye not yourselves concerning the affairs of my church in this place, saith the Lord; but, purify your hearts before me, and then go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel unto every creature who has not received it. And he that believeth, and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not, nor is baptized, shall be damned. For unto you, the Twelve, and those of the First Presidency, is given the power of the holy priesthood for these the latter days, and for the millennial days, in which the dispensation of the fulness of time shall be brought forth. And by the decree of the Father, you hold the power and authority, in connection with all those who have at any time received a dispensation, from the beginning of the creation unto this day. For verily I say unto you, the keys of the dispensation which ye have received, have come down from the fathers, and have been conferred upon you by the eternal and divine powers of the kingdom of heaven.

Behold, how great is your calling, and how marvelous the works of your Maker; therefore, rejoice in that which you have been granted; purify your hearts and cleanse your garments, lest the blood of this generation be required at your hands. Be faithful until I come, for I come quickly; and my reward is with me to recompense every man according to his works. I am Alpha and Omega. Even so. Amen.

(April 26, 1838; Far West, Missouri)

Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, and Hyrum Smith, and your counselors who are and shall be appointed later; also unto my servant Edward Partridge, and his counselors; and unto my faithful servants who are of the high council of my church in Zion, and all the elders and people of my Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in all the world — Arise and shine forth that thy light may be a standard for the nations; and that the gathering together of my people upon the land of Zion and her stakes may be for a defense and a refuge from the storm and wrath, when it shall be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth.

Let the city of Far West be a holy and consecrated land unto me, even a most holy place, for the ground upon which ye stand is holy. Therefore, I command you to build a house unto me, for the gathering together of my saints, for a place of worship and prayer. And let the preparatory work on laying down the foundation begin this summer, on the fourth day of July; and from that time forth let my people labor diligently to prepare for the building of a house unto my name; and one year from this day let them re-commence laying the foundation, and continue to labor diligently until it shall be finished; from the cornerstone unto the top thereof, until every whit is finished, and there shall not remain anything that is not finished.

Verily I say unto you, Let not my servants Joseph (Smith, Jr.) nor Sidney (Rigdon) nor Hyrum (Smith) get in debt any more for the building of a house unto my name; but let mine house be built according to the pattern which I shall show unto them. And if my people build it not according to the pattern which I shall show unto the presidency, I will not accept it at their hands. And again, verily I say unto you, it is my will that the city of Far West should be built up speedily by the gathering of my saints; also, let other places be appointed for stakes of Zion, in the regions round about, as they shall be manifested unto you by the hand of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., from time to time.

Behold, I will be with you, and sanctify you before the people; for unto you have I given the keys of this kingdom and ministry. Even so. Amen.

(July 8, 1838; Far West, Missouri)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto my servant William Marks and Newel K. Whitney; let them settle their business and journey from the land of Kirtland, before I, the Lord, send again the snows upon the earth. Let them awake and arise, and come forth, and not tarry, for I, the Lord, command it. Therefore, if they hearken not to my counsel and tarry, they shall suffer the consequence. Let them repent of all their sins and covetous desires, saith the Lord; for what is property unto me? Let the properties of Kirtland be turned out for debts; let them be disposed, and that which remaineth, ye may keep, saith the Lord. For have I not made the creatures of heaven, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, beasts of the earth, and the things upon the mountains and the valleys? Are they not mine? Do I not hold the past and the present and the future of all the armies and nations in mine hands? Therefore, will I not make solitary places to bud and blossom, and bring forth in abundance, saith the Lord? Is there not room enough on the mountains of Adam-ondi-Ahman and on the plains of Olaha Shinehah, or the land where Adam dwelt (in the land of Punt, in Eden), that ye should covet the temporal, which is but a drop, and neglect the weightier matters of the gospel?

Therefore, come ye up hither unto the land of Zion, let my servant William Marks be faithful over a few things, that he may be made ruler over many. Let him preside in the midst of my people in the city of Far West, and be blessed from on high. And let my servant Newel K. Whitney be made aware of the Nicolaitane band and their secret combinations and abominations; and of all his littleness of soul before me, saith the Lord; then he may come up to the land of Adam-ondi-Ahman, to be a bishop unto my people; for such is the decree of the Father, that all those who abide not in the spiritual law of the celestial kingdom, even the law of Christ, shall be appointed stewards over the temporal affairs of the church.

Behold, the name of my servant Oliver Granger is brought in remembrance before me; verily, I say unto him, that he shall be had in remembrance from generation to generation. Therefore, let him contend earnestly for the redemption of the First Presidency of my Church, saith the Lord; and when he falls he shall rise again, for his sacrifice shall be more sacred unto me than his increase, saith the Lord. Therefore, let him come up hither speedily, unto the land of Zion; and in due time he shall be made a merchant unto my name, for the benefit of my people. And let no man despise my servant Oliver Granger, but the blessings of my people be upon him forever.

And again, verily I say unto you, let all my servants in Kirtland remember the Lord their God, and mine House also, to keep it holy and sanctified; and to overthrow the moneychangers in due time, saith the Lord. Even so. Amen.

(July 8, 1838; Far West, Missouri)

Verily, thus saith the Lord: Let a conference be held immediately, and the Twelve be re-organized; let men be appointed to replace those who are fallen. Let my servant Thomas remain for a season in the land of Zion, to publish my word; and let the residue continue to preach. And if they do this in lowliness of heart; in meekness and humility, in long-suffering and patience, I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that I will provide for their families; and an effectual door shall be opened for them, from henceforth. And next spring they may depart to go over the great waters, and proclaim my gospel, the fulness thereof, and bear record of my name. Let them take leave of my saints in the city of Far West, on the twenty-sixth day of April, on the building spot of my house, saith the Lord.

Now, let my servants John Taylor, John E. Page, Wilford Woodruff, and Willard Richards, be appointed to fill the places of those who are fallen of the Twelve, and be officially notified of their appointment. Even so. Amen.

(July 8, 1838; Far West, Missouri)

Verily, thus saith the Lord concerning the matter which you have inquired of me: Behold, I require all surplus properties of my servants to be put in the hands of the bishop of my church in Zion; for the building of mine house, to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion, to provide aid to the poor, the needy, and the afflicted, and for the debts of the priesthood and the Presidency of my church.

Therefore, it is decreed that this will be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after this, those who have thus been tithed shall pay one-tenth of all their interest; and this shall be a standing law unto my holy priesthood, forever, saith the Lord. Behold, all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe the law of tithing, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you.

And I say unto you, if my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion, and keep my judgements and statutes, behold, it will not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen.

(March 20, 1839; Liberty, Missouri)

Behold, my son, peace be unto thy soul, for thine adversity and afflictions shall be but for a short time; then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high, and thou shalt triumph over all thy foes. Thy friends do stand by thee, and they shall hail thee again with warm hearts and friendly hands. Thou art not yet a Job; thy friends do not contend against thee, as they did Job. And they who do charge thee with transgression, shall be judged accordingly. Remember ye, that God hath set his hand and seal to change the times and seasons, and to blind their minds, that they may not understand his marvelous workings; that he may try them, and also take the crafty men of the world into their own snares.

Cursed are those who lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord; and cry sin, when they have sinned not in the sight of God. Those among you who call transgression because they are in bondage of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves, even the children of Belial, their powers are focused on bringing others into the selfsame bondage and misery, by crafty means of the world. Woe unto such, for they swear falsely against my servants, and offended my little ones. Yea, they shall be severed from the ordinances of mine house; their baskets shall not be full; their houses and barns shall be brought down by their own folly and shame; and they shall be despised by those who flattered them. They shall not have the right to the priesthood, nor their posterity after them; it had been better for them that a millstone had been hanged about their necks, and they drowned in the depths of the sea.

Woe unto all those that discomfort my people, and testify against them, saith the Lord of Hosts. Behold, mine eyes see and know their works, and I have reserved a swift judgement in its due time, and they shall in nowise escape the damnation of hell.

Yea, my son, God shall give you knowledge of salvation and eternal life, by means of the Holy Spirit, even by the unspeakable gift of the Holy Ghost; which Spirit was diligently sought after by our forefathers, but they found it not to remain with them. And our fathers awaited with anxious expectation, to be revealed in the last days. And a day shall come in the fulness of time, when nothing shall be withheld; and all the mysteries of thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers shall be revealed unto the faithful, who have endured to the end, for the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen? The rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness, but include the principles of good and evil, light and darkness, virtue and passion, hereafter and here, eternal and temporal, celestial and terrestrial, sacrifice and desire; for the gift of agency, free will and choice is given unto men. But when one undertakes to cover his sins, the lusts of his heart and eyes, the whims and his vain ambitions; or exercises unrighteous dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men; behold, the heavens withdraw themselves, and the Spirit of the Lord is grieved. And when the Spirit is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man. Behold, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the saints and holy men, and to fight against God, to curse Him and die.

Now, it is the nature and disposition of most men that as soon as they are given a little authority, as they suppose, they will begin to exercise unrighteous dominion. It is for this reason that many are called, but few are chosen. Therefore, no power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, but only by gentle persuasion, in meekness and humility, in long-suffering and patience, with charity and by love unfeigned; by kindness, and without hypocrisy or guile; reproving betimes with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and then showing afterwards an increase of love toward whom you have reproved, lest he esteem you his enemy; that he may know that your faithfulness toward him is greater than the bondage of the consequence of sin. Let your bowels be full of charity toward all men, and to your brethren in the gospel; let virtue and goodness garnish your thoughts unceasingly, then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrine, covenants and commandments of the holy priesthood shall distil upon your soul as the dews from heaven. Let the Holy Ghost be your constant companion, and your sceptor be an unchanging sceptor of truths and lights of the priesthood forever and ever. Even so. Amen.

(March, 1839; Liberty, Missouri)

Hearken O ye elders and high priests of my church to the words of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., which I shall give unto you; Behold, the ends of the earth shall inquire after your name, and fools shall have you in derision, and hell shall rage against you; while the pure in heart, the wise, the noble, and the virtuous shall seek counsel and power and blessings from under your hand. And my people shall not be turned against you by the testimony of traitors. And although their influence shall cast you into trouble, behind bars and walls, but for a small moment, you shall be had in honor and remembrance before the Lord; and your voice shall be more terrible in the midst of your enemies than the fierce lion, because of your righteousness and sacrifice.

And if you are called to pass through tribulations; if you are in perils among false brethren, or thieves or whoremongers; if you are accused with all manner of false accusations; if your enemies fall upon you; if they tear you from the company of your father, mother, brothers, and sister; and with a drawn sword your enemies separate you from your loved ones, from your wives and children, and your elder son, although but six years of age, clings to your garment, and says: My father, my father, why can't you stay with us? O, my father, what are the men going to do with you? And then, if he be thrust away from you by the sword of the trespasser, and you be dragged to prison, to be locked up behind bars; and your enemies prowl around you like wolves after the blood of a lamb; and if you be cast into a pit, or into the hands of murderers and they pass the sentence of death upon you; if you be cast into the deep waters, and the billowing surge conspire against you, and the fierce winds become your enemy, the heavens gather blackness, and thunder, storm, fire and lightning rage about you; if all the elements and powers of hell combined plot against you and block your way of truth and righteousness; and if the very jaws of hell gape open the mouth to swallow you, know you my son, that all these things shall give you experience, and shall be for your good. The Son of Man didst descend below them all. Are you greater than he?

Therefore, hold on to the lights and truths of the gospel, and abide forever in faith in your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the Messiah. Seek immortality and eternal life, and transgress not the commandments of God, lest you fall and die spiritually. What good is a man then, who is dead in the Spirit; behold, he is likened to salt which has lost its savor, therefore it is good for nothing, only to be cast away to be trampled upon. Know it, my son, the bounds of our enemies are set, they remain confounded without their knowing it; for their bounds are set, from which they cannot pass. Behold, rejoice in the blessings of the priesthood, and be diligent in keeping all the commandments of God, yea, even all the commandments given to man in all dispensations, from the time of Adam unto this day, which are consistent with your Creed which I have given unto my church. Your days are known in heaven, and your years shall not be numbered less; therefore, fear not what man can do, for I, the Lord, shall be with you unto the very end, and forever. Even so. Amen.

(January 19, 1841; Nauvoo, Illinois)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, I am well pleased with your prayers and offerings; for unto this end have I raised you up, that I might show my wisdom through weak things of the earth. In answer to your prayers and supplications, behold, you are now called to make a solemn proclamation of my gospel, and of this stake which I have planted to be a cornerstone of Zion, which shall be polished with the refinement after the similitude of a palace.

And this proclamation shall be made unto all the kings of the world; and to the honorable president-elect of this land and to the high-minded governors of the nation, and unto all the rulers of the nations scattered on the face of the earth. Let it be written in the spirit of meekness and by the power of the Holy Ghost; for it shall be given you at the time of your writing, how and what you must write unto these kings and authorities; and also what shall befall them in a time to come. Behold, I am about to call upon them to give heed to the light and glory of Zion, for the set time has come to favor her. Therefore, call ye upon them with loud proclamation of your testimony; fearing them not, for they are as grass, and their glory as of the flower, which withereth and falleth.

Behold, the day of my visitation cometh speedily, in an hour when ye think not of; when my people abide not in my commandments, but in the false safety of their errors and follies, and rejoice in their wickedness, saith the Lord. Awake, O kings of the earth; come ye, O, come ye with your gold and silver, to the help of my people, to the house of the daughters of Zion. And, verily, let my servant Robert B. Thompson help you to write this proclamation, for I am well pleased with his works, and I shall bless him with a multiplicity of blessings, if he hearkens to your counsel and is counted a wise steward in his calling.

Blessed is my servant Hyrum Smith, for I, the Lord, love him because of the integrity of his heart, and because he loveth that which is right before me. And let my servant John C. Bennet help my servant Joseph Smith, in sending my word to the kings and nations of the earth, and in the hour of his afflictions, for his heart is pure before me; and let my servant Lyman Wight continue in his preaching for Zion, in meekness and in humility, in long-suffering and patience; that when he shall finish his work, I may receive him unto myself, even as I did my servants David Patten and Edward Partridge, who are with me at this time; and my aged servant Joseph Smith, Sr., who sitteth with Abraham on his right hand.

And, verily, I say unto you, my servant George Miller is without guile, and his love abounds in my testimony; therefore, he may be trusted unto the office of a bishopric, like unto my servant Edward Partridge; that he may receive consecrations of mine house, and administer blessings upon the heads of the poor and the needy of my people, saith the Lord. And let my servants George, Lyman, and John Snider, and others who shall be appointed, build a house unto my name; such a one as shall be shown unto you under the hands of my servant Joseph.

Behold, this house shall be a healthful habitation, a boarding house for the strangers that may come from afar to lodge and rest; therefore, it shall be a good house worthy of all acceptation, where the weary traveler may find peace and safety, while he contemplates the word of God; and it shall be a corner-stone for Zion. And if the governor, which shall be appointed unto it, shall not suffer any pollution to come upon it, it shall be accepted as holy; or the Lord your God will not dwell therein.

Verily, I say unto you, send ye swift messengers, even choice messengers, to call upon my saints in far-off lands, saying: Come ye, with all your gold, silver, precious stones, and antiquities, and with those who have knowledge of antiquities; and bring the box-tree, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the precious trees of the earth; and iron, copper, brass, zinc, and all the precious things that are needful, to build a house unto my name; for the Most High to dwell therein. For there is not a place found on the earth where he may come to restore again that which hath been lost, or taken away from you, even the fulness of the blessings of the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God.

For, behold, a baptismal font there is not upon the earth, that my saints may be baptized for those who are dead — for this ordinance belongeth to my house, and it cannot be acceptable unto me otherwise; except in times when your poverty and afflictions restrict you to build a house unto my name. But, now I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me, and I grant you sufficient time to build it; only during this time I will accept your baptisms for the dead. But at the end of this appointed time, no baptisms for your dead performed outside my house shall be acceptable unto me.

Verily, I say unto you, that after you have had sufficient time to build the house to my name, wherein the ordinance of baptizing for the dead belongeth, as it was instituted from before the foundation of this world; for therein are the keys of the holy priesthood ordained, that you may receive glory and honor, and endowment. For it is ordained that in Zion, and in her stakes, in Jerusalem, and those places which I have appointed for refuge, shall be the places for your baptisms of your dead. And, behold, how shall your washings be acceptable unto me, except ye perform them in a house which ye have built unto my name? For it was for this cause that I commanded Moses to have a tabernacle built in the wilderness of Sinai, and to build a house in the land of promise, that these ordinances might be performed.

Therefore, verily I say unto you, that your anointings, washings, and baptisms for the dead; and your solemn assemblies, and your memorials for your sacrifices by the sons of Levi (Al-Levi); your revelations from the Lord (oracles) wherein ye receive conversations in the most holy place; your statutes and judgements to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion; and for the glory, honor, and endowment of all her municipals are ordained by the ordinances of my holy house, which my people are always commanded to build, from the time of the foundation of this world. For I deign to reveal unto my people mine ordinances and things which have been kept hidden from the foundation of the world, even the things pertaining to the dispensation of the fulness of time.

And I will show unto the presidency of my church all things pertaining to this house, and the keys of the priesthood, and the location at which it shall be built. If ye labor in faith, with all your might, I will consecrate the spot to be holy; but if ye desecrate and pollute mine holy grounds, or mine holy ordinances or charters or mine holy words, behold, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, nor will I fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord. For instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, shall bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgements upon your own heads, by your follies and abominations.

Now, verily, I say unto you, when I give a commandment to any of the sons of men to do a work unto my name, and those sons of men go forth with all their might, in sincerity of their hearts to do my work, and their enemies come upon them to hinder them; behold, it behooveth me to require no more work of them, but to accept their offerings. And the iniquities and transgressions of my holy laws I will visit upon those who hindered my work and repent not, but hate me, unto the third and fourth generation, saith the Lord God. It was for this cause that I didst accept the offerings of those whom I commanded to build a house unto my name in Jackson County, Missouri, who were hindered by their foes. And this I make an ensample unto all those who are hindered in the performance of their work unto my name, saith the Lord your God; for I, the Lord your God, will save all those who are pure in heart, and are slain in the performance of my work.

And, verily, verily, I command you again to build a house (temple) unto my name, even in this place (Nauvoo, Illinois, which was the former village of Commerce, Illinois); that ye may prove yourselves unto me that ye are faithful in all things whatsoever I command you; that I may bless you, and crown you with honor, immortality and eternal life. And, now I say unto you pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build for the boarding of strangers: Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be upon it, and let my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and his household have a place therein, from one generation to the next; for this anointing have I put upon his head and his posterity, according to their faithfulness. Therefore, let my servant Joseph and his seed after him have place in that house, from generation to generation, saith the Lord. And let the name of that house be called Nauvoo House; to be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting-place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion and its corner-stone; that he may receive counsel, if he chooses, from those whom I have set as plants of renown, and watchmen upon her walls.

Behold, verily I say unto you, let my servants George Miller, Lyman Wight, John Snider, and Peter Haws, organize themselves, and appoint one of them to be a president over the quorum for the purpose of building that house. And they shall establish a charter and issue stock for the building of it; but they will not be permitted to receive over fifteen thousand dollars from any one man, nor will they be permitted to receive under fifty dollars for a share of stock from one man. Verily, I say unto you, let my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., acquire a portion of the stock in that house, as seemeth him good; but he also cannot pay over fifteen thousand nor under fifty dollars for his share of stock, saith the Lord.

My servant Vinson Knight may acquire a portion in the boarding house, even the Nauvoo House, and his seed after him, from generation to generation; and let him lift up his voice in the midst of the people, and plead the cause of the poor and the needy, in sincerity of heart, and I shall accept his offerings, for they shall not be unto me as the offerings of Cain; for I have chosen him and anointed him, to be honored in the midst of his house, and I have forgiven all his sins, saith the Lord. Therefore, let his family rejoice and turn away their hearts from afflictions. Also, let my servants Hyrum Smith, Isaac Galland, William Marks, Henry G. Sherwood, William Law, Amos Davies, and Robert D. Foster, acquire a portion of the stock in that boarding house, as seemeth them good. And, concerning my servant Almon Babbitt, there are many things with which I am not pleased; for, behold, he aspireth to establish his counsel instead of the counsel which I have ordained, even that of the Presidency of my Church; and he setteth up a golden calf for the worship of my people.

Let my servant William Law put his trust in me, and cease to fear regarding his family, because of the sickness in the land. If ye love me, keep my commandments, and the sickness of the land shall rebound to your glory. Let my servant William go and proclaim my everlasting gospel with a loud voice and with great joy, as moved upon by my Spirit, unto the inhabitants of Warsaw, Carthage, Burlington, and Madison; and wait patiently and diligently for further instructions at my general conference, saith the Lord. If he will do my will, let him from henceforth hearken to the counsel of my servant Joseph, and in truth support the cause of the poor and the needy, and publish the translation of my holy word unto the inhabitants of the earth. If he will do this I will bless him with a multiplicity of blessings, that he shall not be forsaken, nor his seed be found begging bread. And verily, verily, I say unto you, let my servant William be appointed as counselor unto my servant Joseph, and be ordained and anointed in the room of my servant Hyrum Smith; that my servant Hyrum may take the office of Patriarch, and hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of my people; that whomsoever he may bless, shall be blessed, and whomsoever he may curse, shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. And from this time forth I appoint him to be a prophet, a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as is my servant Joseph. That he may act in concert with my servant Joseph and receive his counsel, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive; and be crowned with the same blessing, glory, honor, and all the gifts of the holy priesthood, that were once put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery. That my servant Hyrum may bear record of the things which I shall show unto him, that his name be had in remembrance, along with my servant Joseph.

Let my servant William Law also receive the keys by which he may ask and receive blessings; let him be humble before me, without guile, and he shall receive of my Spirit, even the Comforter, which shall manifest unto him the truthfulness of all things, and shall give in the very hour, that which he must say. And these signs shall follow him — he shall heal the sick; he shall cast out devils, and shall be delivered from those who administer deadly poison; he shall be led in paths where the poisonous serpent cannot lay hold upon his heel; he shall soar high in the imagination of his thoughts, as upon eagle's wings; and if I will that he should raise the dead, let him not withhold his voice. Therefore, let my servant William rejoice and sing hosannas to him that sitteth upon the throne forever and ever, saith the Lord your God. Behold, I have a mission for my servants William and Hyrum, and for them alone; and let my servant Joseph tarry at home, for he is needed there.

And, verily, if my servant Sidney Rigdon will serve me and be counselor unto my servant Joseph, let him arise and remain in the office of his calling. And if he will humble himself and offer unto me an acceptable offering and acknowledgement, behold, I, the Lord your God, will heal him, that he may lift up his voice again and be a spokesman unto my people. Let him come and locate his family in the neighborhood in which my servant Joseph resides; and assist my servant William Law and my servant Joseph, in making a solemn proclamation unto the kings of the earth, even as I have said before.

Let my servant Robert D. Foster build a house for my servant Joseph, according to the contract which he has made with him, as the door shall be opened unto him from time to time; and let him repent of all his folly and clothe himself with charity, and cease to do evil, lay aside all his harsh speeches.

And again, verily I say unto you, let no man acquire the stock of Nauvoo House unless he be a believer in the Book of Mormon and the revelations which I have given unto you, saith the Lord your God; for that which is more or less than this cometh of evil, and shall be attended with cursings and not blessings. Let the quorum of the Nauvoo House be given a just recompense of wages for all their labors which they perform in building the boarding house; and their wages be determined among themselves according to an agreement.

Now, these are the names of the officers to be approved or disapproved at the general conference, who belong to my Priesthood, even the Priesthood after the Order of Melchizedek, which is after the Order of mine Only Begotten Son: First, Hyrum Smith to be a patriarch of my church, to hold the sealing blessings, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall when the hour of temptation may come upon you. My servant Joseph Smith, Jr., to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and a prophet; and I give unto him my servants Sidney Rigdon and William Law, to be his counselors; these three shall constitute a quorum and First Presidency, to receive revelations for the whole church.

My servant Brigham Young I give unto you, to be the president over the Twelve traveling councilors; which Twelve hold the keys to open up doors of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth, and to send my word to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. These are: Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Orson Hyde, William Smith, John Taylor, John E. Page, Wilford Woodruff, Willard Richards, and George A. Smith; and David Patten I have taken unto myself, whose priesthood no man taketh, but, another may be appointed unto the same calling. And these are the names of the high council, for the corner-stone of Zion: Samuel Bent, Henry G. Sherwood, George W. Harris, Charles C. Rich, Thomas Grover, Newel Knight, David Dort, Dunbar Wilson, David Fullmer, Alpheus Cutter, and William Huntington; and Seymour Brunson I have taken unto myself, whose priesthood no man taketh, but another may be appointed into the same office; and verily, let my servant Aaron Johnson be ordained unto this calling.

And I give Don C. Smith to be a president over the quorum of high priests; which ordinance is instituted for the purpose of qualifying those who shall be appointed standing presidents or servants over various stakes throughout the world; they may travel if they choose, but they are to be ordained as standing presidents, saith the Lord your God. Amasa Lyman and Noah Packard are to be his counselors, that they may preside over the quorum of high priests.

The priesthood of John A. Hicks, Samuel Williams, and Jesse Baker, is to preside over the quorum of elders; which quorum is instituted for standing ministers; nevertheless they may travel if they choose, saith the Lord. And my servants Joseph Young, Josiah Butterfield, Daniel Miles, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Levi Hancock, and James Foster, are to preside over the quorum of the Seventy; which quorum is instituted for traveling elders to bear record of my name in all the world, wherever the traveling high council, mine apostles, shall send them. The difference between this quorum and the quorum of elders is that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time; the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God.

And lastly, Vinson Knight, Samuel H. Smith, and Shadrach Roundy, if he receives it, are to preside over the bishopric; Samuel Rolfe and his counselors are to preside over the president of the (Aaronic) priests and his counselors, the president of teachers and his counselors, the president of deacons and his counselors, and also the president of the stake and his counselors.

All these offices have I given unto you, that ye may fill each one of them; that ye may either approve of these names or disapprove of them at my general conference; and that ye should prepare rooms for all these offices in my house, which ye are commanded to build unto my name, saith the Lord your God. Even so. Amen.

SECTION 116
(September 1 and 6, 1842; Nauvoo, Illinois)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you concerning your dead: When any one of you are baptized for your dead, let there be a recorder, to be eye-witness of your baptisms, that he may bear testimony of the record; that in performance of all ordinances, whatsoever you bind on earth, be bound in heaven. For I am soon to restore many things to earth, pertaining to the eternal priesthood of God, saith the Lord of Hosts. And let the records be preserved in the archives of my holy temples, to be held in remembrance from generation to generation. Let there be a recorder appointed in each ward of the city, who is well qualified for taking accurate minutes, and also a general recorder, to whom these records should be forwarded, attested and certified. Then the general recorder can enter these records on the general church book of record. When this is done, the record shall be as holy and true as seen and witnessed by the eyes and the ears. Such is the order of things in the kingdom, as it has been from the time of Adam, the first high priest after the Order of the Son of God, chosen from among men, and appointed in behalf of men, over the things pertaining to God. Therefore, know it for a surety that the salvation of the dead, who should die without a knowledge of the gospel, is only possible in this manner, and no other way. Remember ye these words of John the Revelator? And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

Now, the books spoken of by John, are the books which contain the records of their works which were kept on the earth; and the selfsame records are kept in heaven, and the twain are one and the same; and the book which was the book of life, is kept in heaven. The nature of this ordinance consists in the power of the priesthood, by the revelation of Jesus Christ, that whatsoever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven and whatsoever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; or, in other words, whatsoever you record on earth shall be recorded in heaven, and whatsoever you do not record on earth, shall not be recorded in heaven; for out of the books shall your dead be judged, according to their works; and it matters not if they themselves in person have attended to the ordinances or they were attended to by means of their agents; which ordinance God hath prepared for their salvation, from time immemorial. Therefore know it for a surety, that in all ages of the world, whenever the Lord your God hath given a dispensation or scriptures of the holy priesthood, to any nation, kindred, tongue or people, this power to bind or record on earth, and simultaneously bind or record in heaven, has always been given along with that dispensation. Hence, whatsoever those men did truly and faithfully according to their priesthood authority, in the name of the Lord (which varied according to each dispensation), and kept a faithful record, it became a law on earth and in heaven, which could not be annulled, according to the decree of the Father and the Son.

Now, the great and grand secret of the whole matter under consideration, lies in obtaining the powers and blessings of the Holy Priesthood; for the keys to the knowledge and mysteries of man's salvation, both for the living and the dead, are kept in the eternal and mighty hand of the Priesthood; and also the keys to glory, honor, immortality and eternal life of man; and none other on the face of the earth, possesses these keys and powers of the Priesthood. The ordinance of baptism by full immersion in water is in the likeness of the dead, for to be immersed in water and come forth out of the water is in the likeness of the resurrection of the dead in coming forth out of their graves; therefore, millennia ago this ordinance of baptism was instituted to form a relationship with the baptism for the dead, being in the likeness of the dead. Consequently, a baptismal font was instituted in a similitude of the grave, and was placed underneath, where the living assembled to perform the ordinance for the dead and the living; that all things may have their likeness, and that they may accord one with another, and that which is earthly conform to that which is heavenly. For the first man, the natural man, is of the earth, earthly, and the second man is of the Lord, heavenly; as is earth, such are the earthly, and as is heaven, such are the heavenly.

And, as the records on earth concerning your dead are truly made out, so are also the records in heaven. This, therefore, is the sealing and binding power, and the keys of the kingdom, consisting of knowledge. These principles concerning the baptism for the dead and the living, and salvation of man, require highest consideration and understanding; for their salvation is necessary for the salvation of my saints, and they cannot be made perfect without the saints, nor can my saints be perfected without them. This is an immutable and eternal principle; this is the everlasting gospel, namely, the baptism for the dead. Now, for my saints without them cannot be perfected, nor can they be made perfect without my saints; neither can my saints or they be made perfect without those who died in the gospel, this wondrous principle remains in the core of the laws of the kingdom.

For these reasons, it is necessary in the ushering in of the dispensation (scriptures) of the fulness of time, which dispensation is now beginning to usher in, that a whole and complete and perfect union, and welding together of dispensations, and keys, and powers, and glories, should take place; and be revealed from the days of Adam unto the present time. And not only this, but those things which never have been revealed from the foundation of the world, but have been kept hid from the wise and the prudent, shall be revealed unto babes and sucklings in this, the dispensation of the fulness of time (or the Millennial-day scriptures).

Behold, the great day of the Lord is nigh at hand, and who can abide the day of his coming, and who can stand when he appeareth? For he is like a refiner's fire, purifier of silver and gold; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord their God an offering in righteousness; and present in his holy temple, when it is finished, a book containing the records of the dead in Israel, worthy of all acceptation. Amen.

SECTION 117
(February 9, 1843; Nauvoo, Illinois)

Verily, there are two kinds of beings in heaven, namely, angels, who are resurrected personages having bodies of flesh and bones, and the spirits of men made perfect. For instance, resurrected Jesus said: Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. The spirits of just men made perfect are not resurrected personages, but inherit the same glory as the angels.

When a messenger comes to you saying he has a message from God, offer him your hand to shake hands with him. If he be an angel, he will do so, and you will feel his hand; if he be the spirit of a just man made perfect, he will come in glory, and if you offer your hand to shake, he may not move, for it is contrary to the order of heaven for a just man to deceive; but he will still deliver his message. If it be the devil as an angel of light, when you offer him your hand to shake hands, you will not feel anything. Thus you may detect him, and know whether any administration is from God. Amen.

(April 2, 1843; Ramus, Illinois)

Behold, when the Savior shall appear ye shall see him as he is; that he is a man, possessing the same attributes as other men on earth; but the weight of his eternal glory shall be great; and he shall not come to be mocked or crucified, but to dwell upon the earth in peace, safety, salvation, and glory for a thousand years. And every whit spoken and written by the prophets and apostles of old and latter days shall be fulfilled. The place of his abode is likened to a great Urim and Thummim, where all things in their glory are continually manifest before him, past, present, and future.

The earth shall be purged of all its sins once again, and sanctified unto the Lord God of the universe; that all mankind may abide in the covenant of the last days, even the Millennial-day covenant, for a thousand years. The inhabitants of earth then will belong to Christ, and the Son of God will reign in each of the three kingdoms of glory, to save, to heal, to nourish, and to bless them during the Millennium; yea, the kingdoms of the Sun and the Moon and the Stars shall revolve and rotate on their own fixed courses, in peace and harmony with the nature of man, even beyond the Millennium. All hidden and sacred secrets of each of these lower kingdoms shall be revealed unto them in truth and righteousness, whereby they shall be saved by illumination of their minds with the truths and lights of Christ, according to their capacities, nature and preferences. And those who come into the celestial kingdom, are given a white stone upon which a new name is written, which no man upon earth knoweth, save the person who receiveth it. The new name is the key word.

Now, whatever principle of intelligence man utilizes in this life on earth, shall follow him into his resurrection, either into the resurrection of the just or the unjust. And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience to the commandments of God, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come. There is also a law irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundation of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated — that when man obtains any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated.

Behold, the Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit; were it not so, the Holy Ghost could not dwell in us; a man may receive the Holy Ghost, and it may descend upon him, but not tarry with him. Amen.

(May 16-17, 1843; Ramus, Illinois)

Behold, there are three kingdoms of glory, and in each kingdom there are three divisions of society based upon the eternal natures of man, and within each division there are degrees of glory and salvation decreed for man. And in order to obtain the highest, or the celestial glory, a man must enter this order of the Priesthood, meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage; if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase. The more sure word of prophecy means a man's knowledge that he is sealed up unto eternal life and immortality, by revelation and the Spirit of prophecy, through the power of the Holy Priesthood, for it is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance. Amen.

SECTION 120
(July 12, 1843; Nauvoo, Illinois)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph, inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand to know and understand, touching the principle and doctrine, by which I, the Lord, justified my servants Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David and Solomon, and many others to having many wives and concubines. Behold, and lo, I am the Lord your God, and will answer you in this matter, and prepare your heart to receive and obey instructions which I am about to give unto you; for all those to whom this law of the kingdom is revealed, must obey the same.

Behold, I reveal unto you the new and everlasting covenant; and no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory. For all who will have a blessing at my hands shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing. This new and everlasting covenant was instituted for the fulness of my glory before the foundation of the world; and he that receiveth a fulness thereof, must and shall abide the law, or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God.

And verily, I say unto you, that the conditions of this law are these: All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made, entered into, and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, for time and also for eternity, of him who is anointed and appointed on the earth to hold this power and keys of this priesthood, are of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts not made unto this end, terminate when men are dead. And there is never but one on the earth at a time on whom this power and the keys of the holy priesthood are conferred; as I have appointed unto my servant Joseph to hold this power in these days.

Behold, mine house is a house of order, saith the Lord God, and not a house of confusion. Will I accept an offering that is not made in my name? Or will I receive at your hands that which I have not appointed? Or will I appoint unto you, saith the Lord, except it be by the eternal and immutable law which I and my Father gave unto you? For whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man. Wherefore, it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, that the earth and the earthly might answer the end of its creation; that a just portion be meted out to fill its measure, according to the capacities and worthiness of man.

Now, I, the Lord your God, say unto you — that no man shall come unto the Father but by me or by my word, which is the eternal and immutable law of the kingdom. And everything that is in the world, whether it be ordained of men, or by thrones, principalities, powers, dominions, or things of name, whatsoever they may be; if they are not by me or by my word, shall be thrown down, saith the Lord; and shall not remain after men are dead, neither in nor after the resurrection. For whatsoever things are not by me shall be shaken and destroyed, and whatsoever things remain shall be of me.

Therefore, if a man marry him a wife in the world, and he marry her not by me or my word, or he enters into an agreement with her while in the world; their agreement or marriage is null and void, when they are dead, and out of the world; hence they are not bound by any law when they are out of the world. Therefore, when they are out of the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but they are appointed angels in heaven, which angels are ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more and exceeding, and eternal weight of glory. For these angels did not abide in my law while they were in the world, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separate and singly without exaltation, in their saved conditions, to all eternity; and for the angels did not abide in my law, they are not gods, but are appointed angels of God forever and ever.

And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife or make an agreement with her for time and for eternity; if that agreement or marriage is not by me or by my law, and is not sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, through him whom I have anointed and appointed unto this power, it is null and void when they are out of the world, saith the Lord. Because they are not joined by me nor by my word, when they are out of the world, they cannot be received where I am; for they cannot pass the angels and the gods who are appointed there. They cannot, therefore, inherit my glory, for my house is a house of order, saith the Lord God.

And, if a man marry a wife by me or by my word, which is my law, under the new and everlasting covenant; and they are sealed to each other by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed and appointed unto this power and keys of this priesthood, it shall be said unto them: Ye shall come forth in the morning of the first resurrection, or if not the first resurrection, in the next resurrection; and shall inherit thrones, kingdoms, principalities, powers, dominions, all heights and depths thereof; and it shall be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, that ye shall commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, and if ye abide in my covenant, it shall be done unto them all that which is just and good. And when they are out of the world, they shall pass by the angels and the gods which are set there, to their exaltation and glory, which hath been sealed upon their heads; and a fulness in all things and continuation of the seeds forever and ever shall be their glory. Then shall they be gods, because they have no end, and they shall be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue to increase; then shall they be above all, because all things are subject unto them; then shall they be gods forever, because they are given all power, and angels are subject unto them.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye abide in my law ye cannot attain this glory. For strait is the gate and narrow the way that leadeth unto exaltation and continuation of the lives; and few there be that find it, because they receive me not in the world, nor do they know me. And, behold, this is eternal life — to know the only wise and true and living God the Father, and His Son Jesus Christ. Broad is the gate, and wide the way that leadeth to deaths; and many there are that take the path, because they receive me not nor do they abide in my law. But if they receive me in the world, then shall they know me, and receive their exaltation and glory; and where I am, they shall be also.

Behold, and lo, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, and he or she commit any sin, or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant, and all manner of blasphemies, and they commit no murder wherein they shed innocent blood, yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation; but they will be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered to the buffetings of Satan unto the day of their redemption, saith the Lord God. The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which shall not be forgiven in the world nor out of the world, is in that ye commit murder wherein ye shed innocent blood, and assent unto my death, after ye have received my new and everlasting covenant, saith the Lord God. And he that abideth not in this law can in no wise enter into my glory, but shall be damned, saith the Lord God.

I am the Lord your God, and will give unto you the law of my Holy Priesthood, as was ordained by the Father and the Son before the world was — Abraham received all things, whatsoever he received, by revelation and commandment, by my Word, saith the Lord; and hath entered into his exaltation and sitteth upon his throne. Abraham received promises concerning his seed, and of the fruit of his loins; from whose loins ye are, and also my servant Joseph; and the seed of Abraham is to continue in the world and out of the world, innumerable as stars and the sand upon a seashore.

This promise is yours also, because ye are of Abraham; and by this law is the continuation of the works of my Father, in the which he glorifieth himself. Go ye, therefore, and do the works of Abraham; enter into my law, and ye shall be saved; but if ye enter not into my law, ye cannot receive the promise of my Father, which he made unto Abraham. Under God's command Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham to wife, and Sarah was obedient to the eternal and immutable law of the holy priesthood. And from Hagar sprang many people. This was fulfilling, among other things, of the promises made unto Abraham. And, verily, my servant Abraham was under no condemnation, for I, the Lord, commanded it. He was also commanded to offer up his son Isaac, nevertheless, it was written: Thou shalt not kill. Abraham, however, did not refuse, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness.

Abraham neither lusted nor coveted, but wives and concubines were given unto him for purposes and designs known only to God. And they bore him children, while he remained obedient to God's commandments, unto the very end. Isaac and Jacob also did none other things than that which they were commanded to do; therefore, they also entered into their exaltation, according to the promises, and sit upon thrones; they are not angels but are gods, for they abode in my law. Moses, my servant, also received many wives and concubines, and also David and Solomon, and many others of my servants, from the beginning of creation unto this day; and in nothing did they sin, save in those things which they received not of me.

David's wives and concubines were given unto him of me, by the hand of Nathan my servant, and other prophets who had the keys of this power; and in none of these things did he sin against me, save in the case of Uriah and his wife; therefore, he hath fallen from his exaltation and received his just portion in the world, which he shall not inherit out of this world; for I have given it unto another, saith the Lord.

I am the Lord your God, and have given unto you, my servant Joseph, an appointment to restore all things. Ask what ye will, and it shall be given unto you according to my word. Now, you have inquired of me concerning this matter of adultery; verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man receiveth a wife in the new and everlasting covenant, and if she be with another man, not appointed unto her by the holy anointing and sealing, she has committed adultery, and shall be destroyed. If she be not in the new and everlasting covenant, and she be with another man, she has committed adultery. And if her husband be with another woman, and he was under a vow, he has broken his vow and hath committed adultery. But if the man is guilty of adultery, and she hath not committed adultery, but is innocent, and she knoweth it, and hath not broken her vow, I reveal unto you, my servant Joseph, then shall you have power, by the power of my Holy Priesthood, to take her and give her unto him that hath not committed adultery, but hath been faithful, for he shall be made ruler over many.

For I have conferred upon you the keys and power of the holy priesthood, I shall restore all things and make known unto you all things in due time. And verily, verily, I say unto you, my servant Joseph, that whatsoever you seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven, and whatsoever you bind on earth in my name and by my word, shall be bound in heaven; whosoever sins you remit on earth shall be remitted in heaven, and whosoever sins you retain on earth shall be retained in heaven; and whomsoever you bless I will bless, and whomsoever you curse I will curse, saith the Lord. And whatsoever you give on earth, and to whomsoever you give by my word and according to my law, it shall be visited with blessings and not cursings, with my power, saith the Lord; and shall be without condemnation on earth and in heaven.

Behold, I am the Lord your God, and will be with you even unto the end. And I seal upon you exaltation and glory, and prepare a throne for you in the kingdom of my Father, with Abraham your father. I have seen your sacrifices and offerings in obedience to that which you were told; go, therefore, for I have forgiven your sins, and shall make a way for your escape. Verily, I say unto you: A commandment I give unto my handmaid Emma Smith, your wife, whom I have given unto you, that she stay herself and partake not of that which I commanded you to offer unto her; for I did it to prove your faith, as I did Abraham, saith the Lord; that I may require an offering at your hand, by covenant and sacrifice. Let mine handmaid Emma Smith receive all those that have been given unto my servant Joseph, who are virtuous and pure before me; and those who are not pure, and have said they were pure, shall be destroyed, saith the Lord God. And I give unto my servant Joseph that he be made ruler over many things, for he has been faithful over a few; and henceforth he shall be strengthened.

And I command my handmaid Emma Smith to abide and cleave unto my servant Joseph, and none else. But if she will not abide in this commandment, she shall be destroyed, saith the Lord; and my servant Joseph shall be justified in doing all things, even as he has spoken unto her; and I will multiply him and give unto him an hundredfold in this world, of fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, houses and lands, wives and children; and crowns of eternal lives in the eternal worlds. Again, verily I say, let mine handmaid forgive my servant Joseph his trespasses; then shall she be forgiven her trespasses, wherein she has trespassed against me; I, the Lord your God, will bless her, and heal her, and make her heart rejoice.

And let not my servant Joseph put his property out of his hands, lest an enemy come and destroy him, for Satan seeketh to destroy. Behold, and lo, I am with him, as I was with Abraham, unto his exaltation and glory. Now, as touching the law of the holy priesthood, of which you have inquired of me, thus saith the Lord: Verily, if a man be called of my Father, as was Aaron, by mine own voice, and by the voice of him that sent me, and I have endowed him with the keys of the power of this priesthood; if he do anything in my name, according to my law and my word, he will not commit sin, and I will justify him. Therefore, let no man set on my servant Joseph, for I will justify him; and he shall do the sacrifice which I require at his hands for his transgressions, saith the Lord your God. Again, pertaining to the law of the eternal priesthood — if any man be espoused to a wife, who is justified by me or by my word, and is sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, and desires to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins in the sight of God, and have vowed to no other man, then he is justified; he cannot commit adultery for they are given unto him and to none other; for he cannot commit adultery with that which belongeth unto him and to no one else. And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he cannot commit adultery, for they are given unto him, and he is justified by the holy decree of the eternal priesthood of God.

But if one or either of the ten virgins, after she is espoused, shall be with another man, she has committed adultery, and shall be destroyed; for they are given unto him to multiply and replenish the earth, as a chosen seed; to fulfill the promise which was given by my Father before the foundation of the world, for their exaltation and glory; and herein is the work of my Father continued in the eternal worlds, that he may be glorified. And, verily, verily, I say unto you, if any man who holds the keys of this power, and teaches unto his wife this law of the priesthood, she is bound by the decree to administer unto her husband according to this law, or she shall be destroyed, saith the Lord your God. Therefore, it shall be lawful in me, if she receive not this law for him to receive all things whatsoever I, the Lord your God, will give unto him; because she did not believe and administer unto him according to my word, she then becomes a transgressor, and he is exempt from the law of Sarah, who believed and administered unto Abraham according to my law; when I commanded Abraham to take Hagar (Hajirah) to wife. Let this suffice for the present, even all that which I have spoken unto you; behold, I am Alpha and Omega. Even so. Amen.

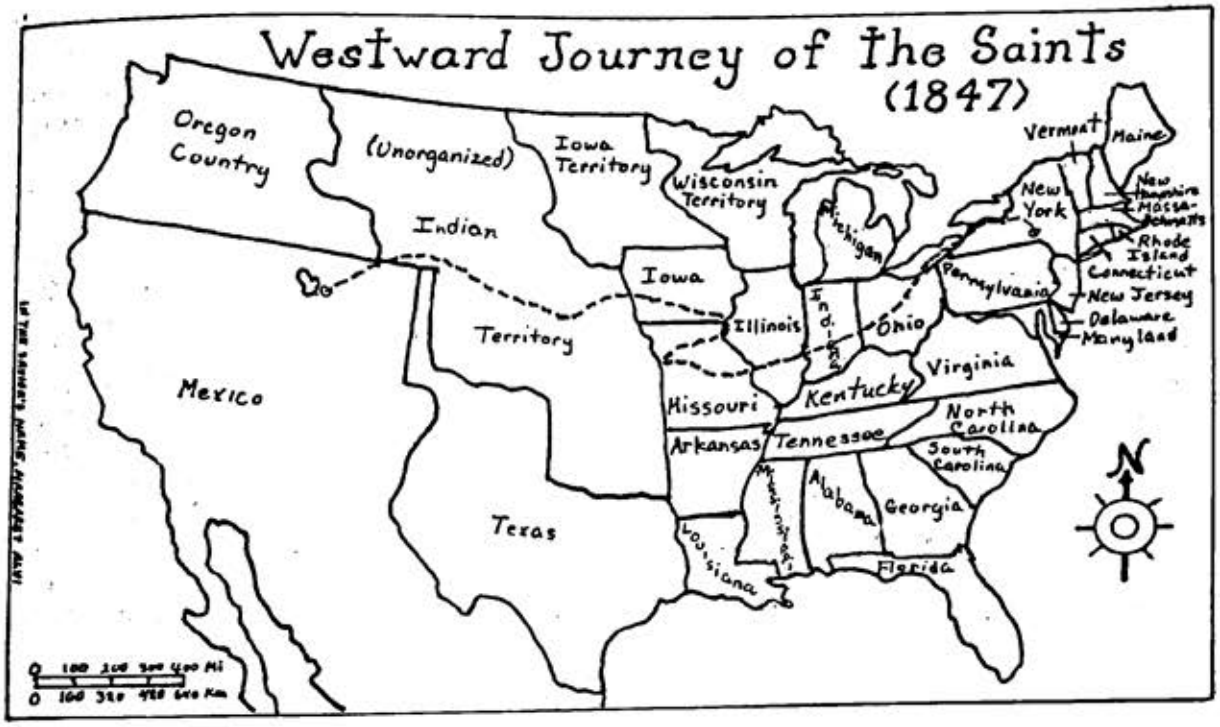
(January 14, 1847; near Council Bluff, Iowa)

The word and will of the Lord, given unto the church under the hands of Brigham Young, the first President of the High Priesthood of the Church since the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, Jr.; at the Winter Quarters of the camp of Israel, Omaha Nation, West Bank of the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs. The westward journey of the saints is shown in the map on the next page:

VII. THE SEVENTH EPOCH: FROM JOSEPH SMITH, JR., TO EZRA TAFT BENSON (c.1805 - 1990 A.D.)



Let the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and those journeying with them, be organized into companies, with a covenant and promise to keep all the commandments and statutes of the Lord our God. Let the companies be organized with captains of hundreds, of fifties, of tens, with a president and his two counselors at their hand, under the direction of the Twelve Apostles. And this shall be our covenant — that we will walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord. Let each company provide themselves with all the teams, wagons, provisions, clothing, and other necessaries for the journey, whatever they can.

When the companies are organized, let them go with their might, to prepare for those who are to tarry. Let each company, with their captains and presidents, decide how many can go next spring; then choose out a sufficient number of able-bodied and expert men, to take teams, out a sufficient number of able-bodied and expert men, to take teams, seeds, and farming utensils, to go as pioneers and prepare for putting in spring crops. Let each company bear an equal proportion, according to the dividend of their property, in taking the poor, the widows, the fatherless, and families of those who have gone into the army; that the cries of the widows and the fatherless come not up into the ears of the Lord, against his people.

Let each company prepare houses, and fields for raising crops, for those who are to remain behind this season; and this is the will of the Lord concerning his people. And let every man use all his influence and resources to remove this people to a place where the Lord shall locate a stake of Zion. And if ye do this with a pure heart, in all faithfulness, ye shall be blessed; ye shall be blessed in your flocks, in your herds, in your fields, in your houses, and in your families. Let my servants Ezra T. Benson and Erastus Snow organize a company; and my servants Orson Pratt and Wilford Woodruff; and also my servants Amasa Lyman and George A. Smith organize a company; and appoint presidents, and captains of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. And let those who have been appointed go and teach this, my will, to the saints, that they may be prepared to go to a land of peace.

Therefore, go ye your way, and do as I have told you, and fear not thine enemies, for they shall not have power to frustrate my work. Zion shall be redeemed in mine own due time. And if any man seeketh to build up himself, and obeys not my counsel, he shall have no power, and his folly shall be made manifest. Seek ye the Lord's counsel diligently; keep all your pledges and vows one with another, and covet not that which is thy brother's; keep yourselves from evil, and take not the Lord's name in vain; for I am the Lord your God, even the eternal God of your fathers, the God of Adam, of Enoch, of Noah and Shem, of Abraham, of Isaac and Jacob, of Moses, and all other prophets and apostles; yea, I am the selfsame God of the kings and priests in all ages, who manifested himself unto the children of men, for their salvation and redemption, in the meridian of time. I am he who led the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; even as mine arm is stretched out to save my people Israel, in these the latter-days.

Behold, cease to contend one with another, and cease to speak evil one of another. If thou borrowest of thy neighbor, thou shalt restore that which thou hast borrowed; and if thou canst not repay, then go straightway and tell thy neighbor, lest he condemn thee. If thou findest that which thy neighbor hast lost, thou shalt make diligent effort to restore unto him that which was lost. Thou shalt be diligent in preserving that which is given unto thee to keep, that thou mayest be counted a wise steward. If thou are merry, praise the Lord with singing, with music, with dancing, and with a prayer of praise and thanksgiving. If thou art sorrowful, call upon the Lord your God, in meekness, in humility, and in patience, and search the scriptures; that your souls may be comforted. Fear not thine enemies, for they are in mine hands, and I will judge their works in mine own due time; for they are placed there for the perfection of my saints, saith the Lord. For my people must be tried in all things, that they may be prepared to receive things which I have prepared for them, even the glory and blessings of Zion; and he that will not bear chastisement is not worthy of my kingdom.

Let him that is ignorant learn wisdom by humbling himself and calling upon the Lord his God, that his eyes and ears may be opened, so that he can see and hear the hidden things of God. For my Spirit is sent forth into the world to enlighten the humble and contrite, and to condemn the ungodly. Thy brethren have rejected you and your testimony, even the nation that has driven you out; behold, and lo, now cometh the day of their calamity, even the days of sorrow and pain, like a woman that is taken in travail; their sorrow shall be great, lest they speedily repent, saith the Lord. For they killed and despised the prophets and my righteous servants, who were sent to save and heal them; they have shed innocent blood, which crieth from the ground against them.

Therefore, be not amazed nor marvel at these things. Ye are not yet pure before me, and cannot yet bear my glory; but ye shall behold it if ye are faithful in keeping all my commandments which I have given unto you and your fathers; from the days of Adam to Enoch, Enoch to Melchizedek (or Shem), from Melchizedek to Abraham, from Abraham to Moses, from Moses to Jesus and his apostles; when the first manifestation of the Son of God, or the Only Begotten of the Father (Elohim), and the establishment of his kingdom on earth was completed (the second and the last manifestation of the Son God shall come to pass in the fulness of time, in the days of the Millennium); and even all the commandments unto the arrival of the Millennial day. Yea, then I will reign upon the earth for a thousand years, in peace, safety, salvation, and glory, in the midst of my people Israel; if ye are faithful in keeping all my commandments, and abiding in the covenants which you have made with me.

Behold, Joseph Smith, whom I didst call upon by mine angels, my ministering servants, and by mine own voice, to bring forth my work in these days; didst lay the foundation, in that he was faithful, and I took him unto myself. Many have marvelled because of his death; but it was needful that he seal his testimony with blood; and that all which hath been written about him be fulfilled; that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindred, tongues and people. Behold, the dispensation of the fulness of time is yet to come forth in its due time and season; when all shall be revealed, even all things which have been kept hid from the wise and the prudent, since the foundation of this world, shall be revealed unto my people Israel, saith the Lord God.

Now, therefore, hearken, O ye people of my church, and rejoice in that which is given; for verily I say unto you, O ye elders and high priests of my church; the kingdom is yours, you have received it, even as your inheritance; ask whatsoever ye may, and it shall be granted, not as a cursing, but as a blessing, forever and ever. Be ye, therefore, diligent in keeping all my commandments, lest judgements come upon you; for none can ever escape the consequences of sins and transgressions; for they bring a snare upon your soul and take you into bondage and captivity, and death; and woe, woe, unto the man from whom the presence of the Lord is withdrawn; for it would have been better for him that he was never born to feel the pain and agony of cursed existence, saith the Lord God. Even so. Amen.

(September, 1890, through April, 1893; Salt Lake City and Logan, Utah)

In the following document known as the Manifesto, dated September 24, 1890, Wilford Woodruff, president and prophet of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, made an Official Declaration, revealing the will of the Lord concerning the plurality of wives; that the practice of polygamy should be suspended:

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes, from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the Church have taught, encouraged and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice; and I deny that either forty or any other number of plural marriages have during that period been solemnized in our Temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported, in which the parties allege that the marriage was performed in the Endowment House, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889; but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony; whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the Church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the Church or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy; and when any Elder of the Church has used the language which appeared to convey any such teaching, he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The Manifesto was received with mixed feelings. There were those in the church who suspected that the cry which had gone up against plural marriage was only a facade behind which were the real reasons. The real reason for the legal persecution of the Church, they felt, was the same as it had been in Missouri and in Illinois; which being that certain local merchants, politicians, law enforcement officials, and ministers in the city resented the unity of the Church and the power of this body of people acting in the strength of unity. Now as a result of the issuing the Manifesto, these enemies of the Church found themselves without excuse for persecuting the Saints. (In January, 1893, general amnesty was granted by the president of the United States to all who had practiced plural marriage prior to 1890.)

In the general conference of the Church, held in October, 1890, the sustaining vote of the Saints was received, and the Manifesto became binding upon the Saints. Then president Wilford Woodruff made known unto the members of the Church his reasons for issuing this Manifesto; excerpts from his addresses at the Stake Conference at Logan, Utah (November 1, 1891), and at the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple (April, 1893), are also included in this revelation:

> I want to say to all Israel that the step which I have taken in issuing this Manifesto has not been done without earnest prayer before the Lord . . .
>
> The Lord has required at our hands many things that we have not done, many things that we were prevented from doing. The Lord required us to build a temple in Jackson County; we were prevented by violence from doing it. He required us to build a temple in Far West, which we have not been able to do. A great many things have been required of us, and we have not been able to do them because of those that surround us in the world . . .
>
> I say to Israel, the Lord will never permit me nor any other man who stands as the President of this Church to lead you astray. It is not in the programme. It is not in the mind of God. If I were to attempt that, the Lord would remove me out of my place, and so He will any other man who attempts to lead the children of men astray from the oracles of God, and from their duty . . . (October 6, 1890)
>
> It matters not who lives or who dies, or who is called to lead this Church, they have got to lead it by the inspiration of Almighty God. If they do not do it that way, they cannot do it at all . . . I have had some revelations of late, and very important ones to me, and I will tell you what the Lord has said to me. Let me bring your minds to what is termed the Manifesto . . .
>
> The Lord had told me to ask the Latter-day Saints a question, and He also told me that if they would listen to what I said to them and answer the question put to them by the Spirit and power of God, they would all answer alike, they would all believe alike with regard to this matter.
>
> The question is this: Which is the wisest course for the Latter-day Saints to pursue — to continue to attempt to practice plural marriage, with the laws of the nation against it and opposition of sixty millions of people, at the cost of confiscation and loss of all the Temples, and stopping of all the ordinances therein, both for the living and the dead, and the imprisonment of the First Presidency and the Twelve, and the heads of families in the Church, and confiscation of personal property of the people (all of which of themselves would stop the practice); or, after doing and suffering what we have through our adherence to this principle, cease the practice and submit to the law, and through doing so leave the Prophets, Apostles, and fathers at home, so that they can instruct the people and attend to the duties of the Church, and also leave Temples in the hands of the Saints, so that they can attend to the ordinances of the Gospel, both for the living and the dead?

The Lord showed me by vision and revelation exactly what would take place if we did not stop this practice. If we had not stopped it, you would have had no use for . . . any of the men in this Temple at Logan; for all ordinances would be stopped throughout the land of Zion. Confusion would reign throughout Israel, and many men would be made prisoners. This trouble would have come upon the whole Church, and we should have been compelled to stop the practice. Now, the question is, whether it should be stopped in this manner, or in the way the Lord has manifested unto us (thus the name "Manifesto"), and leave our Prophets and Apostles and fathers free men, and the temples in the hands of the Church, so that the dead may be redeemed. A large number has already been delivered from the prison house in the spirit world by this Church, and shall the work go on or stop? This is the question I lay before the Latter-day Saints. You have to judge for yourselves. I want you to answer it for yourselves. I shall not answer it; but I say to you that that is exactly the condition we as a people would have been in, had we not taken this course . . .

I saw exactly what would come to pass if there was not something done. I have had this spirit upon me for a long time. But I want to say this: I should have let all the temples go out of our hands; I should have gone to prison myself, and let every other man go there, had not the God of heaven commanded me to do what I did do; and when the hour came that I was commanded to do that, it was all clear to me. I went before the Lord, and I wrote what the Lord told me to write . . . I leave this with you, for you to contemplate and consider. The Lord is at work with us. (November 1, 1891, at Logan, Utah)

> Now I will tell you what was manifested to me and what the Son of God performed in this thing . . . All these things would have come to pass, as God Almighty lives, had not the Manifesto been given. Therefore, the Son of God felt disposed to have that thing presented to the Church and to the world for purposes in his own mind. The Lord had decreed the establishment of Zion. He had decreed the finishing of this temple. He had decreed that salvation of the living and the dead should be given in these valleys and mountains. And Almighty God decreed that the Devil should not thwart it. If you can understand that, that is the key to it. (April, 1893, at Salt Lake Temple)

SECTION 123
(October 31, 1918; Salt Lake City, Utah)

The word of the Lord, given through Joseph F. Smith, president of the high priesthood of the church. On October 31, 1918, these words officially became part of the Lord's canon, and they were unanimously accepted by the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve Apostles, and the Patriarch of the church:

On the third day of October, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen, I (Joseph F. Smith) sat in my room, pondering over the scriptures; and reflecting upon the great atoning sacrifice which the Son of God made, for the redemption and salvation of the world; and the great and eternal love of Christ made manifest by the Father in sending His Only Begotten Son, in the meridian of time; that how wonderful a gift it is to man, that through His atonement and obedience to the principles of the gospel, mankind can be saved. While I was thus engaged, my mind reverted to the writings of Apostle Peter to the primitive saints scattered abroad, throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and other parts of Asia, where the gospel had been preached after the crucifixion and ascension of the Lord.

I opened the Bible and read the third and fourth chapters of the first epistle of Peter, and as I read, I was greatly impressed, more so than I was before, with the following passages:

> For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometimes were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.
> For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to the men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

As I pondered over these passages, the eyes of my understanding were opened, and the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and I saw the hosts of the dead, both small and great. And there were gathered together in one place an innumerable company of the spirits of the just; who had been faithful in the testimony of Jesus, while they lived in mortality; and who had offered sacrifice in the similitude of the great sacrifice of the Son of God, and had suffered tribulations in their Redeemer's name. All these had departed the mortal life, firm in hope of a glorious resurrection, through the grace of God the Father and his Only Begotten Son, Jesus Christ. I beheld that they were filled with joy and gladness, waiting patiently, in the day of their deliverance, in the day of their resurrection of the just, even in the morning of the first resurrection. They were assembled awaiting the advent of the Son of God into the spirit world, to declare their redemption from the bands of death.

Their sleeping dust was to be restored unto its perfect frame, bone to his bone, and the sinews and the flesh upon them; the spirit and body to be united, never again to be divided, that they might receive the fulness of joy. While this vast multitude waited and conversed, rejoicing in the hour of their deliverance from the chains of death, the Son of God appeared, declaring liberty to the captives who had been faithful; and there he preached to them the everlasting gospel, the doctrine of resurrection and redemption of mankind from the fall and from individual sins, on the condition of repentance. But unto the wicked he did not go, and among the ungodly and unrepentant who defiled themselves in the flesh, his voice was not raised; neither did the rebellious who rejected the testimonies and the warnings of the ancient prophets behold his presence, nor look upon his face. Where these were darkness reigned, but among the righteous there was peace. And the saints rejoiced in their redemption, and bowed their knees to acknowledge the Son of God as their Redeemer and Deliverer from death and chains of hell; their countenances shone, and the radiance from the presence of the Lord rested upon them, and they sang praises to his holy name.

I marveled, for I understood that the Savior spent about three years in his ministry among the Jews and those of the house of Israel, endeavoring to teach them the everlasting gospel and call them unto repentance. And yet, notwithstanding his mighty works, miracles, and proclamations of truth, in great power and authority, there were but a few who hearkened to his voice, and rejoiced in his presence, and received salvation at his hands. But his ministry among those who were dead was limited to the brief time intervening between the crucifixion and his resurrection. And I wondered at the words of Peter — wherein he said that the Son of God preached unto the spirits in prison, who sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah — and how it was possible for him to preach to those spirits and perform the necessary labor in so short a time. And as I wondered, my eyes were opened, and my understanding quickened, and I perceived that the Lord went not in person among the wicked and the disobedient who had rejected the truth, to teach them; but, behold, from among the righteous, he organized his forces and appointed messengers, clothed with power and authority, and commissioned them to go forth and carry the light of the gospel to those that were in darkness, even to all the spirits of men; and thus was the gospel preached to the dead. And the chosen messengers went forth to declare the acceptable day of the Lord and proclaim liberty to the captives who were bound, and unto all who would repent of their sins and receive the gospel. Thus was the gospel preached to those who had died in their sins without a knowledge of truth, or in their transgression having rejected the prophets.

These were taught faith in God and His Son Jesus Christ, repentance from sin, vicarious baptism for the remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands; and other principles of the gospels that were necessary for them to know to prepare themselves, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. And so it was made known among the dead, both small and great, the unrighteous as well as the faithful, that redemption from the bands of death had been wrought through the sacrifice of the Son of God upon the cross. Thus was made known that our Redeemer spent time during his soujourn in the world of spirits, instructing and preparing the faithful spirits of the prophets who had testified of him in the flesh; that they may carry the message of redemption unto all the dead, unto whom he could not go personally; because of their rebellion and transgression, that through the ministration of his servants might also hear his words.

Among the great and mighty ones who were assembled in this vast congregation of the righteous were Father Adam, the ancient of days, and father of all (surviving human races); and our glorious Mother Eve, with many of her faithful daughters, who had lived through the ages and worshiped the true and living God. Abel the first martyr was there, and his brother Seth, one of the mighty ones who was in the express image of his father Adam (official reckoning of the sacred calendar also began during this time, in the year 3761-60 B.C.; and the book of remembrance and generations began to be kept); Noah, who gave warning of the flood; Shem, the great high priest; Abraham the father of the faithful; Isaac, Jacob; and Moses the great lawgiver of Israel, under whom the nation of Israel was established; and Isaiah, who declared by prophecy that the Redeemer was to be anointed to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and to open the prison doors. Moreover, Ezekiel, who was shown in a vision the great valley of dry bones, which were to be clothed upon with flesh, to come forth again in the resurrection of the dead, living souls. Daniel, who foresaw and foretold the establishment of the kingdom of God in the latter days, never again to be given to other people, nor to be gradually destroyed unto the creation of a new one. Elias, who was with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration; and Malachi the prophet who testified of the coming of Elijah — of whom also Moroni spake to prophet Joseph Smith, declaring that he should come before the ushering in of the great and dreadful day of the Lord — were also assembled in this vast congregation of the righteous.

The prophet Elijah was to plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to their fathers; foreshadowing the great work to be done in the temples of the Lord, in the dispensation of the fulness of time, for the redemption of the dead, and the sealing of the children unto their parents; lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse, and utterly wasted at his coming. All these and many more, even the prophets who dwelt among the Nephites and testified of the coming of the Son of God, mingled in the vast assembly and waited for their deliverance; for the dead had looked upon the long absence of their spirits from their bodies as a bondage. These the Lord taught, and gave them power to come forth, after his resurrection from the dead, to enter into his Father's kingdom, there to be crowned with immortality and eternal life; and continue thenceforth their labor as had been promised by the Lord, and be partakers of all blessings which were held in reserve for them who love him.

The prophet Joseph Smith, and my father Hyrum Smith (who was martyred with Joseph Smith in 1844), Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, and other choice spirits who were reserved to come forth in the fulness of time, to take part in laying the foundation of the great millennial day work, which is yet to come; including the building of temples and the performance of ordinances for the redemption of the dead, were also there, in the spirit world. I also observed that there were the noble and great ones who were chosen in the beginning, even foreordained, to be rulers in the eternal church of God; even before they were born, they were foreordained to receive their lessons in the world of spirits by the hosts of angels and ministers, to prepare them to come forth in the due time of the Lord to labor in his vineyard, for the salvation of the souls of men.

I beheld that the faithful elders of this dispensation, when they depart from mortal life, continue their labors in the preaching of the gospel of repentance and redemption through the sacrifice of the Only Begotten Son of God, among those who are in darkness, and under the bondage of sin, in the great world of the spirits of the dead. And the dead who repent will be redeemed, through obedience to the ordinances of the house of God. After they have paid the penalty of their transgressions, and are washed clean, they shall receive a reward according to their works, for they are heirs of salvation. Thus was the vision of the redemption of the dead revealed unto me; and I bear record, and know this record is true, through the blessings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Even so. Amen.

(September 30, 1978; Salt Lake City, Utah)

Since the days of Ham, son of Noah, the holy priesthood of God had been withheld from his descendants and those carrying his blood, for Ham was cursed by Noah. The holy priesthood had been exclusively bestowed upon the descendants of Shem, the great high priest, prince of peace, truth, and righteousness, even Melchizedek or "Malek-Us-Sadek," and also upon the chosen seed of Japheth (Yapheth). After the elapse of nearly 4348 years since the great flood of Ham's time, this curse was removed by the grace and mercy of the Father and His Son; and the word and will of the Lord was revealed unto the Church and the world, under the hand of Spencer W. Kimball, the prophet, seer, revelator, and president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

On September 30, 1978, at the 148th Semiannual General Conference of the Church, the following was presented to the constituent assembly, by N. Eldon Tanner, first counselor of the First Presidency; it was proposed that the assembly (at Salt Lake City, Utah) accept this revelation as the word and will of the Lord; and it was asked — All in favor please signify by raising your hand; any opposed by the same sign. The vote to sustain the foregoing motion was unanimous in the affirmative.

In early June of this year, the First Presidency announced that a revelation had been received by President Spencer W. Kimball, extending priesthood and temple blessings to all worthy male members of the Church. President Kimball has asked that I advise the conference that after he had received this revelation, which came to him after extended meditation and prayer in the sacred room of the holy temple, he presented it to his counselors, who accepted it and approved it. It was then presented to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, who unanimously approved it, and it was subsequently presented to all other General Authorities, who likewise approved it unanimously. President Kimball has asked that I now read this letter:

> June 8, 1978
> To All General and Local Priesthood Officers of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints throughout the World:
>
> Dear Brethren:
>
> As we have witnessed the expansion of the work of the Lord over the earth, we have been grateful that people of many nations have responded to the message of the restored gospel, and have joined the Church in ever-increasing numbers. This, in turn, has inspired us with a desire to extend every worthy member of the Church all the privileges and blessings which the gospel affords.
>
> Aware of the promises made by the prophets and presidents of the Church who have preceded us, that at some time, in God's eternal plan, all of our brethren who are worthy may receive the priesthood; and witnessing the faithfulness of those from whom the priesthood has been withheld, we have pleaded long and earnestly in behalf of these, our faithful brethren; spending many hours in the Upper Room of the Temple, supplicating the Lord for divine guidance.
>
> He has heard our prayers, and by revelation has confirmed that the long-promised day has come when every faithful, worthy man in the Church may receive the holy priesthood; with power to exercise its divine authority, and enjoy with his loved ones every blessing that flows therefrom, including the blessings of the temple. Accordingly, all worthy male members of the Church may be ordained to the priesthood without regard to race or color. Priesthood leaders are instructed to follow the policy of carefully interviewing all candidates for ordination to either the Aaronic or Melchizedek Priesthoods to insure that they meet the established standards of worthiness.

We declare with soberness that the Lord has now made known his will for the blessings of all his children throughout the earth who will hearken to the voice of his authorized servants, and prepare themselves to receive every blessing of the gospel.

Sincerely yours,

Spencer W. Kimball
N. Eldon Tanner
Marion G. Romney

The First Presidency

The Twelve Great Latter-day Prophets

Now, a brief background into the twelve presidents of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which came after the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, Jr., the fallen prophet of the Lord; from the time of Brigham Young (1844), until the current president of the Church Ezra Taft Benson (1990), is as follows:

1. Brigham Young

(the colonizer, pioneer, prophet, seer, and revelator; President of the Church from December 27, 1847 to August 29, 1877; led the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve, 1844 till 1847.)

Brigham Young was the ninth child born to Abigail Howe Young and John Young, on June 1, 1801, in Whittingham, Vermont. When he was fourteen years of age, his mother died, whose religious influence on him and his brothers and sisters was quite profound, emphasizing the value of work and religion based on simple faith. These are the words of Brigham Young concerning his mother:

> . . . My mother, while she lived, taught her children all the time to honor the name of the Father and Son, and to reverence the Holy Book. She said: Read it, observe its precepts and apply them to your lives as far as you can. Do everything that is good; do nothing that is evil; and if you see any persons in distress, administer to their wants; never suffer anger to arise in your bosoms, for if you do, you may be overcome by evil.

At the age of twenty-one Brigham Young had matured to manhood, and was trained as a carpenter, joiner, painter, and glazier. At twenty-two, he joined the Methodist Reformed Church to satisfy in his soul the gnawing for Spiritual food; but he was not able to do so in that church. At the age of twenty-three, he married Miriam Works, in 1824. In the spring of 1829, Brigham moved to Mendon, New York, fifteen miles from Palmyra.

In the fall of 1831, five elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints came to the home of Phineas Young, the brother of Brigham, in Victor, New York. Brigham and his close friend Heber C. Kimball listened to these missionaries, and had their own testimonies concerning the truthfulness of the restored gospel. They were so uplifted in the Spirit by this experience, that during the January of the following year, these two men traveled through snow, ice, and across rivers to Columbia, Pennsylvania, that they might hear the missionaries again. Now fully convinced, Brigham Young returned to Mendon, but shortly after journeyed to Canada on his first mission to report his knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to his brother Joseph Young, even before he was baptized into the Church. He returned to Mendon in March of 1832, and on April 14, 1832, he was baptized, confirmed a member of the Church, and ordained an elder.

Five months after his baptism, Brigham Young met Joseph Smith, in September of 1832; and just a few weeks before, he had experienced deep sorrow, when his wife Miriam died, leaving him with two little girls. Shortly after the burial of his wife, Brigham Young, ladened with the grief of the loss of a loved one, found a home for his daughters in the home of Heber C. Kimball, and journeyed to Kirtland, Ohio, to meet Joseph Smith, the prophet of the Church at that time. These are the words of Brigham Young concerning his meeting with Joseph Smith:

> . . . We found the prophet (Joseph Smith), and two or three of his brothers, chopping and hauling wood. Here my joy was full at the privilege of shaking the hands of the prophet of God; and receiving the sure testimony, by the Spirit of prophecy, that he was all that a man could believe him to be, as a true prophet.
> In the evening a few of the brethren came in, and we conversed together upon the things of the Kingdom. He called > upon me to pray; in my prayer I spoke in tongues. As soon as we arose from our knees the brethren flocked around him, and asked his opinion concerning the gift of tongues that was upon me. He told them that it was the pure Adamic language. Some said to him they expected he would condemn the gift brother Brigham had, but he said: "No, it is of God, and the time will come when brother Brigham Young will preside over this Church." The latter part of this conversation was in my absence.

During the winter of 1832-33, Brigham Young traveled to Canada on a mission, in company of his brother, Joseph Young. This time Brigham went to Canada after his baptism. Together they traveled some two hundred and fifty miles in snow a foot and a half deep, with a foot of mud under it. They traveled, preached and baptized forty-five people in the dead of winter. When they left, the Saints gave them five York shillings with which to bear their expenses, two hundred and fifty miles on foot; and one sister gave him a pair of woolen mittens, two-thirds worn out. However, Brigham worked mostly with his hands and supported himself; and the hardships accompanying this mission left a deep impression upon his mind.

In the spring of 1833, Brigham Young went again on a mission to Canada. This time he baptized twenty people and organized several branches of the Church. At the end of this mission, he gathered together many of those that were baptized into the Church and led them to Kirtland. This was his first experience in leading a group of Saints in exodus. Then in February of 1834, Brigham Young married Mary Ann Angell, a recent convert to the Church, a woman of the same disposition as his deceased wife Miriam. And in the selfsame year Brigham joined in the two-thousand mile march of Zion's camp from Ohio to Missouri and return. From this experience the Lord acquired a body of Saints who had offered their lives an acceptable sacrifice unto the Lord. And Brigham had a good opportunity to learn about the organized mass exodus of the children of Israel; as in the days of old, when under the supervision of Moses and Aaron, they had left Egypt, crossed the Red Sea, and camped in the Sinai Peninsula for forty years.

In February of 1835, Brigham Young was chosen as one of the members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. From that time onward until 1844, when the mantle of the prophet fell upon his shoulders, he became the Lord's spokesman on the earth. He played several roles in defending the reputation of the fallen prophet Joseph Smith, Jr., during the turbulent days of the Kirtland apostasy, until they were forced to flee for their lives to Missouri; organizing the exodus of Israel from Missouri to Illinois following the exterminating order; suffering with the Saints during the early days in Nauvoo; and laboring as a missionary during the days of the tremendous growth of the Church in Great Britain, between 1839 and 1841. His administration, which lasted thirty-three years, is the longest in the history of the Latter-day church, and a most colorful one, too.

When Joseph Smith, Jr., was martyred, Brigham Young led the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve, at the age of forty-three, in 1844. President Young became known for his administrative abilities; and under his direction the headquarters of the Church was moved from a city-state in the East to an empire in the West. Members of the Church colonized the Great Basin desert, and through irrigation and hard work they made it to "blossom as a rose." Several thousands of pioneers left their homes and made their way to this newly created Zion in the West. One temple was completed and others were planned, including the great Salt Lake Temple. Missions were opened in many nations of the world, and thousands of people left their homeland to colonize Utah.

It is said that one of the causes of the expulsion of the Saints from Missouri in 1833 and 1839, besides the character of Joseph Smith, Jr., was the fear on the part of the other settlers that the Saints might give the Indians a false sense of power and pride. The Saints were accused of keeping a constant communication with the Indian tribes of the frontier; and declaring from the pulpit, that the Indians were a part of God's chosen people, and were decreed by heaven to inherit this land in common with themselves. In Nauvoo, Illinois, Indian agents continued to be suspicious of the Saints because of the accusations made by the apostates. On one occasion, several Potawatomi chiefs visited Joseph Smith to discuss their grievances. After a lengthy "powwow," the agent Henry King, who interpreted for the prophet, reported to Iowa's governor John Chambers, that: It seems evident, from all that I can learn . . . that a grand conspiracy is about to be entered into between the Mormons and the Indians to destroy all white settlements on the Frontier. And when the Saints were expelled from Illinois in 1846, they fully expected that in their new setting they would be able to render service in behalf of the Indians. Thereupon the Church leaders issued this statement concerning the forest people, their Indian (or Lamanite) brethren:

> The sons and daughters of Zion will soon be required to devote a portion of their time in instructing the children of the forest. For they must be educated, and instructed in all the arts of civil life, as well as the Gospel. They must be clothed, fed, and instructed in the principles and practices of virtue, modesty, temperance, cleanliness, industry, mechanical arts, manners, customs, dress, music; and all things calculated in their nature to refine, purify, exalt and glorify them, as the sons and daughters of the royal house of Israel . . . The despised and degraded son of the forest, who has wandered in dejection and sorrow, and suffered reproach, shall then . . . stand forth in manly dignity . . . His heart shall expand with knowledge . . . and his mind shall comprehend the vast creations of his God and His eternal purpose of redemption, glory, and exaltation.

And when the Saints arrived at the Great Basin, they established their settlements near the native people; they followed a conciliatory policy, and met in council with the chiefs of local tribes and secured their consent to settle, although they did not pay for their land after the manner of William Penn, it is written. At this time, there were four Indian cultures prevalent in the region. In the Wasatch Mountain and Uinta Basin areas to the east the Shoshone and Ute Indians practised a similar culture to that of the Indians of the Great Plains, based primarily on the buffalo. In the south dwelt the Hopi with primarily a settled agricultural economy of corn, beans, squash, and small game; and the nomadic Navaho and Apache with their herds of sheep and goats, were silversmiths and makers of rugs. In the western desert region, the Gosiute and Paiute obtained their meager existence from roots, berries, insects, and occasionally rabbit or antelope.

The Saints promised to give the Indians whatsoever they could spare of their livestock and produce, during their periodic visits; in return, the Indians promised not to molest the settlers nor to raid their livestock. In June of 1849, Brigham Young met with chief Wakara (Walker in English) and twelve Ute Indians to discuss the matter. After Wakara had filled his pipe, he offered the Lord the first smoke, pointing the pipe and stepping toward the sun. He then smoked it and passed it around the ring by the right hand to H. C. Kimball; after he had smoked it, by the left hand it was passed to the rest of the company, ending with the Indians. Thus an agreement was reached permitting the Saints to settle the Sanpete Valley in central Utah. Although conflicts over land, water, and natural tendencies of men prevailed, the Saints from the time of their settlement of the Great Basin in 1847, until the removal of the Indians to the reservations in eastern Utah and other places in the late 1860's, maintained the following policy toward their Indian (or Lamanite) brethren, in the words of Brigham Young:

> I have uniformly pursued a friendly course of policy toward them, feeling convinced that independent of the question of exercising humanity toward so degraded and ignorant a race of people, it was manifestly more economical and less expensive to feed and clothe, than to fight them . . .
> I wish to impress all with the necessity of treating with kindness, and to refrain from harboring the revengeful, vindictive feeling that many indulge in. I am convinced that as long as we harbor in us such feelings toward them, so long they will be our enemies, and the Lord will suffer them to afflict us . . . Why should men have disposition to kill a destitute, naked Indian, who may steal a shirt or a horse and think it no harm, when they never think of meting out a like retribution to a white man who steals, although he has been taught better from infancy? . . . We exhort you to feed and clothe them so far as it lies > in your power. Never turn them away hungry from your door; teach them the arts of husbandry, bear with them in all patience and long suffering, and never consider their lives as equivalent for petty stealing.

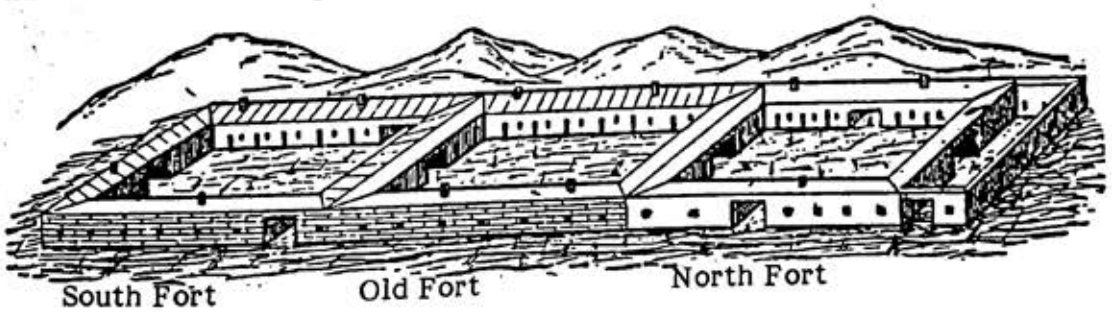
The first communities of the Saints were generally settled in a fort-like arrangement, with a wall around each village; as a protective measure against the sudden attacks of the Indian bands. The territorial militia, called the Nauvoo Legion, was composed of the male members of the community over eighteen years of age. Three days after the Saints had arrived in the Salt Lake Valley, the Indians of the Ute and Shoshone tribes began to visit the camp, begging, and also stealing; and trying to trade for guns and ammunition. And a fight broke out between the Shoshone and the Ute, when a Ute was killed by the Shoshone for stealing one of their horses. Thereupon, Brigham Young instructed the Saints that they should trade no more with the Indians, who manifested a spirit of jealousy. It was for this reason, as a means of protection against Indian raids and thefts, that a fort, or stockade, was built on one of the city ten-acre squares. At a meeting held on August 1, 1847, it was decided that an enclosure should be built of logs and sundried bricks (or adobe). The Saints immediately set to work, each to his own assigned task. On August 10, the work began on the stockade. The walls were twenty-seven inches thick and nine feet high on the outer side.



It was built as a continuation of huts joined together in rectangular form around the outside of the ten acres on which it stood. The east side was built of logs, and the three other sides of adobe walls; the roofs were slanted, but slightly inward, and were made of brush covered with mud. Each house had a loop hole facing the outside, and a door and windows facing the interior. The main entrances, on the east and west sides of the stockade, were guarded by heavy gates which were locked at night. Later, two additional blocks were joined to the original fort, one on the north and one to the south; these were similar in construction as the old fort.

A special conference of the Church was held on Sunday, August 22, 1847, in the Salt Lake Valley. There it was decided to fence the city, and such portions of the adjacent lands as might be deemed proper for cultivation, thus affording protection from cattle. Brigham Young declared: We can raise thousands of bushels of grain next season for ourselves and also some to sustain those who shall come after us; I would rather fence a block of ten acres, and have a crop, than plant a hundred acres for the cattle to destroy. It was also decided at this conference that a presidency and a high council be appointed to preside over the Saints in the valley. Elder John Smith, uncle of Joseph Smith, Jr., who was at that time on the plains, was chosen as president. And President Brigham Young moved that, We call this place The Great Salt Lake City, of the Great Basin of North America; and that the post office be called, The Great Basin Post Office. Elder Heber C. Kimball moved that the river running west of the settlement be called, The Western Jordan. The names of several creeks were also given at that time, but the streams farther to the south were not named.

The unpredictable nature of the Indian raids and attacks brought upon the Saints the necessity to devise benevolent yet self-protective measures; as a result, these four practises were carried out: First, the Fort and the territorial militia, the Nauvoo Legion, provided some protection against the sneak attacks of the marauding groups of Indians. Second, the Saints appointed a number of persons who had an understanding of Indian language and culture to conduct all the trading for the community of the Saints. This kept the Indians from circulating in the villages and eliminated competitive bargaining among the Indians and the Latter-day Saints. Third, a community storehouse, or tithing house, was maintained by each village to which the Saints brought one-tenth of their production of calves, colts, grain, flour, butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables, and other commodities. Stores of these could be drawn upon in presenting gifts to visiting groups of Indians. Each tithing house contained an Indian Account, that detailed each item drawn against it, the names of the Indians receiving it, the date and the value. (For example, in 1864, the Indian Account of Cache Valley, Utah, Tithing House showed the disbursements during the spring and summer of that year of more than a ton of flour, four beeves, and thirty bushels of vegetables. And in the summer of 1866, when a band of about one thousand Shoshone Indians camped near the settlement of the Saints in Ogden Valley, Utah, the local bishop invited them to the public square to receive their presents. After they had sung and danced and performed a mock fight, they received from the community four beeves, nine sheep, several sacks of flour, some seventy bushels of potatoes, carrots, beets, and turnips. Fourth, the women of many wards and settlements were organized into an Indian Relief Society, which met once a week to make articles of clothing and bedding for the Indian women and children. And in agricultural settlements, they arranged with their husbands for Indian women to glean the harvest in the grain fields of the Saints.)

In 1849, Timpanagos Utes from Utah Valley raided the range in Tooele Valley; but some were killed and many fled to the mountains. In 1853, however, Chief Wakara (or Walker), the powerful Ute chief, who had welcomed the Saints, and had also been baptized and ordained an elder, found himself unable to control the young Indians, aroused by their passions to retaliate against the white invaders. During these raids the Saints lost no women or children, but twelve men; two met death in guarding the community, and the remainder were killed because they failed to obey the precautions given them by their military superiors. Approximately four hundred head of livestock were also lost. On July 25, 1853, Brigham Young wrote the following letter to chief Wakara (Walker), to appeal to his sense of right, it is said:

> Great Salt Lake City, July 25, 1853
>
> Captain Walker:
>
> I send you some tobacco for you to smoke in the mountains when you get lonesome. You are a fool for fighting your best friends, for we are the best friends, and the only friends, that you have in the world. Everybody else would kill you if they could get a chance. If you get hungry send some friendly Indian down to the settlements and we will give you some beef-cattle and flour. If you are afraid of the tobacco which I send you, you can let some of your prisoners (Saints) try it first and then you will know that it is good. When you get good natured again I would like to see you. Don't you think you should be ashamed? You know that I have always been your best friend.
>
> Brigham Young

And this gesture of kindness paid off, for Wakara was now able to gather the various old Indian chiefs together for a council at Nephi. When Brigham Young arrived with his men on the road opposite Wakara's camp, he sent a delegation to inform the chief that he had arrived and would be ready to give him audience. Wakara sent back word that if Young wanted to see him, he would have to come to the Indian camp. To this

Brigham Young said: If the mountain will not come to Mohammed, Mohammed will go to the mountain! And he gave orders for the troop to proceed to Wakara's camp. After the ceremony of shaking hands, the chiefs began to speak, one by one. The first said, I am for war; Mericats (whites in general) and Mormonee (Saints) no friends to Utahs (Utes), said the second. When most had spoken, some for peace and some for war, president Brigham Young asked Wakara to speak, but he shook his head, saying: No, I got no heart to speak. No can talk today. Brigham Young then handed him a pipe. Wakara took it, gave one or two puffs, and told him to smoke; which the governor did, and passed it around to all the company.

Then president Young began to speak, saying that he wanted to be friends with all the Indians, and loved them like a father; and would always give them plenty of clothes and good food. He then presented them with gifts he had brought along for this purpose, namely: sixteen head of cattle, blankets and clothing, toys and utensils, arms and ammunition. Wakara then spoke, saying: Wakara has heard all the talk of the good Mormon chief. Wakara no like go to war . . . Wakara no want to fight more. Wakara talk with Great Spirit; Great Spirit say, Make peace. Wakara love Mormon chief, he is a good man. If Indian kill white man again, Wakara make Indian howl. The peace pipe was then passed around to seal the agreement; after all the party took the smoke, the meeting was adjourned.

Moreover, the Saints also established Indian farms to teach them the art of agriculture and assist them in other operations. The supervisors of the Saints, called Indian farmers, assisted them in raising their crops and livestock, and improving their quality and yield. Outpost missions were also established, each consisting of thirty to forty men; there agriculturist missionaries were called to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to their Indian brethren, and teach them all they needed to know to become self-sufficient. They lived among the Indians, spoke their language, and sometimes intermarried. President Brigham Young gave the following injunction to these missionaries:

> Beloved Brethren:
> We wish you to devote your time and energies to the great duty of instructing the Lamanites (Indians) in the knowledge of the Gospel. You will need to be wise servants and harmless as doves, preserving an unblemished integrity towards them in all your words and actions. Teach them by precept and example, to labor and cultivate the earth; teach them to respect each other's rights; to cease the shedding of blood, and to promote peace. Teach them to know the value of their time, and how to appropriate it in such a manner as to make themselves self-sustaining and independent. Be ye not discouraged if the work progress slowly, but remember that if you spend a whole lifetime, and by so doing save one soul of the seed of Abraham, your > joy will be very great; and how much greater indeed will be your joy if your ministry should result in the salvation of many souls.

But there were other hostilities towards the Saints by the federal Indian agents; for the federal agents saw the efforts of the Latter-day Saints as tampering with their's. There truly was a great deal of hostility and suspicion towards the Saints, for the secular government had brought about public allegations against plural marriage and political sovereignty. Many Indians believed that the Big Chief was in Salt Lake City, rather than in Washington D.C. But the Indians maintained their natural affinity towards the Saints, for they regarded each other as their natural kinsmen; and both practised collective herding, shared with the poor, and had similar moral beliefs. In the year 1865, a treaty was signed by which Utah chieftains conveyed the title of their land in the settled areas of the territory; in exchange the Indian tribes were alloted land in the Uintah country of eastern Utah, and they were warded off into a reservation. And this removal of most of the Indians from the neighborhoods of the Saints was complete by 1869, when president Ulysses S. Grant's Quaker policy of making the Indians wards of the nation took effect.

Brigham Young, as Joseph Smith, Jr., and most other presidents of the Church, was a man of the world, not a typical prophet of the Lord of the nation of Israel; more concerned with the glory and things of the world, rather than of the Hereafter and of the Spirit. Four years before his death, Brigham wrote this to the editor of the New York Herald:

> My whole life is devoted to the Almighty's service; and while I regret that my mission is not better understood by the world, the time will come when I will be understood, and I leave to futurity the judgement of my labors and their results, as they shall become manifest.

Moreover, Brigham Young's name, like that of Joseph Smith's, has truly become known for good and evil throughout the world. Today, one of the largest universities, in Provo, Utah, bears his name; as does the community of Brigham City in Utah. In 1950, his statue was placed in the nation's Capitol Building in Washington, D.C. And during World War II, the United States government, which had once sent an army against him, honored Brigham Young by naming one of the liberty ships in the American navy after him. And many despise him also as a polygamist and friend of the Indians.

These are partial highlights of Brigham Young's life (1801-1877 A.D.):

1801 - Born in Whittingham, Windham County, Vermont on June 1, 1801.
1815 - Brigham's mother taken home (dies), when he was fourteen; and he begins to earn his living, and eventually becomes a carpenter.

2. John Taylor

(the missionary, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from October 10, 1880 to July 25, 1887; led the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve from 1877 till 1880)

John Taylor was born November 1, 1808, in Great Britain; he was some seven years younger than Brigham Young. While yet a boy of eleven, John worked diligently on the farm of his father's estate. At the age of fourteen, according to the custom of the land, he chose a vocation of a cooper, one who makes barrels and casks, to earn a living. A year later his employer failed in business, and he returned home. At the age of fifteen John chose the vocation of a woodturner, a craftsman skilled in the use of a lathe. A descendant of the great family of the Flemings of Europe, the coopers.

Although in his infancy he had been baptized into the Church of England, at the age of sixteen, John heard the Methodist doctrine and was deeply touched by it. During the last half of his teen years, he spent many hours searching diligently for greater light, and prayerfully sought the Lord's guidance. And at the age of seventeen, while walking with a friend on the way to his first preaching assignment in the Methodist Church, young John Taylor stopped and said: I have a strong impression on my mind, that I have to go to America to preach the Gospel. He also beheld a vision of an angel in the heavens, holding a trumpet in his mouth, sounding a message to the nations; although he did not fully understand the significance of this manifestation, he later grasped its meaning.

In 1832, John Taylor followed his parents from England to Toronto, Canada, pursuing his vocation and continuing his activity in the Methodist Church. And in the new land he was chosen as a class leader of the church, which opened the way to continue preaching and teaching in that sect. It was during this time, as a class leader in the Methodist Church, he became acquainted with Leonora Cannon, who had come to Canada as a companion to the wife of Mr. Mason, the private secretary of the Governor of Canada. It is said that she had a mind and will of her own, and when John proposed to her the first time, she rejected his offer. Later, she saw herself in a dream as his companion and accepted his marriage proposal. Another advantage he had gained through his class leadership and preaching was that he was brought in contact with some of the other fine young minds in the Methodist Church near Toronto.

From these contacts a group was formed which met several times a week to search the Scriptures and investigate more thoroughly the doctrines of various other Christian sects of that time. As a result of this group study, they began to discover the many differences between the facts and parable of Christ and the doctrine of the Methodist church. As a result, a special conference was held in which the findings of John Taylor and his group were examined by the leaders of the Methodist church in Canada. And they laid down this ruling: Brethren, we esteem you as brethren and gentlemen; we believe you are sincere, but we cannot fellowship your doctrine. Wishing, however, to concede all we can, we would say, You may believe your doctrines if you will not teach them; and we will still retain you in fellowship as members, leaders and preachers. Unable to accept these conditions, John and his friends were removed from their callings, but remained members of the church. And they continued to seek truth in Toronto through prayer and study.

In the meantime, in Kirtland, Ohio, the Lord was preparing through Parley P. Pratt an answer to the prayers of John Taylor. One night after Parley P. Pratt had retired to bed, Heber C. Kimball, a fellow member of the Quorum of the Twelve, and others came to elder Pratt's home requesting him to get up and receive a blessing elder Kimball felt inspired to give him. Elder Pratt had been married to his wife for ten years, but his wife remained barren. Elder Kimball conferred this blessing upon brother Pratt:

> Brother Parley, thy wife shall be healed from this hour, and shall bear a son, . . . He shall do a great work on earth in ministering the Word, and teaching the children of men. Arise, therefore, and go forth in the ministry, nothing > doubting. Take no thought for your debts, nor the necessaries of life; for the Lord will supply you with abundant means for all things.

>
> Thou shalt go to Upper Canada, even to the city of Toronto, the capital, and there thou shalt find a people prepared for the fulness of the Gospel; and they shall receive thee, and thou shalt organize the Church among them, and it shalt be brought to knowledge of the truth and shall be filled with joy. And from the things growing out of this mission, shall the fulness of the Gospel spread into England, and cause a great work to be done in that land.

As a result, Parley P. Pratt journeyed to Toronto in the early spring of 1836, carrying with him a letter of introduction addressed to John Taylor from Moses Nickerson. When elder Pratt reached Toronto, Mr. Taylor and others appeared to be apprehensive and suspicious, for slanderous reports concerning the Latter-day Saints had preceded the young apostle. And local church officials would not let elder Pratt use their chapels to deliver his message, nor the city officials give him access to a public building. Thereupon, in discouragement, Parley decided to leave the city. Having made this decision in his mind, he called at the home of John Taylor to say farewell. And while he was there, he met a Mrs. Walton who was moved to let him use her home as a meeting place; she also offered to lodge and feed him. In the house of this kind woman elder Pratt began to hold weekly meetings.

Shortly after, elder Pratt was invited to speak at the meetings held by John Taylor and his friends. From now on John truly began to investigate the claims of the Latter-day Saints. And he wrote down the contents of eight sermons of Parley P. Pratt, so that he might compare the teachings of the missionary with those of the scriptures. For three weeks he followed elder Pratt from place to place, listening to each sermon and examining each in the light of the scriptures. Every night John prayed in earnest to be guided properly; and on May 4, 1836, he and his wife Leonora were baptized. Soon after, John was ordained an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and began to preach the Gospel in America, in fulfillment of the revelation he had received when he was a youth in England. With the work of elder Taylor, the Church began to grow so rapidly in Canada that Orson Hyde and Orson Pratt of the Quorum of the Twelve were sent to assist Parley P. Pratt. Throughout the summer they diligently continued to spread the Word; and in the autumn, when the apostles returned to Kirtland, John Taylor was placed in charge of all the work of the Church in Canada.

In March, 1837, elder Taylor visited Kirtland and met Joseph Smith for the first time. And at a meeting in the Kirtland Temple, from which Joseph Smith was absent, Warren Parrish and others made violent attack upon the character of the president of the Church. In response to this, John Taylor stood up in defiance of the apostate, and reminded them that all of them owed understanding of God to the prophet. During his stay in Kirtland, elder Taylor continued to defend the character of the president, Joseph Smith. And while returning to Toronto, the party in which elder Taylor was traveling arrived on the sabbath day near Queenstown. At the suggestion of elder Taylor, the party retired to a secluded spot under a cliff below Niagara Falls before seeking an opportunity to preach in town that day. While engaged in prayer near the great falls, John Taylor spoke in tongues for the first time, as the Spirit of the Lord rested upon him.

And in Kirtland, Ohio, the apostate took deep offense at the support of elder Taylor in defending the character of Joseph Smith, Jr. It is said that Doctor Sampson Avard was sent by this group to Canada with false credentials, stating that he was to take charge of the branches of the Church there. Not suspecting anything, elder Taylor turned over to Avard the leadership of the Church in Canada. But, Joseph Smith, Jr., and other brethren toured Canada in August of 1837, and the deception was uncovered. Avard was severely rebuked; and John Taylor was ordained a high priest, and reappointed to preside over the Church in Canada. During the fall of 1837, he was requested to settle in Far West, Missouri, some twelve hundred miles from Toronto. He traveled by sled the few hundred miles to Kirtland, and found the prosperous, thriving town he had visited earlier that year taken over by the apostate. All the leaders of the Church had moved with Joseph Smith to Missouri. Heart-broken and fatigued, elder Taylor and his party moved on toward Missouri.

It is said that, at DeWitt, Missouri, Taylor's party received their first taste of organized violence. About one hundred and fifty mobocrats threatened the lives of the Church members there. Later, John Taylor wrote of this experience as follows:

> This was the first mob I had ever seen . . . and the whole affair was new to me, especially when I considered the kind of officers they had. I had up to this time looked upon the Gospel ministers as messengers of peace; here they came not only in a war-like capacity, but as leaders of an armed mob -- a gang of marauders and free-booters, with the avowed object of driving peaceful citizens --men, women and children -- from their homes . . .
> I had no arms . . . and considered that I needed none in a Christian civilized land; but I found I had been laboring under a mistake. The civilization here was of a very low order, and the Christianity of a very questionable character. I therefore threw off the sling and bandages from my lame arm (having broken it in an accident while on the way to Missouri), supressed my repugnance to fighting, borrowed a gun, bought a brace of pistols; and prepared myself at least for defensive measures.

Thus elder Taylor was able to continue his journey to Far West, arriving there during the first part of October, 1838. And as he was helping other Saints to make their way to Far West, the persecutions at Crooked River, Haun's Mill and other places increased; and were followed by the exterminating order which was issued the month after his arrival in Missouri. It was during these days of confusion and hardship that John Taylor was ordained an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, at the age of thirty years, on December 19, 1838. The call, however, had been given by the Lord in July of 1838, but circumstances had prevented the ordination until December. And, for Joseph Smith was in prison in Liberty, Missouri, at the time of his ordination, it was performed by two members of the Quorum of the Twelve, Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball.

Shortly after his ordination as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, the lot fell on elder Taylor to lead a group of Saints in the exodus from Missouri to Illinois. Although Brigham Young and other leaders of the Church had prepared the Saints for migration, the increased persecution had forced elder Young to flee Missouri with his family in February. Therefore, the main body of the Saints left for Illinois under the leadership of John Taylor and Heber C. Kimball. This experience would prepare elder Taylor to lead another migration of Saints westward to the valley of the Great Salt Lake, some eight years later.

On July 8, 1838, the call of the Lord was given to elder Taylor and the members of the Quorum of the Twelve, as follows:

> Let a conference be held immediately; and let the Twelve be organized, and men appointed in place of those who are fallen. (For, by now Joseph Smith, Jr., and his close associates were not only condemned by men and angels, but also by the Lord Himself.)
>
> Next spring let them depart to go over the great waters, and there promulgate my Gospel, the fulness thereof, and bear record of my name. And let them take leave of my Saints in the city of Far West, on the twenty-sixth day of April next, on the building spot of my house, saith the Lord.

The last of the Saints had left Far West on April 20, 1839, six days before the Lord's appointed time. Many of the leaders of the Church were in prison, and some, including Thomas B. Marsh, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, had apostatized from the Church. Yet others remained true to their Faith during persecutions and hardships. Five of the apostles, elders Young, Kimball, Taylor, Page, and Pratt, made their way by different routes to the temple site in Far West on the appointed day, and there before dawn transacted some of the Church business. Two more apostles were ordained, namely Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith; making a total of seven apostles in attendance. A cornerstone was laid for the proposed Far West Temple, and the apostles took leave of their brethren from the building-spot of the Lord's house for their mission over the great waters.

Uncertainty and doubt prevailed among the members of the Church, and elder Taylor's help was needed in moving the Saints to more permanent quarters in Illinois. With the rest of the apostles, elder Taylor returned to Quincy, where they met Joseph Smith, Jr., on May 3, who had escaped from his captors. And he advised the Saints to move to Commerce, Illinois; which was later to become Nauvoo. As a result John Taylor moved his family to the vicinity of Commerce. Very few lodgings existed in Commerce at this time, so the Taylors and others settled across the Mississippi River in Montrose, Iowa Territory; where they found lodging in old log army barracks left from the Black Hawk War of a few years before. Later, the Taylors moved to Nauvoo and helped in the building efforts of the Saints; here he was also to have the opportunity of being in close contact with Joseph Smith, and to perform healings during the malaria epidemic.

These early days in Nauvoo were full of hardship, making it all the more difficult for elder Taylor to leave for Britain. Nevertheless, on the eighth of August, 1839, he did leave Illinois for England; and wrote the following words concerning his family:

> The thought of the hardship they had just endured . . . the uncertainty of their continuing in the house they then occupied -- and that only a solitary room -- the prevalence of disease, the poverty of the brethren, threats of the mobs, together with the uncertainty of what might happen during my absence, produced feelings of no ordinary character . . . But the thought of going forth at the command of the God of Israel to revisit my native land, to unfold the principles of eternal truths and make known the things that God had revealed for the salvation of the world, overcame every other feeling.

The Church of the Saints had been introduced in the British Isles nearly three years before the arrival of elder Taylor and his companions. And the local ministers who had seen some of their best church members leave their congregations to join the restored church of Christ in America had grown bitter, and began to oppose the missionaries whenever or wherever they could. This experience in the mission field would provide elder Taylor with another taste of the organized opposition he would encounter when he would become the president of the Church, some forty years later.

Often apostle Taylor met in debate with ministers older and wiser than he, but because of his testimony of the Gospel, he defended the truth with all his heart, might and strength. When others wrote against the Church, he countered them with his testimony; when others spoke against the Church, he sought opportunity to reply in public; and those who tried to destroy the work of the Lord in England, found elder Taylor to be their perfect match. And through his efforts Ireland and the Isle of Man were opened to the preaching of the Gospel. The latter part of elder Taylor's mission was spent in the seaport city of Liverpool, where he devoted himself to assisting the Saints in their preparations to gather to Nauvoo.

And, although Joseph Smith, Jr., had advised the apostles to say nothing to the Saints about the gathering, the Spirit of the Lord often communicated to the migrating Saints that it was so, although no word was uttered by the apostles. Elder Taylor found that time and time again the Saints were receiving dreams that the gathering was taking place. After helping more than eight hundred Saints migrate to Zion, and having served a rewarding mission of one and one-half years, elder Taylor followed them. Returning home, he found the conditions somewhat different than that of the mission field; for now the struggle involved the building of a city worthy of the Saints of God. Nauvoo had already been partially built before the Twelve returned, the Saints having given themselves wholly to its construction. Much dedication and self-sacrifice also prevailed among the women, especially Leonora, elder Taylor's bride of his youth; who, broken in exhaustion, lay on her sick bed, her life slowly ebbing away. Immediately elder Taylor called upon twenty elders to come to his home, and he asked them to unite their faith with his while he pleaded with the Lord for the life of his wife. As a result, Leonora was raised from her affliction and served as a companion to her husband for more than a quarter of a century. And she was to be given support and help as a companion to John Taylor, the future prophet of the Lord.

Shortly after his return, the principle of celestial marriage, and doctrine of plural wives, was revealed unto him. These are elder Taylor's impressions on this subject:

> . . . The Twelve were told (by the President) that if this law was not practised, if they would not enter into this covenant, then the kingdom of God could not go one step further. Now, we did not feel like preventing the kingdom of God from going forward. We professed to be the Apostles of the Lord, and did not feel like putting ourselves in a position to retard the progress of the kingdom of God. The revelation says that, All those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same. Now, that is not my word, I did not make it. It was the prophet of God who revealed that to us in Nauvoo; and I bear witness of this solemn fact before God, that He did reveal this sacred principle to me and others of the Twelve. And in this revelation it is stated that it is the will and law of God that, All those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same.
>
> I had always entertained strict ideas of virtue, and felt as a married man, that this was to me, outside of this principle, an appalling thing to do. The idea of going . . . It was a thing calculated to stir up feelings from the innermost depths of the human soul. I had always entertained the strictest regard of chastity . . . Hence with the feelings

> I had entertained, nothing but a knowledge of God, and the revelations of God, and the truth of them, could have induced me to embrace such a principle as this.

Thus, within two years from the time he returned from his mission, out of love of God and His laws, elder Taylor entered into plural marriage. In February, 1842, he was chosen as associate editor of the Times and Seasons, the main newspaper of the Church. After serving about a year, he was made editor-in-chief, filling the position which had been held by Joseph Smith, Jr. He also became editor and proprietor of another newspaper, the Nauvoo Neighbor. It was also John Taylor who recommended and fought for the nomination of Joseph Smith for president of the United States. Through the two newspapers, he defended the character of Joseph Smith, the president of the Church. In his zeal, elder Taylor, as a member of the Nauvoo City Council, proposed that the press of the Nauvoo Expositor be destroyed, because of its printing of the facts concerning the character of Joseph Smith, the prophet of the Church. And when the press was destroyed, its owners and the opponents of Joseph Smith fled the city in fear; and began to proclaim the truths concerning the fallen prophet of the Lord, and how their lives had been threatened by the hirelings of Church leaders, and how their properties had been destroyed. In the meantime, elder Taylor used both of the newspapers to defend the character of Joseph Smith. And when the mobs began burning these newspapers at post offices of surrounding communities, he had the papers carried some thirty and forty miles from Nauvoo before mailing them; in some cases papers were carried as far as St. Louis, two hundred miles away, to be mailed.

And when Governor Ford came to Carthage to investigate the matter, it was John Taylor and Dr. J. M. Bernhisel, who went to see Ford in an attempt to present the case for the Saints. When the governor demanded that Joseph Smith come to Carthage, elder Taylor carried the message back to Nauvoo. Immediately a conference of the brethren was held in the home of Joseph Smith, to decide as to what course to pursue --whether or not to go to Carthage. This meeting was interrupted when two gentlemen from the East came to meet him, and he was called out. When the hour grew late and Joseph Smith did not return, elder Taylor, thinking the Prophet would not come back to the meeting that night, retired to his home to sleep. It is said that Joseph Smith did return and with Hyrum crossed the river to Montrose, starting for the West. When elder Taylor was made aware of this, he decided to leave Nauvoo for a time also. Before leaving, however, he took the precaution of removing type, stereotyped plates of the Book of Mormon, and other valuable items from the printing office, thinking if the mob came, they would destroy the printing office first. Then he disguised himself as an old man in order that he would not be recognized while leaving the city, and made his way across the river to Iowa. In Montrose he received the word that Joseph Smith was planning to return to Carthage and desired John Taylor to return with him. In Carthage jail, Joseph and Hyrum, his brother and Patriarch of the Church were martyred and elder Taylor was wounded. Elder Taylor was one of the two eyewitnesses to the bloodshed in Carthage. During this time his wife Leonora and his father and mother risked their lives in coming to Carthage to render assistance; and he was taken to the city of the Saints.

The brethren visited elder Taylor at his home, while he was recuperating from the wounds. At this time, John Taylor and Willard Richards were the only apostles in Nauvoo; they in conjunction with brother W. W. Phelps did all they could to ensure peace in the city and to encourage the Saints to remain calm, awaiting the arrival of the Quorum of the Twelve. When the remainder of the apostles did arrive, they met in the home of elder Taylor, until he was well enough to move about. Soon he threw himself into a scheme to build up Nauvoo with his usual zeal and devotion to the cause of the Lord, that businessmen might come and establish commerce and industries, providing a source of income for the Saints in helping them prepare to go West. For a while people appeared to be somewhat peaceful, then illegal writs were issued for the arrest of the Twelve; and problems arose again. Righteous indignation was aroused in elder Taylor, and he declared that he would not submit again to arrests of the nature which had led to the death of Joseph Smith.

Plans were pushed forward to leave the city of Nauvoo and move westward; after a winter of preparation the exodus began. John Taylor's family moved across the Mississippi and onto the Iowa plains less than two weeks after the first wagon left Nauvoo. Snow was still on the ground in Nauvoo when Elder Taylor left, making the travel difficult; but worse was the mud created by an early thaw in Iowa. Wagons sank to their hubs in mud, and movement often was only a foot or so at a time. On February 24, eight days after they arrived in Sugar Creek, Orson Pratt's thermometer recorded twelve degrees below zero. But as they continued to move westward, winter gave way to spring, and by June 5, 1846, they were at Mount Pisgah; and by June 17, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. At Council Bluffs, elder Taylor was chosen to be part of the pioneer company going to the West, from Winter Quarters (Omaha, Nebraska); but as he began to make preparations, circumstances arose, according to the providence of God, so that he was several hundred miles from Winter Quarters of the Camp of Israel, when the pioneer company left.

Then, less than two weeks after elder Taylor's arrival in Council Bluffs, the call came from the United States government for the Mormon Battalion. As a result, president Brigham Young decided to postpone the trek of the pioneer company until the spring of 1847. Before spring arrived, news of problems in Britain reached Winter Quarters of the Camp of Israel. The missionary net which pulls in both good and bad brought into the Church in England some of the same type of men who had caused so many problems in Kirtland years before. These men were telling members of the Church there to invest their money in a company that was to bring them financial gain; and the money was squandered by the few who controlled the company. Thereupon, president Young saw the need to set things straight in the British Isles. Again the call came to John Taylor, who with Orson Hyde, returned to his mission field and former homeland. This time he left not one but four families behind, trusting them to the care of the Lord, the Saints and each other. For nine months, elders Taylor and Hyde worked diligently together, setting the branches of the Church there in order.

When Parley P. Pratt, who had later joined the other two apostles in England, and elder Taylor had returned, they brought with them the scientific instruments to be used during Israel's exodus to the West. When elders Pratt and Taylor arrived to deliver the instruments to president Brigham Young, the pioneer company had already left Winter Quarters nearly two days before. So the two apostles had to follow after the company, catching up at Elk Horn, some twenty-five miles west. After delivering the instruments at Elk Horn, the two apostles turned eastward to their families and the main body of the Church at Winter Quarters. And upon their shoulders now fell the difficult task of the exodus of the main body of Saints to the West. Wagons had to be repaired and put in order, horses and oxen had to be gathered, shod, and prepared to move again. For three months the group labored together in a unified effort. Then came the time to roll their wagons again. Elder Taylor was noted during these times for his cheerfulness and his ability to lift the spirits of the Saints, renewing their faith in themselves. He had been prepared for this task, as the Lord did with all his prophets, seers and revelators. It is truly said, that God has fashioned every man whom he has ever called to lead his people, from Moses of old unto this day; for no man ever comes to lead God's people whom He has not trained for his task.

In the early part of October, the two companies entered the Salt Lake Valley and dug in to stay. Elder Taylor wrote that their houses were built on the outside line of the fort in shanty form, with the highest wall outside, the roof sloping towards the interior. The windows and doors were placed on the side facing the enclosure, the outside being left solid, except the loop holes, for protection. And their corrals, haystacks and stables were some distance behind and outside the fort. By Christmas of that year (1847), elder Taylor had helped them put up, enclose and cover about ninety feet of building made of split logs, out of which was taken a four-inch plank; and the plank was used for partitions, et cetera. He also assisted in building corrals and stables behind, and in enclosing a garden spot in the front, with a broad-rail fence, plus sawing, hauling, and so on; enough work for one fall. Much of the leadership and administration of the Church during the first winter fell upon the shoulders of elders John Taylor and Parley Pratt; for president Brigham Young and other members of the Quorum of the Twelve wintered back at Winter Quarters (in Nebraska).

For nearly two years, elder Taylor was kept busy helping to develop the Salt Lake Valley, and his influence was noted throughout the region. Then during the October conference of 1849, president Young called several of the brethren to the mission field. Elder Taylor's assignment was to open part of Europe to the preaching of the Gospel. By now missionaries had been active in Britain for some twelve years, but no organized missionary work had been performed in continental Europe. In the year 1850, elder Taylor was to leave the heart of the desert wilds of America for the splendor of France. For two years, he labored diligently, and defended the Church against the attacks from the renowned men of the world of the time; among such influential people of the world was M. Krolokoski, a disciple of M. Fourier, the famous French socialist. He was the editor of a paper published in Paris in support of Fourier's views. And the society to which he belonged had sent M. Cabet to Nauvoo with the French icarians, to establish a community on Fourier's principles. M. Krolokoski requested elder Taylor to explain to him the leading principles of the Gospel.

After he had explained the principles and ordinances of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, namely, Faith, Repentance, Baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, M. Krolokoski remarked: Mr. Taylor, do you propose no other plan to improve the condition of mankind than that of baptism for remission of sins? And elder Taylor replied: This is all I propose about the matter. M. Krolokoski said: Well, I wish you every success; but I am afraid you will not succeed. And to this elder Taylor gave the following reply:

> Monsieur Krolokoski, you did send Monsieur Cabet to Nauvoo, some time ago. He was considered your leader, the most talented man you had. He went to Nauvoo shortly after we had deserted it. Houses and lands could be obtained at a mere nominal sum. Rich farms were deserted, and thousands of us had left our houses and furniture in them, and almost everything calculated to promote the happiness of man was there. Never could a person migrate to a place under more happy circumstances. Besides the advantage of having all the necessities made ready to his hand, Monsieur Cabet had a select company of colonists. After all this, what do Monsieur Cabet and his company report from there? For I read in all your reports, published in your own paper here, in Paris, a continued cry for help. The cry is money, money! We want money to carry out our designs. While your colony in Nauvoo with all the advantages of our deserted fields and homes, that they had only to move into, have been dragging out a miserable existence.
> And the Latter-day Saints, though stripped of their all and banished from civilized society into the valleys of the Rocky Mountains, to seek that protection among savages . . . which the so-called Christian civilization denied us. There our people have built houses, enclosed lands, cultivated gardens, built schoolhouses, and have organized a government and are prospering in all the blessings of civilized life. Not only this, but they have sent thousands and thousands of dollars over to Europe to assist the suffering poor to go to America, where they might find an asylum.

> The Society I represent, Monsieur Krolokoski, comes with the fear of God -- the worship of the Great Eloheim (the Almighty God); we offer a simple plan ordained by God, viz: faith in the One God, repentance, baptism for remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Our people have not been seeking the influence of the world, nor the power of government, but they have obtained both. Whilst you, with your philosophy, independent of God, have been seeking to build up a system of communism and government which is, according to your own accounts, the way to introduce the Millennial reign. Now, which is the best, our religion, or your philosophy?

And to all this Monsieur Krolokoski replied: Well, Mr. Taylor, I can say nothing! Elder Taylor also had been responsible for the introduction of the Gospel into France and Germany, having had the Book of Mormon printed in both French and German. While in France he became acquainted with the process of sugar manufacturing, and under his direction the necessary machinery was purchased and shipped to Utah. After nearly three years, elder Taylor returned home from Europe; and shortly after, he was called to travel among the stakes of the Church in Zion, to encourage and strengthen the members. In 1854, two years after his return, he was appointed to the Territorial Legislature, but he was not allowed to serve. For the Church had a need for an outstanding man in New York to defend its cause, and elder Taylor was selected. He was to travel to New York City and there preside over the branches of the Church in the eastern states; and supervise emigration of the Saints from there, and publish a paper in defense of the Church. Two years before, in 1852, the doctrine of plural marriage had been officially announced, and negative reaction in the East was strong. Thus arose the need for an exceptionally capable man, such as John Taylor.

He went east to fulfill this mission, though without funds. Through help from contributions from a few of the eastern Saints and money obtained from selling the teams and wagons he brought with him from Salt Lake, John Taylor, the former editor of the Times and Seasons and the Nauvoo Neighbor began a newspaper which he entitled The Mormon. He secured the use of a building in the heart of the battleground of ideas in New York; with the office of the New York Herald on one side of him and the office of the New York Tribune on the other. These words of elder Taylor reflect the type of fight he was involved in:

> We have said before and say now, that we defy all the editors and writers in the United States to prove that Mormonism is less moral, scriptural, philosophical; or that there is less patriotism in Utah than in any other part of the United States. We call for proof; bring on your reasons, gentlemen, if you have any; we shrink not from the > investigation, and dare you to encounter. If you don't do it, and you publish any more of your stuff, we shall brand you as poor, mean, cowardly liars; as men publishing falsehoods knowing them to be so, and shrinking from the light of truth and investigation.

In the late summer of 1857, elder Taylor returned to Salt Lake; and two days after his return he spoke these words:

> So far as I am concerned, I say let everything come as God has ordained it. I do not desire trials; I do not desire afflictions. I would pray to God to leave me not in temptation, . . . but if the earthquake bellows, the lightnings flash, the thunders roll and the powers of darkness are let loose, and the spirit of evil is permitted to rage and evil influence is brought to bear on the Saints, and my life with theirs is put to the test, let it come . . . I know that president Young and those associated with him are full of the Spirit of revelation, and they know what they are doing. I feel to yield to their counsel, and put my shoulder to the work, whatever it is. If it is for peace, let it be peace; if it is for war, let it be to the hilt.

The news of the coming of Johnston's Army was in the air. And John Taylor took active part in preventing the Army from entering the Salt Lake Valley. During this time he was also a member to the Utah Territorial Legislature from Salt Lake County. For five seasons he was chosen Speaker of the House by the other delegates, and remained a member from 1857 until 1876. Also, in 1869, while serving as Probate Judge of Utah County, John Taylor was called upon for one of the most important tasks of his life. At this time he was in Boston, and in a speech made in Utah, the vice president of the United States, Schuyler Colfax, attacked the stand of the Saints on plural marriage. In response, elder Taylor answered through the New York Tribune. It is said that, Thus began one of the most important discussions of all the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This was the debate of John Taylor vs. the Vice President of the United States. Mr. Colfax was noted for his speaking ability and as a writer, having been a member of the Congress, and well-schooled in debate. At the end, elder Taylor proved to be superior and a most worthy opponent for the vice-president.

After leaving the Territorial Legislature in 1876, John Taylor was elected superintendent of all the district schools in the Territory of Utah; and again performed his task in a praiseworthy manner. And in 1877, when president Brigham Young died, elder John Taylor became president Taylor, the living prophet of the Lord. It was the will of God that he now lead the Church, and God doth sustain His leaders. For three years, president Taylor presided over the Church as the president of the Quorum of the Twelve. Then, in 1880, the First Presidency was reorganized and the prophet chose George Q. Cannon as first counselor and Joseph F. Smith as second counselor. And under the inspiration of the Lord, president Taylor accomplished much during the first eight years of his administration. As the opposition against the Church in Utah grew more intense, the body of the Church under John Taylor grew in strength. Another temple was dedicated in Logan, Utah, in May, 1884. Two others, at Manti and Salt Lake City, were pushed closer to completion, thereby confirming the true zeal of the Church to establish throughout Zion houses of the Lord, where the Saints could dedicate themselves more fully to the Lord.

Moreover, during John Taylor's administration, the organization of the Church was improved. Up to this time, no meeting schedule had been established for various bodies of the priesthood; now, the bishops were requested by the First Presidency to hold weekly priesthood meetings. And, for the power of the Church is in the priesthood, under president Taylor the worthy brethren of the Church were to be drawn closer together and made more aware of their responsibilities through regular meetings in their respective quorums. Stake presidents were also required to hold regularly appointed quarterly conferences under the direction of the First Presidency. President Taylor personally attended many of these quarterly conferences, or sent members of the Quorum of the Twelve to instruct them. Never before had the Saints throughout the stakes of Zion had such a blessing as this, to receive instruction and guidance from the apostles. As a result, a great Spiritual awakening became evident throughout the Church, both at home and abroad. During the ten years of president Taylor's administration nearly one hundred more missionaries were sent out each year than the yearly average of the previous ten years.

During the year 1880, the fiftieth anniversary of the Church, president Taylor proclaimed it to be a Jubilee Year; and, according to the ancient custom of the Israelites, made the fiftieth year of great rejoicing. The Israelites who were debtors were to be released from their financial bondage to each other; and to relieve those that were oppressed with debt, to assist those that were needy or afflicted, and to break off the yoke of those that felt burdened with poverty and oppression.

This gift from God, during the Jubilee Year of the Church, was a great blessing to many Saints; especially those who had left their homelands to make Zion their new home. Many of these immigrants owed large debts to the Perpetual Emigration Fund. Upon the recommendation of president Taylor, the worthy poor were released from this debt. Others had lost their herds and farms in 1879; drought had been excessive and crops were light. The winter had been severe and many sheep and cattle had died, some had lost all their cows and sheep. However, the Saints raised sufficient funds for one thousand head of cattle and five thousand head of sheep to be given to the worthy poor. Thirty-four thousand bushels of wheat that had been stored in the past by the Relief Society was given to those who had been ruined by crop failure. Private businessmen were encouraged to erase, either totally or partially, debts that the worthy poor could not pay at the time. Such practises were employed during the Jubilee Year of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

As a result, bonds of brotherhood were drawn closer together among the Church members; and no greater love had been manifested in the Church than during these days.

But troubles were just ahead; and president Taylor, as a prophet of the Lord, was able to see difficult times for the Saints ahead. During the July pioneer celebration of 1880, he spoke these words:

> There are events in the future, and not very far ahead, that will require all our faith, all our energy, all our confidence, all our trust in God, to enable us to withstand the influences that will be brought against us . . . We cannot trust in our own intelligence alone; we cannot trust to any surrounding circumstances with which we are enveloped. We must trust alone in the living God, within and without, to guide, to direct us, to lead us, to teach and instruct us. And there never was a time when we needed to be more humble and more prayerful; there never was a time when we needed more fidelity, self-denial, and adherence to the principles of truth, than we do this day.

Soon this prophecy was fulfilled. Throughout the 1880's persecution grew stronger; and in 1882, the same year president Taylor's book, Mediation and Atonement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ was published, the Edmunds Law was passed. The passage of this legislation brought forth these hardships upon the Church:

1. All who were living in plural marriage could not vote or hold public office.
2. Anyone who believed in plural marriage -- whether they were practising plural marriage or not -- could not be a member of a jury.
3. Federal appointees were sent to function in offices where locally elected officers formerly served; thus taking away from the Saints the right to local rule.
4. The segregation ruling began, which stated that each day a man was found living with a plural wife, he could be charged with a separate offense. Therefore, if a man were found guilty of living with any of his plural wives for five different days, five charges could be brought against him. And if found guilty, he could receive a sentence for every charge. Under such a condition a man could easily be sent to prison for life.

Now, at the semi-annual general conference held in October of 1880, reports were compiled on the distribution of cattle, sheep and other items, to be voted on at the April general conference. It was a time of great rejoicing, when the First Presidency was again reorganized, with John Taylor as president of the Church, and George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith as his first and second counselors, respectively. The voting was conducted according to the established principles: It was done by quorums, as it was in sustaining of president Young, beginning first with the apostles, then the patriarchs, stake presidents, counselors, and high councils; then the high priests; then the seventies, the elders; then the bishop and his counselors; then the Aaronic priesthood holders, priests, teachers, deacons; the presidents of various ward quorums; and finally, the whole congregation.

On October 13, 1882, elders George Teasdale and Heber J. Grant were called to the apostleship by revelation given through president John Taylor, along with Seymour B. Young as one of the seven presidents of the seventies; three days later these brethren were ordained. Moreover, the Lord in this revelation called upon various quorums of the Priesthood to arise and purify themselves, and for the members to magnify their callings. The Saints were commanded to set their houses in order, that they might be purged from sin. And the prophecy was made that eventually a new Zion (or New Jerusalem) will be established, and the nations of the world shall acknowledge the Lord and His Millennial reign. Then, on May 17, 1884, under president Taylor, the Logan Temple was dedicated, and he also offered the dedicatory prayer. The site for this temple was dedicated by Orson Pratt on May 17, 1877; excavation work began on May 28, and the laying of rock in July. On September 19, 1877, the corner-stones were laid, the order of temple-building being followed to the letter and in Spirit. The dedicatory services in 1884 lasted three days, very solemn and Spiritually uplifting; the Saints rejoicing greatly in the glory of the Lord, that another House of the Lord had been built unto their eternal and everlasting God; where work for the salvation of the living and the dead could be performed.

The persecutions against the Saints continued in Utah and elsewhere, for their practise of patriarchal marital arrangements, which were referred to as plural marriage, polygamy, celestial marriage, and other names; which allowed the patriarchs or the priests of the Order of Melchizedek to carry on the responsibility of custodianship by being husbands and fathers to the needy, afflicted, divorced, orphaned, or otherwise appointed by God, families. But the persecution was of God, for a great majority of the Saints had traded their true life of piety and peace for the life of passion and passing pleasures; they had become more the men of the world than of God; they had kept part of the covenant of celestial marriage; in the absence of obedience to the laws of God, upon which the blessing of patriarchal or celestial marriage was ordained unto the Saints, by the Lord throughout all ages. And throughout all ages this opposition between the blessed of the Lord and the not-so-blessed prevailed in varied degrees of its manifestation. Therefore,the Lord brought upon the Saints and the world His judgements, through persecutions, debates, contentions, arguments and oppositions.

During January of 1885, president Taylor went south to Arizona, where much of the persecution was directed. There he comforted the Saints that they might remain steadfast, and counseled them to settle in Mexico to avoid persecution. In February he returned to Salt Lake, and preached his last public sermon to his people. After this, he went into hiding, for he felt that he would be deprived of his constitutional rights, and that law enforcement had become legalized persecution. From his place of hiding, president Taylor continued to guide the Church. His only association with his family during these years was through letters. And he was not able to attend the funeral of his wife, for fear of the reproach that his arrest would bring upon his people.

The Edmunds-Tucker law was passed in March of 1887. Under the terms of the law, the Church lost its standing as a legal corporation; therefore, it could not hold property, and its money and property were taken over by the government; and the Church was forced to pay rent for its own property, such as the temple block, tithing offices, the historian's office, and others. Moreover, the Church was unable to borrow to pay the debts which it owed. Slowly the health of president Taylor deteriorated due to undue stress and pressures, and four months later, John Taylor died in Kaysville, Utah, age seventy-eight; in self-imposed exile from his own people. At his funeral, elder Lorenzo Snow, a future president of the Church, said of John Taylor: The Latter-day Saints feel that they have lost a friend; that we have lost a mighty counselor; that we have lost one of the greatest men that have stood upon the earth since the days of the Son of God -- a man whose virtue, whose integrity, whose resolution to pursue the path of righteousness is known, and well known.

And, indeed, those who carry with them the Divine assurance are rightly guided; and are hard to move from their course. Elder Taylor carried this assurance from his childhood; even the assurance of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was sent forth in the meridian of time, that blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost.

Following is a partial highlight of John Taylor's life (1808-1887):

3. Wilford Woodruff

(the missionary, temple builder, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from April 7, 1889 to September 2, 1898; leads the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve from 1887 till 1889)

The news of president Taylor's death reached Wilford Woodruff, the eighty-year old president of the Quorum of the Twelve in Sanpete County, one day after he was taken up. At this time, elder Woodruff was in hiding, due to friction between the Church and the government over plural marriage. The Edmunds-Tucker law had been passed just months before; the property of the Church had been taken over by the government; and the Saints were troubled by the loss of so many fathers and community leaders in prison or in hiding. In Idaho the Saints had lost their right to vote by the passing of the Idaho Test Oath; which decreed that no person who believed in the principle of plural marriage, whether he practised it or not, could vote in general elections. Then, in 1890, the Supreme Court of the United States declared this test oath legal. And the enemies of the Church in Utah and the nation attempted the passage of a bill in Congress, the Cullom-Struble Bill, which was to take away the right to vote from every member of the Church, thereby putting the entire Church membership in the position of being politically controlled by those who were hostile toward the Church; and putting the Saints in the similar position as that of their ancestors who had risen in rebellion against the principle of taxation without representation. The Church was also threatened that all members who had immigrated would never be allowed to become citizens of the United States. Such were the problems faced by elder Woodruff.

And upon hearing of the death of John Taylor, elder Woodruff recorded these words in his journal:

> President Taylor's death places the chief responsibility and care of the Church of Latter-day Saints upon my shoulders, in connection with the Twelve, which now become the presiding authority of the Church. This places me in a very peculiar situation. It is a position I have never looked for, but in the providence of God this new responsibility is thrown upon me. I pray God, my heavenly Father, to give me grace equal to my day. It is a high responsibility for any man and it is a position which requires great wisdom. I never expected to outlive president Taylor, but God has ordained otherwise . . .
>
> . . . I can only say, Marvelous are Thy ways, O Lord Almighty, for Thou has truly chosen weak instruments to perform in Thy hand Thy work on the earth. May Thy servant, Wilford, be prepared for whatever is required at his hands by the God of heaven. I ask this blessing of my heavenly Father in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, even so, Amen.

Wilford Woodruff was a man of deep trust in the power of the Lord, which he had developed in his childhood. According to his own words, he had been plagued with a chain of freak accidents. At the age of three he had fallen in a caldron of hot water. He fell from a beam in his father's barn, landing face down on the bare floor; he broke both his arms by falls; he broke his leg by a fall from a carriage; he was kicked in the stomach by an ox, and narrowly missed being gored by a bull. He was buried beneath a load of hay when his wagon tipped over, and was in a wagon which overturned when a runaway horse bolted down hill. He fell fifteen feet from a tree, landing flat on his back; and was saved from drowning in thirty feet of water. He was narrowly saved from freezing to death by a passer-by, who happened to see Wilford crawl into the hollow of an apple tree and was unable to crawl out. He split the instep of his left foot while chopping wood; and was bitten by a mad dog in the last stages of hydrophobia. He was thrown from a runaway horse, and the fall broke one of his legs in two places and put both ankles out of place. All these accidents happened before he was twenty years old. Later he fell twice from the top of a mill wheel, narrowly missing being crushed to death; twice he was dragged behind a runaway horse. Once a gun aimed directly at his chest snapped accidently, but missed firing. After this, a falling tree hit him in the chest and pinned him against a standing tree, breaking his breastbone, three ribs on his left side, and badly bruising left thigh, hip, and arm. Later in life, elder Woodruff, thinking over all these freak accidents, stated: I, therefore, ascribe my preservation on earth to the watch-care of a merciful Providence, whose hand has been stretched out to rescue me from death when I was in the presence of the most threatening dangers.

In 1830, when the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was officially established as an institution among men, Wilford Woodruff was twenty-three years of age. And it was father Mason, a devout man of God of the Catholic (or Universal) Church, who received a vision in 1800 concerning the restoration of the Gospel; but he was not to participate in the blessings in this life, but in the Hereafter. The following was related to Wilford by Robert Mason:

> At the close of the vision I bowed down in humble prayer and asked the Lord to show me the meaning of the vision. Then the Spirit of the Lord declared: Son of man, thou hast sought me diligently to know the truth concerning my Church and Kingdom among men. This is to show thee that my Church is not organized among men in the generation to which thou belongeth; but in the days of thy children the Church and Kingdom of God shall be made manifest with all the gifts and blessings enjoyed by the Saints in past ages. Thou shall live to be made acquainted with it, but shall not partake of its blessings before thou depart > this life. Thou wilt be blest of the Lord after death, because thou hast followed the guidance of my Spirit in this life.

> When father Mason had finished relating the vision and its interpretation, he said, calling me by my Christian name: Wilford, I shall not be able to partake of this fruit in the flesh, but you will become a conspicuous actor in the New Kingdom. He then turned and left me. These were the last words he ever spoke to me upon the earth.

It is said that this revelation touched Wilford greatly, for he had been searching God and His divine guidance from his early childhood. And it was this search that led him to establish prayer meetings in his hometown, and to seek the Lord in prayer. He prayed daily night and day, and the Lord blessed him of his Holy Spirit. These were the happiest days of his life, and he wrote: "I felt that the sun, moon, and stars; the mountains, hills, and valleys; and all creation were united in the praise of the Lord. My work in the mill was very light and I passed much of my time in reading, in meditation, and in prayer. I read the Bible and it was like a new book to me. I received much light in perusing its sacred pages. If I was cast down, tired, or tempted, I found in it relief in connection with the Spirit of God."

Diligently, Wilford sought everywhere for a Church that could match the principles and ordinances of the Bible. He felt a need for baptism, but the Christian ministers that performed the baptism lacked the true knowledge and the Spirit of God. Two years after his talk with father Mason, in 1832, Wilford read an account of the Church of the Latter-day Saints in a newspaper article. Although the editor of the newspaper poked fun at the Saints, Wilford, now twenty-five, was deeply impressed. From that time forth his Soul hungered and thirsted to meet some of those people who claimed to possess the gifts of the Holy Spirit cherished anciently by God's people. He also wished to leave his home state of Connecticut and settle in New York; and when the opportunity came and he was preparing to move to western New York with his brother Azmon (or Osman), both he and his brother were persuaded to go to Rhode Island. But they had made up their minds to go to New York, and they did go there, and settled in Richland. In December of 1833, the Woodruffs met the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and this is the account of Wilford concerning their first meeting:

> Elder Pulsipher opened with prayer. He knelt down and asked the Lord in the name of Jesus Christ for what he wanted. His manner of prayer and the influence which went with it impressed me greatly. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon me and bore witness that he was a servant of God. After singing a hymn, he preached to the people for an hour and a half. The Spirit of God rested mightily upon him and he bore a strong testimony of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, and the mission of > the prophet Joseph Smith. I believed all that he said, and the Spirit bore witness of its truth . . .

> Liberty was then given by the elders to any one in the congregation to arise and speak for or against what they had heard as they might choose. Almost instantly I found myself upon my feet. The Spirit of the Lord urged me to bear testimony to the truth of the message delivered by these elders. I exhorted my neighbors and friends not to oppose these men, for they were the true servants of God. They had preached to us that night the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. When I sat down, my brother Azmon arose and bore a similar testimony. He was followed by several others.

Wilford then invited the missionaries to his home, that he might learn about the Gospel. Carefully he searched the message contained in the Book of Mormon; and two days after he heard the missionaries for the first time, he submitted himself to baptism on December 31, 1833. At the time of his baptism, the snow was about three feet deep, the day was cold, and water was mixed with ice and snow, yet Wilford did not feel the cold. It is noteworthy also, that although Wilford had never met Joseph Smith in person, yet Wilford's name was recorded in the journal of prophet Joseph Smith, and also his ordination to the office of a teacher in the Aaronic priesthood.

Wilford Woodruff was the best of all the Church historians up to that time, for he truly cherished the task of keeping his own journal, and the record of works, teachings and sermons of other prophets, apostles, and elders of the Church. Three months after his baptism, on the first of April, 1834, Wilford left his home in New York and resolved to go with the Faithful, whithersoever the Lord would send him to gather the Saints for the march of Zion's Camp; although the warning was given that conflict with the mobs of Jackson County might be a real possibility. Wilford put his trust in the Lord, and believed that the prophet of the Lord needed him. And this he recorded in his journal concerning his first encounter with Joseph Smith, the president of the Church, and his brother Hyrum, when he arrived in Kirtland, Ohio:

> Here for the first time in my life I met and had an interview with our beloved prophet Joseph Smith, the man whom God had chosen to bring forth His revelations in these last days. My first introduction was not of a kind to satisfy the preconceived notions of the sectarian mind as to what a prophet ought to be, and how he should appear. It might have shocked the faith of some men.
> I found him and his brother Hyrum out shooting at a mark with a brace of pistols. When they stopped shooting, I was introduced to brother Joseph, and he shook hands with me most heartily. He invited me to make his habitation my home while I tarried in Kirtland. This invitation

I most eagerly accepted and was greatly edified and blest during my stay with him. He asked me to help him tan a wolfskin which he said he wished to use upon the seat of his wagon on the way to Missouri. I pulled off my coat, stretched the skin across the back of a chair, and soon had it tanned -- although I had to smile at my first experience with the prophet.

The march of Zion's Camp included mostly all young men; they were brought together from all parts of the United States, strangers to each other, and yet they soon became true friends. It was a marvelous training experience, calculated to strengthen and develop them, having been led by a prophet of God a thousand miles through cities, towns, villages, and wilderness areas. It was at this time that Wilford Woodruff began to record pertinent events of the Church history. It is also said that so complete and proper were his recordings that his diaries later became a most valued source of Latter-day Saints' history. At the end of this march Wilford remained in Missouri, as all young unmarried men were counseled to do by Joseph Smith. And here he remained, and dedicated all that he possessed to the Lord, for the upbuilding of Zion upon the earth. His chief desire at this time was to spend a part of his life in the mission field. But he felt that he should be called rather than cause himself to be asked to go. So he retired into the woods to pray, and poured out his heart to the Lord. The prayer was soon answered, for as Wilford left the secluded spot where he was engaged in prayer, he met elder Elias Higbee, who greeted him, saying: Brother Wilford, the Spirit of the Lord tells me that you should be ordained to go and preach the Gospel. And a few days later, on November 5, 1834, at Adam-ondi-Ahman, Wilford was ordained a priest in the Aaronic Order; and sent on a mission to Arkansas and Tennessee.

Wilford and his missionary companions visited a remote place called Harmony Mission, on the Osage River. At this time this mission was kept by a Presbyterian minister and his family. When they arrived there at sunset on Sunday, they had walked all day without eating anything, very hungry and exhausted. Lo, neither the minister nor his wife would give them anything to eat, nor allow them to stay there overnight; for they knew that these were the Latter-day Saints. The only alternative available was to travel twelve miles down the river to an Osage Indian trading post kept by a Frenchman named Jereu. But the wicked minister who denied them not only a morsel of bread and a place to stay overnight, also lied to them about the directions, and sent them across the swamp, where they wallowed in mud and water, knee-deep, until ten o'clock that night. When they finally got themselves out of the swamp, in trying to follow the crooked river, they heard Indian drumming and singing. In almost total darkness they traveled toward the noise; and as they drew near the Indian camp, a large number of Indian dogs came out to meet them. They smelled them but did not bark or bite; soon Wilford and his missionary companions were surrounded by the Osage Indians; and were kindly received by Mr. Jereu and his wife, who was an Indian. She gave them an excellent supper and a place to sleep; which they most gratefully accepted. Next day they had a hearty breakfast; and Mr. Jereu sent an Indian to see them across the river, and said that it was sixty miles to the nearest settlement of either white or red man. So the missionaries journeyed some sixty miles without a morsel of food of any kind.

And as they continued their journey in the cloudy and dark night on foot, unable to keep the road, a large drove of wolves gathered around, and followed them. They came very close at times and the missionaries were at the verge of being eaten up. They had materials for striking a light, so at ten o'clock, without knowing where they were, and the wolves becoming so bold as to be almost ready to attack, they decided to make a fire. And they stopped to gather the oak limbs that lay scattered on the ground, and lit them. As the fire began to burn, the wolves left. The missionaries had no blankets with them, and as they were about to lay down on the ground, they heard a dog bark. Then each of them took a firebrand, and went about a quarter of a mile, and found a log cabin, about twelve feet square. It was an old rundown place, with no door, but an old blanket was hung up in the doorway. There was no furniture exept one bedstead, upon which lay asleep a woman, several children, and several small dogs. And a man, also asleep, lay on the bare floor, with his feet to the fireplace.

Wilford went in and spoke to the man, but he did not wake. He stepped up to him, and laid his hands on his shoulder, and the moment the man felt the weight on his shoulder, he jumped to his feet and ran around the room in fright. But when he was told that they were his friends, he was quieted. He said that the cause of his fright was that he had shot a panther a few nights before, and thought its mate had jumped on him. He asked the missionaries what they wanted; and when they told him that they would like to spend the night under his roof, and would like something to eat, he said they might lie on the floor as he did, but he had not a mouthful to eat, as he had to depend on his gun to get breakfast for his family in the morning. Thereupon they slept on the bare floor during a rainy night, with empty stomachs after walking some sixty miles. According to Wilford's own account, that was the hardest day's work of his life. This man's name was William, and he had been one of the mob in Jackson County, Missouri. After the Saints were driven out, he and many others went south. Early in the morning the missionaries left, and walked in the rain twelve miles to the house of a man named Beman, also one of the mob of Jackson County. They arrived as the family was about to sit down to breakfast; and according to the custom of the Missourians to ask visitors to eat, even though they might be strangers or adversaries, the missionaries were asked to take breakfast; which they very gladly accepted. Mr. Beman knew that they were Latter-day Saints, as soon as he saw them; and as they sat down to eat, he began to swear about the Saints. He had a large platter of bacon and eggs, and plenty of bread on the table; and Wilford wrote in his journal that his swearing did not hinder their eating, for the harder he swore, the harder they ate, until their stomachs were full. Then they got up, took their hats, and thanked him for the breakfast. He was still swearing when they left, but they blessed him in their hearts for feeding them.

During his first two years of mission in Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky, Wilford Woodruff was ordained an elder, returning to Kirtland, Ohio, in 1836. He remained in Kirtland for more than a year, and during this time, at the age of thirty years, he married Phoebe Carter, on April 13, 1837. After a month and a day he responded to the mission call to Fox Island, off the coast of Maine. And during this mission he not only brought many on the island into the Church, but also all his kinsfolk who dwelt in Connecticut. Moreover, this time he was blessed with the companionship of his wife; and a baby daughter, his first child, was born while serving on this mission; also he was called to become an apostle. But in order to receive his ordination to the Quorum of the Twelve, he had to journey back to Missouri. Thereupon, elder Woodruff took leave of his friends and kinsfolk on Fox Island and nearby Connecticut; and left for Zion in Missouri, with his wife and newly born daughter, and fifty-three Saints who also desired to make the journey.

This return journey to Missouri was quite perilous, requiring some two thousand miles of travel through mud, rain, snow, and frost; during the winter months of October, November, and December. During the trek his wife and child became seriously ill; and in the first days of December Phoebe Woodruff lay before her husband as though dead. But elder Woodruff, being full of faith, prayed to his Father in heaven to allow her to remain on earth. The following are the words of elder Woodruff concerning this incident:

> The Spirit and power of God began to rest upon me until, for the first time during her sickness, faith filled my soul, although she lay before me as one dead.
>
> I had some oil that was consecrated for my anointing while in Kirtland. I took it and consecrated it again before the Lord, for anointing the sick. I then bowed down before the Lord, prayed for the life of my companion, and in the name of the Lord anointed her body with the oil. Then I laid my hands upon her, and in the name of Jesus Christ I rebuked the power of death and of the destroyer; and commanded the same to depart from her and the spirit of life to enter her body. Her spirit returned to her body; and from that hour she was made whole. And we all felt to praise the name of God, and to trust Him and keep His commandments.
>
> On the morning of the 6th of December, the Spirit said to me: Arise, and continue thy journey; and through the mercy of God my wife was enabled to arise and dress herself; she walked to the wagon, and we went on our way rejoicing.

The company of Saints reached Rochester, Illinois, toward the end of December, 1837; where they were informed of the exodus of the Saints from Missouri. So they decided to spend the remainder of the winter there. In the spring, elder Woodruff and his family journeyed to Quincy, Illinois, where they joined again the main body of the Saints in their migration to Commerce, and then to Montrose; and here the families of Wilford Woodruff and Brigham Young lived together for a time in a one room dwelling, fourteen feet square.

At Far West, Missouri, at the site where the temple was to be built, elder Wilford Woodruff was ordained an apostle of the Lord, prior to his departure to the British Isles. At this time, Phoebe his wife lay ill, and soon after gave birth to their first son; but some four months later their daughter passed away. In the meantime, elder Woodruff was blessed with great success in Britain in the mission field. Just outside of Burmingham (Birmingham), England, a group of Christians known as the United Brethren, joined together at John Benbow farm, praying in earnest for the Lord to send them messengers with the fulness of the Gospel. From this group elder Woodruff baptized forty-five preachers and one hundred and sixty members of the congregation; even the constable of police that was sent to arrest him for preaching the Gospel, after listening to elder Woodruff, submitted himself to be baptized. Two local officials of the Church of England who went to spy on the meetings of the American missionaries also asked to be baptized. Altogether elder Woodruff brought three hundred and thirty-six people into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1840. After this, on April 20, 1841, elder Woodruff with other members of the Quorum of the Twelve set sail for home, bringing with them a boatload of converts. The reunion with his family was both bitter and sweet, for the loss of his firstborn, and the gain of his young son whom he had never seen. And by this time, Nauvoo had grown from a town of less than a dozen homes to a city of several hundred, including a temple, almost completed.

A solemn assembly was held in the Kirtland Temple, on Sunday, March 27, 1836. Now the first House of the Lord was finally built in Ohio; a monument to the unfaltering faith and industry of the little band of the Latter-day Saints, who amidst the persecution and violence of the enemies of the Church, in their poverty, did serve the Lord their God with all their heart, mind, might, and strength. The ground of this temple site was broken on June 5, 1833, in obedience to the command of the Lord which was given in 1832, that a House to His name be built. The corner-stones were laid on the twenty-third of the following month; and on the same day the Saints in Jackson County, Missouri, were forced by mob violence from their homes. During the months of January and February, 1836, the Saints were busy in council meetings, and filling vacancies in various organizations of the priesthood. Professor Seixas, a most worthy Hebrew scholar, was appointed in place of Dr. Piexotto, who failed to live up to his contract. On January 21, the first of a number of meetings were held in the temple; in which the faithful elders of the Church received blessings by the laying on of hands and anointing with oil. At this first meeting, the Presidency met, and the father of Joseph Smith, the patriarch of the Church, was anointed and blessed. He then anointed each of the brethren of the Presidency, beginning with the oldest; and blessed them individually as the Holy Spirit of the Lord brought forth utterance.

The Kirtland Temple
The House of the Lord was dedicated on March 27, 1836.

The temple was built of stone; eighty feet in length, sixty in width, fifty feet to the square, with a tower one hundred and ten feet from the ground. And on the day of the solemn assembly, at nine o'clock, the session was called to order by Sidney Rigdon, the first counselor of the First Presidency; and in full silence he read the 96th and the 24th psalms, then the choir sang: Ere long the veil will rend in twain. After prayer, another hymn, and Church business interspersed with singing, the prayer of dedication was offered, which had been given by revelation. After this, the congregation sang the hymn, The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning (also called Hosanna), which had been written for this occasion; and then shouted: Hosanna, hosanna, hosanna to God and the Lamb; and then filled with the Holy Spirit, they shouted, Amen, Amen, and Amen. Angels were present, and the Holy Spirit filled the House and rested upon the assembly. The people of the neighborhood came running from all directions, hearing a strange sound and seeing a bright light resting on the temple, a sign unto the Saints that the House had been accepted by the Lord.

Soon after the dedication of the temple, began ordinance work for the elders. During this time of outpouring of the Holy Spirit at the Kirtland Temple, the Savior appeared to several of the brethren, and angels ministered to others in these meetings. Then on Sunday, April 3, 1836, after the administering of the Sacrament in the temple at the meeting, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery retired to the pulpit, the veils being dropped, and there bowed in silent prayer. After rising from their knees, they beheld the Savior standing on the breast-work of the pulpit and He blessed them, accepting the building in His name. After this vision, they beheld Moses, who committed to them the keys of the gathering of Israel; Elias, who lived in the days of Abraham, then appeared, and committed to them the keys of the Gospel of Abraham (of Abrahamites). Then appeared Elijah, and committed to them the keys to fulfill the prophecies of Malachi, of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers; which was to be done before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

Now, the Lord had revealed unto a party of the Saints known as Zion's Camp on Fishing River, Missouri (on June 22, 1834), when they fled from Kirtland due to increased mob violence and persecutions, and encamped there, that, the elders must be endowed with power from on high before they would be fully prepared to go forth to build up the Church, and prune his vineyard. This endowment having now been received, and the ancient powers and authorities of the Holy Priesthood having now been restored, the elders of the Church were prepared for their ministry among all the nations, kindred, tongues and people of the earth. They now began to preach the Gospel with new Spirit and zeal, and many had received their testimony that they were numbered among the people of the Lord.

The Kirtland temple was, however, built mainly for the Lord to restore the fulness of the Priesthood, which had been taken away from Israel; and where the Lord could come and restore the various keys of former dispensations. Only a partial endowment was given at the Kirtland Temple, not the fulness; that the apostles and others might be endowed with necessary power and authority to go forth to prune the vineyard for the last time, before the coming of that Great Day. After this a greater light was revealed, and the full purpose of temples and ordinance work was made manifest unto the brethren. Then it became necessary to build a House of the Lord, that would meet at least the basic requirements of the holy temple. For the Kirtland Temple had no provisions for the salvation of the dead, nor did it have a baptismal font.

In Jackson County and in Far West (Missouri), the Saints were prevented from building temples by their enemies, who drove them from their homes. At the General Conference of the Church held in October, 1840, Joseph Smith spoke on the subject of the necessity of building a House of the Lord in Nauvoo, Illinois. And Reynolds Cahoon, Elias Higbee, and Alpheus Cutler were appointed to a committee to build the House. It was also resolved that it must commence ten days from that day (October 3, 1840); and that every tenth day be appropriated for the building of the temple. In early January of 1841, a proclamation was issued by the First Presidencey to the Saints scattered abroad; which stated that the temple of the Lord is in progress to be erected here, where the Saints will come to worship the God of their fathers, according to the order of his House and the power of the Holy Priesthood; and will be so constructed as to enable all functions of the priesthood to be duly carried out, and where instructions from the Most High will be received.

Then an important revelation was received on January 19, 1841, concerning the building of the temple and the ordinances to be performed therein. The Lord declared through the prophet of the Church to make a solemn proclamation of the Gospel to all the kings of the world on the face of the earth; to the president-elect of the United States, and the governors of the nation, and to all other nations of the world; that they may give heed to the light and glory of Zion, whose set time has come. The Lord will visit the mighty rulers, priests and kings in the day of his visitation. Therefore saith the Lord, Awake, O kings of the earth; Come ye, O come ye, with your gold and your silver to the help of my people, to the house of the daughters of Zion. Moreover, the Saints were commanded to come from afar; messengers were to be chosen and sent forth, saying: Come ye, with all your gold, and your silver, and your precious stones, and with all your antiquities; and with all those who have knowledge of antiquities, that will come, may come. And bring the bore tree, the fir tree, the pine tree, together with all the precious trees of the earth; and with your iron, and with copper, with brass, with zinc, and your precious things of the earth; and build a House to my Name for the Most High to dwell therein. For there is not a place found on earth where He may come and restore again that which was lost unto you, or which He hath taken away, even the fulness of the priesthood; which fulness was to be obtained in the House of the Lord.

The Lord had granted the Saints the privilege of performing the ordinance of baptism for the dead; a most ancient privilege and rite, whose roots are imbedded in Egypt of millennia past. Thus the Saints could be baptized for their relatives or friends, the worthy, who are dead. So important was this work that the Lord declared that the living could not be made perfect without them, and when the opportunity presented itself, should the members of the Church fail to perform the ordinance for their dead, the Lord would reject them; for the dead were to be saved by the same principles which would save the living. In ages past, as unto this day, the Lord allows His servants to perform this rite in a river and some other place; but a unified body of the Saints of the Latter-day, who were to gather Israel and prepare the way for the Second Coming of the Savior, were to perform this ordinance in a baptismal font. It was to be placed in the basement of the temple, in the similitude of the grave; it was to be in a place underneath where the living are accustomed to assemble, to show forth the living and the dead; that all things may have their likeness, that they may accord with one another, that which is earthly conforming to that which is heavenly.

On April 6, 1841, the corner stones of the Nauvoo Temple were laid. Fourteen companies of the Nauvoo Legion and two military companies from across the river in Iowa were assembled early in the morning, and were conducted to the grounds assigned for public review. During the forenoon impressive military maneuvers were conducted; at twelve o'clock the procession arrived at the temple grounds and the ceremonies of laying the corner stones began. Strict adherence to the priesthood laws was maintained; the first stone was to be laid at the south-east corner, by the First Presidency of the Church; next, at the south-west corner; the third at the north-west corner; and the fourth, on the north-east corner. The First Presidency was to lay the south-east corner stone and name the proper persons to lay the other corner stones. And if a temple is built at a location where the First Presidency are unable to be present, then the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles were to dictate the order of laying the corner stones of the temples. In the absence of the Twelve, the presidency of the stake will lay the south-east corner stone; the Melchizedek priesthood laying the corner stones on the east side of the temple, and the Aaronic priesthood on the west side.

On November 8, 1841, the baptismal font in the Nauvoo Temple was dedicated in the basement, and Brigham Young was the spokesman. Thereafter no baptisms for the dead could be performed in the river.

The font was situated in the center of the basement room, under the main hall of the temple. It was constructed of pine timber, and put together of staves tongued and grooved; oval in shape, sixteen feet long east and west, and twelve feet wide, seven feet high from the foundation; the basin four feet deep, and the moulding of the cap and base were formed of decorative carved work. It stood upon twelve oxen, four on each side, and two at each end; their heads, shoulders, and forelegs projecting out from under the font. The oxen and ornamental mouldings were carved by elder Elijah Fordham, who finished the work in eight months. This font was later replaced by a more durable one.

On Sunday, November 21, 1841, the Twelve met in council at the house of Brigham Young; and at four o'clock they repaired to the baptismal font, in which elders Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and John Taylor baptized about forty persons for their dead; and elders Willard Richards, Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith confirmed them. These were the first baptisms for the dead performed in the font, rather than in the river, at the Nauvoo Temple. The construction of the temple continued with increased diligence until the fall and winter months of 1845-46. The October General Conference of the Church was held in the building; and in December, 1845, ordinance work in the temple officially began. Thereafter, the building was occupied both day and night, that most all of the Saints might receive their endowments; this continued until most of the Saints had departed on westward journey. By May 1, 1846, most of the people had departed; and on this day the temple was publicly dedicated in the presence of some three hundred people. The Saints had already converted every available building in Nauvoo into a workshop, where wagons, harness and other articles necessary for their journey could be manufactured. The timber for the wagons was cut and brought to Nauvoo, where it was prepared and boiled in salt and water or kiln dried. Teams were sent to various parts of the country to obtain iron. Blacksmiths, wheelwrights, carpenters and other workmen were kept busy night and day. On Wednesday, February 4, 1846, the first of the Saints left Nauvoo; and president Brigham Young, Willard Richards, and George A. Smith, with a large company of Saints, crossed the frozen Mississippi on the sixteenth of February; and continued their journey about nine miles to Sugar Creek, where a temporary camp was formed for the Saints abandoning Nauvoo.

The Nauvoo Temple
The House of the Lord contained the baptismal font in the basement, that was dedicated on November 8, 1841; the temple was publicly dedicated on May 1, 1846.

On the same day, February 4, 1846, two hundred and thirty-five members of the Church, from branches in New England and the Atlantic states, under Samuel Brannan, sailed from New York for California. They had chartered the ship Brooklyn at twelve hundred dollars per month, plus lessee to pay port charges. They carried with them farming implements, all kinds of tools and fixtures, and necessary parts for gristmills and sawmill irons. Many volumes of books on various subjects, the press, type, paper, and all other items needed for the establishment of a new colony, were also carried by them. They arrived at Yerba Buena (now San Francisco), on Wednesday, July 29, 1846; they had gone around Cape Horn, and touched the Hawaiian Islands. On their arrival they saw the American flag waving over the fort, and they were received by the salute of the fort guns, as they entered into the bay. Three weeks earlier the flag of the United States had been raised and the country occupied in the name of the government. And soon after, in January, 1847, Samuel Brannan began to publish a newspaper there, called the California Star, the first English paper published in California.

The temple occupied a large portion of his time, soon after elder Woodruff returned from his mission in the British Isles. It is said that no president of the Church has ever been more closely associated with building temples and administering ordinances therein, than Wilford Woodruff the Faithful. He began his work by hauling rock from the quarry near the Mississippi River in Nauvoo to the Temple Hill; and he finished his work in the temple building half a century later, when he dedicated the most famous of the latter-day temples, namely the Salt Lake Temple. In Nauvoo, Wilford Woodruff was called from his task as a rock hauler to become business manager for the Times and Seasons; thus he was in close contact with Joseph Smith the prophet and John Taylor the future prophet of the Church.

In July of 1843, elder Woodruff, with other members of the Quorum of the Twelve, were called to serve a short mission to the Eastern States; that they might hold conferences and gather funds for the completion of the Nauvoo Temple. And when Joseph Smith called elder Woodruff for this mission, he said: Brother Woodruff, I want you to go, and if you do not you will die. These are the words of Wilford Woodruff, which he later recorded, parting from the prophet of the Church:

> Joseph stood in the entry of his door when I took his hand to bid him farewell. As he took me by the hand, he said: "Brother Woodruff, you are about to start upon your mission." I answered, Yes. He looked me steadily in the eye for a time without speaking a word; he looked as though he would penetrate my very soul, and at the same time seemed unspeakably sorrowful, as if weighed down by a foreboding of something dreadful. He finally spoke in a mournful voice: "God bless you, Brother Woodruff, go in peace." I turned and left him with a sorrowful heart, partaking of the same spirit which rested upon him. This was the last time I ever saw his face or heard his voice -- in the flesh.

It was while elder Woodruff was in the city of Portland, Maine, that he received the news of the martyrdom of Joseph Smith. Thereupon he and others of the Quorum of the Twelve returned to Nauvoo, where the Twelve were sustained as the successors to the prophet Joseph Smith. And elder Woodruff, now thirty-seven, was sent to Britain to his former mission field, to preside over the European Mission, from 1844 to 1846. During this period, the Saints in Nauvoo were preparing themselves for their westward journey; and elder Woodruff was called back to Nauvoo to assist in the exodus. Many of the Saints had already left Nauvoo before elder Woodruff arrived. But he did participate with Orson Hyde and about twenty other elders in the dedication of the Nauvoo Temple on May 1, 1846; the second temple, their symbol of dedication to the Lord, to be left behind as a memorial to their God. After this, Wilford Woodruff left the city behind, with other Saints; and like the other Saints he suffered many hardships along their journey westward. Two of his children died less than a month apart at Winter Quarters (now Nebraska), and were buried there. It was also there that elder Woodruff was seriously injured, when a tree fell; and he was forced to leave his life of activity so that his broken bones could mend. By the coming of spring, he was back on his feet again; and was off again with the pioneer group which had volunteered to leave behind their families to prepare the way for others to follow. It was in elder Woodruff's wagon that Brigham Young traveled the last few miles of the trip into Salt Lake Valley; and when they had arrived there, Brigham Young uttered: This is the right place! Yea, Zion was indeed built in the valley, for the Lord had so willed for the Saints, that the gathering of Israel, preparations for the Second Coming and the Millennium might commence there; only to reestablish the Millennial reign of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and the Sabbath of the Father, in the Mountain and not in the Valley of Zion. There upon the mountain and hilltops the New Jerusalem will be built.

One month and two days after his arrival, elder Woodruff left Salt Lake; and took eastward journey again with other brethren to Winter Quarters. The trek was dangerous because much of the way led through hostile Indian country, who were intent on stealing their horses. The small company of returning pioneers arrived at Winter Quarters in October of 1847. While many of the pioneers stayed there until May of 1848, then returned to the Salt Lake Valley, elder Woodruff was called to preside over the Church in the eastern United States. And while he was journeying eastward with his family, he had tied his mule to an oak-wood tree beside which they camped; his children were asleep in the wagon. Then the promptings of the Holy Spirit impressed upon him to move his camping-ground; this he did, and moved his children into a cabin. Shortly after this, a thunderstorm swept over the palce in great fury, and the large oak came thundering down to the ground with a terrifying crash. If he had not moved his mules and his carriage, it would have been crushed to pieces, and they would have been killed, as the tree fell where the carriage had stood.

After nearly two years in the mission field, elder Woodruff was called back to the Salt Lake Valley; and was instructed to bring with him the Saints from the eastern states, who would come, with all their supplies if they could. In October of 1850, elder Woodruff and his party arrived in the Valley. During the next twenty-seven years, elder Woodruff entered into a type of work, the colonizing of the empire in the west; for so far he had been involved mainly with missionary work. In 1856, he was appointed assistant Church historian; and these are his words concerning this calling:

> The devil has sought to take away my life the day I was born until now, more so even than the lives of other men. I seem to be a marked victim of the adversary. I can find but one reason for this: the devil knew if I got into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I would write the history of that Church and leave on record the works and teachings of the prophets, of the apostles and elders. I have recorded nearly all the sermons and teachings that I ever heard from the prophet Joseph (Smith). I have in my journal many of the sermons of president Brigham Young, and such men as Orson Hyde, Parley P. Pratt and others. Another reason I was moved upon to write in those days was that nearly all the historians appointed in those times apostatized and took the journals away with them.

(And Wilford Woodruff, the Faithful Servant of God, in his lifetime traveled more than 175,000 miles to preach the Gospel; baptized two thousand persons into the Church; and wrote a journal of more than seven thousand pages.)

Moreover, elder Woodruff, shortly after his return to Utah, was appointed by president Brigham Young to serve in the Utah Territorial Legislature, then consisting of thirteen members. And during these twenty-seven years of colonizing, elder Woodruff also became the first to experiment with fruit orchards, and was recognized as one of the authorities in horticulture. In 1858, he was chosen president of the Deseret Agriculture and Manufacturing Society, and kept that position for nearly twenty years. As in Nauvoo, he kept himself abreast of the temporal affairs through his involvement in the City Council in Utah, as he did through the Legislature, but he was also involved in other organizations such as: the School of the Prophets, which had been started again in many communities in Utah, and various agricultural, manufacturing, and professional groups. Besides these involvements, elder Woodruff kept abreast of all the Spiritual developments among the Saints, by virtue of his position as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve.

In 1867, the Salt Lake Tabernacle, which was begun in 1863, was completed. This was one of the most unique buildings in the world. The structure was elliptical in shape, one hundred and fifty feet in width, and two hundred feet in length. The roof was a self-supporting wooden structure, which was originally fastened together without nails; instead, wooden pins and rawhide were used. It rested upon buttresses of red sandstone set about twelve feet apart. The Tabernacle also contained a pipe organ, the largest in the world, which was the original work of Joseph Ridges of Salt Lake City; and was made out of native timber. The October general conference of that year was held in the new Tabernacle, which was almost complete. Here, one hundred and sixty-three persons were called to go and strengthen the settlements in southern Utah; and the Saints were called on to gather the worthy poor from Great Britain and other foreign lands. Some two and a half years before on April 10, 1865, a special conference of the Church was held; in which it was decided that a telegraph line throughout the settlements in Utah be built. The members of the Church were called upon to assist in this undertaking. As a result, between 1865 and 1867, five hundred miles of lines were constructed at a cost of one hundred and fifty dollars per mile. Now the main settlements of the territory of Utah, and also the towns in Idaho and Nevada were able to reach Salt Lake City; and the authorities of the Church were able to transmit their instructions and communications to the members, without miles of weary travel and great expense. The telegraph line remained under the control of the Church until 1900, when it was merged into Western Union System.

After the completion of the Deseret Telegraph, came to Utah the transcontinental railway. Much of grading of the most difficult part of the route, especially from Echo Canyon to Ogden, was done by the members of the Church. The last spike which united the East with the West was driven at the junction of the two railroads, the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific, at Promontory, Utah. Some eleven hundred high officials of both railways and dignitaries attended this historic event on May 10, 1869. But the transcontinental railways passed through Ogden, Utah; and Salt Lake City was not on the railway line. The same day that the Union Pacific finished laying rails in Ogden, the Utah Central Railway was organized in Salt Lake City. In May of 1869, ground was broken, and the last spike on the railroad between Salt Lake City and Ogden was driven on January 10, 1870.

In April, 1877, the forty-seventh general conference was held in St. George, Utah, in connection with the temple dedication. The temple was dedicated on the sixth; and Daniel H. Wells offered a dedicatory prayer. This was the first temple to be built without molestation by the enemies of the Saints. Elder Woodruff, now seventy years of age, at the request of Brigham Young, offered the dedicatory prayer, in the lower portion of the temple, where the baptismal font was. After the dedication, president Young returned to Salt Lake, and left elder Woodruff in St. George as temple president. Work for those who had passed on held an important place in elder Woodruff's life. He began his first labors in Nauvoo, from hauling stones for the temple to performing ordinance work therein. And as soon as he was informed of the baptism for the dead, he went to the temple in Nauvoo, and in the baptismal font there was baptized for father (Robert) Mason, the one who had prophesied (in 1830, when Wilford was twenty-three years old) that Wilford would become a conspicuous actor in the new Kingdom; meaning that he would occupy an important place in the hierarchy of the Church. Then, when the Saints moved to the Salt Lake Valley, elder Woodruff worked many hours in Endowment House, administering ordinances in behalf of the dead. The Endowment House was a relatively small temple; erected in the northwest corner of the Temple Block. (It was torn down later by the order of president Wilford Woodruff.) And in Logan, Utah, elder Woodruff prophesied that the day would come that a temple would be built in that city.

On August 21, 1877, elder Woodruff was baptized for the signers of the Declaration of Independence and other patriots of the United States, in St. George Temple; a little over a week later he received a telegram announcing the death of Brigham Young. By the beginning of 1879, elder Woodruff found it necessary to go into exile from his home in Salt Lake City; because of the persecution against those who had entered into patriarchal (or plural) marriage.

During this period he spent much time in the south-western states, especially the branches of the Church in Arizona, and labored a great deal among his cherished tribes of Indian Israel. He was an outdoorsman, who enjoyed hunting and fishing; and was among the first to experiment with artificial flies in fly fishing in the western United States. He also was compassionate toward animals, especially his horses.

In October of 1880, elder Woodruff was officially sustained as the president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Now seventy-three years of age, in January of 1881 he was sustained as superintendent of Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association; proving his ability to remain young at heart, as the leader of the young men of the Church. Until the year 1884, Wilford Woodruff was able to make occasional public appearances without fear of legal prosecution, from his voluntary exile. In 1884, he was able to attend the dedication of the second temple completed in the Utah territory; this Logan Temple was prophesied to be built on a prominent hill in that city, by elder Woodruff, over seven years before. The temple was dedicated on May 17, 1884, under the direction of president John Taylor, who offered the dedicatory prayer; the site for the temple was dedicated May 17, 1877, by Orson Pratt; the work of excavation began on May 28, and laying of rock in July. On September 19, 1877, the cornerstones were laid, with the ancient order of temple building being followed. The solemn dedicatory services in 1884 lasted three days, and were quite impressive. The Saints rejoiced in completing another House of the Lord, where work for the salvation of the living and the dead could be performed; a symbol of dedication to their Eternal and Almighty God.

Phoebe, the wife of Wilford the Faithful, died in November of 1885; and while he was yet in hiding, in 1886, the persecution and prosecution against the Saints continued to increase. On May 17, 1888, he attended semi-public dedication ceremonies of the Manti Temple. This third temple at Manti, Sanpete County, was dedicated on May 21, 1888; Lorenzo Snow offered the dedicatory prayer, and the services lasted three days. (The site was chosen in June, 1875, by president Brigham Young; excavation began in April, 1877; the cornerstones were laid April 14, 1879, with proper ceremonies. The building is situated on a hill north-east of the city.)

The so-called crusade against the practise of patriarchal or plural marriage by the Saints continued. Besides the crusade by the Idaho territorial legislature, and supporters of the Struble Bill, the enemies of the Church in Utah used other political means to persecute and molest the Latter-day Saints. In the midst of all these circumstances, Wilford Woodruff remained faithful to the Lord and His revelations, and sought the Lord diligently for relief. One of the most important days of his life was April 7, 1889, when he was sustained President of the Church. Following the death of President Taylor in Kaysville, Utah, on July 25, 1887, Wilford Woodruff became the leader of the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve; and the Apostles continued to act in the position of the Presidency; until the April conference of 1889, when the First presidency was again reorganized. The first and second counselors of president Taylor, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith respectively, who had resumed their places in the Twelve, were again selected by president Wilford Woodruff as his first and second counselors respectively. The following words are from the diary of president Woodruff, under the date of April 7, 1889:

> The 7th day of April, 1889, is one of the most important days in my life, for I was made President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by the unanimous vote of ten thousand of them. The vote was first taken by quorums and then by the entire congregation as in the case of president John Taylor. This is the highest office ever conferred upon any man in the flesh. It came to me in the eighty-third year of my life. I pray God to protect me and give me power to magnify my calling to the end of my days. The Lord has watched over me until the present time.

And after much prayer and supplication, the Lord gave the revelation to president Woodruff that the practise of plural marriage be suspended. When the Supreme Court sustained the anti-polygamy laws, which restricted the religious rights of the Saints, the Church had to submit or stand as violators of the law. In response to these conditions of the time, by revelation from the Lord, president Woodruff issued the document known as the Manifesto; and in his diary, under September 25, 1890, the following was recorded:

> I have arrived at a point in the history of my life as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, where I am under the necessity of acting for the temporal salvation of the Church. The United States government has taken a stand and passed laws to destroy the Latter-day Saints on the subject of polygamy or patriarchal marriage; and praying to the Lord and feeling inspired, I have issued the following proclamation which is sustained by my counselors and the twelve apostles.

On the same day, September 25, 1890, the Manifesto was published as the Official Declaration shown below:

> TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:
>
> Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes, from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the Church have taught, encouraged and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice; and I deny that either forty or any other number of plural marriages have during that period been solemnized in our Temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported, in which the parties allege that the marriage was performed in the Endowment House, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889; but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony; whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the Church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the Church or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy; and when any Elder of the Church has used the language which appeared to convey any such teaching, he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

In October general conference of the Church, the Official Declaration or Manifesto was presented to the congregation; and on motion by Lorenzo Snow, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, was approved by the Latter-day Saints by a unanimous vote; therefore it became binding upon the members of the Church. After this action was taken, George Q. Cannon spoke on the history of polygamy (or patriarchal marriage) and anti-polygamy legislation; and he justified the action taken by president Woodruff, on these grounds: First, when a commandment is given to the children of men, and they are hindered by their enemies, the Lord accepts their offering. Second, the Authority which gave the commandment has the right to revoke. After brother Cannon finished his testimony, thus spoke president Woodruff:

> I want to say to all Israel that the step which I have taken in issuing this Manifesto has not been done without earnest prayer before the Lord . . .
>
> The Lord has required at our hands many things that we have not done, many things that we were prevented from doing. The Lord required us to build a temple in Jackson County. We were prevented by violence from doing it. He required us to build a temple in Far West, which we have not been able to do. A great many things have been required of us, and we have not been able to do them, because of that which surrounds us in the world.
>
> I say to all Israel, the Lord will never permit me nor any other man who stands as the President of the Church to lead you astray. It is not in the program. It is not in the mind of God. If I were to attempt that, the Lord would remove me out of my place; and so He will any other man who attempts to lead the children of men astray from the oracles of God and from their duty. God bless you. Amen.

And it came to pass, that on December 19, 1891, the First Presidency and Apostles petitioned for amnesty. This petition was endorsed by the governor Arthur L. Thomas and chief justice Charles S. Zane, and many leading gentiles. The petition was read before the senate committee on territories, and became a part of their published record. President Benjamin Harrison, who a short time before had visited Utah, later issued a proclamation of amnesty to polygamists for past offenses, on January 4, 1893; who entered into such relationship before November 1, 1890. The Utah commission then ruled that the restrictions against voters in the territory should be removed, based on the pardon of the President.

That patriarchal marriage did not end in Utah is certain; for a formal protest of nineteen citizens of Salt Lake City a few years later was forwarded to the senate of the United States in 1903, asking for the expulsion of Reed Smoot, who believed in polygamy, and was an apostle of the Church; and the protest was divided under six headings:

1. The Holy Priesthood of the Saints, according to the doctrine of that Church, is vested with supreme authority in all things temporal and Spiritual.
2. The First Presidency and the Twelve Apostles are supreme in the exercise and transmission of the mandates of this authority.
3. As this body of men has not abandoned the principles and practices of political dictation, so also it has not abandoned belief in patriarchal marriage and polygamous cohabitation.
4. That this is the attitude of the First Presidency and apostolates, even since the suspensory manifesto of 1890, is evidenced by their teachings since then.

the power of the adversary would be broken; and from that time onward, the enemy would have less power over the Saints and meet with greater failures in oppressing them. From that time, a renewed interest in the Gospel message would be awakened throughout the world.

In the fall of 1893, president Woodruff traveled with the Tabernacle Choir to Chicago, to attend the Chicago World's Fair; on the way the choir sang in Denver, Kansas City, and Independence (Missouri). At the world's Columbian Exposition the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir entered the competition, and received second place in the midst of prejudice and suspicion. On their way to Chicago and returning home, the choir gave concerts in large cities, which did engender goodwill among the people. During this exposition also a World's Parliament of Religions was held, beginning September 11. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was not invited to participate, although the religions of the world, Christians, Mohammedans (Islamites), Jews, and pagans did represent themselves, and were heard. And when elder Brigham H. Roberts, of the first council of seventies, representing the Church, requested the privilege of taking part and speaking before the assembly, he was denied the privilege. Truly, the Church of the Saints is not of the world, nor has it ever been, nor will it ever be; although at times it may appear to be so. However, elder Roberts was granted permission to deliver a paper in one of the committee rooms, which would seat about fifty people; this brother Roberts declined, and instead he exposed the matter to the press, concerning the bigotry of the officials; and the Church made some political gain from it.

On September 6, 1893, Joseph L. Rawlins, a delegate from Utah, presented a bill in the House of Representatives, entitled: An Act to Enable the People of Utah to Form a Constitution and State Government and to be Admitted into the Union on an Equal Footing with the Original States. After some opposition from congressman Morse of Massachusetts, who declared the people of Utah to be criminals and vagabonds, the bill passed the House, December 13, 1893, and the senate in July, 1894; and was signed by president Grover Cleveland. And in the election held on November 6, 1894, for delegates to the constitutional convention, Republicans were successful. The constitutional convention met March 4, 1895, in Salt Lake City; and was organized by electing John Henry Smith, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, as president. Both the Saints and the opposition sat side by side for sixty-six days, framing the constitution of the State of Utah. It was ratified by the people of Utah by an overwhelming vote. Then, on January 4, 1896, president Grover Cleveland issued a proclamation, and Utah was admitted into the great Union of States. And after Utah obtained statehood, the escheated property of the Church was returned. On March 28, 1896, president Cleveland approved the restoration of the personal property of the Church. Although in September, 1893, Joseph L. Rawlins presented in Congress a resolution for the restoration of Church property, and the resolution was favorably received by Congress, and was signed by president Cleveland on October 25, the real estate escheated to the government was not returned until three years later.

Also, before the administration of president Wilford Woodruff, the first Thursday in each month was set apart by the Church as a fast day; and Friday was considered by some General Authorities a holy day. On December 6, 1896, a change in the day was made and the first Sunday of each month became the general fast day for the members of the Church, from that time onward. Then, during July of 1897, the fiftieth anniversary of the pioneer's arrival in the Salt Lake Valley was celebrated; and all the pioneers still alive were honored, president Woodruff being the most esteemed of them all. A few months earlier he had been given special honors in the Tabernacle, when he turned ninety years of age. On returning home that evening, president Woodruff made the following entry into his journal:

> The scene completely overpowered me. The events of my childhood and early manhood came to my mind. I remembered vividly how I prayed to the Lord that I might live to see a prophet or an apostle who would teach me the Gospel of Christ. Here I stood in the great Tabernacle filled with ten thousand children, with Prophets, Apostles, and Saints. My head was a fountain of tears.

In the fall of 1897, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coronation of king Oscar II and queen Sophia of Sweden, president Wodruff sent to the king and queen a specially bound copy of the Book of Mormon, in behalf of the Swedish Saints in Utah. Elder Sjodahl, who made the actual presentation of the book, received special invitation to the grand banquet in the palace, on this festive occasion. Thenceforth, the Church of the Saints began to grow in the royal courts of Europe. In August of 1898, Wilford Woodruff left Utah for the Pacific Coast, to find relief from the illness which was making it difficult for him to move about among his people. And while he was in San Francisco, he took leave from his earthly life, at the age of ninety-one (on September 2, 1898).

4. Lorenzo Snow

(the missionary, social reformer, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from September 13, 1898 to October 10, 1901)

Lorenzo Snow was born in Mantua, Portage County, Ohio, on April 3, 1814; during a time when America was at war with England. In his early years he was filled with the excitement of military life. And unlike Joseph Smith, Jr., Brigham Young, John Taylor, and Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo was somewhat uninterested in religious pursuits, although he had been reared in a religious family. He had heard Joseph Smith, Jr., speak to a group in 1831, when he was seventeen years old, in Hiram, Ohio; and his mother and sister Leonora were baptized into the Church. And before his military career came to an end, he was awarded a lieutenant's commission from the governor of Ohio. His sister Eliza R. Snow was baptized into the Church in 1835; and had a constant fear that if he continued in the military, his life would be cut short in the battlefield. As a result, she watched diligently for the right time to persuade him to accept the truths of the Gospel.

When Lorenzo was twenty-one years of age, he had decided that a good education was as essential as his military career. Therefore, he enrolled at Oberlin College in Ohio, a Presbyterian institution. Just before completing his course there, he wrote to his sister Eliza: If there is nothing better than is to be found here in Oberlin College, good bye to all religions. Immediately, Eliza responded to the confusion with which her younger brother was faced; for she had been baptized a few months before. And while Lorenzo was traveling to Oberlin, he became acquainted with David W. Patten, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, who was then returning from a mission in Canada. During the twenty-five miles they rode together, the two men had a lengthy discussion, and elder Patten left a marked impression upon Lorenzo Snow. Eliza Snow, realizing these things, wrote to her brother to come to Kirtland, Ohio, after his course at Oberlin, in order that he might further his education by studying Hebrew under an able Hebrew professor in the School of the Prophets. This experience with the brethren in the School was to change altogether the religious misconceptions of Lorenzo Snow.

When he came to Kirtland, Ohio, he was pleased with the members of the Church, and was impressed with the company of the prophet Joseph Smith; especially Joseph's father Joseph Smith, Sr., Patriarch of the Church at that time. Following are the words of Lorenzo Snow, in retrospect, concerning his impression of the Patriarch:

> He (Joseph Smith, Sr.) surprised me when he said: Don't worry, take it calmly and the Lord will show you the truth of this great latter-day work; and you will want to be baptized. I studied the principles, I heard the Prophet discourse upon the grandest subjects. At times he was filled with the Holy Ghost, speaking as with the voice of an archangel and filled with the power of God; his whole person shone and his face was lightened until it appeared as the whiteness of the driven snow. Finally my prayers were answered and I was convinced of the truth sufficiently to want to be baptized to get a knowledge for myself of the testimony that Joseph Smith had seen God.
> A peaceful, good Spirit came upon me that I had never experienced before, and I felt satisfied with the sacrifice I had made. Since then I have been ashamed to call it a sacrifice, but at that time it was a sacrifice to me, because I could see that it would change my whole future and perhaps destroy all my worldly prospects and aspirations, besides being a great disappointment to my relatives and friends.

At the age of twenty-two years, in June of 1836, Lorenzo Snow was baptized into the Church, in Kirtland, Ohio; and the following winter he was ordained an elder. And some two or three weeks after his baptism, his faith and testimony were strengthened by means of divine manifestations which he received, as described by him:

> . . . I began to reflect upon the fact that I had not obtained a knowledge of the truth of the work -- that I had not realized the fulfillment of the promise, He that doeth my will shall know of the doctrine. And I began to feel very uneasy. I laid aside my books, left the house, and wandered around through the fields under the oppressive influence of a gloomy, disconsolate spirit; while an undescribable cloud of darkness seemed to envelope me. I had been accustomed at the close of the day to retire for secret prayer to a grove a short distance away from my lodgings; but at this time I felt no inclination to do so. The spirit of prayer had departed and the heavens seemed like brass over my head. At length, realizing that the usual time had come for secret prayer, I concluded that I would not forego my evening devotion (service). And, as a matter of formality, I knelt as I was in the habit of doing, in my accustomed secluded place, but not feeling as I was accustomed to feel.

I had no sooner opened my lips in an effort to pray, than I heard a sound, just above my head; like the rustling of silken robes, and immediately the Spirit of God descended upon me; completely enveloping my whole person, filling me from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, and O, the joy and happiness I felt! No language can describe the almost instantaneous transition from a dense cloud of mental and Spiritual darkness into a refulgence of light and knowledge, as it was at that time imparted to my understanding.

I then received a perfect knowledge that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; and of the restoration of the (Higher) priesthood (unto mankind), and of the bringing forth of the fulness of the Gospel. It was a complete baptism, a tangible immersion in the heavenly principle or element, the Holy Ghost; and even more real and physical in its effects upon every part of my body system than the immersion by water; dispelling forever, so long as reason and memory last, all possibility of doubt or fear in relation to the fact handed down to us historically; that the babe of Bethlehem is truly the Son of God; also the fact that He is now being revealed (again) to the children of men; communicating knowledge, the same as in the Apostolic times. I was perfectly satisfied, as well I might be, for my expectations were more than realized, I think I may safely say in an infinite degree.

I cannot tell how long I remained in the blissful enjoyment and divine enlightenment; but it was several minutes before the celestial element which filled and surrounded me began gradually to withdraw. On arising from my kneeling posture, with my heart swelling with gratitude to God, beyond the power of expression. I felt, I knew that He had conferred on me what only an Omnipotent Being can confer; that which is of greater value than all the wealth and honors worlds can bestow. That night as I retired to rest, the same wonderful manifestations were repeated, and continued to be for several successive nights. The sweet remembrance of those glorious experiences, from that time to the present, bring afresh before me, imparting an inspiring influence which pervades my whole being; and I trust will, to the close of my earthly existence.

During the winter of 1836-37, Lorenzo was attending the School of the Prophets in Kirtland, and was encouraged by Sidney Rigdon to continue his education; but in Lorenzo's heart was the desire to serve the Lord in the mission field, and he remained firm in his commitment. In the spring of 1837, Lorenzo Snow set out to preach the Gospel in the nearby towns and cities in Ohio, without purse or scrip. At first, it was difficult for him to rely on others for food and shelter, besides being somewhat bashful, never having spoken in public before. And when he was called upon to speak during this short-term mission, he would often pray during much of the day to gain Spiritual strength. The blessings of patriarch Joseph Smith, Sr., given to elder Snow also left a great impression on his mind; these were the blessings bestowed upon him:

Thou hast a great work to perform in thy day and generation. God has called thee to the ministry. Thou must preach the Gospel of thy Savior to the inhabitants of the earth. Thou shalt have faith like that of the brother of Jared . . . There shall not be a mightier man on earth than thou . . . The diseased shall send to thee their aprons and handkerchiefs and by thy touch their owners shall be made whole. Thou shalt have power over unclean spirits; at thy command the powers of darkness shall stand back and devils shall flee away. If expedient the dead shall rise and come forth at thy bidding . . . Thou shalt have a long life. The vigor of thy mind shall not be abated and the vigor of thy body shall be preserved.

Soon after his mission in Ohio, elder Snow, a hunter and military man, traveled to Missouri with the Saints. There he decided to go hunting for wild turkeys. And as he was thus engaged in his favorite pastime of hunting, he realized that he was amusing himself by giving pain and death to harmless and innocent creatures that had as much right to life and nature as he himself. Thus he realized that such indulgence was without any justification, and felt condemned. Thereupon, he laid his gun on his shoulder and returned home; and from that time onward he felt no desire for the cruel and murderous pastime.

About the fall of 1838, he again had the urge to go on a mission, and this time it was southern Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, and Ohio. Elder Snow was not in good health during these days, and the journey on foot was exhausting and perilous. When he departed from Kentucky to go to Ohio in February, it was the worst time of the year to travel; he walked much of the five hundred miles through rain and snow. By the time he reached Ohio, the Saints there did not even recognize elder Snow. He was forced to confine himself to bed many days, due to raging fever and exhaustion. Soon after priesthood blessings were bestowed upon him, he recuperated; and went about his mission of serving his Father in Heaven. During the winter of 1839, he taught school in Ohio, while waiting for spring and return to his family, who were recently driven from Missouri to Nauvoo, Illinois.

Elder Snow arrived in Nauvoo in the spring of 1840; and shortly after, left for England to serve the Lord in the mission field. In February of 1841, elder Snow was appointed to preside over the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in London; as the official spokesman for the Church there. It was during this time that he presented a specially-bound copy of the Book of Mormon to Queen Victoria. After this, elder Snow was called to assist the mission president, and in 1843, he was asked to take charge of a company of two hundred and fifty Saints bound for Nauvoo, Illinois.

It had now been nearly seven years since the time Lorenzo Snow had joined the Church; and soon after his arrival in Nauvoo, he was called by Joseph Smith to organize a military company mainly from those he had brought with him from England, as part of the Nauvoo Legion. After he had accomplished this task, elder Snow was made captain over this company; however, most of the time he labored as a school teacher in Lima settlement, some thirty miles south of Nauvoo; and there he diligently taught the roughnecks, who in the past had whipped their teachers and vandalized the school. He won their support by teaching them the importance of education. After this, Joseph Smith was martyred, and elder Snow was called back to Nauvoo; and from June of 1844 until the beginning of the exodus of Israel to Salt Lake City, he labored in the building of the Nauvoo Temple; and he was assigned to gather donations and tithes for the temple. Then he performed temple work until the exodus. In 1845, Elder Snow married Charlotte Squires and Mary Adaline Goddard, at the age of thirty-one years.

And during the exodus of the Saints from Nauvoo, elder Snow was not assigned to the journeys of the camp of Israel; but he was called by the leaders of the Church to preside over the grain settlement at Mount Pisgah, where he was forced to stay earlier because of illness. Here he fell ill again for several days with burning fever; but recuperated soon after the priesthood blessings were invoked, and his wives and sister Eliza provided tender and loving care. Soon after, Charles C. Rich, the president of the colony of Mt. Pisgah, was called to join the main body of the Saints at Council Bluff; and elder Snow became the Spiritual leader for the colony. At Mt. Pisgah, elder Snow developed keen insight into the administrative problems of a settlement, and into the process of colonization.

The Saints in Mt. Pisgah were poverty-stricken; few of them had enough food and clothing, sickness and disease prevailed throughout the colony; and many died as a result. Thereupon, elder Snow organized and sent people into Ohio, to solicit for contributions from men of means, who were not members of the Church. The efforts of elder Snow were so successful, that he was not only able to provide food and supplies for the Saints in Pisgah, but also was able to send a wagonload of supplies as a New Year's gift to Brigham Young for the Saints in Council Bluff. Besides these efforts, he was also successful in originating various types of entertainment, which was vitally needed for the mental and physical health of the Saints; for several families, including elder Snow's, had already lost children or other loved ones in the exodus from Nauvoo, Illinois.

Elder Snow's abilities as a leader and colonizer became so widely recognized that soon he was called upon to help the leaders at Garden Grove, and to organize their people. Then, in the spring of 1848, elder Snow was appointed a captain of a hundred by president Brigham Young, and was instructed to journey with his group to the valleys of the mountains. With this group of three hundred and twenty-one souls in their ninety-nine wagons, they traveled across the plains by ox team; and arrived in the Salt Lake Valley in the fall of 1848. In February of 1849, elder Snow was called to appear at a meeting of the Quorum of the Twelve; and there he was ordained an Apostle and member of the Quorum of the Twelve. During the summer of that year, he served as the chairman of the Pioneer Day celebration; and in the fall was called to gather funds to enable the Saints with very little money to immigrate. Out of these efforts was later developed the Perpetual Emigrating Fund.

And at the October conference of 1849, elder Lorenzo Snow was called with John Taylor and Erastus Snow, to open Europe to the preaching of the Gospel, with a special task of establishing a mission in Italy, the homeland of the Universal or Catholic Church. Elder Taylor was to open France, and elder Erastus Snow, Scandinavia to missionary work. But elder Lorenzo Snow stationed himself in Rome, where the pope at this time was Pius IX. And in the Piedmont area of Italy, he found some success among a Protestant group, known as the Waldenses. Elder Snow directed his missionary work from Italy, and opened Switzerland, Sicily, India, and Malta to the preaching of the Gospel. It is said of elder Snow that he and Paul the Apostle of Christ Jesus had similar experiences during their missionary work. Both preached the Gospel in Italy and in the island of Malta; and both labored in Malta because of boat problems. Paul was shipwrecked there and Lorenzo Snow remained there longer than planned because of the breakdown of a steamer in the Suez Canal. While at Malta, elder Snow decided to make it the headquarters for having the Scriptural material printed there, to be supplied to Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Bombay, and Calcutta. He also hoped to take the Gospel to Greece, Russia, the Turkish empire, and Spain. And the Gospel was preached in Gibraltar.

After an absence of some three years (1849 to 1852), the First Presidency issued a special request calling all members of the Quorum of the Twelve home for April conference. Upon returning home to Salt Lake Valley, elder Snow taught school during the winter; he was also appointed a regent of the University of Deseret, and to the legislative body of the Territory of Utah, which position he kept for thirty years. In 1872, he was elected president of the Legislative Council, and kept this position for ten years. His broad spectrum of activities included not only these and many other committees, but also in the areas of arts and science. Sensing a need among the pioneers for greater appreciation of arts and sciences, he organized a society; the main purpose of which was to bring people together for evenings of music, poetry, reading, commentaries and discussions on various subjects and topics. This society later came to be known as Polysophical Society. At first the meetings were held at the home of elder Snow, then in the Seventies Hall. When the attending group became even larger, the meetings had to be held in the Social Hall in Salt Lake City. And the success of all today's Mutual Improvement Associations is attributed to the social programs introduced to Israel by elder Snow. It is recorded, that the Polysophical Society is the basis upon which all the Mutual Improvement Associations of the Church have been built; to it they were indebted for their ideals, which by utilizing various gifts and endowments found in gathering Israel, gave them a greater scope and mightier influence; provided recreation and scattered intelligence, and served as the nursery and showcase for their talents in arts, sciences, religion, politics, amusement, and other areas; all this was done in the spirit of refining, purifying and edifying, under the supervision of the priesthood.

Besides being involved in such diversified activities, elder Snow, together with Wilford Woodruff and John Taylor, took active part in the Universal Scientific Society; whose purpose was to improve and uplift the intellectual capacities and pursuits of its members, primarily by these four means: through lectures and essays on every aspect of arts and sciences; through the use of a good library and reading room; through collections in every department to form an extensive museum; and through obtaining scientific instruments and apparatus that display advancement in arts and sciences.

In 1853, elder Snow had been called to go to Brigham City in northern Utah to build up that community which was confronted with social and financial problems; for it was a common practise during colonization to place some General Authorities over such missions. Thereupon, elder Snow, with fifty families as his helpers, journeyed to the Brigham City settlement. He devoted more than thirty years to the development of this poverty-stricken community of mud huts to a most successful cooperative community in the territory of Utah; it became a model community in terms of social reforms. President Brigham Young spoke these words concerning the efforts of elder Snow in the development of this community: And brother Lorenzo Snow, who has had charge of you, has set the best example for the literal building up of the Kingdom of God of any of our presiding elders.

Tabernacle of the Saints in Brigham City (originally constructed in the 1870's)

However, in 1864, the work of elder Snow in Brigham City was interrupted, due to problems in the Hawaiian Islands. The Church was established in the Islands by the missionaries some fourteen years before (in 1850), during the first great missionary drive after the arrival of the Saints in the Salt Lake Valley. And some seven years before (in 1857), during the time of Johnston's Army, all of the missionaries in Hawaii were called home by president Brigham Young. As a result, the local branches of the Church in the Islands were left without guidance from Utah. Then in 1861, an elder named Walter M. Gibson went to the Islands as a missionary. He established himself as a dictator and began to run the affairs of the branches of the Church; then acting without authority, proceeded to sell offices in the priesthood, including apostles, high priests, and seventies. He had asked the Church members to turn over to him all of their properties; and had organized the male members of his congregations into armies. When president Young was informed of the matter, he called two of the apostles, Lorenzo Snow and Ezra T. Benson, to investigate the misconduct of elder Gibson. These two men went, and three other missionaries who had previously worked in Hawaii; among them was also Joseph F. Smith, now twenty-six years old (who was later to succeed Lorenzo Snow as president of the Church).

Now, Gibson had established himself in the Islands, claiming authority equal to that of president Young's, among the Saints there. And he ruled them with compulsion and played upon their fears and superstitions. After hearing about the arrival of these missionaries, Gibson told the natives that these men did not hold as much authority as he, and if they listened to them their eternal welfare would be threatened. But through the Lord's grace working through Joseph F. Smith, who had previously labored among these people, Gibson's influence was subdued. Elder Snow came close to losing his life, when the apostles (the missionaries) arrived there; they had transferred to a small boat just off the coast of Hawaii, and elder Snow lost consciousness in the water and sank out of sight, when an upset in the surf caused the boat to tilt. When his body was found and brought to the beach, several hours of physical therapy and prayer were required to revive him. Soon after his recovery, elder Snow labored among these people of the Isles until order was restored in the Church. Thereupon, the missionaries left elder Smith (Joseph F.) in charge of the affairs of the mission there, and returned home. This most adventurous mission lasted a little over one month, among the good, simple and warm-hearted natives of the Isles.

Then, in 1872, elder Snow was again called away from Brigham City, for a trip to Palestine, the birthplace of the house of Israel. It so happened that president Young had called elder George A. Smith to fill a mission to Palestine, to investigate the possibility of opening more missions in Europe and to dedicate Palestine anew as a gathering place for the Jews. Elder Smith was given the choice of taking whomsoever he wished on this mission; and elder Snow was one of those he chose. Thus the Latter-day apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ rededicated Palestine for the return of the Jews, and held the service on the Mount of Olives.

Another task awaited him, upon his return home to Brigham City; elder Snow was to instigate the United Order in Brigham City; and he was involved in this project from 1873 till 1880. These are his words on this matter:

> I view cooperation, when properly understood and practiced, as being a stepping stone to the Order of Enoch; and will enable the Saints, who receive it in a proper Spirit, to gradually prepare themselves to enter in due time, more fully into the practice of the (moral) principles necessary to accomplish the building up of the Kingdom of God. We must have experience in order properly to understand how to sustain temporal institutions and manage financial concerns wisely, and for concentrated means.
>
> . . . (Thus hath the Lord spoken): Wait a little season for the redemption of Zion; that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more fully concerning their duty and the things which I require at their hands. For, behold, I do not require at their hands to fight the battles of Zion; for as I didst say in the former commandment, even so will I fulfill, I will fight your battles.

Between 1872 and 1882, elder Snow also served as president of Utah Territorial Legislative Council. In 1873, at the age of fifty-nine years, he had been called as one of the additional counselors in the First Presidency; and he held that position until the death of president Brigham Young, in 1877. In 1879, he offered dedicatory prayers at Manti, Sanpete County, when cornerstones were laid on April 14, for the Manti Temple. Then, after serving a short-term mission to the Indians in the northwestern United States, in November of 1885 elder Snow was arrested for practicing patriarchal (plural) marriage. At this time he was seventy-one years old; forty years before he had wholeheartedly embraced the doctrine of celestial marriage, and Mary Adaline Goddard and Charlotte Squires were to the beach, several hours of physical therapy and prayer were required to revive him. Soon after his recovery, elder Snow labored among these people of the Isles until order was restored in the Church. Thereupon, the missionaries left elder Smith (Joseph F.) in charge of the affairs of the mission there, and returned home. This most adventurous mission lasted a little over one month, among the good, simple and warm-hearted natives of the Isles.

Then, in 1872, elder Snow was again called away from Brigham City, for a trip to Palestine, the birthplace of the house of Israel. It so happened that president Young had called elder George A. Smith to fill a mission to Palestine, to investigate the possibility of opening more missions in Europe and to dedicate Palestine anew as a gathering place for the Jews. Elder Smith was given the choice of taking whomsoever he wished on this mission; and elder Snow was one of those he chose. Thus the Latter-day apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ rededicated Palestine for the return of the Jews, and held the service on the Mount of Olives.

At this time he was seventy-one years old; forty years before he had wholeheartedly embraced the doctrine of celestial marriage, and Mary Adaline Goddard and Charlotte Squires were sealed to him on the same day in the Nauvoo Temple. After spending eleven months in prison, the case of Lorenzo Snow was tried before the courts of the land. The ruling of Utah's lower courts, which found him guilty, was finally reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Segregation Ruling was declared unconstitutional, and the seventy-three year old apostle was released from prison in February of 1887.

But elder Snow wasted no time in prison; soon he and other brethren formed a school there, and a total of sixty-five students enrolled; many of the prisoners who were unable to read or write left the prison with the joy of being able to do so. After elder Snow had served his term for the offense of celestial or patriarchal marriage, he was now able to appear in public without fear of arrest. In the selfsame year, elder Snow was given the task of organizing and conducting the April general conference; which was to be held in the newly constructed Tabernacle, in Provo, Utah. In July of 1887, president John Taylor died in Kaysville, Utah; and elder Snow was one of the main speakers at his funeral.

In 1888, he was chosen as a member of the general board of education, to take charge of the Church schools; and in May of that year, elder Snow offered the dedicatory prayer at Manti Temple. The following year he was sustained as the president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. In 1893, when the Salt Lake Temple was completed, after forty years, and was dedicated on April six, president Wilford Woodruff appointed elder Snow as its first president; and thus he became that blessed watchman at the door which opens between the living and the dead.

Now, at the age of seventy-nine years, elder Snow was appointed president of the Salt Lake Temple; and after serving five years, at the age of eighty-four he was sustained president of the Church, in 1898. As the time of death of president Wilford Woodruff approached, elder Snow retired to one of the rooms in the temple and dressed himself in the robes of the Priesthood. He then kneeled before one of the altars and prayed that president Woodruff's life be extended beyond his own; that he (as the president of the Quorum of the Twelve) might not have to bear the burdens of the Presidency in his old age. Although the Lord fulfills every word of his servants and justifies their prayers and utterances; president Woodruff was taken up according to the Lord's will, purposes, and designs. Thereupon, elder Snow returned again to the solace of the temple and poured out his heart, saying: Nevertheless, (O Lord) Thy will be done; I have not sought this responsibility but if it be Thy will, I now present myself before Thee for Thy guidance and instruction. I ask that Thou show me what Thou wouldst have me do.

And the Lord instructed president Lorenzo Snow in the temple to reorganize immediately the Presidency of the Church; and to choose George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith as counselors. Eleven days after the death of president Woodruff, the apostles met in council and reorganized the First Presidency. At the October semiannual conference, the usual procedure was followed in presenting the new officers of the Presidency, and all the authorities of the Church were unanimously sustained, on October 9, 1898.

At this time the Church was confronted with financial difficulties, because of political persecutions and prosecutions; and it became necessary to issue bonds. The bonds in the sum of one million dollars were issued, and were well supported by the Saints and their many enterprises. Thus the Church was able to meet its financial obligations in the face of adversity. It was also during the administration of president Snow that the law of tithing was preached with full force. Southern Utah was experiencing one of the worst droughts of its history; and prospects of crops were so poor that many Saints did not even plant; cattle were dying by the hundreds for lack of water, and the Saints were planning on moving from southern Utah. Thereupon, under the inspiration of God, president Snow and leading General Authorities decided to go to St. George in southern Utah to hold a special conference there. And the Lord revealed to president Snow that the law of tithing had been neglected by the Saints; and many were already heavily in debt; including the Church. But, now, through strict obedience to the law of tithing, by paying full and honest tithing, not only would the Church be relieved of its indebtedness, but also through the blessings of the Lord upon the Latter-day Saints, they would be relieved of their own indebtedness, and would become a prosperous people. It was now June of 1899, and president Snow promised the Saints in St. George that if they would pay their tithes and plant their crops, trusting in the Lord, they would harvest a good yield in the fall.

As a result, the Saints in southern Utah did show their faith in the Lord and his prophet, by planting their crops and abiding in the law of tithing at a great personal sacrifice. After their preaching in St. George, president Snow and his team of missionaries moved northward, informing the Saints in all the towns along the way to demonstrate their faith in the Lord by payment of a full tithe. One month passed away, and yet there was no sign of rain. President Snow, however, remained steadfast in his prayers and supplications in behalf of the Saints in southern Utah. Lo, on August 2, 1899, word arrived from St. George that rain was pouring; and according to the word of the prophet, the Saints there did harvest a good crop that fall.

On their return from St. George, the law of tithing was made the special topic of discussion in the Mutual Improvement conference, which was held in May of 1899; and it became the slogan of the various stakes of Zion. And in that conference, this resolution was unanimously approved: That we accept the doctrine of tithing, as now presented by president Snow, as the present word and will of the Lord unto us; and we do accept it with all our hearts; we will ourselves observe it, and we will do all in our power to get the Latter-day Saints to do likewise. And president Snow thanked them, saying: Brethren, the God of our fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob bless you; every man who is here, who has made this promise will be saved in the Celestial Kingdom. God bless you. Amen.

Following the Mutual Improvement conference, a solemn assembly of all General Authorities and the officers of various stakes was held in the Salt Lake Temple, on Sunday, July 2, 1899; this day was also a general fast day. The law of tithing was again discussed, among the other topics of discussion. Six hundred and twenty-three officers of the Church adopted a resolution, that they would covenant with the Lord to observe the sacred law of tithing, and teach the Saints to do likewise. Also during president Snow's administration, the fiftieth anniversary of the introduction of the Gospel into Scandinavia was celebrated on June 14, 1900, in the Assembly Hall, in Salt Lake City; and the festivities continued until June 17. In December of that year, similar ceremonies and festivities took place in Honolulu; in commemoration of the opening of the mission in the Hawaiian Islands. The Saints from various islands assembled together to hang loose, to feast and refresh; and to hear George Q. Cannon, one of their first missionaries, speak.

Just before the celebration of mission Jubilees, however, an explosion in Mine #4, at Winter Quarters, near Scofield, Carbon County (on May 1, 1900) killed nearly two hundred miners; many Saints were also numbered among them. In response to this sad occurrence, George Teasdale, Heber J. Grant, and Reed Smoot of the Twelve attended the services at Scofield, on Sunday, May 6, 1900. And Governor Heber M. Wells appealed to the people of the state of Utah; and they responded in a saintly manner.

By now, president Snow was about eighty-seven years of age; and his earthly ministry was nearing its end. On February 14, 1901, elder Heber J. Grant of the Council of the Twelve Apostles was chosen to open a mission in Japan. Thus on July 24, 1901, elder Grant with three other elders (Horace S. Ensign, Louis A. Kelsch, and Alma O. Taylor) departed for Yokohama, Japan; and arrived there on August 12. Due to language and cultural problems the preaching was difficult; but elder Alma Taylor did remain there as president of the mission for nine years; and since that time a great deal of success has been achieved in that region.

When the time of October general conference arrived in 1901, president Snow was ill and unable to attend the opening sessions. On Sunday afternoon of October six, the third and final day, he was present, although he appeared to be somewhat feeble. At the close of his address the General Authorities were sustained; Joseph F. Smith was presented as first counselor in the Presidency, and Rudger Clawson as the second counselor (George Q. Cannon having died in California on April 12, 1901). These counselors, however, were not set apart for their offices, for after president Snow returned from the conference, he was confined to his room in the Bee Hive House; where four days later, on October 10, he died. After the funeral services, which were held on the thirteenth of October in the tabernacle, his body was taken by a special train to Brigham City, his former home; and there buried, in the presence of the General Authorities and a vast gathering of people.

Thus the patriarchal blessings, which Joseph Smith, Sr., conferred upon young Lorenzo Snow were fulfilled; for he did become the mightiest man on earth, the Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Lord's Church. But one of the final and most important accomplishments of Lorenzo Snow's life was to formalize and solidify for future generations of Church leaders, the main purpose and objective of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: that of carrying the Gospel into all the world to prepare for the Second Coming of the Savior.

5. Joseph F. Smith

(the missionary, social reformer, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from October 17, 1901 to November 19, 1918)

Joseph F. Smith was born in Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri, on Tuesday, November 13, 1838. He was born to Hyrum Smith's wife, Mary Fielding Smith; two weeks after Hyrum the brother of Joseph Smith, Jr., was taken by the mob-militia and thrown into jail. Born and reared in the Church, he grew up in the midst of trials, tribulations and persecutions. His mother was quite ill for several months. And at the time she visited her husband Hyrum in Liberty Jail in January of 1839, she had to be taken on a bed made up in a wagon. Soon after, their house was vandalized and looted by a mob; and during this ordeal infant Joseph had narrowly escaped death by suffocation, when a bed was thrown over him. And when the Saints were driven from Missouri to Quincy, Illinois, Mary Fielding Smith was still confined to her bed.

The first eight years of his life, little Joseph F. Smith spent in Nauvoo, Illinos. The early childhood memories of that city were so deeply impressed upon his mind that sixty years later when he returned to Nauvoo as the prophet of the Lord, he was able to identify the exact location where he stood as a young boy of six, watching his father Hyrum Smith ride toward Carthage. He also remembered his father's martyrdom in 1844, saying: Without getting off his horse, father leaned over in his saddle and picked me up off the ground. He picked me up off the ground; he kissed me good-bye and put me down again, and I saw him ride away. I remember the night of the murder . . . when one of the brethren came from Carthage and knocked on our window after dark and called to my mother, Sister Smith, your husband has been killed. And he remembered the screams of his mother upon hearing the terrifying news.

Two years later, in 1846, eight-year old Joseph F. left Nauvoo in company with other Saints, his mother and uncle Joseph Fielding; driving an ox team across the plains from Nauvoo to the Salt Lake Valley. At the Winter Quarters (Nebraska), one morning widow Smith found her best yoke of oxen missing; immediately, Joseph F. and Mary's brother Joseph Fielding set out to find the lost animals. After searching all that morning in vain, they returned to the camp tired and disheartened. There young Joseph F. found his mother kneeling in prayer, asking the Lord for His guidance in finding the lost oxen. After the prayer, she served breakfast to her son and her brother; and told them she was going in search of the oxen. Although her brother discouraged her, saying that search was of no use, she went ahead according to the prompting of the Spirit, toward the stream. Before she reached there, a herdsman from another wagon train, driving cattle to Missouri, said to her that he had seen her oxen that morning wandering in the opposite direction than that in which she was headed. She ignored the advice of the herdsman and continued to walk toward the stream. As she reached near its banks, she turned around and beckoned for her son and her brother. When they came to the place where Mary Fielding was, they saw the oxen fastened to a clump of willows fully hidden from sight; apparently someone intended to steal them. This experience left an everlasting impression on his mind; and he became, as his mother, a true believer in the power of prayer and in the power of the priesthood.

At the age of nine years, Joseph F. as a fine young herdsboy was taking some of his mother's cattle to the feeding grounds near Winter Quarters. There he and one of his friends were attacked by a band of Indians; and young Joseph F. rode at full speed to the front of the cattle in order to stampede them back to town. As he rode behind them, some of the Indians cut him off from the herd; and two Indians, one on either side of him, took his arms, and lifted him from his horse; then they slowed their speed, letting the horse run out from under him, and then threw him violently to the ground. He narrowly escaped death, as the horse behind him jumped over him. Just in the nick of time, the Saints arrived and frightened the Indians away.

The mother of Joseph F. was truly an inspiration and great source of strength to him. Her faith in the Lord and prayer was so great, that once one of her favorite and needed oxen lay dying; so she called upon her brother Joseph Fielding and insisted that he administer to the ox, exercising the power of the priesthood; behold, the ox rose to its feet with renewed strength and vigor. They arrived in the Salt Lake Valley in September of 1848, having left Nauvoo two years before. And for the next six years, Joseph F. labored as a herdsboy in the Valley, in the shadows of the Rocky Mountains, leading flocks and herds, protecting cattle and sheep from wolf packs and other predators; in much the same manner as David and others of old; thus he learned the true meaning of the words, the Good Shepherd, the lost sheep, the fold, and the flock. In 1852, his mother passed away when he was less than fourteen years old.

Then, at the age of fifteen, during the April general conference of 1854, Joseph F. Smith was called to a mission in the Hawaiian Islands, and was ordained an elder; after receiving his endowments, he departed for the mission field. Elder Joseph F. Smith labored in Maui, and in Kohala on the Big Island; at the age of sixteen he was transferred to the island of Molokai, as the presiding elder. He and his companion, elder Thomas A. Dowell, visited daily several small branches there, preaching the Gospel, healing the sick and the afflicted, casting out evil spirits, and reading to the Saints marvellous passages from the life of the Savior; walking nearly thirty miles each day, under the harsh Hawaiian weather. One day elder Smith's companion collapsed with exhaustion, hunger and thirst. But when they reached the home of a good German couple, Mr. and Mrs. Myers, they took them in and gave them food and lodging for several days. Moreover, Mr. Myers provided elder Smith with a riding horse, so that he could visit all the branches of the Church.

Also during this mission, elder Joseph F. Smith became critically ill with high fever. For the next three years a native Saint and his wife most tenderly took care of him and nursed him, even through fasting and praying they pleaded with the Lord in his behalf. And elder Smith always cherished the fond memory of his gracious Hawaiian father and mother, Ma and Pa Manuhii. For over three years (1854-57) elder Smith labored mainly among the natives of Hawaii. Within nine months he had learned the native language well enough to conduct meetings and preach the Gospel. At the age of seventeen he was appointed to preside over the Church in one of the islands; and at the age of nineteen, in 1857, he was called by Brigham Young to return to Salt Lake, where people were concerned about Johnston's Army and Utah War; other missionaries were also called to return.

Elder Joseph F. Smith arrived home in February of 1858; and in Salt Lake City he was informed that he was to join the army of the Saints in Echo Canyon in order to stop Johnston's Army from entering the Valley. Lieutenant General Daniel H. Wells of the Nauvoo Legion, the militia, established their headquarters in a defile, rugged and steep, called the Narrows, in Echo Canyon. And about twelve hundred and fifty men from various companies of the militia, were commanded to maintain the pass by force of arms against any attempted invasion. Throughout this ordeal elder Smith remained steadfast to his duty, and spent most of his time in the saddle, somewhere between Salt Lake City and Fort Bridger. And at Salt Lake City, as a soldier, he stood guard, ready if necessary to put the torch to the buildings, in case the city was to be abandoned by the Saints, if the army passed through the city on their way to Camp Floyd. In April of 1858, elder Smith was ordained a seventy.

After the Utah War, he remained home between 1858-59, and served as sergeant at arms for the Council of the Territorial Legislature. And in October of 1859, he was called into the high council of the Salt Lake Stake and ordained a high priest at the age of twenty-one; earlier that year also he had married Levira A. Clark. One year after his marriage he was called to serve a mission in Great Britain; there he labored from the spring of 1860 until the spring of 1863. During this mission elder Joseph F. Smith was called to preside over four mission conferences; for, by now, at the young age of twenty-two he was a well-seasoned missionary. It was also during one of these conferences which was held in Sheffield that the hymn of William Fowler, who dwelt in Sheffield, was sung for the first time by the Saints there, namely, We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet.

In September of 1863, elder Joseph F. Smith returned home to the Valley, prepared to settle down; but he was needed again in Hawaii, to solve the problems in the Church caused by Walter M. Gibson. He was called by Brigham Young in February of 1864, to accompany Lorenzo Snow and Ezra T. Benson to Hawaii. And it came to pass, that as the vessel carrying the missionaries lay anchored about one mile off the coast of the islands, the captain and the crew made ready a ship's small boat to carry the missionaries to shore. Elder Joseph F. Smith refused to go in that boat because he felt it was not safe enough to travel in those waters. His companion missionaries felt that his fear was not justified, so they went ahead and elder Smith remained in the vessel.

And, behold, the boat did overturn and Lorenzo Snow came close to death; when elder Snow was revived after several hours, he prophesied saying: The Lord had revealed to me that (Joseph F. Smith), the young missionary who had stayed behind, would someday be the prophet of God on earth. He returned home in December of 1864, and from 1865-74 served as a member of the Territorial House of Representatives. Many of the meetings of the Apostles during this time were held in the upper room of the Church Historian's office; and often elder Joseph F. Smith was called to serve as secretary for the Quorum. At one such meeting, in July of 1866, after close of the prayer circle, president Brigham Young felt moved by the Spirit of the Lord to ordain elder Smith to the apostleship and as counselor to the First Presidency. And the brethren with unanimous approval ordained him accordingly, although no vacancy existed in the Quorum of the Twelve. This was not revealed to the general membership of the Church until the general conference of October, 1867. And Joseph F. Smith was sustained as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve by the general membership of the Church.

In 1874, elder Joseph F. Smith was called to be president of the European Mission; during this mission he toured Scandinavia, Germany, Switzerland, and France, and became acquainted with the membership of the Church and the problems of the Church there. He was called home by the First Presidency in 1875, and stayed in Utah until after the dedication of the St. George Temple in April, 1877; then he returned to preside in Europe. In the fall of 1877, president Brigham Young died, and elder Smith was again called home to Utah. Between now and 1880, elder Smith devoted himself to acquiring information on the early history of the Church. In 1878, he accompanied Orson Pratt, and visited Independence, Missouri; Kirtland, Ohio, and New York; they also visited David Whitmer, the only surviving member of the Three Witnesses.

In 1880, the First Presidency was reorganized for the first time since the death of Brigham Young; and John Taylor was sustained the president of the Church. President Taylor chose George Q. Cannon as his first counselor and Joseph F. Smith as second counselor. This was also the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth anniversary of the Church. And due to unfavorable political conditions of the time, at the request of Church leaders, he went into voluntary exile from September of 1884 to September of 1891, for seven years. During this period, he visited the Saints in Mexico and Canada; and directed the missionary activities in Hawaii. He also served two missions in the East, under the name of Jason Mack, his grandmother's oldest brother; directing various missionary and financial activities, and the migration of Saints from Europe.

On April 7, 1889, elder Joseph F. Smith was sustained second counselor to president Wilford Woodruff; and again to president Lorenzo Snow, September 13, 1898. And on October 17, 1901, elder Joseph F. Smith was sustained as president of the Church, at the regular weekly meeting of the Apostles held in the Salt Lake Temple. He chose John R. Winder and Anthon H. Lund as his counselors. Then a special conference of the Church was held on November 10, 1901, in the Tabernacle; and the General Authorities were sustained by the members. Thus upon the shoulders of president Smith fell the responsibility of defending the Church against political persecutions and verbal attacks by the adversary.

In 1902, a bureau of information was established on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. This was the first of many information centers established throughout the nation, to lay the foundation of a building project which was to convert the historical locations of that period into tourist attractions and information centers. Carthage Jail was purchased in 1903, where president Smith's father and uncle were martyred. Joseph Smith's birth place was also purchased, and a monument thirty-eight and one-half feet high, one foot for each year of his life, was dedicated in 1905. There were various other acquisitions.

On January 20, 1903, the legislature of Utah elected Reed Smoot as a United States Senator; who had been called to the Apostleship on April 8, 1900. And the enemies of the Church demanded that elder Smoot not be allowed to serve in Congress, for he believed in the patriarchal (or plural) marriage. His case was brought before the Senate Committee be built on a prominent hill in that city, by elder Woodruff, over seven years before. The temple was dedicated on May 17, 1884, under the direction of president John Taylor, who offered the dedicatory prayer; the site for the temple was dedicated May 17, 1877, by Orson Pratt; the work of excavation began on May 28, and laying of rock in July. On September 19, 1877, the cornerstones were laid, with the ancient order of temple building being followed. The solemn dedicatory services in 1884 lasted three days, and were quite impressive. The Saints rejoiced in completing another House of the Lord, where work for the salvation of the living and the dead could be performed; a symbol of dedication to their Eternal and Almighty God.

Phoebe, the wife of Wilford the Faithful, died in November of 1885; and while he was yet in hiding, in 1886, the persecution and prosecution against the Saints continued to increase. On May 17, 1888, he attended semi-public dedication ceremonies of the Manti Temple. This third temple at Manti, Sanpete County, was dedicated on May 21, 1888; Lorenzo Snow offered the dedicatory prayer, and the services lasted three days. (The site was chosen in June, 1875, by president Brigham Young; excavation began in April, 1877; the cornerstones were laid April 14, 1879, with proper ceremonies. The building is situated on a hill north-east of the city.)

The so-called crusade against the practise of patriarchal or plural marriage by the Saints continued. Besides the crusade by the Idaho territorial legislature, and supporters of the Struble Bill, the enemies of the Church in Utah used other political means to persecute and molest the Latter-day Saints. In the midst of all these circumstances, Wilford Woodruff remained faithful to the Lord and His revelations, and sought the Lord diligently for relief. One of the most important days of his life was April 7, 1889, when he was sustained President of the Church. Following the death of President Taylor in Kaysville, Utah, on July 25, 1887, Wilford Woodruff became the leader of the Church as president of the Quorum of the Twelve; and the Apostles continued to act in the position of the Presidency; until the April conference of 1889, when the First > openly, submitting the justice of our causes to the enlightened judgement of our fellowmen, should such unfavorable conditions or issues arise. We desire to live in peace, safety, and trust with our fellow citizens of all political parties and of all religions.

During the same year (1907), the policy of the Church was changed concerning the gathering of the Saints in Zion from countries such as Britain and Sweden. They were now persuaded to remain in their own homelands and build up the Church there. But they being deprived of the Temple blessings, ordinances, and endowments in their own homelands, president Joseph F. Smith began the construction of the temples on soil outside of the United States as existed then. He dedicated ground for this purpose in Cardston, Canada (in 1913); and in Hawaii (in 1915). The Canadian Temple was to serve the needs of the Saints in the northern regions, and the Hawaiian Temple was to serve the Saints in the South Seas. Hawaii was president Joseph F. Smith's most cherished place, for he served there as a missionary when he was a youth of sixteen to nineteen years. The Hawaiian mission was organized by Hiram Clark in (1850), which was sixth of the major missions, which began from British Mission (1837), Eastern States of America (1839), French-Polynesian (1844), California (1846), and French Mission (1850).

During the later part of president Joseph F. Smith's administration, many ill-feelings towards the Saints were turned around into love and trust. But soon, in 1914, World War I broke out; and missionary activities were replaced by the focus on the development of new Church programs, and other war-related activities. Major offshoots of the First Presidency of this period were the Churchwide emphasis on: Family Home Evening, weekday religious education, and seminary programs. The following advice was issued by the First Presidency in 1915:

> We advise and urge the inauguration of a (Family) Home Evening throughout the Church; at which time father and mother may gather their boys and girls (if any) about them in the home; and teach them the Word of the Lord. This Home Evening should be devoted to prayer, singing hymns, songs, instrumental music, Scripture reading, family topics, (occasional) review of the principles of the Gospel and Church doctrine; discussion of ethical and moral issues pertinent to the family and daily life; and reminders of duties and obligations to the home, the Church, the society, and the nation.
> If the Saints obey this counsel, we promise that great blessings will result. Love at home and obedience to parents will increase. Faith will be developed in the hearts of the youth of Israel; and they will gain power to combat the evil influences and temptations which beset them.

The conflict of the World War I lasted four years (from July 28, 1914, till November 11, 1918). In the summer of 1914, Archduke Franz Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary, was murdered by a Serbian student. As a result, the political tensions increased between Austria, the larger country, against the smaller country; and war was declared on July 28, 1914. This was followed by a declaration of war by Germany against Russia, on August 1. Then Germany also made an attack on France, in an attempt to pass through Belgium, against the wishes of that kingdom. This invasion of Belgium brought Great Britain into the conflict, followed by most other countries of the earth. Germany's continued trespasses via submarines on the high sea, brought the United States into the war; and the United States was forced to declare war against Germany on April 6, 1917. And those nations which did not align themselves with one or the other side, were caused to suffer great tribulations and hardships. On November 11, 1918, an armistice was declared, which led to a treaty of peace. Germany and her allies, Austria-Hungary and Turkey, were required to pay huge war indemnity. After four years of conflict, millions of lives were sacrificed, property worth billions in dollars was destroyed; and by the end nations became either bankrupt or were on the verge of bankruptcy.

In the Church general conference of 1917, at the age of seventy-nine years, president Joseph F. Smith admitted to the congregation, saying: I begin to feel that I am getting to be an old man, or rather a young man in an old body; I think I am just about as young as I ever was in my life in Spirit. In the spring of 1918, his health began to fail, and during the late summer and and fall he spent most of his time in his own room, spending very little time at the office. Generally, he would take a short automobile ride in the afternoon. During the October conference, 1918, his health and vigor improved, and he presided at all the sessions; but his opening address was not delivered with usual vigor. After the conference, he was again confined to his room most of the time. On October 3, 1918, the day before the conference convened, he received a divine manifestation concerning the mission of Christ Jesus to the world of spirits after the crucifixion. He was shown that Christ Jesus himself did not preach to the rebellious spirits; rather he organized a missionary force to carry the Gospel to them.

On Sunday, November 17, 1918, president Joseph F. Smith was taken with an attack of pleurisy, which continued to grow into pleuro-pneumonia; and he passed away in Salt Lake City, on Tuesday morning, November 19, 1918. At this time an influenza epidemic was sweeping the country, therefore no public funeral was held as the city was under quarantine. Thousands of people lined the streets as the cortege passed, and services were held in the cold open air. Heber J. Grant, the next president of the Church, spoke these words at the graveside: I loved Joseph F. Smith as I never loved any other man that I have ever known; may God bless his memory.

6. Heber J. Grant

(the persistent; the prophet, seer and revelator; raised up to usher in the Fulness of Time, and prepare for the Second Coming of the Messiah; President of the Church from November 23, 1918 to May 14, 1945)

Heber J. Grant was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, on November 22, 1856. He, as did Joseph F. Smith also, lost his father Jedediah M. Grant, second counselor to Brigham Young, and the first mayor of Salt Lake City, a little over one week after his birth. His father was a man of forceful character; and his death came as a great shock to the Church, for he was yet a young man forty years of age. And also, like Joseph F. Smith, young Heber was blessed with a mother who inspired him to grow in the Spirit and prosper. Life had been difficult for widow Rachel Ivins Grant, who was widowed at the age of thirty-five, after one year of married life. During the the ensuing years she supported herself and her young son by sewing and taking in boarders; and devoted herself to raising Heber that he might fulfill his destiny.

In 1863, as a boy of seven years, Heber took a sleigh ride with president Brigham Young; and many years later he recalled this peculiar encounter in these words:

> . . . I ran out and took hold of the back of the sleigh, intending to ride a block and then drop off and walk home; but president Young was driving such a fine team, or at least his driver was, that I dared not let go; hence rode on till we reached the cottonwoods and the sleigh slowed up, to pass through that stream; I jumped off, and the president saw me. He said, "Stop, brother Isaac, stop; the little boy is nearly frozen. Put him under the buffalo robe and get him warm. Isaac Wilson was the driver. After I got warm he inquired my name, and told me about my father, and his love for him. He told me to tell my mother that he wanted her to send me up to his office in six months to have a visit with him; and in six months I went for the visit. From that time, fifty-four years ago, until the day of his death, I was intimately acquainted with president Young.

I was almost as familiar in the homes of president Brigham Young as I was in the home of my own mother . . . I have spent hours and hours, as a child, in the rooms of Eliza R. Snow, listening to her counsel and advice, and hearing her relate incidents in the life of Joseph Smith the prophet; and bearing witness of the wonderful blessings of God to Brigham Young. As I say, I was familiar with the prophet Brigham Young. I knelt down time and time again in his home in the Lion House at family prayers, as a child and as a young man. And I bear witness that as a little child, upon more than one occasion, because of the inspiration of the Lord to Brigham Young while he was supplicating God for guidance; I have lifted my head, turned and looked at the place where Brigham Young was praying, to see if the Lord was not there. It seemed to me that he talked to the Lord as one man would talk to another.

Both Brigham Young and his mother exerted a great influence upon Heber; through them he had learned the value of self-discipline and self-sacrifice, and truly believed that with the help of the Lord he could accomplish any task. This is the slogan Heber adopted early in life, and remained faithful to it unto the end of his days: That which we persist in doing becomes easier for us to do, not that the nature of the thing is changed, but our power to do is increased. So difficult it had become for his mother to earn enough to provide for her household, that Heber had to spend a great deal of time helping around the house. This poverty-stricken lad polished boots to acquire enough money to buy a baseball of his own; through persistent practise he became a champion player. Heber was also a poor writer, so poor that his friends called it chicken scratch; and in those days a good penmanship was essential, when other mechanical means of written communication were either scarce or absent altogether. Heber made up his mind to become a good writer, and practised hour after hour, until he became so good a writer, that he was awarded first prize in penmanship at Utah Territorial Fair; and later became a teacher of penmanship at the University of Utah.

In 1875, when Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association was organized in one of the Salt Lake Wards, Heber J. Grant at the age of eighteen years was made a member of the presidency (superintendency) of the ward. Five years later, at the age of twenty-three, he was chosen by president John Taylor to be the secretary to the general superintendency of the Mutual Improvement Association. And during the same year, 1880, he was called to preside as Stake President of Tooele Stake, which lies to the west of Salt Lake City. Tooele had been pioneered some twenty-seven years earlier by Wilford Woodruff and Ezra T. Benson of the Council of the Twelve.

Elder Grant had learned the value of work early in his life, especially in the business world. He was a devoted and honest worker, and had the reputation of often staying after the business hours hard at work; whose business advice was usually prudent. At the age of about twenty-one, he had gained a responsible position of an assistant cashier in one of the major banks of Salt Lake City; three weeks before his twenty-first birthday, he married his first wife, Lucy Stringham; and just a few months before, his benefactor and guardian Brigham Young had passed away.

Now, his position as president of Tooele Stake was difficult and demanding. For he had to continue to reside in Salt Lake to attend to his business there, and also lacked in speaking ability. Soon, elder Heber J. Grant set his mind to overcome his handicap. The first few times he spoke to the congregation in Tooele, he perspired heavily, and with great difficulty delivered his speech or testimony. Again through persistence he became recognized nationwide for his speaking ability.

These words concerning him were published in the Deseret News, on November 1, 1880; and were written by one of the Saints in Gransville, Utah:

> The people of Tooele County have got Heber J. Grant for their next president; and although young, yet in him I see a man of sterling worth, and one who is destined by the help of God to make a bright mark in this great latter-day work; and whose name, like his illustrious father's, will be held in honorable remembrance, and will live in the history of future ages.

Then, in 1882, while elder Grant was going into the Tabernacle for general conference, he received the prompting of the Holy Ghost that he would be called to the Quorum of the Twelve. At the conclusion of the conference, however, no new apostles were chosen; and elder Grant returned home to Tooele in a state of confusion. Ten days later, he received a telegram from his business partner, Nephi Clayton, in Salt Lake City, to come there. His partner met him at the railway station and drove him to the Church office building. Here, a revelation of the Lord to president John Taylor was read in elder Grant's presence. And these were the words: Thus saith the Lord to the Twelve, and to the priesthood and people of my Church -- Let my servants George Teasdale and Heber J. Grant be appointed to fill the vacancies in the Twelve; that ye may be fully organized and prepared for the labors devolving upon you, for ye have a great work to perform . . .

Thus the prophecy of Eliza R. Snow (Lorenzo Snow's sister) was fulfilled when Heber J. Grant became an Apostle of the Lord in 1882. For, as Mary mother of Jesus was forewarned of the future of her Son by Simeon and Anna in the Jerusalem Temple, so was Rachel Grant, Heber's mother, forewarned by the blessings of Eliza Snow which she uttered in tongues, in one of her meetings; and Zina D. young interpreted into the English language that someday Heber would become an Apostle of the Lord. But this calling weighed heavily upon him, because he was called at an early age of nearly twenty-six; and he felt that he lacked qualifications of an apostle. In deep humility, he always doubted the words of his mother, when she reminded him to behave properly for one day he would be a great man; and felt that it was his mother's desire for her son to make good. He repeatedly told her that his only desire was to live a good life and to be a good businessman. During his early childhood, he was also given a blessing by Heber C. Kimball, Brigham Young's first counselor. One day he picked the boy up and put him on the table, and talked to him. He prophesied in the name of Lord Jesus Christ that Heber J. should become an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, and become a greater man in the Church than his own father, who was one of the counselors of Brigham Young.

In February of 1883, while laboring among the Indians in Arizona, the same feeling of his shortcomings again overwhelmed him. These are the words of elder Grant concerning this incident:

> I was in Arizona in February, traveling with Brigham Young, Jr., and a number of other brethren, visiting the Navajo Indians and the Moki Indians . . . We were going due east when the road changed and went almost north; but there was a trail ahead of us, and I said: Hold on, Lot, stop. Brother Smith, where does this trail lead? He said, It leads to a great gully just a short distance away, and no team can possibly travel over it. We have to make a regular mule shoe of a ride to get to the other side of the gully.
>
> I said, Is there any danger from Indians if a man were alone over there? None at all, he replied.
> I said, I visited the spot yesterday where George A. Smith, Jr., was killed by a Navajo Indian, who asked > him for his pistol and then shot him with it; and I feel a little nervous, but if there is no danger I want to be all alone, so you go on with the party and I will take that trail. I had this feeling that I ought not to testify any more about the Savior and that, really, I was not fit to be an apostle. It seemed overwhelming to me that I should be one. There was a Spirit that said, If you have not seen the Savior, why don't you resign your position?

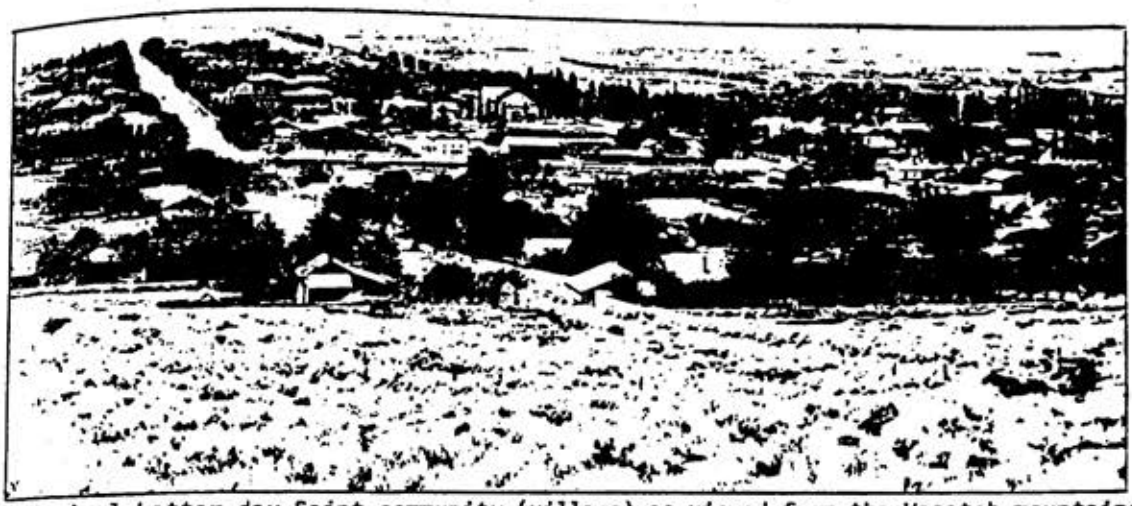
And many years later elder Grant, recalling this incident, stated: I can truthfully say that from February, 1883, until today (1942) I have never had any of that trouble. I can bear my testimony that I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world . . . I have never had one slight impression to the contrary; I have just had real, genuine joy and satisfaction in proclaiming the Gospel and bearing my testimony of the divinity of Jesus Christ and the divine calling . . .

In 1884, elder Grant married Augusta Winters and Emily Harris Wells; and in 1885, most of the high officials of the Church were in hiding or exile due to government persecutions and penalties against men having more than one wife. During this time, elder Grant was given much of the responsibility of leading the Church; and he was able to continue his divine work freely, for his marriage was kept secret. Then, the years which followed the financial crisis of 1891 and nationwide depression of 1893, utilized the financial knowledge and understanding of a man such as Heber J. Grant. He was sent by the Church to tour the east, and also acquire needed capital to preserve the Utah industries in which the Church had financial interests. Elder Grant not only possessed a highly developed financial understanding, but his practise of charity and love of Christ were equally noteworthy. The following words, which were spoken in 1893, describe elder Grant's views on the value of wealth and property:

> So far as our property is concerned, it is of no actual value to us, only as we are ready and willing to use it for the advancement of God's Kingdom. It is our duty to provide for our families; but it is not our duty to labor to gain wealth for the adornment of our persons. Of course I like to see people have good things, and I hope to live to see the day when the Latter-day Saints will be wealthy. But I want to say to you that unless we become more humble, more godlike, more faithful in keeping the commandments of God, I do not expect we shall become wealthy. Whenever we learn to be willing to use the means that God gives us for the onward advancements of His Kingdom, Latter-day Saints will not have any particular financial trouble; the Lord will bless them with abundance.

In 1896, Utah became a state of the United States; and Heber J. Grant was considered a candidate for the first governor of the state.



A typical Latter-day Saint community (village) as viewed from the Wasatch mountains (circa 1896).

In 1897, he became a member of the general superintendency of the Mutual Improvement Association; and worked as business manager of Improvement Era, which he helped found. The following year President Wilford Woodruff died, and Lorenzo Snow became the president of the Church. The Apostles were admonished to become more involved in the missionary work throughout the world; and Heber J. Grant was sent to Japan to open it to the teaching of the Gospel. At this time he was the only member of the Quorum of the Twelve who had not served a full-time mission.

Latter-day Saint missionaries preaching the Gospel in Japan.

At this time, 1901, Japan was confronted with the problems of overpopulation, and scarcity of food and shelter for her people. Therefore, the missionaries traveling without purse or scrip were considered an additional burden, and were looked upon unfavorably. Having realized this difficulty, elder Grant and his fellow missionaries decided to deviate from the Church policy, and dwelt in some of the most affluent sections of the country; and preached the Gospel to the rich and the educated. Soon the leading newspapers and magazines of the country began to seek interviews. And as a result of favorable publicity, the department of religion granted them permission to preach the Gospel in Japan, after some opposition. The language of the Japanese people was difficult to learn, and although elder Grant and his companions had worked diligently to learn it, they were unable to speak without much effort. One day, in 1903, while laboring in Japan, the gloomy feeling of unworthiness came over elder Grant again, for he was unhappy in his work there. He went out into the woods, and in a secluded spot knelt down to pray to God, that when his work was finished there, he be called to the British Isles to succeed Francis M. Lyman. Within a few days word came from president Joseph F. Smith asking him to return to Utah; and when he returned home he was asked to succeed elder Lyman as president of the British and European missions, from January of 1904 to December of 1906. He and his companions labored in Europe to break down prejudices. On July 4, 1906, Heber J. Grant received an audience with king Oscar of Sweden, who made these remarks:

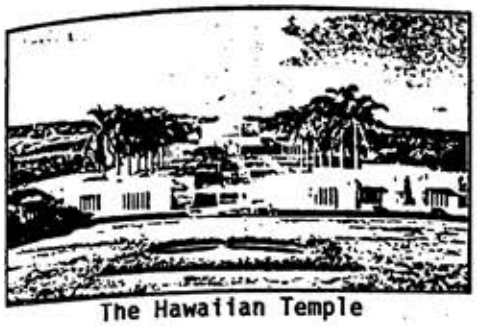
> Mr. Grant, I have sent my personal representatives, unknown to the people, to nearly every state in the Union of the United States, to find out how my former subjects are getting along, how they are prospering; and in no state in the Union are the former subjects of Sweden and Norway more contented, more prosperous and happy than in Utah; and, as long as I am king of Norway and Sweden, your people shall have religious liberty, notwithstanding all the priests and religious denominations are against you.

And, in 1916, Heber J. Grant became the president of the Quorum of the Twelve, when Francis M. Lyman died. After two years, he became the president of the Church, when Joseph F. Smith died. His administration was noted to embark on a most important phase of the Lord's work, the task of the preparation for the Second Coming, and raising up of a Messiah. The time of hatred toward the Saints was over, and a new era was beginning. Never before in the history of the Church were conditions so perfectly right for spreading of the Gospel throughout the world. Missionaries were organized to undertake a grand plan, which was to fully take effect some quarter of a century later; and the Church was to move forward under the leadership of president Grant.

With the end of World War I, in 1918, the world conditions were just right for carrying the Gospel into all the world; and to continue the scouting efforts of raising up a Messiah. And no other president was better prepared to carry on the task which was set before president Heber J. Grant, he himself having been raised in poverty and sorrow. He became the president of the Church when president Joseph F. Smith died, November 19,1918. Thus the days of peace and continued prosperity began with the end of World War I, and promise of yet a brighter future. Behold, the foundation for this great work had been laid well in advance by the prophets, seers and revelators of the Church, since the time it was organized (or reorganized). It is said that during the administration of president Grant the Church had at last come to speaking terms with the world. And it was also president Heber J. Grant, and his family, who devoted themselves much to genealogical research; in order to more perfectly establish the lineage of each future Christ or Messiah.



The Hawaiian Temple

During the winter and spring of 1919, there was an influenza epidemic in Utah. On Thanksgiving Day, November 27, 1919, the temple in Hawaii was dedicated by president Heber J. Grant. The dedicatory services were repeated five times to accommodate one thousand two hundred and thirty-nine faithful Saints of the South Seas. The temple site for this temple was dedicated by president Joseph F. Smith, on June 1, 1915. These words were spoken by president Grant at the dedication:

> I cannot express to you the keen sorrow which I feel that I have to offer this dedicatory prayer instead of president Joseph F. Smith. It was, I am sure, one of the fondest dreams of his life that he might be here at the dedication of this temple, . . . but in the providence of the Lord he has been taken from us, and this duty, or I might say this honor and great joy, has come to me.

In 1920, there were eighty-three stakes of Zion, eight hundred and seventy-one organized wards, and eighty-three independent branches within the stakes. From 1837 to 1920, twenty-one major missions to various parts of the world were organized as follows: British (1837), Eastern States (1839), French-Polynesian (1844), California (1846), French (1850), Hawaii (1850), South African (1853), Central States (1855), Netherlands (1864), Southern States (1876), Northern States (1878), Mexican (1879), Samoan (1888), Tongan (1891), Western States (1896), Northwestern States (1897), New Zealand (1897), Australian (1897), Swedish (1905), Canadian (1919), Danish (1920), Norwegian (1920).

The temple ground of the Alberta, Canada, Temple was dedicated by president Joseph F. Smith, July 27, 1913; September 19, 1915, elder David O. McKay laid the cornerstone; and the capstone was laid September 23, 1917. This impressive-looking temple was dedicated by president Heber J. Grant, August 26, 1923; and these are the words which he uttered:

> I remember as well as I remember anything that ever happened in my life the thrill that went through my very being, the joy and satisfaction I experienced when president (Joseph F.) Smith stood up in the Tabernacle and announced that a temple was to be erected in Canada. There are times in our lives when something comes into our souls in the nature, we might say, almost of an electric current that thrills our very being. And when we are thrilled by the Spirit of the living God; as I feel that audience at the time of the announcement of prospective erection of the building, we have not language with which to express to God our gratitude for His blessings to us on such occasions . . . The still small voice of revelation to our Spirits is the thing that counts, not seeing great manifestations, not seeing angels, not speaking in tongues, not great visions.

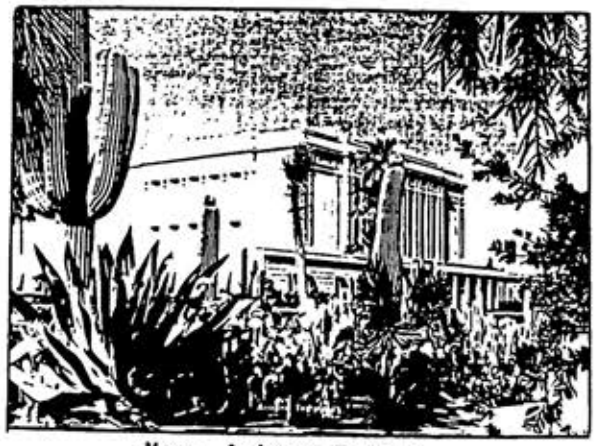
Alberta, Canada Temple

On November 28, 1921, a site for a temple in Mesa, Arizona, was dedicated by president Heber J. Grant; in the presence of about three thousand people. The temple was dedicated on October 23, 1927, by him, with the usual ceremonies which lasted until the 27th; the prayer of dedication was repeated daily during each session.

By 1923, the Saints began to move away from Zion in Utah; whithersoever the Spirit led them, especially in the missionaries who were sent throughout the world, to preach to Gospel and to prepare for the Second Coming. Also by 1923, there were enough members of the Church in Los Angeles, California, to form a stake of Zion there; this was the first stake established outside Utah. Eleven years later (in 1934), a stake was organized in the East, near New York City.



Mesa, Arizona Temple

In 1935, the progressive spirit of the era of president Heber J. Grant was manifested in the first Church of the Air broadcast, followed by Hill Cumorah Pageant in 1937. New missions were opened in South America and Czechoslovakia, and old missions were reopened. The prosperity of the Roaring Twenties in the United States came to a sudden halt when the stock market crashed in 1929, followed by the depression of the 1930's. Few escaped the financial crisis and its effects, even the Saints also. The Church had been setting aside a portion of its finances annually to protect itself against such an emergency, under the provident leadership of president Grant. The leaders of the Church developed a program (circa 1936) to help members in such emergencies, known as the Church Security (or Welfare) Plan; to alleviate idleness, and to instill independence, industry, thrift and self-respect amongst its peopel Israel. The aim of the Church was to help people to help themselves; work was to be cherished with gratitude. This has always been an important rule with the Saints:

that a religion which has not the power to save people temporally and make them prosperous and happy here, can in no wise be depended upon to save them Spiritually, and to exalt them in the Hereafter.

The beneficent and charitable acts of president Heber J. Grant are numerous. He was a man who lived this principle throughout his life: That which we persist in doing becomes easier. His most important divine task was not only to witness the birth of the Savior and participate in the divine plan to raise him to be the Messiah of the Millennial-day, but also to preserve him from the forces of destruction. This great responsibility at times overwhelmed him.

On Friday, September 1, 1939, Germany, under Adolph Hitler, suddenly crossed the border of Poland; and on the third of September, England and France declared war on Germany. At this time there were six hundred and eleven young men and sixty-three young women in the European missions, plus twenty-three mission presidents, their wives and children. These missionaries returned in 23 ships, mostly impoverished freight boats. The first party arrived in New York on September 7, 1939; the last of the parties arrived in New York on November 6, 1939; elder Joseph Fielding Smith and his wife were in this group. Yet others, including elder Thomas E. McKay with his group of four missionaries, his wife and daughter, arrived as late as March 4, 1940.

On April 9, 1940, Germany suddenly attacked Norway; and on the 10th of May invaded Holland, which left cities in wastes and thousands perished. In this manner most of France, Denmark, Belgium and Norway were taken over by Germany. During these gloomy days also Italy, assuming war was over, and wishing to partake of the spoils of war, declared war on England and France. But England continued to fight against the so-called axis powers; and refused to surrender to their terms. On September 27, 1940, Japan joined the axis powers in a ten-year three-party pact in Berlin.

Now Germany, sensing that Russia was a threat on her eastern borders, invaded that country, assuming that it should be an easy conquest. But after making some advance they were stopped by the Russians. Germany and Italy, however, had taken Albania and Greece, and islands in the Mediterranean and Aegean seas; and had driven the British in Africa beyond the borders of Egypt. They were now beginning to take possession of the Suez Canal, that they might enter into the sacred and mystical land of India.

And while the angelic host and the Saints in northern India, especially in Lucknow, were busy in their divine task of raising up a holy one for the Lord; on December 7, 1941, Japan made a sudden attack on Pearl Harbor, on the island of Oahu in Hawaii. Several of the warships of the United States were disabled or destroyed. The next day the Congress of the United States declared war on Japan; and on the eleventh of December, Germany and Italy declared war on the United States. Japan took possession of the islands of Guam, Midway, and Wake; and after bitter struggle drove a small American force out of the Philippines. In November 1942, American and British forces invaded North Africa; and British forces in Egypt drove the German and Italian armies out of Africa.

The year 1943 A.D. was the most important year in the history of the world and the Kingdom of God; for the official reckoning of the Fulness of Time began in that year. The Beginning of Time for the Shemitic people is officially reckoned from the time the Abrahamic covenant took effect in 1943 B.C.; when Abraham was seventy-five years old; the Covenant between Abraham and the Lord Messiah that God will make him a great nation and a covenant people. This was also the beginning of the four hundred and thirty years of afflictions, wanderings, and final residence in Egypt for Abraham's descendants. Thus the beginning of time is counted from 1943 B.C., the Meridian of time with Jesus, and the fulness of time in 1943 A.D., in which year began full preparations for the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. Under the presidency of Heber J. Grant, the efforts of the highest authorities were centered on this great event, the raising up of the Savior. With full commitment to this divine purpose, the Church began its international missionary and scouting activities. In 1943, also the mission to Southwest India (mission number thirty-five) was organized under Ralph Evans, along with the Navajo-Zuni Indian mission. Eventually the missionary efforts were focused in the kingdom of the Nizam of Hyderabad, in the Deccan Plateau. This peace-loving and prosperous Islamic Kingdom was ruled by one of the richest and noblest sovereigns of the world, the Nizam. This was the first such mission of the Church in that sub-continent. After unsuccessful search in all the thirty-four previous major missions that were organized in Europe, Americas, or elsewhere, it was decided that the ancient sacred and mystical land of India would be the place from whence the future Messiah might emerge; for no other race of men could endure unto the very end, in the service of the Lord; nor could they meet the requirements of the holy bloodline.

On September 8, 1943, Italy surrendered after the most bitter struggle, deaths and destruction. Cities and villages were totally destroyed by the dropping of the bombs, and shooting of robot bombs weighing several tons. Then, June 6, 1944, the American and British forces invaded Normandy, and after the loss of hundreds of thousands of men, the Germans were gradually forced back beyond their own borders in the West, and so by the Russians in the East, until the two forces met, and the city of Berlin was destroyed. Now the so-called axis powers became powerless; the Germans were forced to grant an unconditional surrender. By now the German plotters of war, who had started the conflict, were either captured, committed suicide, or went into hiding in some far away place. Germany had officially surrendered, May 8, 1945, after tremendous loss of lives and property, amounting to billions. After the surrender of Germany, the struggle with Japan continued. The Allied forces recaptured Manila and a large portion of the Philippines. And the air force of the United States destroyed two large cities, Hiroshima and Nagasaki, by the dropping of atomic bombs. The highly secret formula for these bombs was developed in the United States, which released atomic energy of most potent destructive power. Japan officially surrendered September 2, 1945.

On May 14, 1945, a day before the birth of the prophetess in the United States, president Heber J. Grant peacefully passed away at his residence in Salt Lake City, Utah. Five years before, at the age of eighty-four years, he had suffered a partial paralysis, and his health began to deteriorate, but his mind remained as active as before. The rapid growth of the Church, and establishment of new wards and stakes, and a worldwide missionary network, caused the First Presidency to appoint Assistants to the Twelve Apostles; and it was done with great wisdom and understanding. Towards the end of 1944, a great many signs were given to the world and words spoken concerning the Second Coming of the Savior; as the Kingdom prepared itself for that great event. Only the Father, His Only Begotten Son, and the ministering angels knew of this highly secret and divine mission. None but the Father was to know the exact date of the Second Coming. For said the Lord also: In my own due time will I come upon the earth in judgement, and my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth. For the great Millennium, of which I have spoken by the mouths of my prophets, shall come. For Satan shall be bound, and when he is loosed, he will reign for a little season, then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness shall be changed in a twinkling of an eye, and earth shall pass away through the refiner's fire.

At the funeral of president Heber J. Grant, elder David O. McKay bore the following testimony:

> In the heart of our President, sympathy for the unfortunate and the distressed drove him with impelling force to give help and succor wherever needed. These beneficent acts continued right up until the last. Here, for example, is an extract from a letter he recently wrote to a widow: Will you please tell me how much you are owing on your home; and let me join with you fifty-fifty in paying it at once instead of paying it by the month? And here is another: Dear Sister: I am happy indeed that I have been able to be of some little assistance to you. Is your home all paid for? If not, please let me know how much still remains. These are but samples of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of such benefactions.
> President Grant enjoyed making money, but he loved to use it for the benefit of others. On more than one occasion, quietly, usually forcefully, if necessary, but always unostentatiously he has protected the good name of his associates; has paid mortgages on widows' homes, has paid expenses of missionaries, given employment to the unemployed, rendered help and succor wherever needed. No mind has been more eager to bless, no heart more tender, no hand more generous than the heart and hand of president Grant.

President Heber J. Grant's testimony of the truth of the Savior never wavered; and he was loved by his people. His first counselor J. Reuben Clark, Jr., had written these words upon his death: God fashioned him in heart and mind and body, in ability, in experience, and in wisdom; just as He has fashioned every man whom He has ever called to lead His people,even from Moses of old till now. No man ever comes to lead God's people whom He has not trained for his task. Thus Heber J. Grant passed away at the age of eighty-nine years.

7. George Albert Smith

(the humanitarian and missionary, prophet, seer and revelator; raised up to continue the work which began with president Grant; President of the Church from May 21, 1945 to April 4, 1951)

The genealogy of George Albert Smith, going back to his great-grandfather, is shown on the next page. John Smith, his great-grandfather and brother of Joseph Smith, Sr., was called as the first stake president in the Salt Lake Valley, who carried much of the burden of leadership during the first winter of the Saints in the Valley. And during the cricket plague of the summer of 1848, John Smith was among the leaders of the Church who assisted and comforted the Saints; from 1849 to 1854, he served as the presiding patriarch of the Church.

George Albert's father John Henry was an apostle of the Lord, and later became a counselor to president Joseph F. Smith; of whom George said, I have never met a greater man than my father! When George Albert was four years old, his father was called to serve in the British Mission, during 1874-75. Brigham Young died in 1877; and in 1880 John Henry was ordained an apostle. Two years later, in 1882, he was again called to Britain to preside over the European Mission; George Albert was now twelve years of age. Young George kept himself at home during the two and one-half years his father served in Europe.

At the age of thirteen years, he went to school at the Brigham Young Academy; where he was privileged to receive valuable instruction under

John Smith
(Born July 16, 1781, at Derryfield, Rockingham County, New Hampshire; ordained a patriarch January 10, 1844, in Nauvoo; set apart patriarch of the Church, January 1, 1849, under the hands of Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball at Salt Lake City, Utah.)

George Albert (George A.) Smith
(Born June 26, 1817, at Potsdam, New York; ordained an apostle April 26, 1839, by Heber C. Kimball; sustained as first counselor in the First Presidency, October 6, 1868; died September 1, 1875, at Salt Lake City, Utah.)

John Henry Smith
(Born September 18, 1848, at Carbunca, Iowa; ordained an apostle October 27, 1880, by Wilford Woodruff; sustained April 7, 1910, as second counselor in the First Presidency; died October 13, 1911, at Salt Lake City.

George Albert Smith
(Born April 4, 1870)

Dr. Karl G. Maeser, the first builder of Church schools, and a renowned educator. Many years later (in 1945) when George Albert Smith became the president of the Church, he recalled these impressions:

> . . . It was fortunate that part of my instruction came under Dr. Karl G. Maeser . . . I cannot remember much of what was said during the year I was there; but there was one thing that I will probably never forget. Dr. Maeser one day stood up and said: Not only will you be held accountable for the things that you do, but you will be held responsible for every thought you think.
>
> Being a boy (thirteen years of age), not in habit of controlling my thoughts very much, it was quite a puzzle to me what I was to do, and it worried me. In fact, it stuck to me just like a burr. About a week or ten days after that it suddenly came to me what he meant. I could see the philosophy of it then. All at once there came to me this interpretation of what he had said: Why, of course, you will be held accountable for your thoughts because when your life is complete in mortality, it will be the sum of your thoughts. That one suggestion has been a great blessing to me all my life; and it has enabled me upon many occasions to avoid thinking improperly because I realize that I will be, when my life's labor is complete, the product of my thoughts.

During the same year, as a lad of thirteen, George Albert found employment in the overall factory at a Church-owned department store (ZCMI) in Salt Lake City, and began to earn his own way. At the age of fourteen years (in 1884), a patriarch of the Church pronounced the following blessings upon him:

> Thou (George Albert Smith) shall become a mighty prophet in the midst of the sons of Zion. And the angels of the Lord shall administer unto thee, and the choice blessings of the heavens shall rest upon thee . . .

And thou shalt be wrapt in the visions of the heavens, and shalt be clothed with salvation as with a garment; for thou art destined to become a mighty man before the Lord, for thou shalt become a mighty Apostle in the Church and Kingdom of God upon earth; for none of thy father's family shall have more power with God than thou shalt have, for none shall exceed thee . . . And thou shalt become a man of mighty faith before the Lord; even like unto that of the brother of Jared, and thou shalt remain upon the earth until thou art satisfied with life; and shall be numbered with the Lord's anointed, and shall become a king and a priest unto the Most High.

At the age of sixteen George Albert Smith went to work as an implement assembler and collector for the Grant-Odell Company; the next year he returned to the Church-owned department store. When he was eighteen years of age he attended the University of Utah, then suddenly his interests led him to work as a railroad surveying crewman. While surveying the railroad line to Green River, Utah, excessive heat and sunglare damaged his eyesight badly, and he returned to work at the department store, as a salesman for the company. He worked in southern Utah, taking orders and amusing himself and the Saints with his friendly disposition and ready wit, his guitar and harmonica.

George Albert was a restless soul, constantly seeking new friendships and associations in worldly existence. During these carefree days of 1891, he was called by president Wilford Woodruff to serve as a missionary for the Mutual Improvement Association of the Church, in southern Utah. The labor involved the calling of young men to labor in stakes of Zion, other than their own. These were to be men of good standing, upright, moral and exemplary in their lives; having intelligence and knowledge of the Gospel, and zealous in the work of the Lord. They were to be congenial, prudent and wise; able to express their ideas clearly, and obey the instruction received by the general board; men of good address and of influence, who would have weight with the presidents of stakes and bishops of wards.

George Albert Smith served an honorable mission and remained true to his trust; four months later he returned to Salt Lake City. This was the beginning of his missionary experiences. The summer after his return from southern Utah, he was again called by president Wilford Woodruff to serve a full-time mission in the southern States. One week before leaving on his mission, in 1892, he married Lucy Emily Woodruff, granddaughter of president Woodruff, in the Manti Temple. Seven days after his marriage he left for the headquarters of the southern states mission, in Chattanooga, Tennessee. He began his mission under president J. Golden Kimball. This was a difficult mission, for some missionaries had been put to death by mobocrats there. Later in life George Albert

Smith recalled the following incident from his experience in Tennessee:

> . . . I was traveling with president J. Golden Kimball. We were in a wooded, rural area. During the day we held meetings with the people in the neighborhood who were very friendly and very receptive to our message. One of the local Saints had invited us to accept the hospitality of his home for the night. It was a humble home, built of split logs. It consisted of two rooms and a small log lean-to. There were six missionaries in the group, so it strained the capacity of the little house to be there.
> About midnight we were awakened with a terrible shouting and yelling from the outside. Foul language greeted our ears as we sat up in bed to acquaint ourselves with the circumstances. It was a bright moonlight night and we could see many people on the outside. President Kimball jumped up and started to dress. The men pounded on the door and used filthy language, ordering the Saints to come out, that they were going to shoot them. President Kimball asked me if I wasn't going to get up and dress and I told him no; I was going to stay in bed, that I was sure the Lord would take care of us. In just a few seconds the room was filled with shots. Apparently the mob had divided itself into four groups and were shooting into the corners of the house. Splinters were flying over our heads in every direction. There were a few moments of quiet, then another volley of shots was fired and more splinters flew. I felt absolutely no terror. I was very calm as I lay there, experiencing one of the most horrible events of my life; but I was sure that as long as I was preaching the Word of God, and following his teachings that the Lord would protect me, and he did . . . The mob became discouraged and left. The next morning when we opened the door, there was a huge bundle of heavy hickory sticks, such as the mob used to beat the missionaries in the south.

Some of the splintered wood he did carry with him as a souvenir. After serving four months in the field, he served as mission secretary to president Golden Kimball. His wife Lucy Emily joined him a few weeks later, and together they served in Tennessee, until they were honorably released in June of 1894. During these two years a marked improvement in the attitude of people in southern states towards the Church took place; the prejudice which formerly existed had almost disappeared, and the elders were treated as welcome guests.

In 1895, elder George Albert's father was chosen president of the convention which drafted the constitution of the State of Utah; one year later, Utah became a State of the United States. And in 1898, elder Smith was appointed receiver of the United States Land Office, and Special Disbursing Agent for Utah, by president McKinley of the United States; the same year president Wilford Woodruff died.

In 1901, president Lorenzo Snow passed away; and in 1903, George Albert was chosen to fill the vacancy in the Quorum of the Twelve by president Joseph F. Smith. George Albert Smith was now thirty-three years of age, and serving as superintendent of the Mutual Improvement Association in Salt Lake City. Now the divine task for elder Smith had just begun, to preach the Gospel and improve the image of the Church throughout the world. During the semiannual conference of 1905, the following remarks were made by elder George Albert Smith:

> There is one thing I find that we have not yet learned completely, and it comes to my mind this morning, that is, the disposition to forgive one another our trespasses. The Lord has given us great information, has revealed His mind and will unto us; has taught us things that the world knows not of; and, in accordance with the information we have received, He holds us responsible and expects us to live a higher life, a more ideal life than those who do not as fully comprehend the Gospel as we do. The spirit of forgiveness is something that the Latter-day Saints might with profit exhibit more fully among themselves.

Then, during 1906, when anti-Saint feelings were predominant throughout the country, elder George Albert Smith spoke these words to the Saints:

> Now, while we live and labor let us magnify our calling; let no man be found disloyal to his opportunities. Let us not turn our backs upon the blessings of the Lord, but day by day go faithfully on blessing our father's children.
>
> We have no hard feelings toward any of our fellowmen, we have no occasion to. If they misunderstand us, misquote us, and persecute us, we should remember they are in the hands of the Lord, who has said: Vengeance is Mine, I will repay it; and who further has said: I will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is expected to forgive all men. So when we partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, as we do from time to time, let us purge from our hearts all feeling of unkindness toward one another and toward our brothers and sisters who are not of our faith.
>
> Let us labor day by day that our Father may bless us. If we have His Holy Spirit, the people with whom we come in contact will feel it; because it will permeate the atmosphere in which we live, and they will partake of it and drink it in, even though they may not desire so to do. Let us magnify the Lord by keeping His commandments. Let us popularize His work by laboring to build it up and extend it among the children of men. Let us magnify one another by speaking good only, and by strengthening the hands of those who are weak, and assisting those who are less patient than ourselves.

In February of 1909, he suffered exhaustion and severe mental disturbance, which prevented him from being active in the Quorum of the Twelve; and his condition did not improve until 1912. During this period, his depression and sadness were greatly heightened by the news of his father's death, whom he loved above all men on earth. Also during this period, elder Smith had a divine vision, which left a deep impression on him. The following are his words on this most touching moment of his life:

A number of years ago I was seriously ill. In fact, I think everyone gave me up but my wife. With my family I went to St. George, Utah, to see if it would improve my health. We went as far as we could by train, and then continued the journey in a wagon, in the bottom of which a bed had been made for me.

In St. George we arranged for a tent for my health and comfort, with a built-in floor raised about a foot above the ground, and we could roll up the south side of the tent to make the sunshine and fresh air available. I became so weak as to be scarcely able to move; it was a slow and exhausting effort for me even to turn over in bed.

One day, under these conditions, I lost consciousness of my surroundings and thought I had passed to the Other Side. I found myself standing with my back to a large and beautiful lake, facing a great forest of trees. There was no one in sight, and there was no boat upon the lake or any other visible means to indicate how I might have arrived there. I realized, or seemed to realize, that I had finished my work in mortality and had gone home. I began to look around, to see if I could find someone. There was no evidence of anyone's living there, just those great, beautiful trees in front of me and the wonderful lake behind me.

I began to explore, and soon I found a trail through the woods which seemed to have been used very little, and which was almost obscured by grass. I followed this trail, and after I had walked for some time and had traveled a considerable distance through the forest, I saw a man coming towards me. I became aware that he was a very large man, and I hurried my steps to reach him, because I recognized him as my grandfather. In mortality he weighed over three hundred pounds, so you may know he was a large man. I remember how happy I was to see him coming. I had been given his name and had always been proud of it.

When grandfather came within a few feet of me, he stopped. His stopping was an invitation for me to stop. Then -- and this I would like the boys and girls and young people never to forget -- he looked at me very earnestly and said: I would like to know what you have done with my name.

Everything I had ever done passed before me as though it were a flying picture on a screen -- everything I had done. Quickly this vivid retrospect came down to the very time I was standing there. My whole life had passed before me. I smiled and looked at my grandfather and said: I have never done anything with your name of which you need be ashamed.

He stepped forward and took me in his arms, and as he did so, I became conscious again of my earthly surroundings. My pillow was wet as though water had been poured on it -- wet with tears of gratitude that I could answer unashamed.

I have thought of this many times, and I want to tell you that I have been trying, more than ever since that time, to take care of that name. So I want to say to the boys and girls, to the young men and young women, to the youth of the Church and of all the world: Honor your fathers and your mothers; honor the names that you bear, because some day you will have the privilege and the obligation of reporting to them, and to your Father in heaven, what you have done with their names.

Thus between 1909 and 1912 George Albert Smith remained inactive in the Church, yet growing and maturing in the Spiritual matters. During the semiannual conference of 1911 he was able to address a session for the first time in two years. From then on he steadily regained his strength, and his testimony of the Gospel grew also. And now having acquired the the knowledge of the truth that the future strength of the Church lies in the youth of today, he wholeheartedly devoted himself to the Mutual Improvement Association and especially to the field of scouting. In 1916, he was elected president of the International Irrigation Congress; and the following year president of the International Dry Farm Congress.

The Church was unable to send missionaries into Europe and Canada during World War I; and those missionaries who were in Europe at the beginning of the war were brought back in ships in the midst of great dangers of traveling in darkness through waters filled with enemy mines. The Lord did bring them home safely, and the angels did minister unto them. From then on the missionary work was turned over to the local members who held the priesthood; and in some cases, as in Britain, the Church was without full-time missionaries from December, 1916, till March, 1919.

Then, in 1919, president Heber J. Grant called him to preside over the European Mission; he was the first mission president after World War I. (When he became the president of the Church some twenty-seven years later, World War II had just ended; and because of his earlier mission experience in Europe after the war, he was fully aware of the problems which war brings.) As the president of this mission, his task was to acquire permission for the United States and Canadian missionaries to return as full-time missionaries. It is said that war had left these countries with food shortages, and missionaries coming into a country meant more mouths to feed. Besides this reason, some of the European countries were hesitant to allow Latter-day Saint missionaries to return, for the temporal was afraid of the Spiritual. A most remarkable success did elder George Albert Smith achieve in dealings with the diplomats of Europe. The mission ended in 1921; and at the conference in October, he reported to the membership of the Church concerning his mission; the following is an extract from his presentation:

> . . . Our difficulty is that millions of people in all parts of the world have been deceived and made to believe that we are a wicked people. Evil stories have been circulated about us and those falsehoods have gained ground and have been given credence by many intelligent men and women. The adversary has sown the seeds of suspicion and hatred against the Church, and but for that reason our missionaries would be made welcome in every land . . .
> . . . Our problem is to find a way whereby we may present to all people the Gospel of our Lord. It is our problem, and with divine assistance we will find a way to solve it . . .

During the same years, elder George Albert Smith remarked: I have been in the valley of the shadow of death in recent years, so near to the Other Side that I am sure that but for the special blessing of our Heavenly Father I could not have remained here; the nearer I went to the Other Side, the greater was my assurance that the Gospel is true. Also in 1921, he was appointed general superintendent of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, which position he held until 1935. (In 1931, he was elected member of the National Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America.) And the following year, at the age of fifty-two, he was elected vice-president of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. In 1938, his wife Lucy Emily died; and his sorrow was great, and the loss weighed heavily upon him. Soon he was sent on a tour of the missions of the Church in the South Pacific. For six months he mingled with the friendly people of Hawaii, Australia, New Zealand, Tonga, Samoa, and Tahiti; reviewing both the temporal and Spiritual conditions among the missionaries and Saints there. Elder George Albert Smith not only inspired them with the truths of the Gospel, but also visited many high officials of various governments, with his genuine love for people, always seeking new friendships. Of his experience in the South Pacific he said: The Lord loves all men; they are all His children, and His commission to His Apostles was and is to go forth and preach the Gospel in all the world. That is our mission, and our joy in it will be great indeed if through any effort of ours we can help to show these children of God in the lands of the Pacific the way back to their Eternal Home.

In 1943, George Albert Smith was set apart as president of the Quorum of the Twelve. President Heber J. Grant died May 14, 1945; at this time, elder Smith was on his way to New York, after having attended Chicago Stake conference. Telegrams were sent to distant parts requesting all the members of the Twelve and the Patriarch to return home, to Salt Lake City. By the day of the funeral of president Grant, all members of the Council of the Twelve and the Patriarch had returned. On May 21, 1945, a meeting was held in the Salt Lake Temple. The brethren assembled in fasting and prayer and the day was spent in testimony bearing. At its conclusion, on elder George F. Richards' motion, George Albert Smith, the president of the Quorum of the Twelve, was sustained as the president of the Church. And on motion of elder David O. McKay, elder George F. Richards was sustained to preside over the Council of the Twelve. Then, president Smith was ordained under the hands of all the brethren, elder George F. Richards being voice. He chose J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and David O. McKay as his first and second counselors respectively. And president Smith being voice, they were set apart under the hands of all the brethren.

During the administration of president George Albert Smith, two most important goals were achieved: extension of the Church Welfare Program on a Worldwide scale, and the worldwide missionary work. World War II officially ended in September of 1945; and in November of that year, president Smith and other Church officials went to Washington, D.C., to visit with the president of the United States, Harry S. Truman. And these are the words of president George Albert Smith, which he spoke two years later in general conference:

> When the war was over, I went representing the Church, to see the president of the United States. When I called on him, he received me very graciously. I had met him before, and said: I have just come to ascertain from you, Mr. President, what your attitude will be if the Latter-day Saints are prepared to ship food and clothing and bedding to Europe.
>
> He smiled and looked at me, and said: Well, What do you want to ship it over there for? Their money isn't any good.
>
> I said: We don't want their money. He looked at me and asked: You mean you are going to give it to them?
>
> I said: Of course, we would give it to them. They are our brothers and sisters and are in distress. God has blessed us with surplus, and we will be glad to send it if we can have the cooperation of the government.

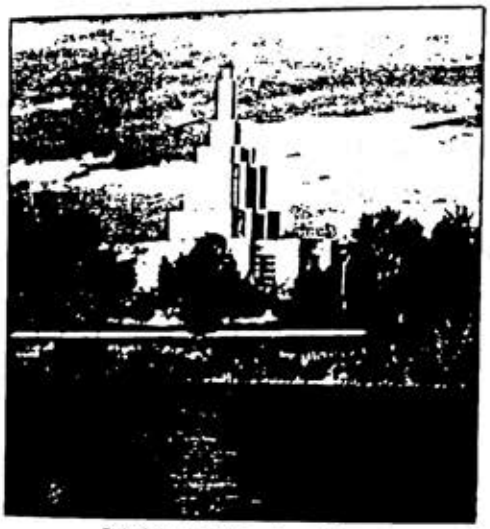
He said: You are on the right track, and added, we will be glad to help you in any way we can.

I have thought of that a good many times. After we had sat there a moment or two, he said again: how long will it take you to get this ready?

I said: It's all ready. The government, you remember, had been destroying food and refusing to plant grain during the war, so I said to him: Mr. President, while the administration at Washington was advising the destroying of food, we were building elevators and filling them with grain, and increasing our flocks and our herds; and now what we need is the cars and the ships in order to send considerable food, clothing and bedding to the people of Europe who are in distress. We have an organization in the Church that has over two thousand homemade quilts ready.



Idaho Falls Temple

On Sunday, September 23, 1945, president George Albert Smith dedicated the Idaho Falls Temple. At this time there were 386 missionaries, excluding those serving locally; in 1946, it had increased to 2,297. About sixty percent of those who accepted mission calls were war veterans; they served for two years. And the leaders of the Church, soon after obtaining the permission of the president of the United States to send goods to European Saints, moved into action. Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Twelve was sent on a special one-year mission to preside as European Mission president. The following was his primary assignment:

- To attend to the Spiritual welfare of the Saints in Europe.
- To provide for the temporal needs of the Saints, such as food, shelter, clothing and bedding.
- To direct the reorganization of the missions, and
- To prepare the way for the return of missionaries to Europe.

This was the first time in the history of the Latter-day Saints all over the world that the Saints were drawn close together in a unified project to supply the needs of their brothers and sisters; and the project was to last over two years. The first drive of the temporal welfare of the Saints in Europe began shortly after the arrival of elder Ezra Taft Benson in Europe. The First Presidency of the Church had chosen Ezra Taft Benson to go to Europe on his mission of mercy; and he left on February 4, 1946, accompanied by Frederick William Babbel as his secretary. He was received by military offices, and was greatly aided by them. He was instructed to visit all the accessible countries in Europe and to comfort and bless the war-stricken people. The Lord opened the way before him in each country he visited; and he was received by the members as an angel of mercy who had come unto them to bring temporal and Spiritual salvation. And he did, for the Lord was with him. Toward the end of 1946, elder Ezra Taft Benson was released to return home to his family; after having laid a foundation upon which others have built; and this good work still continues.

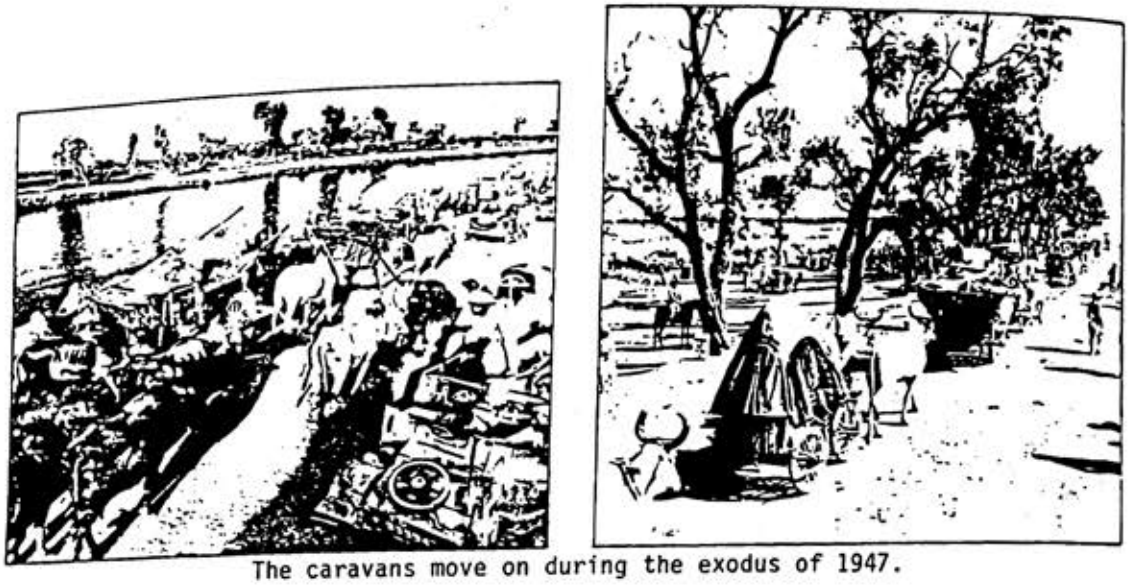
From the Saints in America came carload upon carload of food and supplies to France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Denmark, Finland, and Czechoslovakia; quilts made by the women of the Church; little children began special drives to raise funds for the children in Europe. Canadian Saints sent carloads of wheat to Germany. And the Saints in war-torn countries, as soon as the war ended, began to help other Saints in Europe; carloads of potatoes raised by the Saints on welfare farms in the Netherlands were sent to the German Saints, between 1946 and 1947.

Although such welfare activities during the war have been a part of the Sainthood since ancient times, the scale of its operation was now global, during the administration of George Albert Smith. One of the dominant qualities of president Smith was that he was truly concerned with all the family of God's children; he was equally concerned with non-member children as with those of the Saints.

Also, in Mexico friction had developed over a decade before, causing many Saints to withdraw from the leadership of the Church. Now they had repented and wished to be accepted back into the fold. As a result, a conference was held there, and twelve hundred members who had withdrawn pledged their full support of the living prophet of the Lord. The audience was moved to tears when with his usual unselfish love of Christ, president George Albert Smith blessed the little children that were in attendance. New missions were opened in South America, Uruguay was opened in 1947. And during the same year, India and Pakistan were divided, and mass migrations to both countries were in the similitude of the exodus of patriarchal times. Many people perished in travel, due to exhaustion, disease, pestilence, starvation, dust storms, floods, and other calamities. The following photographs were taken during such mass exodus of the peasants, and farmers from India to Pakistan and from Pakistan to India. Large caravans, consisting of millions of refugees, crawled along the congested road; carrying with them all they could carry; a few rags, pots and pans, such items which in the Western world would be considered garbage or junk; and their flocks and herds. Those of weak constitution or old age were left behind to die, as the caravans moved on; others were transported as shown in some of these photographs.



The caravans move on during the exodus of 1947.

For many, unleavened bread, or the bread of affliction, was their main diet (as in the time of Moses).

Some of the modes of transportation during the mass migration of 1947; How strong must a man be? How much must he endure?

As in Egypt, when Pharaoh's chariots were drowned, a flash flood drowned thousands in this camp. And those who were forewarned of the danger, and those who escaped, lost all their tools with which they planned to start farming in the new land.

The old man is dying of exhaustion, hunger and thirst. The caravan has gone on.

Moreover, the year 1947 was an important year for the Church; for it was the one hundredth anniversary of the arrival of the Saints in the Salt Lake Valley. To celebrate this event, the annual governors' convention was held in Salt Lake City; and president George Albert Smith was able to meet the high ranking officials of every state and territory of the United States. Also in 1947, the Japanese Mission, which was opened by president Heber J. Grant, was reopened; in 1949, a new mission was opened in Hong Kong. And the Church truly stood on the threshold of a new day; and saw the dawning of a new day, and rejoiced in the work concerning the Second Coming of the Messiah.

Towards the latter part of president George Albert Smith's administration (in the early 1950's) trouble in the world flared up anew, which led to the Korean conflict. Missionaries were expelled from Czechoslovakia; the Near East Mission, which included the Palestine-Syrian Mission, was closed; and the headquarters of the Hong Kong Mission was moved to San Francisco, where the missionaries were to labor in the Chinatown section of the city. During the time of the Korean conflict, 1951-53, the number of full time missionaries dropped from three thousand and fourteen to merely one hundred and eighty.

President George Albert Smith's last public address was in December of 1950; and the following words this most humble and friendly servant of the Lord spoke at the gathering:

> There would be no war in Korea and threats of war everywhere else in the world, if the people accepted and lived the Gospel. These wars come solely because the Adversary is able to deceive the bulk of the people. This makes all the more important that we who have a testimony of the divinity of Jesus, should live the Gospel and make it spread far and wide.

On his eighty-first birthday George Albert Smith passed away, in 1951, leaving behind his great and loving Spirit; he was truly a man without guile, a lover of humanity. These are his own words concerning himself, which he spoke on one occasion, and they best describe his philosophy:

> I love my brothers and sisters, and I have affection for my Father's children who are not members of the Church; and inasmuch as He will give me physical strength and mental power, I desire to so order my life that I may be an uplift to all those with whom I come in contact.

8. David O. McKay

(the world traveller, educator and missionary, prophet, seer, and revelator; raised up to continue the divine work of the Second Coming of the Messiah, and preparation of the Saints for the Millennial-day; President of the Church from April 9, 1951 to January 18, 1970)

Son of David and Jennette Evans McKay, David O. was born in Huntsville, Utah, September 8, 1873. He was the first son and third child in this family. Then in 1881, both of his older sisters died within one week of each other; one was taken of rheumatic fever and the other of pneumonia. This tragedy the seven-year old David saw as the girls lay buried in the same grave side by side, now making him the oldest living child in that household; although he had a younger brother Thomas, five years old, a sister Jeanette three, and a baby sister Annie less than two weeks old. Soon after, his father was called to labor as a missionary in Great Britain, to leave his wife and little children for two years; which he did, with the help of his supporting and understanding wife. And by the time David O.'s father returned from his mission, he had become the man of the house, and did full share of his chores around the farm.

David Oman McKay was fourteen years old when president John Taylor died; and early in his life he had realized that opportunities of the future belong to those who receive a good education. While he worked on the farm and loved farm animals, he sought a better education and personal growth. At the age of twenty years, in 1893, he graduated from Weber Stake Academy in Ogden, Utah. Thereupon he was given principalship of the elementary school in his hometown of Huntsville. He taught for one year, then decided to continue his education and make teaching his profession. He entered the University of Utah in 1894, and after three years graduated, president and valedictorian of his class; he also played piano for a dance band, and participated in sports. In August 1, 1897, he was ordained a Seventy by elder Seymour B. Young, and set apart for a mission to the British Isles. Between the years 1897 and 1899, elder McKay was called to serve as a missionary in Great Britain by president Wilford Woodruff.

By this time, having learned the lessons from adversity, the McKay household had decided to survive this material existence by working as a team, so that all the children might receive higher education in a college. The family had decided that they would borrow money to put the first children through school. Elder McKay and his sister Jeanette were to teach in order to earn a sufficient sum to pay the debt and help support their brother Thomas and sister Annie while they attended college. But this mission call had shaken all their plans; and he would no longer be able to help with the family finances. Elder McKay had then realized that a mission was the thing which the Lord desired of him; and that if he would put his future in the hand of the Lord, all would turn out well at the end. Thus he accepted the call of the Anointed One of the Lord. The first four months in the mission field were difficult for him; for this was the first time elder McKay had realized what it meant to be unpopular among men; and not to be fed on recognition and achievement. However, his testimony was confirmed during this growing period, as he describes his feelings in these words:

> I was homesick and a little discouraged on this day. A Scottish woman had said, when I gave her a tract, Better gae to your hame, Ya canna have any o'oor lassies!

I did not want any of their lassies. I had left a sweet one at home. But it made me discouraged to think of the ill-will which they had towards the Latter-day Saints; what misconceived notions they had of our purpose among them!

I had just left school. I loved school and I loved young people; I loved youth. And then to go over there and feel the antipathy and prejudice gave me the blues.

I was with Peter G. Johnston, one of my truest friends in all the world. He was from Idaho, an experienced, wealthy man, a lover of all things beautiful; I was fortunate to have his companionship.

As we were coming back into town, I saw on my right an unfinished dwelling, over the front door of which was a stone on which there was a carving. That was most unusual, so I said to elder Johnston, I am going to see what it is. I was halfway up the graveled path, when there came to my eyesight a striking motto carved in stone: "Whate'er Thou Art, Act Well Thy Part."

I repeated it to elder Johnston as we walked in to town to find a place for our lodgings before we began our work. We walked quietly, but I said to myself, or the Spirit within me, You are a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. More than that, you are here as a representative of the Lord Jesus Christ; you accepted the responsibility as a representative of the Church.

Then I thought what we had done that forenoon. We had been sightseeing; we had gained historical instruction and information, it is true, and I was thrilled with it, for we had just finished studying the Lady of the Lake at the University; however, that was not missionary work.

That afternoon, by the time we found our lodgings, I accepted the message given to me on that stone; and from that moment we tried to do our part as missionaries in Scotland.

It is said, that after making this difficult mental adjustment, which many missionaries have to make at first, elder McKay was able to find joy and satisfaction in his work. He could now begin to comprehend the divine plan of the Lord; and in the midst of all adversity rejoice in knowing that he was doing the Lord's work. He remembered well the lesson taught by Moroni centuries before: Ye receive no witness until after the trial of your faith. After laboring for two years in the mission field in Great Britain, elder McKay returned home; and began his teaching career at the Weber Stake Academy in Ogden, Utah, in 1899.

The following year he was appointed as second assistant in the Weber Stake Sunday School superintendency of the Church; here he introduced new methods of teaching and teacher instruction, which affected the entire Church. Preparation meetings for teachers were established, individual and cooperative outlines for the lessons were prepared, through which each Sunday School lesson became a unit. Later, the "aim," "illustration" and "application" method of teaching became the standard terms throughout the Church's class work system. This was just the begining of his teaching work; for it is rightly stated that no one has had greater influence on the Sunday School programs of the Church than David O. McKay.

On the first day of the new century, January 1, 1901, president Lorenzo Snow issued to the world his greetings from a meeting in the Salt Lake Tabernacle; these are in part the words he said:

> A new century dawns upon the world today. The hundred years just completed were the most momentous in the history of man upon this planet . . . Happy are we to have lived amidst its wonders and shared in the riches of its treasures of intelligence.
>
> The lessons of the past century should have prepared us for the duties of glories of the opening era. It ought to be the age of peace, of greater progress, of the universal adoption of the golden rule . . .
>
> As a servant of God I bear witness to the revelation of His will in the nineteenth century. It came by His own voice from the heavens, by the personal manifestation of His Son, and by the ministration of holy angels . . . He has commenced the work of redemption spoken by all the holy prophets, sages and seers of all the ages and all the races of mankind. He will assuredly accomplish His work, and the twentieth century will mark its advancement towards the great consummation. Every unfoldment of the nineteenth century in science, in art, in mechanism, in music, in literature, in poetic fancy, in philosophical thought, was promoted by His Spirit, which before long will be poured out upon all flesh that will receive it. He is the Father of us all, and He desires to save and exalt us all . . .
>
> . . . I hope and look for grand events to occur in the twentieth century. At this auspicious dawn I lift my hands and invoke the blessings of heaven upon the inhabitants of the earth . . . May the light of truth chase darkness from your souls. May righteousness increase and iniquity diminish as the years of the century roll on . . . And may virtue, chastity and honor prevail, until evil shall be overcome and the earth shall be cleansed from wickedness . . . May the twentieth century prove the happiest, as it will be the grandest, of all ages of time; and may God be glorified in the victory that is coming over sin, sorrow, misery and death. Peace be unto you all!

On the first day of 1901, David O. McKay and his future bride, Emma Rae Riggs, who had waited for him while he served a mission and completed more than a year of teaching, were sealed for time and eternity in the Salt Lake Temple, the first couple to be married in that temple in the twentieth century! Also in October of 1901, president Lorenzo Snow was taken up.

In 1906, at the age of thirty-two, elder David O. McKay was ordained an apostle. In April of that year he was called by president Joseph F. Smith to fill one of the three vacancies which existed in the Quorum of the Twelve. And because of the reports of the excellent work in the Sunday Schools of Weber Stake, he was sustained as second assistant in the general superintendency of the Sunday Schools of the Church; president Joseph F. Smith was general superintendent at the time. Three years later, in 1909, he became first assistant in the superintendency of the Sunday School; and held this position for nine more years. At the death of president Joseph F. Smith, in November of 1918, elder McKay was sustained as general superintendent of the Sunday Schools. Moreover, in the previous year, he had published his first book, Ancient Apostles, a fruit of the imbibement of his Scriptural knowledge at that time. But his lifelong pursuit of the truths of the Gospel and a sincere desire to serve the Lord, brought him other blessings, including a marvelous opportunity to tour all the missions of the Church throughout the world. This was truly the foundation upon which much future work of the Second Coming of the Messiah was to be built. It was in 1920 that president Heber J. Grant chose him to make this worldwide tour; the assignment took about a year to complete.

Elder David O. McKay's first task was to dedicate China for the preaching of the Gospel there; which he did on January 9, 1921. At noon, on Sunday, elders McKay and Cannon had a short service in a grove of Cypress trees in the heart of the old and historical city of Peking. And elder McKay dedicated and set apart the Chinese realm for the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as revealed in that dispensation.

After this, elder McKay and his companion Hugh J. Cannon, former president of the Swiss-German Mission, returned to San Francisco, California; and boarded a steamship for the South Sea Islands. During the missionary travels of elder McKay, he visited all the mission fields of the Church in Hawaii, Tahiti, New Zealand, Tonga, Samoa, Australia, Java, Singapore, Burma, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, France, and Great Britain. At the April general conference of 1922, among other things, he reported the following to the Saints concerning his trip:

> . . . The keen sense of our responsibility, adequately to fulfil the desires of president Grant and his counselors and the Twelve, who had honored us with the call, made us seek the Lord as I never sought him before in my life . . . As we sought the Lord with all our souls, He came to our guidance and assistance . . . Inspiration was given to us on this trip. That is why I touch this theme.

> I want to testify to you that God was with us when we stood beneath the tree in old China and turned the key for the preaching of the Gospel in the Chinese realm. My words may not convince you of the fact, but no disputant can convince us that our souls were not filled to overflowing with the Spirit of God on that occasion.
>
> Again the veil was thin between us and departed friends, when we stood in prayer on the side of old Haleakala, the largest extinct volcano in the world; and poured out thanksgiving to God for what He had done for presidents Joseph F. Smith, George Q. Cannon, and other missionaries who carried the Gospel message to the Hawaiian people.
>
> I knew of His protecting care in the Tongan Islands; for when the vessel was submerged by a mountainous wave, we felt peace and security.
>
> At Papeete, Tahiti, we knew His guiding hand and acknowledged His overruling providence, when replacing our judgement by His inspiration, he moved us to do something which our own judgement had told us not to do; subsequent events proving that the inspiration came in rich abundance in the priesthood meetings with your boys . . .
>
> Again, when among the Samoans we felt His presence on several occasions, especially in that memorable farewell at Sauniatu. May I take this occasion to say, brethren and sisters, that we are not sufficiently close to the Tahitians, the Maoris, the Tongans, the Samoans and the Saints in Australia and New Zealand. In distance they are a long way off, and visitations of General Authorities are all too infrequent. They need things which they do not get, sometimes, I think, just because of the great intervening distance; but their hearts are just as true and genuine and their faith just as sincere as yours and mine . . .

Soon after, elder David O. McKay was called to preside over the European Mission in 1922; he was to follow the footsteps of president George Albert Smith in this assignment, who had been released from that position a little more than a year before; and elder Orson F. Whitney who had been chosen to replace George Albert Smith was forced to leave the mission field because of illness. After laboring there for more than two years, elder McKay returned in 1924 and resumed his labors in the apostleship in visiting and putting in order the stakes of Zion. This assignment took him to all parts of the Church where stakes were organized, and into many nearby missions.

Soon after the death of elder Anthony W. Ivins in the First Presidency, president Heber J. Grant chose elder David O. McKay to be his second counselor; and he was set apart to this position in October of 1934. Following the death of president Heber J. Grant in 1945, elder McKay was chosen to serve as second counselor to president George Albert Smith; he was set apart for this position May 21, 1945. For six more years he worked side by side with president Smith. In the early fall of 1950, elder George F. Richards, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, died, and David O. McKay was now left as the senior apostle in the Quorum. Eight months later, when president George Albert Smith passed away peacefully on his eighty-first birthday, David O. McKay was sustained as the president of the Church, in 1951. On the ninth day of April, the First Presidency was reorganized with Stephen L. Richards and J. Reuben Clark as his first and second counselors.

The Lord had truly blessed president David O. McKay with a vigor and interest which enabled him to travel far and wide, to all parts of the earth in the performance of his duties, in building up and strengthening the Kingdom of God. From the time he was sustained by the membership of the Church as president, prophet, seer, and revelator, in 1951, two important goals had been achieved during his administration: the establishment of the Church as a major force in a larger area of the world; and the streamlining of various Church programs which were designed to aid the Saints in perfecting themselves and their families. The achievement of both of these were essential in order to fulfill the primary mission of the Church, the divine mission which was given to the Church when it was organized (or reorganized) in 1830. The mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was revealed through the angel Moroni, who was sent by the Father and His Son to bring the joyful tidings unto the Saints and the world, and this in part was his message: The preparatory work for the Second Coming of the Messiah is to commence speedily; for the time is at hand for the Gospel in all its fulness to be preached in power, unto all nations; that a people might be prepared for the Millennial reign.

In June and July of 1952, president David O. McKay toured Europe, the land over which he had presided as mission president thirty years before. His presence brought added encouragement to the Saints in nine nations he visited; and he was invited or was a guest of the European nobility, including queen Juliana of the Netherlands, the president of Finland, and queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain. Everywhere he went the grateful Saints of Europe welcomed him with all their heart with great rejoicing. The Saints of the communist countries truly demonstrated the faith they had in the prophet of the Lord. On one occasion a mother in the Russian zone of Berlin, ill with paralysis and bedridden, had sent her two young children at a great personal sacrifice to meet the prophet of the Lord; to touch his hand and come home and touch hers that she might be blessed. And she was, for president McKay gave the youngsters his handkerchief and his blessing to take home to their mother. And so goes the saying: Charity never faileth! The Saints were fascinated when he announced the construction of a temple in Berne, Switzerland, the first to be built in Europe. Forty-six years before, in 1906, president Joseph F. Smith had made the following announcement in Berne, while on the European tour:

I believe, that among those who bear this high office, I am the first to visit our foreign missions. But the time will come, when the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will have more leisure to visit the branches of the diverse countries where the Gospel is being preached. The time will come, perhaps not in my days nor in this generation, when the temples of God which are dedicated to the ordinances of the Gospel, and not to the worship of idols, will be erected in the diverse countries of the earth. For the Gospel must be spread over all the world, until the knowledge of God covers the earth as the water the great depths.

And while in Europe, in 1952, he selected sites for temples in Switzerland, England and other countries of Europe. In Switzerland ground was broken, and the temple was completed in September of 1955. During 1954, president David O. McKay visited again mission fields in South Africa, South America, Central America, Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Panama, and Guatemala. During this tour he found a marvelous change in attitudes of the people, than that which he noticed during his first great journey (of the years 1920-21), a journey which covered nearly fifty-nine thousand miles! To gain additional insight into the life of this great Man of the Hour, a man alive to opportunities, lover of life and people, always ready whenever the Hour strikes, the following partial list of his activities and travels in the performance of the Lord's duty and in building up of his kingdom, is provided from the records of presidents George Albert Smith and Joseph Fielding Smith; from October 1951 till June 1959. Pages upon pages can be written and have been written about this great educator and world traveler, missionary, prophet, seer, and revelator:

By 1958, the Church was ready to move forward in a major way; and it had committed itself to a world setting. These instructions were provided by the European mission presidents to the Saints in Europe: We have not ceased in our sermons to proclaim the gathering of Israel. We are still appealing to people to leave Babylon which signifies Spiritual darkness; we are still gathering the children of light; we are still gathering scattered Israel. But we are no longer urging emigration to America but to remain in their own lands, and build stakes of Zion and to extend the boundaries of His Kingdom. The main focus must be on the missions. Here great growth must be achieved in order that stakes and wards can be established so that the Church organization can be extended over the whole earth. The task of our members lies therefore in the missions in order that we may here prepare for the Second Coming of the Messiah.

The Book of Mormon tells us that at the Second Coming of our Lord that believers will be found everywhere on the earth. Although small in number, the Church of the Lamb is spread over the whole earth and it is fortified with righteousness and the power of God.

During the first twelve years of president David O. McKay's administration, by 1963, at least half of the living members of the Church had known no other president, for fifty percent of the members had been baptized since 1951. This rapid growth of the Church created a need for better ways of instructing the new converts in the truths of the Gospel. To accomplish this, the First Presidency announced the formation of a Church correlation program; a committee was organized to determine how the activities of the priesthood, the home, and the auxiliaries of the priesthood could best be utilized to teach the Gospel. This group, led by elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve, was given this injunction by the First Presidency:

> The home is the basis of a righteous life, and no other instrumentality can take its place nor fulfil its essential functions; the utmost the auxiliaries can do is to aid the home in its problems, giving special aid and succor where such is necessary.

Qualified persons were called to aid in the development of the Church correlation program, and to determine the course material to be taught to the membership of the Church, at three different age levels, namely: childhood, youth, and adult. The practise of holding weekly family home evenings, and home teaching was encouraged. Special emphasis was placed on the role of the home teacher as a link between priesthood quorums and the membership of these quorums. Through innovative methods and home teaching, the way was opened for the bishop of each ward to acquire better knowledge of the needs of his individual ward members. Four main priesthood committees were formed, each presided over by one of the General Authorities, namely: Priesthood Home Teaching Committee, Priesthood Missionary Committee, Priesthood Genealogical Committee, and Priesthood Welfare Committee. When this program was presented by elder Harold B. Lee to president McKay, he responded with these words: This is not only a wonderful step forward but a bound forward. My soul rejoices; I think the whole thing is glorious. We can all see opportunities for the priesthood to become active and as quorums also. I think this is growth; it warms my soul!

In November of 1964, president David O. McKay dedicated the Oakland Temple in Oakland, California; and in his early nineties he was seriously ill on several occasions, and many Saints gave up hope for his life; but each time he regained his strength, determined to live life to its fullest. In 1965, he chose two additional counselors in the First Presidency; and in January of 1970, he was called home, at the age of ninety-six.

9. Joseph Fielding Smith

(the historian, president, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from January 23, 1970 to July 2, 1972)

Joseph Fielding Smith was born July 19, 1876, in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is said that this child was markedly special, for he was the firstborn son of Joseph F. Smith by his wife Julina Lambson; destined to follow the footsteps of his father. Julina had given birth to three daughters and greatly wished to be blessed with a son to bear the name of his father. And, like Hannah of old, she prayed before the Lord and vowed a vow that if she should be given a son, she would do all in her power to help him be a credit to the Lord and to his father. Julina Lambson Smith had been raised in the home of George A. Smith, a cousin and close associate of Joseph Smith. This George had also served as a father to Joseph F. Smith, since his father Hyrum had been martyred in Carthage Jail. Joseph Fielding's mother took a course in obstetrics and became a licensed obstetrician; she brought nearly a thousand babies into the world, and was able to declare with a sense of accomplishment: I never lost a mother or a baby in my practice. Often this service was provided free of charge, and included daily visits for five or six days to care for mother and child. Many a time Joseph had to get up in the middle of the night, taking the lantern to the dark barn and hitching up the horse to the buggy; he would then drive his mother to the home of the expectant mother, and sit in the buggy and wait, wondering why babies were so often born in the middle of the night. Joseph Fielding was one year old when president Brigham Young passed away; and president John Taylor was taken up when he was eleven years old. Many an hour as a youth he spent herding cows and laboring with his brothers on the family farm in Taylorsville. Once, while he and his younger brother George were loading hay into a wagon to carry it from the field to the barn, they stopped on a road by a canal to give the team a drink and to stack some bales. And because one of the horses was a skittish one, Joseph had told George to stand by the head of the team and hold their bridles until he could climb up and take the reins. But George, not having given heed to the words of his brother, went back and started binding up the rope. And as he did so, the horses started with a sudden jerk, and Joseph fell down between the horses on the doubletree.

As the thought of his final hour had flashed through his mind, something turned the horses and they ran into the water canal, where he was thrown clear of their hoofs and the wheels of the wagon. Thoroughly shaken, but grateful to be alive, he hurried home. His father, Joseph F. Smith, came out to meet him and wanted to know what difficulty the boy had encountered; because he had received a strong impression that his son was in some sort of danger. By nature Joseph Fielding was more studious than his brothers. It was his habit to finish his chores as quickly as possible so that he might go to his father's library and study. His brothers Alvin, Richard, Frank, and Edward all enjoyed hunting and fishing; but young Joseph Fielding would not hunt with them, although occasionally he would fish with them, for he preferred to study.

At the age of twenty years, Joseph Fielding received patriarchal blessings from John Smith, the patriarch of the Church; a paragraph of which is shown below:

> Thou art numbered among the sons of Zion, of whom much is expected. Thy name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life and shall be registered in the chronicles of thy fathers with thy brethren. It is thy privilege to live to a good old age and the will of the Lord that you should become a mighty man in Israel. Therefore, I say unto thee, reflect often upon the past, present, and future. If thou shalt gain wisdom by the experience of the past, thou shalt realize that the hand of the Lord has been and is over thee for good, and that thy life has been preserved for a wise purpose. Thou shalt realize also that thou hast much to do in order to complete thy mission upon the earth. It shall be thy duty to sit in counsel with thy brethren and to preside among the people. It shall be thy duty also to travel much at home and abroad by land and water, laboring in the ministry; and I say unto thee, Hold up thy head, lift > up thy voice without fear or favor as the Spirit of the Lord shall direct, and the blessings of the Lord shall rest upon thee. His Spirit shall direct thy mind and give the word and sentiment that thou shalt confound the wisdom of the wicked and set at naught the councils of the unjust.

The following year, at the age of twenty-one, Joseph Fielding Smith was ordained an elder. Then at the invitation of elder Joseph F. Smith his father, a young lady named Louie Shurtliff, the daughter of Louis Shurtliff, president of Weber Stake, a close friend of elder Smith since their boyhood days in Nauvoo, came to live in Salt Lake City in the Smith home, while she attended the University of Utah. This arrangement led to their matrimonial alliance, and they were married in the Salt Lake Temple on April 26, 1898. After a year, Joseph Fielding Smith was called to serve a mission in the British Isles, by president Lorenzo Snow. So he and his bride parted; she returned to Ogden to teach school, and he left on his mission.

Elder Joseph Fielding Smith returned from the mission field in June of 1901; and he and his wife, Louie, were reunited again. Together they began to plan for a home and a family, and he began a search for suitable employment. During his search, he was offered an employment with a very high salary; he was tempted, although it would take him into some undesirable situations. It seemed that the man who held the position before had fallen into temptation because of the surroundings and therefore had to be dismissed. His father remarked: My son, the best company is none too good! Recognizing the wisdom of his father, Joseph Fielding did not take the employment; and soon after with contrite heart he penned the following:

> By faith I walk on earth's broad plain,
> With hope forever in my breast;
> If valiant to the end, I'll gain,
> A glorious mansion with the blest.
>
> O Father, lead me by the hand,
> Protect me from the wicked here;
> And give me power that I may stand,
> Entrenched in truth to me made clear.
>
> The best is not too good for me
> That heaven holds within its hand;
> O may I falter not but see,
> Thy kingdom come o'er all the land.

Shortly after, he obtained employment as a clerk in the Church Historian's office; and in the same year (1901), president Lorenzo Snow passed away, and his father Joseph F. Smith was sustained president of the Church. Often in the evenings after finishing his work in the Historian's office, Joseph Fielding would go to his father's office and assist him in his great responsibility as the president of the Church. In 1905, Joseph Fielding Smith defended the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by responding with a letter to the newspaper report of an interview with a member of the first presidency of the Reorganized Church, the church organized by the descendants of Joseph Smith, Jr. And during the summer of 1906 and 1907, a number of vindictive ministers in Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, brought accusations against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its leaders. Thereupon the youth of the Ogden area appealed to their stake presidency of Weber Stake, that someone should speak in defense of the faith. Elder Joseph Fielding Smith was invited to speak in the Ogden Tabernacle; and he delivered two discourses on the Reorganized Church and the question of succession of authority, in March and April of 1907. Many of elder Smith's works, mostly political, have been published in various newspapers and journals; for he had a reputation of presenting the facts in a clear and scholarly manner.

On the thirteenth of March, 1908, elder Joseph Fielding Smith's wife and companion Louie Emyla died; the cause being pernicious vomiting due to pregnancy, which could have been easily cured with today's medicine. They had been married ten years, for two of these they were separated, when Joseph served his mission. The burden of her passing was great not only upon Joseph, but also upon the two young daughters that were left behind, Josephine, five years of age, and Julina, two. As a result, elder Smith closed down the home he had built for his bride and moved his two daughters into the Beehive House, where his sisters Julina and Emily could provide motherly love and care for them.

Soon president Joseph F. Smith, knowing that it is not good for a man to be alone and that Josephine and Julina needed a mother, counseled his son to remarry. A companion was prayerfully sought; for a special girl was needed, not only faithful and obedient to her husband, but also one who could love his children as her own. Such a girl was found, Ethel Georgina Reynolds, a young, lively and perceptive maiden; whose chief virtue was the pure love of Christ or Charity, and loyalty to the Church. And this was truly the greatest blessing for elder Joseph Fielding Smith and his children. Ethel's father, George Reynolds, had served for many years as private secretary to Brigham Young; and for twelve years he served as a member of the First Council of Seventy. Her mother Amelia Jane Schofield Reynolds was a meticulous English woman, restrained and strict in all things, true to her faith. Out of this union, five sons and four daughters were born.

Also, upon his return from the mission field in 1901, elder Joseph Fielding Smith had joined the twenty-fourth Quorum of Seventies; and immediately began as a home missionary, and as the Quorum instructor. In 1903, he was made one of the presidents of the Quorum, and was called to the general board of the Mutual Improvement Association. Then, in 1904, he was called to be a member of the Salt Lake Stake high council; and was ordained to the office of a high priest under the hands of his brother Hyrum. In 1907, he was named secretary and director of the Genealogical Society of Utah, and in 1909, he was named its librarian and treasurer.

And it came to pass, that as Joseph Fielding Smith walked through the gate of the temple grounds to attend the concluding session of April general conference in 1910, one of the gate keepers asked him, Well, who is going to be called to fill the vacancy in the Council of the Twelve today? Joseph Fielding replied: I do not know, but there is one thing I do know -- it won't be me and it won't be you; then he went into the meeting and took his seat. His father called the meeting to order and announced the opening hymn, We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet. After the invocation was offered by Brigham H. Roberts and the choir sang, The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning, Heber J. Grant arose to present the names of the General Authorities of the Church for sustaining vote; just before he read the name of the new apostle, elder Joseph Fielding Smith knew that the name that would be read was his. The previous Thursday, when president Joseph F. Smith had returned to the Beehive House after his meeting with the Council of the Twelve and the First Presidency in the Salt Lake Temple, his wife Julina noticed that he was very quiet, almost dejected. When asked, he informed her that her son Joseph Fielding was elected by the Council that day to fill the vacancy that would be created in the Twelve by the reorganization of the First Presidency. President Smith was well aware of the criticisms which such a call would bring; and he would become guilty of nepotism, for he did ordain him as an Apostle. But Julina assured her prophet-husband, that the Lord had chosen Joseph Fielding. It was true, for the Lord had chosen this special child, for a political and temporal mission in the Latter-days. He was a man of the world, political, ambitious, and torn between the desires of his heart and the Lord's commandments. Thus in this manner the future call to the Presidency was assured for Joseph Fielding Smith.

In 1918, president Joseph F. Smith, father of Joseph Fielding died; and in 1921, he was sustained as Church Historian. During 1921-22, he published in one volume the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, entitled Essentials in Church History; which is still used as a textbook in selected priesthood quorums, Church schools and auxiliary organizations; over twenty-five publications bear the name of Joseph Fielding Smith.

Elder Joseph Fielding Smith was a man whose greatest ambition in life was to make his family happy, a loving husband and father who delighted in gathering his large family around him in the evenings to tell them entertaining bedtime stories. He was a man who enjoyed a good story and was quick to see the humor of a situation, to laugh and to be laughed at, always willing to join in any wholesome activity. Elder Smith served as the vice-president of the Genealogical Society of Utah from 1925 to 1934; and following the death of Anthony W. Ivins (September 23, 1934), the president of the Society, he became its president.

At the age of sixty-one (April 12, 1938), elder Smith married Jessie Ella Evans in the Salt Lake Temple. She was by nature an entertainer and singer; and traveled with elder Smith and the Tabernacle Choir throughout the world; she learned at least one song in the native tongue of each of the countries they visited. It is said that her life was filled with more requests to sing than she could fill; yet she did sing in as many as twenty-eight funerals in a single month. She gave full support to her husband's work, and until her death (August 3, 1971), she was always found at his side.

Soon after the April general conference of 1939, elder Smith and his wife Jessie left to tour the European missions. In June a conference was held at Lucerne, Switzerland, at which the presidents of the ten European missions met. Although their reports on the missionary work were good, World War II seemed inevitable. As a result, on August 24, 1939, the First Presidency of the Church sent word that all missionaries in Germany be transferred to neutral countries. Elder Joseph Fielding Smith then directed the missionaries from the East German Mission to Denmark, and those from the West German Mission to Holland. But Holland refused to allow the missionaries to enter her borders, so that West German missionaries were also sent to Denmark, where they were permitted to enter. Then, after Germany's invasion of Poland and the subsequent declaration of war by England and France, the other European nations immediately announced that all foreigners must leave their borders. It then became elder Smith's responsibility to direct the evacuation of all missionaries in Europe to the United States. In November of 1939, elder Smith and his wife Jessie returned to Salt Lake City, having successfully completed a task unforeseen.

In 1951, elder Joseph Fielding Smith became the president of the Salt Lake Temple, and president George Albert Smith died. In 1955, he toured the Far East and dedicated four countries for the preaching of the Gospel; and in 1965, became counselor to president David O. McKay in the First Presidency. Joseph Fielding Smith was sustained president of the Church at the death of president David O. McKay in 1970. President Joseph Fielding Smith's administration was earmarked by change, nearly every department and auxiliary in the Church underwent a change of some sort. A commissioner of education was called to head all the Church schools; new presidents were appointed at Ricks College, Church College of Hawaii, and Brigham Young University. Administrative changes were made in the Department of Seminaries and Institutes of Religion, placing the entire Church school system under one administration. Church publications, the Ensign, New Era, and Friend were introduced, replacing the Improvement Era, Instructor, Children's Friend, Relief Society Magazine and other publications.

Also, a program to bring the Aaronic Priesthood and Mutual Improvement Association leaders in closer contact for the benefit of the youth was instituted under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. The Scout program was correlated in conjunction with this, Presiding Bishopric serving as the chairman of the General Boy Scout Committee of the Church.

It is written in the Church records, that under president Joseph Fielding Smith's administration the Stone that Daniel saw roll forth, continued to roll; but it shall cease to gain momentum at the Second Coming of the Messiah. The membership of the Church surpassed three million in July of 1971. In 1969, there were five hundred stakes of Zion; by the end of 1970 that number had grown to 537, with new stakes being created in Peru, Japan, South Africa, South Pacific, and Brazil. New missions were created in Ecuador, Spain, Pennsylvania, Japan, and Taiwan; bringing the total number of major missions to ninety-three.

Under the direction of president Joseph Fielding Smith, the first area general conference was held in Manchester, England (from August 27 to 29, 1971). Of some seventy thousand members of the Church in the area, twelve to fourteen thousand members from England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales attended the sessions. President Smith delivered five addresses during this conference. At this time Joseph Fielding Smith was ninety-five years old. He was born during president Brigham Young's administration; and since that time he did see and hear every president of the Church. He died in Salt Lake City, Utah, July 2, 1972, at the age of ninety-five years.

These are some of the major highlights of the life of Joseph Fielding Smith (1876-1972):

10. Harold B. Lee

(the Defender of the Faith; educator, missionary, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from July 7, 1972 to December 26, 1973)

Harold Bingham Lee was born in Clifton, Idaho, on March 28, 1899, the second son of Samuel Marion and Louisa Emeline Bingham Lee. His great-grandfather and great-grandmother had joined the Church some sixty-seven years before in Indiana. After their baptism, they settled with the Saints in Missouri; later they were driven from the state of Missouri and settled in Nauvoo, Illinois. And, when the Saints were expelled from Nauvoo, they crossed the plains and reached the Salt Lake Valley in 1850; where under the leadership of Brigham Young, a vast western empire was to be colonized, which enabled the parents of Harold B. Lee to settle in southern Idaho. The life on the farm taught him many valuable lessons in hard work, dependence on the Lord and on other people, sharing and caring, fortitude, thrift and other areas.

Many words spoken or written by Harold B. Lee have been preserved, and serve as an excellent source of gaining insight into this great Man's character; and much will be quoted in this section for that purpose. Reflecting on his youthful days on the farm he said the following:

> I have thought of the discipline of the boy and girl of my youthful days in a rural community. We began to > do chores shortly after daybreak so we could start with the day's work by sun-up. When the day's work was finished, we had yet to do our evening chores, usually by the aid of a lantern. Despite the fact that there were no wages and hours regulations or child labor laws, we did not seem to be stunted from our exertions. Sleep requirements did not admit of too frequent frivolities. Returns for our labors were small and usually came on a once-a-year basis at harvest time. Homes of that day went throughout the summer with but very little ready money; but from our cows we were provided milk, butter and cheese. In our granaries there was usually sufficient wheat to be taken to the mill for flour and cereals. We had our own chickens and garden and fruits in season. A large family (four boys and two girls) required mother to remodel the suits and dresses of the oldest to meet the needs of the youngest, who rarely had a "boughten" suit from the store.

> I do not know how we would have managed with the advanced teachings we have today about vitamins, diets and minimum food budgets that require food items as though they were a necessity, that then were only available as luxuries at Christmas time or on other like gala occasions. Education was provided and was within the reach of all who were willing to work, although it involved saving in the summer and "batching" and working one's way through school by part-time employment in the winter.

In spite of his humble beginnings in an obscure farming village, Harold B. Lee was marked for a great latter-day work. He loved to read good books, which provided entertainment and enabled him to enter the sublime world of adventure and accomplishment. The following remarks, in reference to this, were made by him:

> The first book I ever owned came to me on the heels of near tragedy. It was at a community Christmas Tree party in our little country town. The huge tree lighted with hundreds of burning candles and human Santa Claus bedecked in his regalia consisting of a padded suit amply trimmed with fluffy cotton set an ideal stage for that which followed. Before our horrified gaze Santa caught fire and as he ran frantically out through a rear exit he swept along with him trimmings, candles, presents, and even a part of the tree itself. Following the completed distribution of gifts, while the pseudo actor rested comfortably under hospital care, I returned home to inquiring parents, disconsolate and dejected because no gift was on the tree for me. The next day from out of the ruins of the fire a book, half burned, was found with my name on it. The book was Tom, the Bootblack, by Horatio Alger, Jr.

Biography and stories of the lives of people who achieved success always made interesting reading and aided me in fancy to soar away beyond the close confines of a routine rural life, to satisfy the longing for adventure that I suppose every normal boy has. In those early days, my fondness for this type of reading led me to adopt as my favorite the American Magazine, which at that time featured human-interest stories. At this time I remember how my imagination was fired by the reading of Jules Verne's Ten Thousand Leagues Under the Sea, that ran as a serial in the issues of the old Pathfinder Magazine. Little did I realize then that I would live to see his fantastic undersea ship become a reality in the modern submarine and a tremendous factor in a great world war.

Living as a boy at the foot of a great mountain in a valley surrounded by mountains, it was probably to be expected that stories of the outdoors and of animals were particularly appealing. I read every book of Ernest Thompson Seton's I could get my hands on. The one of his series I remember was Adventures of a Grizzly, I think it was called.

I was fourteen years old when my father put into my hands two books that were on the MIA (Mutual Improvement Association) reading course list. Those books were Himself and Herself. Whether or not he guessed the need of a young high school boy for frank counsel from competent authorities on intimate boy and girl problems, these books provided that need for me.

Another unforgettable experience that Harold B. Lee related, helped him grow Spiritually and confirmed his faith in workings of the Lord; he was about ten years of age at the time this incident took place:

. . . As a little boy I had my first intimate touch with divinity. As a young boy I was out on a farm, waiting for my father to finish his day's work, playing about manufacturing things to while away the time, when I saw over the fence into the neighbor's yard some broken-down buildings with the sheds caving in and with rotting timbers. I imagined as a young boy that that might be a castle that I should explore; so I went over to the fence and started to climb through, then I heard a voice as distinctly as you are hearing mine. "Harold, don't go over there." I looked in every direction to see where the speaker was. I wondered if it was my father, but he couldn't see me; there was no one in sight. I realized that someone was warning me of an unseen danger --whether the rotting timbers would fall on me and crush me, I don't know. But from that time on, I accepted without question the fact that there were processes not known to man by which we can hear voices from the unseen world, by which we can have brought to us the visions of eternity.

Harold B. Lee received his high school education at the Oneida Stake Academy in Preston, Idaho; where he participated in debate, basketball and school band. He recalled the following incident, speaking of one of his successes during that time:

As just a high school boy I went away on a high school debating team. We won the debate. I came back and called mother on the telephone only to have her say: "Never mind, Son; I know all about it; I will tell you when you come home at the end of the week." When I came home she took me aside and said: "When I knew it was just time for this performance to start I went out among the willows by the creek side, and there, all by myself, I remembered you and prayed God you would not fail." I have come to know that that kind of love is necessary for every son and daughter who seeks to achieve in this world . . .

In 1916, at the age of seventeen, he received his teaching certificate from Albion State Normal School; and began his first teaching job in the one-room Silver Star School, five miles south of Weston, Idaho. This one-room school accommodated all first eight grades, one through eight, with a total of twenty to twenty-five pupils. The following year he became principal of the district school at Oxford, Idaho.

In 1920, at the age of twenty-one, Harold B. Lee accepted a call to serve in the Western States Mission. After serving sixteen months as president of the Denver Conference, he was honorably released in December of 1922. And while he was laboring as a missionary in Denver, he met a young lady missionary who later became his wife. Fern Lucinda Tanner was born in Salt Lake City on November 14, 1896, and was a faithful worker in the Church from her youth. She played the organ, served in all auxiliaries and filled an honorable mission in the Western States. Elder Lee also had learned to play the baritone, trombone, mandolin, and piano. On November 14, 1923, she was sealed for time and all eternity to Harold B. Lee in the Salt Lake Temple. Together they joyfully raised two daughters, Maurine and Helen. Elder Lee spent many joyous moments playing the piano, giving lessons to others, and later playing in a dance band. In later years he played piano duets with his daughter Maurine; and accompanied Helen his other daughter while she played the violin. (Even after he had become an Apostle, he frequently played piano accompaniment for the General Authorities as they sang in their council meetings.)

Just prior to his marriage, in the summer of 1923, elder Lee took up residence in Salt Lake City. He was attracted to that city, because many educational and vocational opportunities were available there. He completed his university education through correspondence courses, extension classes, and summer school programs. In the meantime, he served as principal of Whittier School and then Woodrow Wilson School in the Granite District of Salt Lake County, from 1923 to 1928.

In 1929, elder Lee became a salesman for the Foundation Press, a book-distributing organization; later he became the intermountain manager for the firm. He had been a leader in bringing to the attention of the city commission needed improvements for the west side of Salt Lake City. In 1932, he was appointed to the city commission by the mayor, and unanimously approved by the entire commission. As commissioner, he was responsible for the streets and public properties. During his early residence in Salt Lake City, he served as stake Sunday School superintendent, Ward M Men leader, stake religion class superintendent, member of the high council, counselor in the stake presidency; and president of the Pioneer Stake from 1930 to 1937. He also taught at Salt Lake South Seminary for one and a half years after becoming stake president, before his appointment to the city commission.

It was also in 1932 that Harold B. Lee and his counselors instituted a stake welfare program to care for the needy and unemployed of the Pioneer Stake; and established a warehouse for storing and distributing food and other commodities. It was found through a survey that, because of the financial crisis of the time, 4,800 of the 7,500 members in Pioneer Stake needed assistance because the family head lacked steady income. Besides developing the welfare program, elder Lee established a stakewide budget system for financing a recreational program for all stake members; a stake gymnasium was built to house these activities. And he developed leadership development and teacher training programs.

In 1941, at the age of forty-two, Harold Bingham Lee was called to be a special witness of Jesus Christ. He filled a vacancy in the Quorum of the Twelve which was created by the passing of elder Reed Smoot. Elder Lee made the following remarks concerning this call:

> Since nine o'clock last night I have lived an entire lifetime in retrospect and in prospect . . . Throughout the night, as I thought of this most appalling and soul-stirring assignment, there kept coming to me the words of the Apostle Paul, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need . . ." Therefore I shall take the word of the Apostle Paul. I shall come boldly unto the throne of grace and ask for mercy and his grace to help me in my time of need. With that help I cannot fail; without it I cannot succeed.

Elder Harold B. Lee reflected on his call to the apostleship during the April general conference of 1952, with these remarks:

Eleven years ago this morning, I climbed the steps and took my place on the stand where brother Richards is today. In eleven years, to the day I have moved from the arm rest to my left, to the arm rest to my right. That call was an overpowering experience, as only these, my brethren, know; but the greatest experience was not eleven years ago today, but eleven years ago the week following today.

It was on the day or so following conference that president Stephen L. Richards, who was then chairman of the Church radio and publicity committee, approached me and said, "Brother Lee, next Sunday is Easter, and we have decided to ask you to give the Sunday night radio talk, the Easter talk, on the resurrection of the Lord." And he added, "You understand now, of course, that as a member of the Council of the Twelve, you are to be one of the special witnesses of the life and mission of the Savior and of that Great Event." The most overwhelming of all the things that have happend to me was to begin to realize what a call into the Council of the Twelve meant.

During the days which followed, I locked myself in one of the rooms over in the Church Office building, and there I read the story of the life of the Savior. As I read the events of his life, and particularly the events leading up to and of the crucifixion, and then of the resurrection, I discovered that something was happening to me. I was not just reading a story; it semed actually as though I was living the events; I was reading them with a reality the like of which I had never before experienced. And when, on the Sunday night following, after I had delivered my brief talk and then declared, simply, "As one of the humblest among you, I, too, know that these things are true; that Jesus died and was resurrected for the sins of the world." I was speaking from a full heart, because I had come to know that week, with a certainty which I never before had known.

I do not know whether that experience was the realization of the workings of the gift of the more sure word of prophecy, but this much I came to know -- neither the prophet Joseph Smith, nor any who have followed since, have ever received a personal visitation from the Master; nor have they ever received a special witness of his life and mission, except they have had a supreme faith. Until that faith had been tried and tested, only then did they receive the witness.

This much more I know, and bear humble witness, that only shall I receive a greater witness than I today have, that he is, when my faith through trial shall have become the more perfect.

> I know with all my soul today, God being my witness, that the Savior died, was resurrected, and lives today; so close to us in the councils of the priesthood, so near to those whom he has chosen as his mouthpieces, that if they will but open their hearts and minds, they may know with a surety that they have done his will and that he has spoken.

Elder Harold B. Lee had also devoted considerable time to the young men and women serving in the armed forces. In 1954, he toured Asia. While in Japan, he was granted the complimentary rank of Major General and provided transportation to Korea by the United States Army. And while in Korea, he visited the Latter-day Saint soldiers stationed at the bases there. One of the commanding generals, when elder Lee was introduced to him, said, "Well you have a lot of relatives in this country. For the five most prominent names in Korea are Yi, Chang, Kim, Pak, and Lee. In China he found that there were over five hundred thousand Chinese who have the surname Lee (or Li). At times the immigration authorities, when he signed his name, or they saw his name on his passport would ask: Chinese? And he would answer, No, American. Then they would comment, You look Chinese! So he was well accepted there almost as a native. Elder Lee remarked: My coloring as to hair and eyes and skin seem to fit the general terrain.

Elder Harold B. Lee is remembered as a dynamic speaker and Defender of the Faith;and like prophets of old, has stood fearless in defending truth and in correcting error. The following passages of this true and faithful prophet of the Lord warn the congregation concerning those who circulate sensational stories and half-truths, and those who choose to follow the philosophies of men:

> Brethren of the priesthood, you defenders of faith, we would wish that you would plead with our Saints to cease promoting the works of the devil. Spend your time promoting the works of the Lord, and don't allow these things to be found among those under your charge; for they are the works of Satan, and we are playing his game whenever we permit such things to be heralded about and repeated and passed about on every side . . .
>
> Brethren, I repeat, don't allow the works of the devil to be paraded in our midst and become the subject of discourses or lesson materials. Speak of the works of righteousness, and the power of the devil will begin to cease among you.
>
> Your safety and ours depends upon whether or not we follow the ones whom the Lord has placed to preside over his Church. He knows whom he wants to preside over this, and he will make no mistake. The Lord doesn't do things by accident. He has never done anything accidentally. And I think the scientists and all the philosophers in the world have never discovered or learned anything that God didn't already know. His revelations are more powerful, more meaningful, and have more substance than all the secular learning in the world.

In 1958, elder Harold B. Lee toured South Africa and the Holy Land. And on June 17, 1963, Harold B. Lee was married in the Salt Lake Temple to his second wife, Freda Joan Jensen; at this time she was a member of the Primary General Board and director of elementary education in the Jordan School District in Salt Lake County. In 1970, at the age of seventy-one, he became president of the Council of the Twelve and counselor to Joseph Fielding Smith in the First Presidency.

On Friday, July 7, 1972, in the council room of the Salt Lake City Temple, elder Harold B. Lee was ordained and set apart as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Thus far, he had served twenty-five months as a missionary, seven years as a stake president, thirty-one years as an apostle, and numerous other assignments in the service of the Kingdom. He now became the tenth true prophet of the Lord in the Latter-day dispensation, God's spokesman on earth, presiding over more than three million members of the Church. President Harold B. Lee passed away December 26, 1973.

11. Spencer W. Kimball

(the Beloved; missionary, educator, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from December 30, 1973 to November 5, 1985)

Spencer Woolley Kimball, the eleventh Latter-day prophet of the Lord, was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, to Andrew Kimball and Olive Woolley, on March 28, 1895. In May of 1898, the Kimball family moved to Thatcher, Arizona, where Andrew Kimball presided over the St. Joseph Stake for twenty-six years. At this time Spencer was three years old. In June of 1906, he received his patriarchal blessing, and in October his mother Olive died. The following year he was baptized on October 5.

He graduated from a Church-owned high school, Gila Academy in Arizona, with honors; where he was student body president and their favorite basketball player. On June 6, 1914, he was ordained a priest by his father, and on September 15, an elder. The following month he was ordained a seventy; called to the Swiss-Austrian Mission, but, due to World War I, was sent to the Central States Mission. The religious training for young Spencer began early in his life; and he had made up his mind that he would avoid the things that are bad, and do the things that are good -- to obey the commandments of God. He read the Bible by lamplight, and Spencer the lad milked nine cows each morning and night by hand. And while he did so, he learned the Articles of Faith, the Church hymns, and the Ten Commandments; he wrote them down on a little card and put them on the ground where he could read as he milked the cows and often sang.

Spencer's father Andrew Kimball knew his son's future; and once made these remarks: Spencer is an exceptional boy . . . you will see him some day as a great leader; I have dedicated him to the service of God, and he will become a mighty man in the Church.

In January of 1917, elder Spencer W. Kimball was released from the Central States Mission; and attended the University of Arizona. On November 16, of the same year, he married Camilla Eyring, a teacher at the Gila Academy; together they had four children. She is described as a model for Latter-day Saint women, always at his side, caring for him, encouraging him, and herself growing in the Gospel and strengthening her own testimony. Later in life, at his bedside in the hospital, she refused a hospital bed, and slept on a mattress on the floor to be at his side during a lengthy hospital stay.

Elder Spencer W. Kimball was named stake clerk of the St. Joseph Stake in 1918, and during the same year joined banking business as a clerk and teller. In September of 1924, he was called a second counselor in the stake presidency when the death of his father caused reorganization; and was ordained a high priest by president Heber J. Grant. In 1927, he became president-manager of Kimball-Greenhalgh Realty and Insurance Company. He served as president of Mount Graham Stake, beginning in February, 1938; and in 1943 was ordained an Apostle by president Heber J. Grant and sustained by the Church. On September 13, 1946, elder Kimball was named chairman of the Church Indian Committee. Between 1948 and 1961, he suffered and recovered from a severe heart ailment; lost his voice, but was restored after an administration; was operated for cancer of the throat, one and one-half vocal cords were removed.

In 1961, an important task was assigned to elder Spencer W. Kimball, when he was named Council of the Twelve supervisor for the Southwest Indian Mission, the mission number thirty-five, which was organized in 1943, under the presidency of Heber J. Grant. Then, in 1965, he was named Council of the Twelve supervisor for South American missions, and in 1968, the supervisor for British missions. In 1970, he became acting president of the Council of the Twelve; two years later was named president of the Council of the Twelve, and underwent open heart surgery. On December 30, 1973, elder Kimball was set apart and ordained president of the Church, the highest office on the face of the earth, being the prophet, seer and revelator of the Lord.

During his presidency of nearly twelve years (1973-85), a great many changes took place in the forward movement of the Church. An insight into the administration of president Spencer W. Kimball may be gained by the perusal of the following major activity records of the Church, beginning in January of 1974 through October of 1985:

Now, we shall return to the passages from a fair appraisal of this chosen prophet of the Lord, Spencer W. Kimball, by elder Neal A. Maxwell of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; harmonized with the Church's historical records:

President Kimball at a general conference.

. . .President N. Eldon Tanner, who was so remarkable in his own right, serving four presidents loyally and ably, often observed how uniquely beloved president Kimball has been. In addition to all the justifiable respect and esteem which flow -- and should -- from the members of the Church to every president of the Church -- there is a special and discernible dimension of affection for and identification with president Kimball.

As long as mortal memories function, Church members will be nourished and encouraged by the eloquence of the example of this prophet, seer, and revelator in overcoming, or coexisting, with adversity after adversity. His resilience was exemplary. His deft humor occupied the place which might have so easily been commandeered by self-pity. His selfless dedication, time and again, caused him to be up and about his Father's business (sometimes even before he was well).

These and so many other traits are indelibly inscribed in our hearts and minds as we ponder the life of president Kimball. Next to the Savior's preeminent Gospel, which he preached so tirelessly and earnestly, president Kimball placed the example of his own life. This man was a message himself.

It was the morning of 4 April, 1974, in the seminar for regional representatives, when president Kimball electrified the audience by a stirring preachment on the necessity of the Church's complying more vigorously with the adjuration of the Savior to preach the Gospel to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people. After the speech, president Ezra Taft Benson rose and movingly said: President Kimball, our hearts rejoice in this masterful address. I think I can say very safely that no greater address has been given before any seminar -- nothing more timely . . . I am sure we all join in saying God bless you and thank you. Surely there is no doubt, my brethren, after this message this morning, that there is in very deed a prophet in Israel.

Long before that special moment, of course, there were quiet, preparatory dramas, such as his call to the Twelve and the decision to operate on president Kimball's heart. Still earlier, when sustained to the Twelve, he said in his maiden address: I want to tell you that for eighty-five nights I have gone through the experience, wrestling for a blessing. Eighty-five times, the breaking of the day has found me on my knees praying to the Lord to help me and strengthen me and make me equal to this great responsibility that has come to me.

In pondering proposed surgery, there was an episode in 1972, which is both inspiring and sobering. Elder (then Dr.) Russell M. Nelson described that dramatic moment:

In the month of March 1, I joined with president Kimball as he assembled his wife and the First Presidency. President Kimball said, I am an old man, I am ready to die; it is time for a younger man to come to the Quorum and do the work I can no longer do. President Lee interrupted and pounded his fist on the desk, and said: Spencer, you have been called not to die but to live. President Kimball then humbly and submissively announced, In that case, I will have the operation. Sister Kimball wept, the decision had been made.

Looking back, it is difficult to imagine this Latter-day dispensation without the presidency of Spencer W. Kimball. How grateful we should all be that another prophet, president Harold B. Lee, counselled president Kimball so directly and so lovingly with regard to proceeding with the heart surgery. Obedient as prophets are with each other, president Kimball followed the counsel of his senior Apostle. As a result, millions have been blessed by the ministry of this man who had fully expected to wear himself out as a member of the Council of the Twelve.

In the marrow of this man there was a divine discontent, which grew out of knowing what the Lord wanted done; which objective president Kimball pursued without sparing himself, though he was especially considerate of others. In the October, 1979, general conference, president Kimball spoke of how Caleb, at eighty-five years of age, had pled: Give me this mountain. Then president Kimball added, This is my feeling for the work at this moment. There are great challenges ahead of us, giant opportunities to be met. I welcome that exciting prospect and feel to say to the Lord, humbly, Give me these mountains, give me these challenges.

Ever at his side has been his elect lady, Camilla, caring for him, encouraging him, adding her own strong testimony throughout her own ministry. She has been and is a model for Latter-day Saint women; it was she who encouraged anxious Spencer at the time of his call to the Twelve, saying, Spencer, you can do it.

There was a pervasive warmth in the ministry of this man. The loving but penetrating look of his eyes, his embrace, his holy kiss, his tenderness -- felt by so many -- all created a deserved aura about this man, not of unapproachability, but of special warmth. His love was inclusive, no one ever felt left out; every General Authority could trustfully abide in his special love which he had towards people. It should not surprise us, then, that president Kimball regularly and visibly epitomized the central virtue in the first two great commandments --love of God and of his fellowmen.

President Kimball truly was a man who loved people. Being full of love, he was full of praise and generosity. Many articles he has written were in praise of people he has loved. It is difficult to determine exactly how many thousands have been helped along some rocky road of repentance by reading president Kimball's book, The Miracle of Forgiveness; or how many thousands have been steadied in the midst of their adversities by reading Faith Precedes the Miracle. Among his notable quotes which blend the practical with the Spiritual: We do not go to the Sabbath meetings to be entertained or even solely to be instructed; we go to worship the Lord. If the service is a failure to you, you have failed; no one can worship for you. You must do your own waiting upon the Lord.

President Kimball stressed the importance of personal righteousness and goodness among the Church members; he himself being the ensample to the congregation. In December of 1947, he saw the day of the Indian (Lamanite) dawning; and at an Indian conference spoke these words: I see you Lamanites and your posterity from the islands of the seas and from the Americas rising to your great destiny. I see you in beautiful homes which are comfortable, having in them all the comforts and conveniences which science can provide; spacious homes with plumbing and electrical fixtures, deep freeze, television, radio, and all modern blessings. I see you sons of Lehi grazing your own large flocks and herds on a thousand hills as owners, not merely as herdsmen.

Your young women and young men will be teachers in the schools, professors in the universities; they will write editorials in newspapers; they will be speakers on rostrums, officers in civic service, business and professional organizations and thus help to mold public opinion. I see your posterity in the clinics and hospitals as nurses and interns; your trained men will be noted in medicine, dentistry, and the healing programs. Your sons will preside as judges in the courts and serve as attorneys at the bar.

At a family reunion in 1958, when elder Spencer W. Kimball was asked to say a few words that night, he gave them this parable of the Grandfather (Heber C. Kimball) whose family reunion it was, saying, This is what Grandfather would say if he were here:

> I am your grandfather, Heber C. Kimball. I am a very busy man on the other side of the veil. You know this veil is a little like modern glass which admits vision from one side but is opaque on the other; I can see you but cannot be seen by you. I saw the family association leaders busy preparing for this reunion and thought I would drop in.
>
> I bring you greetings from your grandmothers, the loveliest women in my world. I have been present with you many times, but you did not know. When each of your grandmothers was buried I came for her; and as my own children began to leave mortality I was not so far away. I came to take them and to welcome them to the world of the spirits. They are all on that side now and some of my grandchildren are arriving. I have looked in at the family reunions each year and noted those of my children who were loyal to and proud of their ancestry and cousins. I was never called on to speak before.
>
> My beloved, I can stay but these few minutes. But remember that I, too, was successful in business, and I held high office in politics. I helped in building many communities and an empire. I had houses and lands, and livestock, but I left them all on the earth. I knew, as I hope you will know and realize, that money cankers, livestock dies, houses deteriorate, stocks and bonds may come to naught. But the things which I did not leave on earth were the eternal verities -- my Spirit, my knowledge of the divinity of the work of the Lord.
>
> I want you to know that I know that God lives and that His Church is here, and that to observe every directive of God is the most important thing for you. I plead with you to, Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all other things will follow.

President Spencer W. Kimball not only stressed personal righteousness in words alone, but in thoughts and actions as well. He loved people in whatsoever conditions he found them, but he also insisted that they rise to their potential. He loved to be in company of the common folk because he sincerely regarded himself as one of them. Although president Spencer W. Kimball could cross cultural boundaries with greatest of ease, he preached that there is only one culture, the Celestial culture, for which all Christians should be preparing. This is the true Christian culture we most need to develop. While every culture in the world has fine and good things of its own, none of these approach the true Christian culture, the Celestial culture.

Thus with such richness of experience and knowledge emerged this great president, prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church, the eleventh Latter-day prophet, who remained acceptable in the sight of the Lord unto the end. On December 30, 1973, Spencer W. Kimball, the Beloved, was set apart and ordained by the Twelve as president of the Church, president Ezra Taft Benson being voice. It is well said, that the greatest forward movement of the Church took place under the administration of president Kimball. In April of 1980, he counseled the Church members, saying: There is a tide to be taken now in the affairs of the Church in all the earth, which will lift us up and carry us forward as never before. In October general conference of the same year he added: The time will come when only those who believe deeply and actively in the family will be able to preserve their families in the midst of the gathering evil around us. In the previous year, he had already declared, saying: Now, my brothers and sisters, it seems clear to me, indeed, this impression weighs upon me, that the Church is at a point in its growth and maturity when we are at last ready to move forward in a major way.

Such is a partial highlight of the life of president Spencer W. Kimball, who passed away November 5, 1985.

12. Ezra Taft Benson

(the Alpha and Omega of the Latter-day prophets; educator, missionary, prophet, seer and revelator; President of the Church from November 10, 1985 to present)

Ezra Taft Benson was ordained and set apart as the president of the Church on November 10, 1985; but it was not until April 6, 1986, that he was sustained by the members of the Church as the Prophet, Seer, Revelator and President of the Church.

Ezra Taft Benson was born in the small rural community of Whitney, Idaho, August 4, 1899. He was named after his great-grandfather, Ezra T. (Taft) Benson, an Apostle, who entered the Salt Lake Valley with the first pioneers in July of 1847. Young Ezra Taft was raised on the family farm, where he drove a team of horses at the age of five, milked cows, and thinned sugar beets. He entered grade school at the age of eight; and this counsel governed his reading habits -- Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep! Additional responsibility was forced upon him when his father was called as a missionary to the Northern States Mission, leaving behind his wife and seven children; the eighth was born while he was in the mission field.

He entered the Church-sponsored Oneida Academy in Preston, Idaho, in 1914, and graduated in 1918. As a youth he developed a love for the land and the Lord; and remained committed to three loyalties: loyalty to God, loyalty to family, and loyalty to country. Also during 1918, Ezra Taft Benson, as a Scoutmaster, led his Scouts into choral championship and won the Cache Valley chorus championship. To increase his agricultural skills, he took correspondence courses and attended Utah State University, previously known as Utah State Agricultural College, in Logan, Utah. In 1921, he accepted a mission call to England, and served as clerk of the Newcastle Conference, Sunderland Branch president, and president of the Newcastle Conference, which included all of northern England.

Upon his return to Utah, he soon enrolled at Brigham Young University; where he was elected president of the Agriculture Club and Men's Glee Club, and was named most popular man on campus. He graduated from there with honors. Ezra Taft was eldest of the eleven children, whose grandparents were among the earliest pioneer settlers of Cache Valley on the Idaho-Utah border. On September 10, 1926, Flora Smith Amussen and Ezra Taft Benson were married in the Salt Lake Temple by elder Orson F. Whitney of the Council of the Twelve; who had been elder Benson's mission president, and for whom the town of Whitney, Idaho, was named.

Flora was the youngest daughter of Carl C. Amussen, a native of Denmark, a prominent jeweler and watchmaker during the (1848) gold rush in Australia. He joined the Church in Liverpool, England; and crossed the plains (in 1865) to Salt Lake City. And there he established a jewelry business. Flora's mother was Barbara Smith Amussen, who was born in Tooele, Utah, of Scottish pioneer parents. Flora's father died when she was only one year old, and her mother raised the family of six as a widow. In 1927, elder Benson received a master's degree from Iowa State College (later University), and was elected to the agricultural honor society (Gamma Sigma Delta). The couple then moved to the farm in Whitney, Idaho. Together with his brother Orval he had purchased the farm; and when in the fall of 1927, Orval was called on a mission to Denmark, he was supported by the farm income. There elder Benson helped farmers solve their problems by setting up demonstration farms, inviting agricultural specialists, teaching crop rotation, and introducing improved varieties of grains.

In 1929, elder Benson became the Franklin County agricultural agent for the University of Idaho College of Agriculture, and also a Scout commissioner with the Boy Scouts of America. In 1931, he became the head of a newly organized Department of Agricultural Economics and Marketing of the University of Idaho. Then, in 1935, he was called to the stake presidency of Boise (Idaho) Stake. In Boise he helped organize the Idaho Cooperative Council, and served as executive secretary for five years. From 1935 to 1939, he served in the stake presidency. Elder Benson was given a leave of absence in 1936 for additional graduate study at the University of California in Berkeley, on a fellowship awarded in the field of Agricultural Economics.

Soon after his return to Boise, elder Benson was called, in November of 1938, to serve as stake president. In April, 1939, he became executive secretary of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, at its headquarters in Washington, D.C.; the Council represented some 4,000 cooperative purchasing and marketing organizations involving one million and six hundred thousand farmers. Ezra Taft Benson represented these cooperatives before committees of Congress; and served on a four-man national agricultural advisory committee to president Franklin D. Roosevelt, during World War II.

On June 30, 1940, elder Ezra Taft Benson was called to serve as the first president of the Washington, D.C., Stake. In 1942, he became a member of the executive committee of the board of trustees of the American Institute of Cooperation; an organization of farm cooperatives and land grant colleges. And on July 26, 1943, he was called to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. During the October general conference, he was sustained; and was ordained an Apostle by president Heber J. Grant on October 7, 1943, a most important date in the history of mankind. For the concerted efforts of the Church to bring to pass the Second Coming of the Messiah would now officially commence. It is for this reason Ezra Taft Benson is referred to as the Alpha of the Latter-day prophets, having truthfully lived that Exalted title in the fulness of its meaning. The Mission number thirty-five to Southwest India, was also organized, under Ralph William Evans, in 1943, during the presidency of Heber J. Grant.

Upon his return to Salt Lake City, elder Ezra Taft Benson visited president David O. McKay, a counselor to president Heber J. Grant; who informed him that president Grant wanted to see him when he got back from Idaho. After attending two meetings in Boise and Idaho Falls, elder Benson returned to Salt Lake City; where he was informed by president McKay that president Grant wanted to see him, and that his son-in-law would call for him at the hotel. When elder Benson was taken to president Grant's home on Eighth Avenue, they learned that he was at a cottage in the mouth of the Emigration Canyon. They went to the cottage, where sister Grant informed elder Benson that the president was in a bedroom relaxing. She invited him to go in to see the president, who was all alone and resting. Now, these are elder Benson's own words as to what transpired next:

> So I went in, and he (president Grant) was reclining on the bed -- dressed, but reclining. He asked me to pull my chair right up to his bed, which I did. Then he took both of my hands in his and looked me in the eye; he said, brother Benson, the Lord bless you. You have been chosen as the youngest member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles.
>
> I just could not believe it; it seemed as though the whole world had caved in on me. We visited for a few moments, and then I left; and we drove down the canyon to president McKay's home, because he had invited me to have dinner with him. As I went up on the porch, he embraced me.
>
> He knew all about it. President Grant had said, Now you tell David (McKay) that this is to break in the Deseret News. This decision was made three weeks ago, and we have been waiting for an opportunity to tell you about it and have an interview with you.
>
> I had dinner with president McKay, and he drove me down to the train station immediately after dinner. I had never received any intimation of this call. It came as a complete surprise. President Grant emphasized, We want you to stay back there (in Washington) with this National Farm Organization as long as it is necessary to satisfy them; to be sure there will be no difficulties with the transition and to help select your successor.

Before he left for home, elder Benson called his wife Flora on the phone, and told her about the new appointment. She said: I am not surprised. I had a feeling that some great event was going to happen on this trip that would affect us. Of course, you know we are all behind you one hundred percent. Then, in December of 1945, after the calamities and destruction of World War II, president George Albert Smith called elder Benson to be the European mission president. And the First Presidency gave him the following four-point charge:

(i) To attend to the Spiritual affairs of the Church in Europe.

(ii) To labor to make available food, clothing and bedding to our suffering Saints in all parts of Europe.

(iii) To direct the reorganization of the missions of Europe, and

(iv) To prepare for the return of missionaries to those countries.

Elder Ezra Taft Benson greets Scouts from throughout the British Mission at a gathering in the Birmingham District (1946)

Elder Ezra Taft Benson was among the first American civilians to administer relief in many of the devastated areas in Europe. During his first five months there, he visited over one hundred cities in thirteen countries. Within ten months he had successfully accomplished his mission; having distributed ninety-two boxcar loads of food, clothing, bedding, and medical supplies. He had reopened missions with new mission presidents and full-time missionaries, and gave the Saints of Europe a renewed Spirit of hope. When elder Benson had received this call, in late 1945, president George Albert Smith lived near the Bensons and promised him that he would keep a watchful eye over his family. President Smith did so and wrote regularly to elder Benson during the ten months he was away. Not only president Smith but the Twelve unceasingly sent encouragement to this "humble ambassador of goodwill" in Europe.

He arrived in London on February 4, 1946. On the following Sunday, elder Benson held a conference in the London district; and then flew to Paris to purchase vehicles for the distribution of food and supplies. At times he had to change trains several times during the day, and resort to Army trucks to cross rivers where railway bridges had been bombed out. He was able to go into most countries, through Divine intervention, where others were forbidden to enter. He labored in Holland, France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Switzerland, Great Britain; visited Germany and Poland, all Scandinavian countries; and dedicated Finland for the preaching of the Gospel.

While in Germany, a local member of the Church accompanied elder Benson to a warehouse where some supplies from Utah were stored. Brother Ranglaek asked, You mean to tell me that those boxes are full of food? Elder Benson replied, Yes, with food, clothing, bedding, and I hope a few medical supplies. They took down some boxes; and when brother Ranglaek saw that they contained wheat and beans, he ran his hands through the wheat, then broke down, and cried like a child, and said: Brother Benson, it is difficult for me to believe that people who have never seen us before could do so much for us. This was a typical experience during his assignment in Europe. Throughout these and other experiences, elder Benson remained faithful to the Lord and remembered the advice of his father and mother who taught him faith in prayer, and his father's words: Remember that whatever you do, or wherever you are, you are never alone; our Heavenly Father is always near. You can reach out and receive His aid through prayer. Elder Benson found this always to be true; the Lord did not fail him.

In 1952, Ezra Taft Benson accepted the Cabinet position of Secretary of Agriculture in the Eisenhower administration, following the counsel of president David O. McKay. Known throughout the world for his integrity, as a man of religious principles who stood by his convictions despite political pressures, his selection was greeted with widespread approval. His agricultural policy is stated in this statment he made: The supreme test on any governmental policy, agricultural or other, should be, How will it affect the character, morale, and well-being of our people?

Russian congregation.

A completely planned and subsidized economy weakens initiative, discourages industry, destroys character, and demoralizes people. When he assumed office, farm income was on the decline and wartime legislation was piling up surpluses in government warehouses, attracting increased government intervention and control of agriculture. Secretary Ezra Taft Benson labored diligently to reverse the course, making significant gains in the midst of intense political opposition; always focused on the yardstick: What is best for the Kingdom? A man of unshakeable faith in the Almighty God and in Prayer; known for his integrity and uprightness, friends and foes alike acknowledged him as a man they could love and trust.

On July 19, 1954, he was named a trustee of the Robert A. Taft Memorial Foundation; his dear friend and an outstanding United States Senator, his sixth cousin. About the same time elder Benson was awarded two George Washington Honor Medals by the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge. Then, on April 10, 1957, he was honored with High Cross of the Order of Merit of the Italian Republic, the highest decoration the Italian government could bestow. The honors continued, and in 1960, he was named to the Hall of Fame of the Saddle and Sirloin Club of Chicago. But one of his most significant contributions to public life in the business field was his membership on the Board of Corn Products Company (PC International), an organization of forty-one nations. He served this organization for twelve years.

Secretary (elder) Ezra Taft Benson travelled hundreds of thousands of miles, carrying his farm message throughout the United States and the world. Many books and thousands of articles and speeches this great Latter-day prophet has written; but these are the best known: Farmers at the Crossroads (1956), Freedom to Farm (1962), Title of Liberty (1964), An Enemy Hath Done This (1969), plus others. In the Church general conference in April, 1965, he warned: To have been on the wrong side of the freedom issue during the war in heaven meant eternal damnation; how then can Latter-day Saints expect to be on the wrong side in this life and escape the eternal consequence? He dedicated several nations to the preaching of the Gospel, established the first stakes in many countries, and supervised many areas of the world.

During his eight years in the Cabinet, he met with many heads of state and agriculture leaders and farmers of over forty nations. He had meetings of substance with world leaders, such as Chiang Kai-shek, Jawaharlal Nehru, Nikita Khrushchev, king Hussein, and David Ben Gurion; who shared fondest of memories of this great man. President David O. McKay once remarked, Secretary Benson's work in the Cabinet would stand for all time as a credit to the Church and the nation.

In 1959, on a visit to Russia, secretary Ezra Taft Benson was asked to speak at a church; this was one of the most moving experiences of his career. The following are his own words concerning the Church in Russia and this incident:

> The most remarkable incident of the entire trip occurred our last evening in Moscow. By way of background, it should be noted that for over forty years it has been the policy of the Soviet Government to discourage religion. Stalin said, "Lenin is God . . . The party cannot be neutral toward religion."
>
> Lenin had stated: "Religion is a kind of spiritual gin in which the slaves of capital drown their human shape and their claims to any decent human life . . . Marxism is materialism; we deny all morality taken from superhuman or nonclass conceptions; atheism is an integral part of Marxism. The materialist gives a more important place to materialism and nature (and ignorance), while relegating God and all philosophical rabble who believe in Him to the sewer and manure heap . . . Down with religion. Long Live Atheism."
>
> Atheism is a required subject for all students in Russian public schools. Citizens of the Soviet Union who look forward to a career of any kind, whether in the professions or in industry and most certainly in public administration, know well that they must avoid the slightest suspicion of belief in Christianity or any God-centered religion. While a few churches are permitted to hold services in Moscow, it is merely to create a pretense of freedom. Of the 28 churches in Moscow now holding services, 23 are Russian Orthodox, two Baptist, two are synagogues, and one is Moslem. Of the 26 Protestant churches formerly existing, all except two are now closed. The Communists say those who go to church do so out of curiosity, not devotion or belief. The young people don't go, we are told, only the old.

On the way to the airport this last night in Moscow, I mentioned again to one of our guides my disappointment that we had had no opportunity to visit a church in Russia. He said a few words to the chauffeur, the car swung around in the middle of the avenue and we eventually pulled up before an old stucco building on a dark, narrow, cobblestone side street not far from Red Square. This was the Central Baptist Church.

It was a rainy, disagreeable October night with a distinct chill in the air. But when we entered the church, we found it filled; people were standing in the hall, in the entry, even in the street. Every Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday, we learned, similar crowds turn out.

I looked at the faces of the people. Many were middle-aged and older but a surprising number were young. About four out of every five were women, most of them with scarves about their heads. We were ushered into a place beside the pulpit.

A newsman who was present described what happened: "Every face in the old sanctuary gaped incredulously as our obviously American group was led down the aisle. They grabbed for our hands as we proceeded to our pews which were gladly vacated for our unexpected visit. Their wrinkled old faces looked at us pleadingly. They reached out to touch us almost as one would reach out for the last final caress of one's most-beloved just before the casket is lowered. They were in misery and yet a light shone through the misery; they gripped our hands like frightened children.

The minister spoke a few words, and then the organ struck a chord or two and began a hymn in which the entire congregation joined as one. Hearing a thousand to fifteen hundred voices raised there became one of the most affecting experiences of my entire life. In our common faith as Christians, they reached out to us with a message of welcome that bridged all differences of language, of government, of history. And as I was trying to recover balance under this emotional impact, the minister asked me, through an interpreter who stood there, to address the congregation.

It took me a moment of hard struggle to master my feelings sufficiently to agree. Then I said, in part, It was very kind of you to ask me to greet you. I bring you greetings from millions and millions of church people in America and around the world. And suddenly it was the most natural thing in the world to be talking to these fellow Christians about the most sacred truths known to man. (I said,)

Our Heavenly Father is not far away. He can be very close to us. God lives, I know that He lives. He is our Father. Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the World, watches over this earth. He will direct all things. Be unafraid, keep His commandments, love one another, pray for peace and all will be well.

As each sentence was translated for the congregation, I saw the women take their handkerchiefs and as one observer put it, begin to "wave them like a mother bidding permanent goodbye to her only son." Their heads nodded vigorously as they moaned, ja, ja, ja! (yes, yes, yes!) Then I noticed for the first time that even the gallery was filled and many persons were standing against the walls. I looked down on one old woman before me, head covered by a plain old scarf, a shawl about her shoulders, her aged wrinkled face serene with faith. I spoke directly to her:

This life is only a part of eternity we live. We came here as spiritual children of God. We will live again after we leave this life. Christ broke the bonds of death and was resurrected; we will all be resurrected. I believe very firmly in prayer. I know it is possible to reach out and tap that Unseen Power which gives us strength and such an anchor in time of need. With each sentence I uttered, the old head nodded assent. And old, feeble, wrinkled as she was, that woman was beautiful in her devotion.

I don't remember all that I said, but I recall feeling lifted up, inspired by the rapt faces of these men and women who were so steadfastly proving their faith in the God they served and loved. In closing I said, I leave you my witness as a Church servant for many years that the truth will endure. Time is on the side of truth. God bless you and keep you all the days of your life. I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

With that I brought this broken little talk to an end, because I could say no more, and sat down. The whole congregation then broke into a favorite hymn of my childhood, "God be with You till We Meet Again." We left the church as they sang and as we walked down the aisle, they waved handkerchiefs in farewell -- it seemed all fifteen hundred were waving at us as we left.

It has been my privilege to speak before many church bodies in all parts of the world, but the impact of that > experience is almost indescribable. I shall never forget that evening as long as I live. Seldom, if ever, have I felt the oneness of mankind and the unquenchable yearning of the human heart for freedom so keenly as at that moment. The members of the American press who were present felt it, too. Without exception they told me later what a moving experience it had been. One of them wrote in the next issue of his magazine: "The Communist plan is that when these 'last believers' die off, religion will die with them. What the atheists don't know is that God can't be stamped out either by legislated atheism or fire squad. This Methodist backslider who occasionally grumbles about having to go to church, stood crying unashamedly, throat lumped, and chills running from spine to toes. It was the most heart-rending and most inspiring scene I've ever witnessed . . ."

Elder Ezra Taft Benson after serving eight years as the United States Secretary of Agriculture, returned to Salt Lake City in January of 1961, to resume his responsibilities as a member of the Council of the Twelve. On September 4, 1965, he was named to the American Patriot's Hall of Fame. Some twenty years after his assignment to post-war Europe, he was again sent back as president of European missions, with headquarters in Frankfurt, Germany. He saw there a tremendous growth in the Church membership, new stakes had been organized and new missions set up. This mission extended from January of 1964 to September of 1965. In 1967, a delegation to draft president Benson for president of the United States came to Salt Lake City to solicit his acceptance. But elder Benson offered no encouragement, and the compaign was dropped. He was also urged to accept a draft to run for governor of the State of Utah; this too he declined.

Elder Benson was called to the Council of the Twelve on 26 July, 1943, and ordained an Apostle October 7, 1943, by president Heber J. Grant. And when Spencer W. Kimball succeeded president Harold B. Lee in the First Presidency, he was set apart by president Kimball as president of the Quorum of the Twelve, on December 30, 1973. After that time, he had led the Quorum with great efficiency, divine inspiration, and unceasing love for his brethren; always keeping in mind their best interest and that which is best for the Kingdom. Love and Goodwill characterized his administration of the Twelve; and he was sustained with full devotion and love of the Twelve and all General Authorities. They worked with him in the true Spirit of their calling for the advancement of the Kingdom of God; and believing the word of the Lord, who said: I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.

In his term as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, elder Benson traveled throughout the world, visiting hundreds of stakes and all missions, and organizing many new units. The new stakes which he organized include: Tokyo, Japan (March 15, 1970); Melbourn, Australia South (August

The accomplishments and selfless devotion of this great Latter-day prophet to do that which is best for the Kingdom, did not go unnoticed. He was honored and acknowledged by numerous organizations. More than a dozen honorary degrees from various universities have been awarded to him; some of them are listed below:

Distinguished Alumni Award, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah (June 3, 1950)

Doctor of Humane Letters, College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, Los Angeles, California (June 15, 1951)

Testimonial for Distinguished Service to Agriculture by the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin (February 6, 1952)

Doctor of Laws, University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah (June 9, 1953)

Doctor of Agriculture, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa (June 12, 1953)

Doctor of Agriculture, Michigan State College, Lansing, Michigan (February 10, 1955)

prophet, seer, revelator, and translator, and president of the Church of Jesus Christ in the Latter-days; a counterpart of Moses in today's Israel. And this was the mission of the Church at the time he became the president: to preach the Gospel, to perfect the Saints, to redeem the dead, and to reaffirm that the Church is led by the Lord Jesus Christ.

President Ezra Taft Benson selected as his counselors in the First Presidency, Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson. The new Presidency's first task was to issue an invitation to those members who had ceased activity or apostatized, that they may return to the fold; and to open the temples to worthy members married to unendowed spouses. In his opening address at the general conference of April, 1986, president Benson emphasized the need to cleanse the inner vessel, beginning first with ourselves, then the families, and finally the Church. And he suggested the reading of the Book of Mormon, to commence that inner cleansing: for the book of Mormon is indeed the Word of God for the Latter-days, although it carries the name of a fallen prophet, Joseph Smith, Jr., who had politically manipulated other brethren to put his name alone upon it, and the Lord rebuked him for it. For the Book of Mormon is not the work of Joseph Smith, Jr., nor Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris alone; it is truly the Word of God, compiled and written by the power of God, by his chosen servants of that time. It was for this selfishness on the part of Joseph Smith, Jr., that the Lord put a snare upon his soul, and took away all his gifts. Then, when Joseph Smith pretended to know the Egyptian hieroglyphics, he was snared into a false translation, to be brought forth as a proof against him in the fulness of time. The Lord doth perform His divine justice that all be fulfilled, concerning that which had been prophesied by the angel Moroni -- that the name of Joseph Smith, Jr., will be had for good and for evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; and both good and evil will be spoken of him among all people.

Out of a great many speeches and writings of president Ezra Taft Benson, these quotations in his books from Alexis de Toqueville, the French historian, Francois Guizol, David O. McKay, Calvin Coolidge and others, concerning the great land of America and some of its problems, best describe the conditions of our day.

The historian Channing Pollock observed that most democracies last for about two hundred years; our republic of America has already passed this critical limit. And the history of nations reveals that the cycle of body politic, which is the same for man, slowly but certainly undergoes change, and progresses in the following manner:

From Bondage to Spiritual Faith; from Spiritual Faith to Courage;
from Courage to Freedom;
from Freedom to Abundance;
from Abundance to Selfishness;
from Selfishness to Complacency;
from Complacency to Apathy;
from Apathy to Fear and Doubt;
from Fear and Doubt to Dependency and Attachments;
from Dependency and Attachments to Bondage.

Cycle of Man and Nation in Mortality

Cycle of Man and Nation in Immortality

* Indolence of mind; insensibility to suffering
 Self-gratification and self-satisfaction

Each man can choose to break the cycle of bondage, mortality and suffering, by forsaking and overcoming all selfishness, in thoughts, words, and deeds after Abundance is achieved; and gradually striving to become a selfless person, by learning to accept the law of Charity and Christ as the only Way of life. As all men and nations in the world must go through the cycle of mortality: Bondage, Faith, Courage, Freedom, Abundance, Selfishness, Complacency, Apathy, Fear and Doubt, Dependency, Bondage; so must all men and nations Out of the World go through the cycle of immortality: Selflessness (Charity), Obedience to God's Laws, Spiritual Awakening and Enlightenment, Safety and Salvation, Freedom and Liberty, Abundance, Selflessness (Charity).

It is also for this reason that, those who are not governed by God must be governed by the tyrants. Now, these are some of the extracts from the works of president Benson:

> With the end of the second century of our republic . . . it appears very much in order to examine its political, social and economic structure to ascertain whether it contains a unique charter which makes it impervious to the lessons of history.
>
> Are our people (in America) subject to the same frailties as the citizens of the nations that died in the past? Can we overcome these weaknesses and remain the strongest and most blessed people on earth? Are we willing to stand firmly with the basic American ideal that there can be no substitute for individual initiative and productivity?
>
> It has been pointed out many times but generally ignored, that What we have to fear is not force from without -- but weakness from within. No one is likely to destroy America but Americans; our way could be destroyed without a shot being fired.
>
> In the year 1831, Alexis de Tocqueville, the famous French historian, came to our country to study our penal institutions. He came here at the request of the French government. While in America, he also made a close study of our political and social institutions. In less than ten years de Tocqueville had become world-famous as a result of the four-volume work which he wrote, entitled Democracy in America. Here is his own stirring explanation of the greatness of America:
>
> I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her commodious harbors and her ample rivers, and it was not there; in her fertile fields and boundless prairies, and it was not there; in her rich mines and her vast world commerce, and it was not there. Not until I went to the churches of America and heard her pulpits aflame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power. America is great because she is good, and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great.

(The French historian, Francois Pierre Guillaume Guizol, while visiting in the United States, asked James Russell Lowell, How long will the American Republic endure? Lowell answered: As long as the ideas of the men who founded it continue dominant. And the two ideas being Freedom from Dictatorship and Freedom of the Individual.)

. . . Do we dare ask ourselves if the United States, though cast in the role of a leader to preserve and strengthen world civilization, isn't itself tottering internally because too many of its citizens have abandoned the virtues that comprised the basic format of its own civilization? For instance, if Spiritual Faith, Courage, and the willingness of our forbears to work hard were the sustaining virtues, and if, solely because of them, they were able to create our own civilization, can we now in the United States substitute for these virtues the human weaknesses of selfishness, complacency, apathy, and fear -- and still hope to survive as a civilized nation?

Moroni, an ancient American prophet, warned us with these words: Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ; who has been manifested by the things we have written.

. . . The late Calvin Coolidge pin-pointed the problem with these words: We do not need more material development, we need more Spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power, we need more moral power. We do not need more knowledge, we need more character. We do not need more government, we need more culture. We do not need more law, we need more religion. We do not need more of the things that are seen, we need more of the things that are unseen. It is on that side of life that it is desirable to put the emphasis; if that side is strengthened, the other side will take care of itself. It is that side which is the foundation of all else. If the foundation be firm, the superstructure will stand.

Philip Van Doren Stern said: The fight for freedom is an endless battle. Its victories are never final; its defeats never permanent. Each generation must defend its heritage, for each seeming conquest gives rise to new forces that will attempt to substitute fresh means of oppression for the old. There can be no peace in a world of life and growth. Every battle the fathers thought finished will have to be fought anew by their children if they wish to preserve and extend this freedom.

Such was a partial biographical sketch of president Ezra Taft Benson, the Alpha and Omega of the Latter-day prophets. With this twelfth great Latter-day prophet also ends the Latter-day dispensation, and commences the Millennial-day dispensation of the fulness of time. Thus the Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God, which is reckoned from the time of Adam and before, continues forever -- throughout all ages; in our day, Ezra Taft Benson being the holder of all the keys of the Latter-days and Millennial-days.

It is truly said concerning the Twelve Latter-day Prophets that, Each succeeding president of the Church varied in some respect from all other incumbents of that high and holy office. The work of the Lord is always progressing, therefore always changing. Although its principles and aims remain unaffected, its plans, instruments, methods and procedure are constantly changing, in order to meet new conditions and profit by them. Today is not yesterday, nor will tomorrow be today; the Lord provides men of such high and holy calling with the means by which He can best achieve His divine purposes. No man ever comes to lead God's people whom God has not trained for his task; God has trained and fashioned every man whom He has ever called to lead His people, even from Moses of old unto this day.

Thus ends the testimony of Effraim Zerdusht Al-Levi, a priest of the Kingdom of God, concerning the Lord Messiah Jesus Christ, His Eternal Kingdom, and His Eternal Works; from the creation of the first Lord Messiah unto this day. And by the grace and mercy and power of God, not a single year now remains unaccounted. All is gathered into one place, for unto this ocean of God's knowledge merge all the rivers of heavens and earth.

It is also declared on this 27th day of July, 1992, the day dedicated to president Ezra Taft Benson, that September 27, 1992 (29 Elul, 5752), shall be reckoned as the Sabbath Eve of the Millennium; and the Millennial-day shall begin the following day. This will be the first officially reckoned Millennial New Year's Day.

And in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, this Holy Writ is sanctified and consecrated to the Presidency and High Council of the Stake of Zion in Lodi, California; of the Church of Lord Messiah Jesus Christ of Millennial-day Saints, on this most auspicious day. Amen. Ashem Vohu.
